All this while Abram was

Delaying the Great Blessing which God was prepared to give unto him. He was keeping out of the promised land, and away from the place where Jehovah would manifest Himself to him, and enter into covenant with him. I fear that some true believers are depriving themselves of the richest joy and the most heavenly experience by their undecided conduct. Some of you have come away from your old sins, but you have not yet entered upon the new life in its fullness. You have left Ur of the Chaldees—the place of open sin; but you have not come to Canaan the holy. You are tarrying in the Haran of a partial obedience, which is neither here nor there—a sort of death in life, rebellion in obedience, unbelief in faith.

I know many professors who have left their vicious habits, but they are not yet consecrated to the Lord Jesus: they are not absolutely in the world, and yet they are not abiding in the Lord. They are willing to be saved by the Cross of Christ, but they are not willing to take up Christ's Cross, and come right out decidedly upon His side at all times. This is a perilous state to be in. They have enough religion to make them miserable, but I fear not enough to fit them for joys eternal. They may ultimately get into heaven by the skin of their teeth; at least, I hope so; but they have no present joy, no immediate peace, no conscious fellowship with God. Half-way-house godliness is wretched stuff: beware of it!

II. Secondly, this call, especially

As it comes to us, is of a very peculiar character. To us, of course, it is wholly spiritual. We are not called to-day to leave our country and our kindred, so far as our residence is concerned; but it seems to me that we are called to a much more difficult position than that; namely, to stay on the old spot, among old friends, and yet to lead a wholly new life. Of course, we are to quit all evil company; but we are not to leave the society of our fellowmen, nor to go out of the world. Even Abram was not called to be an ascetic, nor to live in a cave, nor to retire into the desert like a hermit. Within the borders of his own encampment Abram was a man among men, and pursued his daily calling as the keeper of great flocks of sheep and herds of oxen and camels, and so forth. As Abram was no Canaanite, though he sojourned in Canaan, so are we to prove ourselves to be of a totally distinct race. This is

A Difficult Business.

How great a wonder was asked by our Saviour's prayer: "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil"! Not by difference in brogue, nor by peculiarity in dress, are we to be marked out as the servants of God; but our lives must be so Christ-like and pure, that men shall say of us, "Thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth, for thy life betrayeth thee." This call, then, is of a deeply spiritual and peculiar character. My brother, have you heard it? My sister, have you heard it? Have you endeavored to obey it to the full?

See, dear friends, what the call is, and then remember that it comes to the believer from God Himself. The Lord calls His servants unto the separated life, and because of His authority they are bound to obey. He calls by His Word, either preached or read: it comes to the individual by an application of the Spirit of God, so that the man yields cheerful assent thereto. He is drawn, and therefore he runs. Such a person feels it a pleasure to take Christ for his example, and to put his feet down in the very tracks of the Lord Jesus. It is ours to follow the Lord's precept and example with great care and solemn determination, turning neither to the right hand nor to the left. It was so with Abram: is it so with you?

My brethren, if we thus separate ourselves unto obedience, we Must Expect Opposition.

Severe criticism will not be spared us. Of course, some will say, "The man is mad;" others, more gently, will murmur, "He is sadly misled." Many will accuse you of a liking to be singular, or a weakness for going to extremes, or a self-righteous wish to excel others, or of having "a bee in your bonnet." Accusers will hint that you are seeking your own in some form or other; and if they cannot quite see a motive, they will imagine one. What is the use of imagination if it will not help a man out when his facts run short? Having once made up their mind that you are foolish and contemptible, they will view all your conduct through colored glasses, and condemn you up and down. Be not dismayed, but endure hardness for love of Jesus.

Suppose we do obey the divine call, what then? Will our course be smooth ever afterwards? Far from it. The walk of the separated believer involves trial. The trial of Abram in leaving his country was but one out of ten which are recorded. It is written, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." In the Lord's vineyard the knife is used, if nowhere else. The Lord tried Abram, and He will try us; it is a part of the process of love by which He prepares us for the eternal rest. The course of true faith never does run smooth. If thou wilt obey the divine call thou shalt be favored with more trials, thou shalt be honored with still greater tests of thy fidelity; but, then, thou shalt be known as the friend of God, and God shall make thee to be a blessing to others even to the end of time.

III. This brings me to my third and last point. This call, when it is obeyed, puts us

On Special Ground.

For, first, God is bound to justify the course which He Himself commands. When Abram went to Canaan at the Lord's bidding and remained there, the responsibility was with the Lord. If any evil had come of his conduct, he could not have blamed himself. It was neither his own wisdom nor his own folly which led him: God alone was his director. It is mine to obey, it is God's to prove that my obedience is wise. What peace this brings! We cease, also, from that moment to be of the world. God deals with the world one way, but with His separated ones in another way. "Them that are without, God judgeth;" but those who are within are not under law, but under grace. It is the joy of faith that there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus. There is discipline now within the house of God; but it is not that of a court of justice, but of love.

By coming out from the world and following the Lord closely, we come under the divine care and protection. How wonderfully Abram was screened from evil! Jehovah was his shield. He was a stranger in the midst of enemies, but they did not molest him: an awe was upon them, for Jehovah had said, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." Wherever a true saint goes, the Lord lays His commands on all the powers of nature and all the angels of heaven to take care of him. When Abram was at peace, God blessed him in all things; and if he went to war, God gave his enemies as driven stubble to his bow. If we are with God, God is with us. When God's will is our delight, God's Providence is Our Inheritance.

One more thought presses itself upon my heart; the man who for Christ's sake has cut all his moorings, and separated himself from the world, to follow the Lamb, has learned how to live, but he has also learned how to die. We die unto the world, and thereby learn to die. When we cease to trust in riches, when we resign our comforts, when we no longer lean on friends, when all things visible become as shadows to us, then we make a rehearsal of death. Unless the Lord Himself shall soon descend from heaven with a shout, we shall all die. Yes, the hour of our departure hastens on. Then we shall have to cut ourselves loose from our moorings, be they what they may. Soon shall we hear this word from heaven, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee." This will be our summons to the better Canaan, the land that floweth with milk and honey. We shall depart out of this world to face an unknown eternity; but we shall by no means dread the migration.

The one question I finish with is: Do you know anything about this? Have you ever felt this divine call? If so, make your calling and election sure. Carry out the separating ordinance to the full. Some of us had to take very decided steps at our first starting, but we began aright. We have been called since to equally painful courses, but we hope to keep right. Anything is better than a wound in the conscience. If we keep close to Christ, we shall find rest unto our souls. We look back without regret to what we may have suffered by decision; counting it less than nothing for the joy that was set before us. Oh you who by grace are beginners in the heavenly life, make a strong resolve: "We will be the servants of God, and endeavor in all things to obey Him." If you are now separated unto Him, you shall find your reward in that day when He shall divide the sheep from the goats, for then you shall be placed at His right hand, to hear Him say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father." May you be the children of believing Abram, for Jesus' sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A LITTLE GOOD SAMARITAN *

IT was a dreadful afternoon. For several days it had rained continuously, the streets were chilly and sloppy; there was mud everywhere—sticky London mud—and over everything a pall of fog and drizzle. Sara was sent out again and again, until her shabby clothes were wet through. The absurd old feathers on her forlorn hat were more draggled and absurd than ever, and her down-trodden shoes were so wet they could not hold any more water. Added to this, she had been deprived of her dinner, because Miss Minchin wished to punish her. She was so cold and hungry and tired that her little face had a pinched look, and now and then some kind-hearted person passing her in the crowded street glanced at her with sympathy. But she didn't know that. She hurried on, trying to comfort herself in that queer way of hers, by pretending and "supposing." But really, this time it was harder than she had ever found it, and once or twice she thought it almost made her more cold and hungry instead of less so.

Some very odd things happen in this world sometimes. It certainly was an odd thing which happened to Sara. She had to cross the street—the mud was dreadful—she almost had to wade. She picked her way as carefully as she could, but she could not save herself much; only, in picking her way she had to look down at her feet and the mud, and in looking down—just as she reached the pavement—she saw something shining in the gutter. A piece of silver—a tiny piece trodden upon by many feet, but still with spirit enough left to shine a little. Not quite a sixpence, but the next thing to it—a fourpenny piece! In one second it was in her cold, little red and blue hand.

"Oh!" she gasped. "Is it true?"

And then, if you will believe me, she looked straight before her at the shop directly facing her, and it was a baker's, and a cheerful, stout, motherly woman, with rosy cheeks, was just putting into the window a tray of delicious hot buns, large, plump, shiny buns, with currants in them.

She knew that she needn't hesitate to use the little piece of money. "But I'll go and ask the baker's woman if she has lost a piece of money," she said to herself, rather faintly.

She crossed the pavement and put her wet foot on the step of the shop; and as she did so she saw something which made her stop.

It was a little figure, more forlorn than her own; a little figure which was not much more than a bundle of rags, from which small, bare, red and muddy feet peeped out—only because the rags with which the wearer was trying to cover them were not long enough. Above the rags appeared a shock of tangled hair and a dirty face, with big, hollow, hungry eyes.

Sara knew they were hungry eyes the minute she saw them, and felt a sudden sympathy. She clutched her little fourpenny piece and hesitated a few seconds, then she spoke to her:

"Are you hungry?" she asked.

The child shuffled herself and her rags a little more. "Ain't I, jist!" she said in a hoarse voice. "Jist ain't I!"

"Haven't you had any dinner?" said Sara.

"No dinner, nor yet no breakfas', nor yet no supper, nor nothin'."

"Since when?" asked Sara.

"Dunno'; never got nothin' to-day, nowhere. I've axed and axed."

* From "Sara Crewe" by Frances Hodgson Burnett. A beautiful, pathetic story, full of excellent teaching for girls, 83 pages; Price $1. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons 745 Broadway, New York.

The Late Henry Bergh. (See Page 181.)

Besieged Basutos Praying in a Cave.

The Late Louisa M. Alcott.

Just to look at her made Sara more hungry and faint. But those queer little thoughts were at work in her brain, and she was talking to herself, though she was sick at heart.

"Wait a minute," she said to the beggar child.

She went into the shop; it was warm, and smelled delightfully. The woman was just going to put more hot buns in the window.

"If you please," said Sara, "have you lost a fourpence—a silver fourpence?" and she held the forlorn little piece of money out to her.

The woman looked at it, and at her—at her intense little face, and her draggled, once fine, clothes.

"Bless us, no!" she answered. "Did you find it?"

"In the gutter," said Sara.

"Keep it, then," said the woman; "it may have been there a week. Goodness knows who lost it; you never could find out!"

"I know that," said Sara, "but I thought I'd ask you."

"Not many would," said the woman, looking puzzled and interested and good-natured all at once. "Do you want to buy something?" she added, as she saw Sara glance toward the buns.

"Four buns, if you please," said Sara; "those at a penny each.

The woman went to the window and put some in a paper bag. Sara noticed that she put in six.

"I said four, if you please," said Sara; "I have only the fourpence."

"I'll throw in two for make-weight," said the woman with her good-natured look. "I dare say you can eat them some time. Aren't you hungry?"

A mist rose before Sara's eyes. "Yes," she answered, "I'm very hungry, and I'm much obliged to you for your kindness, and," she was going to add, "there's a child outside who is hungrier than I am." But just at that moment two or three other customers came in at once and each one seemed in a hurry, so she could only thank the woman again and go out.

"See," she said, putting a bun on the ragged lap, "that is nice and hot. Eat it, and you will not be so hungry."

The child started and stared up at her; then she snatched up the bun and began to cram it into her mouth with great wolfish bites.

"Oh, my! Oh, my!" Sara heard her say hoarsly in wild delight.

"Oh, my!"

Sara took out three more buns and put them down. "She is hungrier than I am," she said to herself, "she's starving." But her hand trembled when she put down the fourth bun. "I'm not starving," she said—and she put down the fifth.

"Good-by," said Sara.

When she reached the other side of the street she looked back. The child had a bun in both hands and stopped in the middle of a bite to watch her. Sara gave her a little nod, and the child, after another stare—a curious, longing stare—jerked her shaggy head in response.

THE LATE LOUISA M. ALCOTT.

(See Portrait.)

CHILDREN in every English-speaking land knew that they had lost a friend when they heard of the death of Miss Alcott. Her book entitled "Little Women" has gone into every home here and abroad where intelligent children could beg, borrow, or buy it. Having read that, the young folks have wanted to read everything else that Miss Alcott wrote, and accordingly the announcement of a new book from her pen was always a source of eager, delighted anticipation to thousands of juvenile readers. Miss Alcott loved children, and the affection was ardently and gratefully reciprocated. Now, the last of her productions has passed through the press, and her congenial labor of delighting her vast audience is concluded.

Louisa May Alcott, though so closely identified with New England, was not a New Englander by birth. She was born at Germantown, Pa., on November 29, 1832. Her father was keeping a school there at the time, but two years later he removed to Boston, Mass., where he opened a school in the Masonic Temple. In 1840 the family went to Concord, with which place the name of Alcott was to be indissolubly identified. Miss Alcott began to write for the press when she was only sixteen years of age, though she was twenty-two when her first book, "Flower-Fables," saw the light. She had, however, written short stories and sketches for periodicals, for the first of which, published in 1851, she received five dollars. She began teaching, and was so engaged at the outbreak of the war, when she volunteered for hospital nursing. So assiduously did she devote herself to her hospital duties that she became ill, and narrowly escaped death by typhoid fever. She never afterward fully regained the health which characterized her earlier years. While in Washington, Miss Alcott wrote to her mother and sisters letters describing hospital life and experience, which in 1863 were revised and published in book form as "Hospital Sketches," attracting much favorable notice.

In 1867 appeared the first volume of "Litt Women," the charming work which brought h fame and money. In less than three years th sales of this story amounted to 87,000 copie Her reputation was established. There was n more need of teaching, and Miss Alcott coul command her own price for her books. Amon the best known of her later books were, "A Old-Fashioned Girl," 1869; "Little Men," 187 "Work: a Story of Experience," 1873; "Eigl Cousins," 1874; "Rose in Bloom," 1876; "Si ver Pitchers," 1876; "Under the Lilacs," 187 "Jack and Gill," 1880; "Spinning-Wheel Sto ies," 1884; "Lulu's Library," 1885; and "Jo Boys," a sequel to "Little Men," 1886.

Miss Alcott was deeply attached to her fathe and for many years made her home with him i Concord. She was suffering from illness whi he was dying, but she dragged herself from h bed to go to him to bid him farewell. It was fatal effort; she caught cold, and died Marc 6, surviving her father but a few hours.

A PRAYER IN A CAVE.

(See Illustration.)

DURING the disturbances in southern Afric in 1880-81 a band of Basutos were closely pres ed by their pursuers. There were only about dozen of them, and they fled for their lives ov the wild country west of East Griqualand. Su denly they disappeared from view, and the pu suing party, after a long search, concluded th they must have found a place of concealme underground. A close examination was mad of the land, and at length a hole was discover in a hillside, which evidently was the entran to a cave. Here, as was clear, the hunted me had found a hiding-place. To the men on th outside, the passage leading from the outer a into the cave was dark as night, and it neede bolder spirits than any among them to ventu into its recesses, where they might meet me driven to bay and resolved to sell their liv dearly.

Inside the cave there was a strange scen From within, looking toward the entrance the was light, and the men hiding there could s their pursuers gather around the mouth of th cave. They saw them hesitate, and felt that struggle was imminent. With horror they sa them bringing bundles of wood, and they kne that the crafty men were going to set fire them, and so fill the cave with smoke as to for them out by suffocation. Then ensued a se aration in the besieged party. While son watched the awful preparations with despa others who had listened in peaceful times to th ching of the missionar- threw themselves on their es in supplication to "the e man's God."

ne wood was kindled, the seemed to suck in the ke like a huge funnel, still the expected rush of besieged men did not e. Were they stoically osing to die of suffocation er than make a bold fight their lives? It appeared but when an investiga- was made some hours , it was found that an- r exit from the cave had discovered and that the tives had made their pe. They had prayed for verance in their desperate it, and they had gained it.

OW-BOUND IN THE PARSONAGE.

(See Illustration.)

IT must be a very urgent that could cause any one ave the comfort of a fire- this morning," said May wnell, as she entered the ry breakfast-room of the onage one morning when d and snow were render- travel a misery. The gyman, too, seemed to be is daughter's opinion, for hivered sympathetically as urned from the ice-cover- window to the breakfast-table, where May her two sisters were sitting. Mr. Brownell been several years a widower, but so success- did his daughters try to fill the place of r dead mother that the clergyman used to he was in danger of being spoiled.

he girls would have been glad to keep him ors all day, but though there were many igs in which the clergyman was governed by daughters, clerical duty was not one of them. of of that fact was furnished before the meal concluded. A message from Mrs. Durand, ck member of Mr. Brownell's flock, was de- red, begging the pastor to come to her with- loss of time, as she was much worse, and eved herself at the point of death. The young ple looked their protest, but Mr. Brownell esitatingly prepared for the journey.

May, my dear," he said, addressing his st daughter, "please bring my ulster and my tics."

But, papa," the girl ventured to interpose, ou'll certainly not go out until this terrible rm has abated a little!"

I must, my dear," Mr. Brownell replied with irm voice; "what are the fury of the ele- nts compared with the privilege of minister- to the peace of a dying Christian?"

fay knew that further opposition would be less. So she got the ulster and the stout rshoes, and also an umbrella. Mr. Brownell the latter, however, in the hall, knowing t it would be worse than useless in the gale n blowing. He placed the umbrella against hair, remarking cheerily: "There, my old npanion, you and this book can keep com- ny." The book lying open on the chair was illustrated edition of Whittier's beautiful epic m "Snow-Bound." Grace, the minister's ond daughter, had just brought it down from library. She wanted to read to Frances, her nger sister, the Quaker poet's graphic word- tures, with the fierce snow-storm without as ealistic accompaniment.

he good man opened the door and set brave- out on his errand of Christian duty. The rm raged around him and beat upon him, but held on his way nerved by the energy of the it. His daughters watched him until he was of sight, and then turned to the morning's varied occupations. They noticed with uneasiness that the fury of the wind appeared to increase, and as the time passed and Mr. Brownell did not return, May and Grace became very anxious for his safety and peeped timidly through the window.

Watching for the Clergyman.

"Can you see anything of father?" asked Frances, who, with a feather duster in her hand, was coming down the staircase.

"No, dear," replied Grace, "the gale is whirling the snow about so wildly and so high that it is not possible to see more than five feet ahead. Oh, what can we do! he will surely perish in such a storm!"

"Come, sisters," said May, "let us kneel down and pray to the Lord that he will shield our good father and lead him safely home."

All three knelt down and prayed silently, but fervently. Just then a tremendous gust of the high wind made the house tremble in its very foundation. A cry of terror escaped Frances and Grace. But May, more resolute and courageous, admonished her younger sisters: "Do not fear; the Lord will protect our father and our house." The conviction was a stronger evidence of faith than might be supposed, for in that storm more than one house was overthrown, and several persons perished in the drifts. The girls were too restless now to go on with their work, and stood around the window which overlooked the road by which their father would return. Though they could see so little, they were anxious to get the first glimpse of him that might be had.

Meanwhile the pastor had been engaged in a duty that made him oblivious of the tempest. Satan often molests the dying Christian in the hour of physical weakness and dissolution, and the faithful pastor was contending with the enemy of souls, cheering the poor, tossed and troubled spirit, by reminding her of the faithfulness of her Saviour. At last the struggle was over; light came in the moment of leaving the world, and her lips uttered the word "Victory" with her latest breath.

With a heart full of thankfulness, the minister left the chamber of death, which seemed to him a hallowed place, and descending, as from the Mount, prepared for his journey home. It was a more perilous undertaking than he knew. The snow had been drifted by the fury of the gale until, in places, it was piled up twenty feet high. But the courageous minister pursued his way and struggled bravely on. After being on the road for about a quarter of an hour, he suddenly experienced a sensation as if his very vital power had been sapped, and fell down in the snow. The snow somewhat revived him. He arose and struggled on for another ten minutes. He was within sight of his own house, within view of that window from which his daughters were so eagerly watching, when his feet sank in an immense drift, and his exhausted powers utterly failed him. Had the girls not been watching, he must have perished within sight of his own door. Happily, however, his career of usefulness was not to be so cut short. Heedless of the icy wind, mindful only of the treacherous drifts, all three girls ran to his aid and dragged him unconscious from the snow. He revived sufficiently to proceed with their support to the house, and there, under their ministration, he fully recovered. It was with earnest and sincere gratitude that the family gathered around the family altar, and praised God for His providential love which had led to the preservation of a life so precious.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 158.)

Poverty in Wealth.

I WENT back to my old cottage in May, having been away a whole year, and part of that time in the poorhouse, where Transome died; and where I should have died likewise, if it had not been for good friends who took me out and set me up in my old hime, and gathered scholars again for me. The cottage, with its half timber walls and high-pitched roof and lattice windows had a very different look from all the new houses about it, built of red bricks, with sash windows and six rooms in each dwelling. When I was young, two rooms in a cottage were thought enough for a laborer's family. I recollect going once to the squire's hall, before I was married, and seeing the grand drawing-room, where there was every kind of costly furniture; but what everybody looked at first and longest was an old-fashioned carved oak chair, which had stood in that room over two hundred years. You could not help thinking of the children who had been nursed in it, and the old folks who had rested their weary limbs in it. The squire said he would not part with that old chair for the finest furniture in all London town; and I would not have exchanged my cottage for the best and newest of their six-roomed houses.

But now Transome was dead, and I there alone, how dreary it seemed at times! The wind sighed and wailed against the windows, and the rain beat, and the summer thunderstorms rolled over it, as they never used to do when he and I were young together; nor, for the matter of that, when we were old together, and sat in the chimney-nooks.

When the first rent-day came, and Transome was not there to take it, then I felt keener than ever that he had nothing more to do with the old place, where he and I had dwelt so long. I gave my little school a half-holiday, and the lads and lassies ran away shouting for joy, for it was a sweet, bright day in June, with not a cloud in the sky, and the wind that had been moaning and fretting from the east all through the month of May, was at peace again, and a soft breath, as quiet as a child's breathing when it is asleep, came up from the west with a touch of fresh sea-breeze in it.

It seemed to me, as I went slowly down the steep street which led to the town, that if Transome had only been there, the spring day would have made me young again. But there is always an if stealing in between us and perfect happiness, and always will be, till we stand before the throne of God, where the light is never dim, and where the very air we breathe is the breath of life. Transome was safely there already; while I was still in the world, with a rent to pay, and a poor, aching body, getting on for sixty years of age, which could never be made young again by June sunshine and westerly winds.

I could not get rid of a bit of fear in going to see my landlord, though I had my rent tied up in my pocket-handkerchief; and I had no thought that he would wish to disturb me again, like he had done before, in the hope of building more houses where our old cottage stood. But I had never had speech with him while Transome was alive; and I knew him to be a hard man, though he went regularly to church, and the sacrament, and was often chairman at the meetings. When I reached his door I was forced to wait a minute or two, for the tears would gather in my eyes as I thought how often Transome had been there before me, carrying the rent to the same hard landlord.

I knocked as soon as I was myself again, and a servant woman opened the door to me. She was a little under forty years of age, and looked weary and peevish. But Transome had told me what a life she had led for many a year, with no one about her but a close-handed, suspicious master; and I smiled, and spoke as pleasantly as I could.

"I am come to pay my rent," I said; "I'm Transome's wife. You remember him?" "Oh! ay, I remember him," she said, coldly, "so he died in the poorhouse at last!" There she hurt me. If he had only passed away peacefully in his own bed, under the old roof, I could have parted with him more willingly, seeing he was well on in years and racked with rheumatism. But to think of him driven to the poorhouse in his old age, and dying there, was almost more than I could bear at times.

"Ah, well!" she said, "master got no good out of it, that's one comfort. The house never let, and it vexed him sadly. He was glad enough to have you back again as tenant. Come this way; master never leaves me to take a penny for him."

She led the way along a dark passage, into a large, gloomy room, that looked as if no sunshine or fresh air could ever find their way into it. The curtains and carpet were worn threadbare; and everything seemed comfortless. It was getting towards evening, and though it was June, there was a sharp touch in the air, which old folks felt, in spite of calling the weather summer. At the far end from the door sat my landlord, cowering over a little morsel of fire, which was burning in a large grate. I could scarcely see him at the distance he was; but when he spoke, his voice was the piping, quavering voice of an old man.

"Mrs. Transome!" he repeated, when the servant shouted out my name, "old Transome's widow? Well! well! There's no need for you to stay, Rebecca."

Rebecca scowled at him, sure that he could not see her, and muttered something under her breath, which even I could not catch. But she slammed the door after her with a bang that made the old man half jump up from his chair, and cry, "Noisy huzzy!" But he sat down again without calling her back, as I thought he meant to do, and bade me go nearer.

When I was close enough to see him, I noticed a great change in him since I saw him last in church—more than a year ago. He had been stout enough then, and looked well-nourished and comfortable; but now his cheeks had fallen in, and all his body seemed shrunken and smaller. He gazed keenly at me, though, through his small, twinkling eyes, and his thin fingers clutched the few shillings I gave him, as tightly as if I might wish to have them back again.

"That's right," he said, after counting them twice over, "ten shillings a month! I should have been six pounds richer if I'd let you and Transome alone last year. But times are bad! times are bad!"

He never seemed to think of how much poorer I was by the loss of a home for twelve months, or by the death of Transome; nor how I might have been nothing but a pauper still, dying a slow death among other paupers, but for those dear friends who had found me out and set me up again.

"Times are bad, sir," I said, "and likely to be badder."

"Ah! ah!" he moaned,

"They do say," I went on, "that cotton will never be cheap again; and the mills will only work half time. But we must hope for the best."

"Ay!" he answered, "and Philip Champion is surety for your rent, you know."

"God helping me," I said, "I'll win my own rent, sir. I could have won it all this year, if you'd not turned us out of our cottage."

"It was a mistake," he answered, "a sad mistake; and I've lost money by it. Philip Champion told me you taught him for nothing when he was a boy; is that true, Mrs. Transome?"

"It cost me nothing," I said, "and he was the quickest scholar I ever had in my school; and see how he is paying me now, by setting me up again! He's your own nephew, sir, the only relation you've left, people say."

I was almost afraid to say that, for he had been very bitter against his sister, Philip's mother, who had left him to marry a poor man such as Captain John Champion was. But my landlord took it very quietly.

"Ah!" he said, looking into the smoldering fire, "I recollect the lad coming to me one morning: how Rebecca came to let him in, I don't know to this day! He was a pretty boy about seven, I think. "Uncle," he said, as bold as brass, "please to pay for me to go to school." I thought for a minute or two I'd take to the boy: but what an expense and upset it would have been! I should have had to alter my way of life completely: and his mother had been so selfish to leave me and get married, with no one to look after my interests, that I did not feel called upon to do anything for him. So I just bade him go about his business, for I had nothing to say to him. And he tells me you taught him for nothing."

"For love," I said, "he loved me dearly, and me him."

"Well," he went on, fumbling at the money, "I should not mind returning you sixpence out of the rent this once, as times are bad, and you gave my nephew schooling for nothing. But only this once, Mrs. Transome."

"No, no," I said, as he pushed a sixpence back towards me; "thank you kindly, sir, but I have no need of it. I have enough and to spare; it's other folks as times are bad with."

"Enough!" he repeated. "Why, woman! I have not enough: and now there's the money to save that I've lost by your cottage. Rebecca! Mrs. Transome says she has enough money."

The servant had just come into the room; and I saw him hide away the rent quickly out of her sight, pretending to laugh all the while at what I had said, I bid him good evening, and went my way, wondering how strange it was that a man rolling in money like him, and on the brink of the grave, where he could not take a farthing of it, should feel so much poorer than me, who had not been out of the poorhouse three months. Surely, there is none but God, whose blessing can make rich, and He addeth no sorrow with it.

I pondered it much that evening, as my fire burned briskly and cheerfully. The flames played and leaped as they had not done in the ri man's smoldering fire; and my mind was fi of the difference betwixt him and us.

"Why, Transome," I said, "he's ten tim poorer than us. All our riches are on the l side of the grave, where Jesus is preparing place for us. It doesn't matter what we ha here for such a little while."

But when I remembered, and lifted up eyes, and saw the other chimney-nook emp then I found how poor this life can be, ev though we know the Lord is laying up treasu for us in heaven.

After that I went every month to carry r rent to my landlord; and pretty much the sa conversation passed between us each time, o he never again offered to give me sixpence o Now and then, when I had received a letter fr his nephew, Philip Champion, I took care to t him about it, and how he was getting on w in the world, and how grand folks thought mu of him. The old man rather liked to hear of especially when Philip sent me word how father was making a great deal of money by voyages out to foreign parts. Once I carr down a handsome shawl, far too fine for an woman like me to wear, which Captain Jo Champion had brought for me all the way fr India. My landlord told me I could sell it re ily but I would not lower myself by thinking such a thing. Love is more than money.

Year after year I saw him growing more with ed and shrunken, yet still in good health, a with his mind keen; ay, keener than ever wh money was concerned. He came by degrees have a sort of liking for me, more becaus never missed going with my rent to the v day than for anything else I can think of. Th was never any change in the gloomy house, even in the fire, which always seemed smold ing sulkily in the big grate. How dree t sameness was to me! As bad even as the sa ness of the bare walls of the poorhouse, wh no change ever came. He, with his rich lived a life as dreary and desolate as the pc est pauper in the parish.

I believe Rebecca liked me a little also. felt very sorry for her, and it came into my he to take her each time a posy out of my gard or an apple, or some early fruit, fresh gather and she was pleased with them, for the mas kept such a close hand on all expenses, that scarcely tasted a morsel of fruit. She lo flowers, she told me: but ever since Transo had been forced to give up working in th garden, the master had been afraid to another man, for fear of being cheated. So th the garden lay overgrown with weeds, and hard for want of digging that it could not otherwise than barren and useless.

I scarcely know how many years went When one is old the years pass by like mon and the months are shorter than weeks use be. But year after year I saw a change creep creeping over my old landlord, till it became marked and plain that nobody could help see it. I think, sometimes, that maybe he was altogether given up to the love of money u he turned Transome and me out of the cott where we had lived under him so many ye Even since then he had grown nearer and cl handed, grudging even necessaries for him and Rebecca. It was a very hard life for for he was certainly growing childish and sim and would often and often make her sit up the night lest robbers should break into house. It was pitiful to see how thin and w and wrinkled she was growing before her ti and she must have been a bonny lass in youth, for her eyes were still dark and bri and when she smiled, which was very seld poor thing! there was something kindly in face that made it a pleasure to look at it.

Well! though I had seen my landlord grow older, the change startled me at last. His of money had grown into a heavy bonc For a long while he had complained of pov and to see him in an old worn-out brown and shoes with holes in the side, and linen ransome never put on in his life, you would taken him for one of the poorest beggars. had given up going out of doors; and no ors came to the house, except his lawyer. I d the lawyer, one day, if the old master was growing simple, but he said nobody in the was sharper or longer-headed. He was like I once saw, with every branch blighted and , save one which grew green and strong l the withered boughs, as if it drew all the hat should have fed them to itself, and was ished by their barreness. The love of money swallowed up all other love that, maybe, dwelt even in his heart.

(To be Continued.)

THE MARRIAGE FEAST.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

. Lesson for April 1. Matt. 22 : 1-14. Golden Text, Rev. 19 : 9.

acteristics of a Marriage Feast—The Joy Not rsonal—The Marriage of the King's Son—e Wonderful Bride—A Union of Choice—minently Practical—Who are Called—Friends the Family—The Garment Provided—The vited Guests—Their Preoccupation—The Persuted Servants—The Destruction of the Persutors—The Impending Crisis.

MARRIAGE feast is different from every . There are feasts where the guests come her for their own profit or enjoyment—the object for which they meet is to enjoy nselves. But in a marriage feast the guests e together to rejoice in the joy of another, rejoice with them that do rejoice." (Rom. 15) At a marriage feast, the united parties he centre of everything.

the parable before us, the king makes a iage for his son. God made salvation for ers, but He is preparing a bride out of sinsaved for the joy of the heart of Jesus.

The Wonder of Wonders

our glorious God is not content with simaving us, but He seeks to unite us to Him-n a oneness which must be voluntary on part, and which is a union of choice. Jesus d us when we were unlovable, unworthy, we are called to a union of heart and will purpose with Him who is the altogether y One and altogether worthy. And this t a merely sentimental union, but one in h we shall be conformed to the image of 's Son (Rom. 8 : 29), in which "we have the d of Christ" (1 Cor. 2 : 16), in which we are with Him, as He is one with the Father (John 21-23), in which not we live, but Christ h in us (Gal. 2 : 20), in which we are dead, our life is hid with Christ in God (Col. 3 : 3)! as in the life of Jesus, the Father which t in Him did the works (John 14 : 10), and neither spoke nor did anything of Himself, it our high, blessed calling, within reach of y one of us, to be so united with Jesus that ay not be we who think and speak and act, Christ who dwells in our hearts by faith. as—quite unconsciously to us at the time—enemy of souls has used our unconverted ts and lips to think and speak his thoughts, God willing and able to make us His inments of thought and word, of love and ing, to a lost world. It is very easy to get ntimental or a fanatical idea about union Christ which cannot fail greatly to injure cause. But like all other truths of God, Union with Christ is Eminently Practical.

Blessed are they which are called unto the iage supper of the Lamb." (Rev. 19 : 9.) I called? This is the question which will in the hearts of all who are God's true lren. Yes, thank God, He has no favorites. s prayed for those whom His Father had n Him out of the world, who had received words, and known surely that He came out God, "that they all may be one, as Thou ier art in Me and I in Thee, that they also be one in us." (John 17 : 6, 8, 21.) It ie saved, not the unsaved, who are called ne marriage of the Lamb. It is not enemies, but friends of the family, who are invited to a marriage. God saves sinners, not because they are worthy, but because Christ is worthy to save them; and the more unworthy they show themselves to be, the more fit they are to be saved by Jesus. But they who come to the marriage supper must be worthy, not unworthy. A sinner must come to Jesus naked; all the covering he has is but filthy rags of his own righteousness (Isa. 64 : 6.), which must be torn off, that he may be saved. But the guest at the marriage supper must come in a wedding garment. The invitation to the marriage comes by many servants, while the invitation to the gospel feast (Luke 14 : 17, 21-23) is given by One alone, i. e., the Holy Ghost. The King "sent His servants to call them that were bidden, but they would not come." They were preoccupied. It was not sin that hindered them, they were not engaged in fomenting a rebellion against the king; it was simply self-seeking and self-occupation. He sent other servants; it was a pressing and repeated invitation, "Leave all for Jesus," with the inducement that, while the feast was, in the first place, for His Son, there was much for the guests, too: "My oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready; come unto the marriage."

"But they made Light of it."

They did not see the wondrous honor done to them. They "went their ways" instead of His way," one to his farm—a farm in the Kingdom —another to his merchandise—merchandise of the kingdom: they were doing the king's work in their own way, and were more occupied in the labor and the bartering than with knowing and carrying out the thoughts of the king! O how many of us are doing this in these days? We are full of work, and work for souls, the work of the Kingdom, increasing the number of missions and other agencies for evangelization, so that they tread one upon the other, and yet how little time we have to enter into the King's joys, or to weep with the King's sorrows. The Christian Church is as busy as an ant-hill, yet how little is accomplished in nearly two thousand years! How few, except the first disciples, have dared to go out without purse or scrip or staff! How little has been known of that self-renouncing spirit which led the first disciples to leave all claim to personal property outside the circle of the church! O how the farm, —whether the denomination or the little congregation; O how the merchandise—the gain of numbers or of influence for the kingdom, in exchange for so much effort or so much money laid out!—how it takes us away from the court of the King of Kings, the secret place of the Most High! The little farm of our own souls, if we bear the burden of it, is equally a hindrance. God wants us to take time to listen to Him, to take time to learn of Him.

Take Time to be Holy, and real holiness is being God-possessed and God-occupied. Why make light of it? "Men do not make light of their own salvation when once the Holy Spirit has made eternal things real to them, and they have tasted "the powers of the world to come;" men do not make light of the work of winning souls when once they have apprehended their own danger and what God has saved them from, but O, how many of even devoted Christian workers make light of the privilege of close union with God! The majority of the invited guests went "their ways," and did not so much as ask to be excused! But the remnant broke out into open insurrection, and persecuted the faithful few who brought them the message, "They took His servants and entreated them spitefully and slew them." No doubt this was first fulfilled in the early persecutions of Christians by the Jews. But no persecution is so relentless as that which is provoked by a really holy life. The simple preaching of the gospel, if it does not, in its converts, contrast with the selfishness, the pride, the unreality, the hollow wickedness of the world, is easily tolerated. But when men and women are ready to sacrifice all for Christ; when they are ready to trust Him, without any arm of flesh, for food, clothing, health, &c.; when they can bear rebuke which is unmerited, and meet it with a smile; when they can return love for hatred, and prayers for curses—then the half-hearted in the kingdom begin to cry, "Down with such fanaticism;" and they will compass sea and land to prove that this transformation of character comes from beneath, and not from above, from the Devil, and not from God! The Jesuits, about two hundred and thirty years ago, persecuted the Port Royalist Christians, hunting them to death, and even digging their dead bodies out of their graves, for no other reason than that they were truly spiritual, Bible-loving Christians, and their lives wholly yielded to the Lord as living sacrifices; they came unto the marriage and suffered with Christ. The Waldenses were persecuted also by the Jesuits, thrown alive over frightful precipices, and subjected to the most horrible indignities and tortures, only because they did not make light of the invitation to the marriage, but Jesus and His Word were all in all to them!

"When the king heard thereof, he was wroth; and he sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city." Surely this time is at hand. Things are Coming to a Crisis.

Politics, commerce, religion, are all in a state of ferment, men's hearts are "failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." (Luke 21 : 25.) There is a general unrest and spirit of expectation, such as portends a coming earthquake. Men of science and of forethought may rack their brains to account for it, but the solution is given in God's Word. Christ is coming to take vengeance on those who know Him not, and obey not the gospel. (II Thes. 1 : 6.) But the same thing is enacted in miniature in the heart of every professing Christian who persecutes those who obey the call to the marriage. Disappointment, failure and vexation are the lot of such.

The time was pressing, and the King said to his servants, "The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy. Go ye, therefore, into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage." If the Jews had received Christ, He would have had a Jewish bride, but they would not; and now He is making up His elect from Jew and Gentile alike who believe in and yield themselves to Him. His general invitation brought together "bad and good," and this is the character of the dispensation under which we live. Wheat and tares, saved and lost, holy and unholy, bad and good, are joined together. But the King came in to see the guests, and at once a separation began to take place. There was a man which had not on a wedding garment, a garment provided for the guests; he had dared to appear in his own, but he was cast into outer darkness. It is an awful thing to tread on holy ground without God's preparation, to venture into a profession of union with God without the reality. For the marriage feast, "Many are called, but few are chosen." O, to be found among the few when Jesus comes!

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for March:

The Wonderful Birthday of 144,000 Translated Ones on Thursday, March 5, 1896. By the Rev. M. Baxter.

Views of Anti-Christ in the 12th Century.

The History and Peculiar Features of the Great Pyramid. By Rev. M. Baxter.

Prince Jerome Napoleon, the "Despised Person" of Daniel 11. 21.

Singular Brighton Fanaticism: One of the Signs of the Latter Days.

Is Prince Bismarck's Recent Speech to be Accepted as a Guarantee of European Peace?

The Sun in Prophecy. By Rev. E. J. Hytche.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes, containing the monthly numbers for 1884, 1883 may be had; price $1.]

THE SONG OF HOPE.

"The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—Prov iv, 18.

A soft sweet voice from Eden stealing,—
Such as but to angels known,
Hope's cheering song is ever thrilling,
"It is better farther on."

I hear hope singing, sweetly singing
Softly in an under tone;
And singing as if God had taught it,
"It is better farther on."

By night and day it sings the same song,—
Sings it while I sit alone:
And sings it so the heart may hear it,
"It is better farther on."

It sits upon the grave and sings it,—
Sings it when the heart would groan;
And sings it when the shadows darken,
"It is better farther on."

Still farther on! O how much farther?
Count the mile stones one by one;
No! no! no counting—only trusting,
"It is better farther on."

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

A SPECIAL OFFER

To all Subscribers of the Christian Herald.

I have made a special arrangement with one of the best Life Insurance Societies of New York City by which I am enabled to offer to all the subscribers of this paper (in good health),

A Life Insurance Policy

Free of Charge,

provided that application is made to me within thirty days from this date. Circulars giving full particulars will be sent on application.

J. E. JEWETT,

MARCH 22, 1888. 77 Bible House, New York.

SPRING and SUMMER

DRESS GOODS.

Jas. McCreery & Co.

are now offering the following lines of Dress Goods.

Check and Striped Cheviots, 44-inch, 75c.; 54-inch, 85. and $1.00; worth $1.00 and $1.25.

The above are remarkable value.

ORDERS BY MAIL from any part of the country, will receive careful and prompt attention. Mention this paper.

James McCreery & Co.,

Broadway and 11th St., New York.

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address G. M. BANTABLE, Catlett, Va.

LACTATED FOOD

For Young Infants a perfect substitute for mother's milk, often saving life; for the Invalid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great value. Thousands who have used it say it is the

FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD.

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infants and Invalids sent on application.

Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, VT.

(33 Colors.) DIAMOND DYES

are the Purest, Cheapest, Strongest, and most Durable Dyes ever made. One 10c. package will color 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, Rags etc. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Fancy Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bronzing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instructions and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Druggists

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON, VT

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

Now Is The Time to Paint.

EVERYBODY'S PAINT BOOK

A new work on INDOOR and OUTDOOR painting which is designed to teach people how to DO THEIR OWN PAINTING and save the expense of a professional painter. The most practical and valuable work of the kind ever issued. Full and plain directions are given for mixing paints for ALL PURPOSES. Tells all about PAPER HANGING, KALSOMINING, STAINING, VARNISHING, POLISHING, as well as how to RENOVATE FURNITURE, so that it will look as good as new. Tells all about HOUSE-CLEANING.

Full directions are given for mixing and applying Kalsomine to ceilings and walls. It tells how to make and use stencils for ornamenting ceilings. Gives detailed directions for PAPER HANGING so that every one can paper a room successfully. Tells how to make DAMASK WALLS, etc. Tells how to paint a kitchen or chamber FLOOR, varnish OIL-CLOTHS, varnish RUSTIC WORK, restore CHROMOS and oil paintings, renovate PICTURE FRAMES, CLEAN MARBLE, etc. Many useful hints on ARTISTIC WORK for HOME DECORATION are given. Full directions are given for making the beautiful SPATTER-WORK pictures in which the ladies are so much interested. Tells how to paint OUTBUILDINGS, ROOFS, FARM WAGONS, FARM IMPLEMENTS, and CARRIAGES as well as how to polish a PIANO or ORGAN—how to imitate GROUND GLASS or make paint for BLACKBOARDS—GRAINING in oak and black walnut, painting in imitation of EBONY—MAHOGANY and ROSEWOOD stain, GILDING, BRONZING and SILVERING. Elegantly printed, handsomely bound in extra cloth, with ink and gold, contains a large number of illustrations; will save its cost in a short time. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, $1.00. Five books for $4.00. Get four friends to send with you and thus get your book free. Address,

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

QUEENS NURSERY, ESTABLISHED 1870.

FLOWERS. SPECIAL OFFER One trial asked. SEEDS.

We will send by mail 1 Fuchia (Storm King), strong plant; 1 Hardy Pink (Snow); and 5 packets of choice summer blooming flower seeds, for 30 cts. Catalogue price 70 cts. WAYTE & CO., Queens, L.I., N.Y.

WANTED—Agents to sell "The Child's Bible." Introduction by Dr. J. H. Vincent. 66 copies were sold in one village of 620 people: 78 in one of 674. One agent sold 32 copies in 3 days last week, $72 worth in 7 hours. CASSELL & CO., B. B. S. D. 104 to 106 Fourth Ave., N.Y. 40 Dearborn St., Chicago.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

KNOWLEDGE FO THE MILLIONS.

The fourth volume of Alden's Manifold Cyclopedia con 122 illustrations, and extends from Baptism to Bilberry— pages, large type, handsome cloth binding, for 50 cts., or in half Morocco binding for 65 cts.! Postage 10c. Is not truly, bringing knowledge within the reach of the millions

The great merit of the Cyclopedia is its adaptation to tical use, giving under each proper head the information likely to be needed, and in concise, easily available form. ful examination impresses one with its accuracy, as well a remarkable fullness of its information. For actual u abundantly answers the needs of all save those whose suits require exhaustive study of certain subjects. The bination of Unabridged Dictionary and Cyclopedia very great convenience. Each volume, as it comes t reader's hands, invariably renews the surprise felt that a so well got up can be afforded for a price so low. Wh wants a Cyclopedia—and who does not?—would do we order at least a specimen volume, which may be return not wanted. Reduced prices are offered to early subscr for complete sets, which are to consist of 30 or more vol the volumes being issued at intervals of about a month. work is not sold either by agents or booksellers, but onl the publisher direct, which in some measure accounts fo wonderfully low prices. Specimen pages, also 84-page de tive catalogue of choice books, sent free. John B. Alden, lisher, 393 Pearl St., New York, or 218 Clark St., Chicago

WORKS OF J. W. KIMBALL.

Having bought of Mr. J. A. WHIPPLE, Boston, all Stock and Plates of the works of J. W. KIMBALL, I am pared to furnish any of his books and tracts at wholesale retail prices. Among them are the following books:

"The Christian Ministry"..... $
"How to see Jesus with Fullness of Joy and Peace".....
"Heaven my Father's House".....
"Encouragements to Faith" New and Enlarged Edition .....
"Friendly Words with Fellow Pilgrims".....
"The Beloved Disciple".....
"Orient".....
"Difficulties of Converts".....

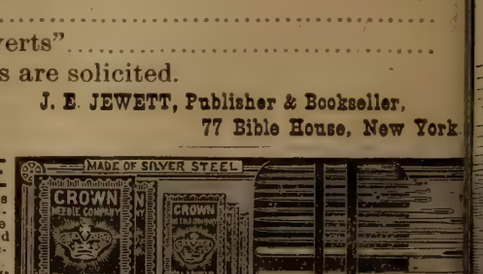
Your orders are solicited.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher & Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

THIS NEEDLE CASE

contains 145 mixed large eyed needles (5 papers and 20 extra large Bodkin Darners, etc.) which are worth 60 c. at store prices. Our agents sell them at 25 c. and make $25 to $20 per week. The picture shows only part of the package. Agents price $1.75 per dozen. $12.50 per hundred. WE WANT AGENTS and will send a sample package for examination by mail for only 10 c. Silver or postage stamps. Mention this paper.

World M'f'g Co. 122 Nassau St. N. Y.



SCOTT'S FLOWER

39 Years' Experience in growing our strong and reliable ROSES. Grand Specialties in PLANTS, B & FLOWER SEEDS of extra choice Rare Novelties of great beauty. Handsomely illustrated Catalogue for 1888 with a lovely Co Plate of Three Choice New Roses sent FREE to any address. Send for it now. ROBERT SCOTT & SON, Philadelphi

The New Cyclopedia of Family Medicine.

Our Home Physician

By Geo. M. Beard, M.D., of N. Y., and Ten Associate Editors, and 170 Authors. Gives Causes, Symptoms and Reliable Remedies for every Ill (Allopathic and Homœopathic).

"It cannot fail to be useful wherever it goes."—J. M. Buckley, D.D., LL.D., Ed. N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"A remarkably sensible and valuable work for young and old."—C. A. Stoddard, D.D., Ed. N. Y. Observer.

"I keep it on a prominent shelf in my library, and find it a kind of Guardian Angel of the household in matters sanitary and hygienic."—Rev. Joseph Cook.

1,500 Pages. Illustrated. Reduced $12.00 to $6.00. Agents Wanted. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, 771 B'way, N. Y.

UNIVERSITY FROM $180 T FINEST PIANOS IN SOLD DIRECT TO FAM the enormous expen Sent with beautiful and book, for trial i home before you buy six years. Send for

Marshal & Smith Piano Co., 285 E. 21s

TEAS LADIES Send a our ne THE GREAT AMERICA 31 and 33 Vesey St., New

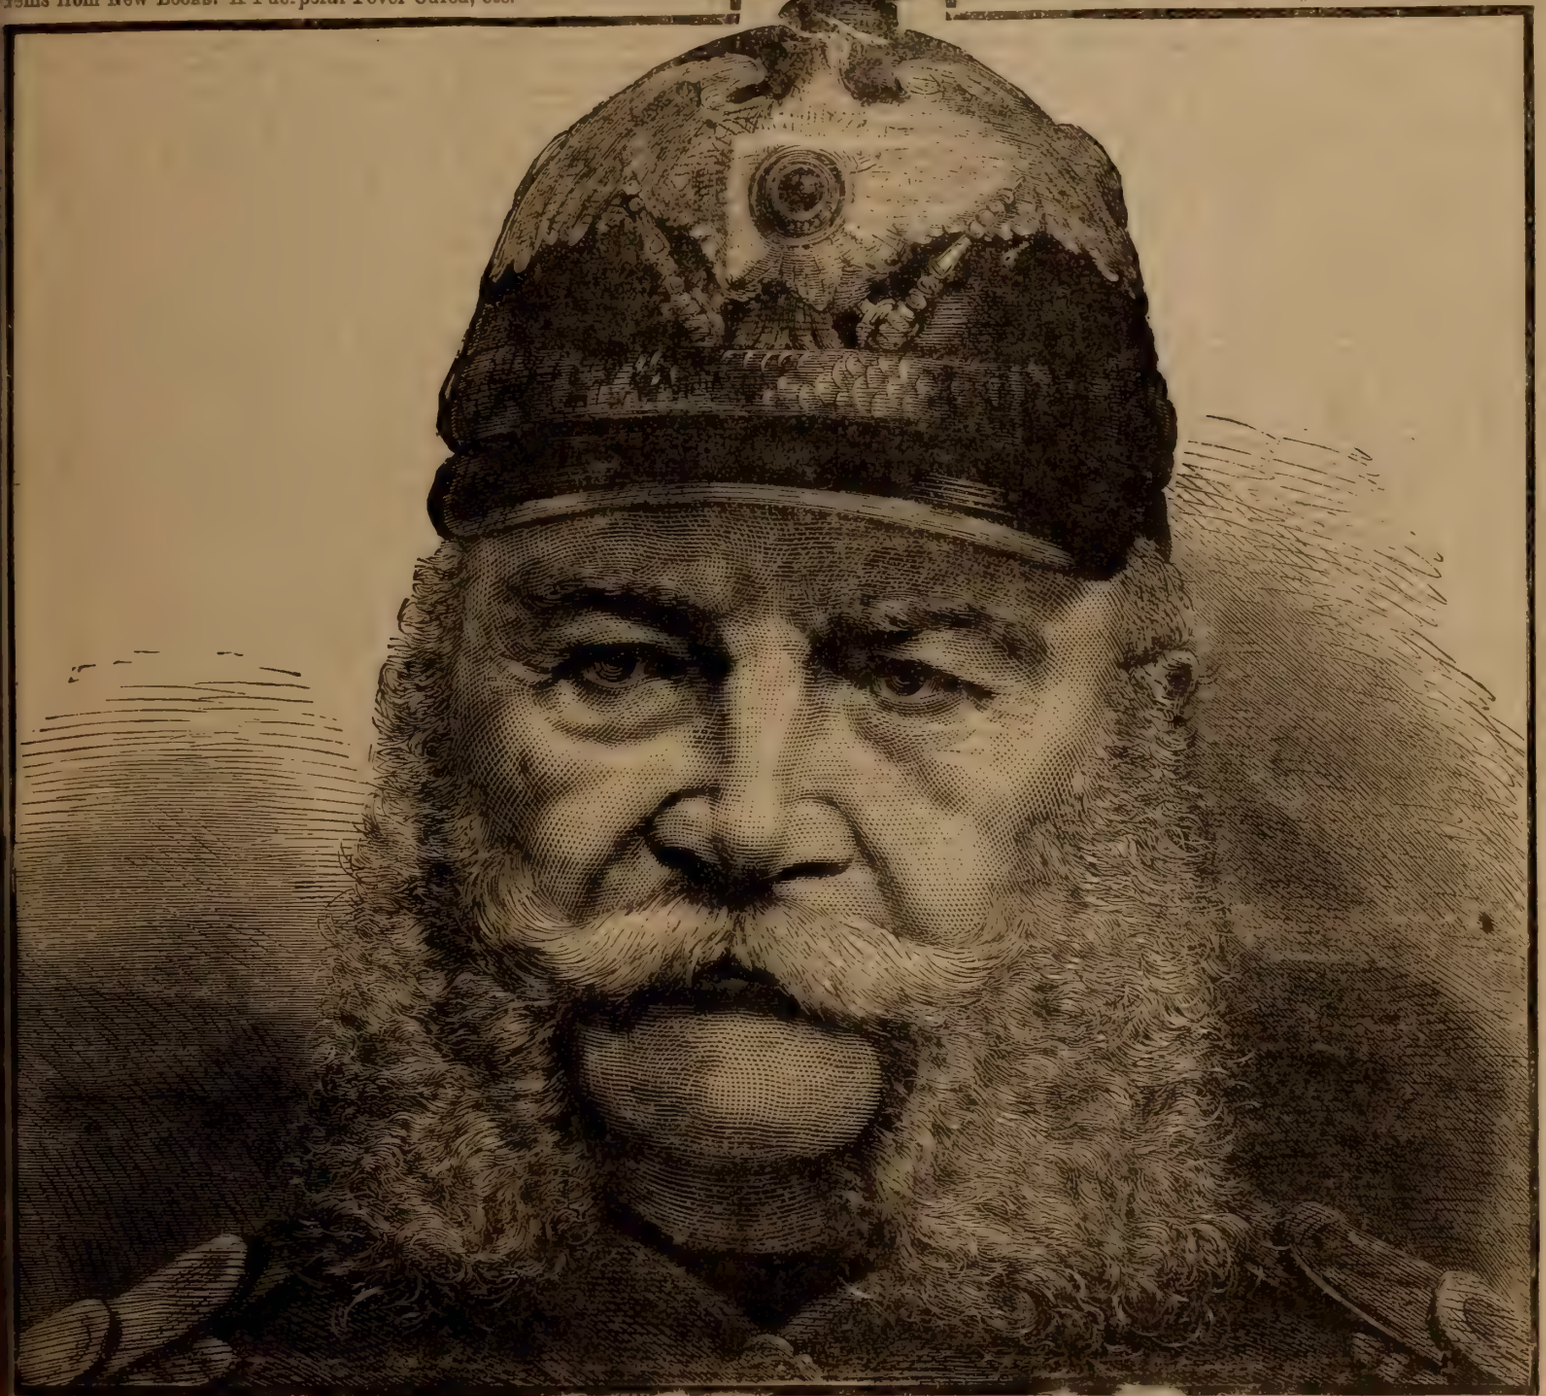
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 13. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF WILLIAM, LATE EMPEROR OF GERMANY.
REFORMATION OF EVIL HABITS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon in Chicago last Sunday.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
THE PYRAMID POINTING TO 1888-89 AS YEARS OF TROUBLE, According to the Astronomer Royal of Scotland.
CURRENT EVENTS: The Proposed Fractional Currency—The Supreme Court on Prohibition—The Telephone Decision, etc.
Gems from New Books: A Puerperal Fever Cured, etc.
GRACE ABOUNDING. A Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.
PICTURE OF THE SCENE OUTSIDE THE EMPEROR'S PALACE.
THE EMPEROR'S DYING MOMENTS.
A Pundit's Story—A Mexican Christian Disowned—A Jew's Conversion—A Chinese Shopkeeper's Testimony—Rev. W. F. Re Qua in the Indian Territory, etc.
REGINA'S RESTORATION. (With Illustration.)
MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL. A Serial Story. (Continued.)
CHRIST'S LAST WARNING. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



THE LATE EMPEROR OF GERMANY—BORN MARCH 22, 1797, DIED MARCH 9, 1888.

THE LATE EMPEROR OF GERMANY.

The Last of the Kings—The Death Scene—His Noble Mother—Delicate Boyhood—The Tutor Sergeant—An Officer at Ten Years Old—A Memorandum of Principles—Marriage—Exile in 1848—Becomes Regent—Accession to the Throne—His Policy—The Danish and Austrian Wars—The Leadership of Germany—The War with France—Closing Years.

THE late Emperor of Germany, whose portrait appears on the first page, has been called "the last of the Kings," and, in one sense, the title is appropriate. He held firmly and sincerely to the doctrine which lies at the root of kingship, but which has in these days become a subject for ridicule, that the king reigned by the divine selection and appointment. To a nation accustomed to choose its executive as well as its legislators by the popular vote, it seems incredible that any sane man should believe that God has given a nation into his hands to be governed by him according to his will, and to be handed over on his death to his eldest son as a successor appointed by Heaven. Yet that was Emperor William's profound conviction, and on many occasions he avowed it publicly, telling his people in plain words that he reigned, not by their will, but by the will of God. More than this, he acted upon his belief. for when, during many years, he and his people held conflicting views of national policy, William held by his own opinions, and in defiance of the popular will, and ignoring popular protests, governed Prussia on the principles which he believed to be conducive to her ultimate prosperity. Prussia is now convinced by the logic of facts that he was right, but there was a time when she was moved to a dangerous temperature of wrath by the thought that one man should have the power to impose his will on the whole nation. It must, however, be admitted that William fully accepted the logical consequences of his doctrine. Believing himself divinely appointed to govern, he recognized his responsibility to God for faithful service and, though he never regarded himself as accountable to his people for his conduct, he seems never to have lost sight of the fact that when his earthly course was run he would have to answer to the King of kings for the manner in which he had discharged his trust. The ruler who fully recognizes that fact may make mistakes, but he will surely be conscientious, and is likely to be great.

The Death Scene

appears, from the cable reports, to have been one of deep solemnity. The conviction had been growing all through the week that the end to the long grand life was near at hand. On Wednesday March 7, hope was abandoned; a fainting fit, so like death as to deceive all but the physicians, overcame the aged Kaiser, but he revived and was able to talk. On Thursday, after a night of sleeplessness and a forenoon of semi-unconsciousness, he again swooned, and the report went through Berlin, and was sent by telegram and cable all over the world, that he was dead. Again the pulse grew perceptible and the breath came back. He took nourishment and talked with his grandson Prince William, and with Bismarck. The old energetic spirit retained its power, though the frame it had animated was dying. "I have no time to be tired," was his characteristic reply to his daughter, the grand Duchess of Baden, who urged him not to talk lest he tire himself. Soon after midnight the near approach of death became unmistakable. Gathered around him were his aged wife, the Empress, who was holding his hand, his grandson, Prince William and his wife, his daughter and the Princes of the Empire, while the Court preacher, Dr. Kogel, read the Psalms. One figure was absent, that of the stricken Crown prince lying in pain at San Remo. Toward six o'clock the venerable man made one last struggle for life, and spoke excitedly but in delirium. He soon sank into a stupor, and at twenty minutes past eight he passed away from the world without a struggle, and without pain. Lying in his customary half-raised position on his old soldier's camp bed, which had accompanied him in his campaigns, the Kaiser died so quietly that scarcely any one looking at him was conscious that he was dead. The only change was that his face lost its haggard, aged look, and became young again—a veritable Emperor in death even as he was in life.

A Career of Ninety-one Years

closed thus quietly, after scenes of storm, of warfare, and of popular turmoil. The aged potentate was born on March 22, 1797. He was the second son of Frederick William III., King of Prussia, and the celebrated Queen Louise. who was, in appearance and character, one of the loveliest women of her day, an affectionate wife, and a careful mother. There is a picture representing her sitting on a sofa rocking the baby William on her knee, while her elder son, Frederick William, is marching up and down the room in military style, brandishing a wooden sword, and the King is looking on with a complacent smile. Such scenes were not unusual in the domestic life of this happy royal family.

As a child William was very weak and delicate. His brother, the Crown Prince and heir to the throne, was much the stronger of the two. Referring to this, he himself said, soon after his brother's death: "I never thought that I would occupy this responsible position. I had no reason to believe I would outlive my dear brother. He was much stronger than I when we were both children, so that my succession to the throne was beyond my expectation. My life, I anticipated, would be spent in the Prussian army, and as an officer in that army I expected to fulfil my duties toward my King and country."

The two young princes were early initiated into the mysteries of military drill. An old sergeant named Bennstein was their tutor, and he was able to report Prince William as proficient at the age of eight years. He was made as a second lieutenant of the Foot Guards. After this he attended drill regularly, and took part in parades. In 1813, when the Napoleonic war broke out, he was made captain, and went with his regiment to the field. On the 1st of January he crossed the Rhine, near the mouth of the Neckar, and a few days later he charged the French at the battle of Bar-sur Aube with the Cuirassiers, and was then ordered by his father, the King, to ride through a heavy fire for certain information—a mission he discharged with such coolness as to command the admiration of veterans, and to win from the Emperor of Russia the Cross of St. George, and from his father the Iron Cross. When Paris was taken and entered next year by the allied Princes of Russia and Prussia and Austria, William visited it in triumph for the first time.

An Officer at Ten Years Old,

An Interesting Memorandum, written by the future emperor at this period of his life, deserves mention. It records the principles he established for the guidance of his life. Among them are the following: "I must be glad to have been born a prince, not because it gives me a position more exalted than that of others, but because it gives me greater opportunity to assist others. I must be friendly to all beneath me, and seek to make their duties as pleasant as possible. I must remember that what I would be ashamed to do as a man, I should be doubly ashamed to do as a prince. I must never forget a favor. I must never forget that my life and my duty belong to my country. I must always remember the many virtues of my mother with a grateful heart." In 1829. the future Emperor, who had by this time grown into a stalwart and handsome man, of Weimar at Berlin with great magnificence, the bridegroom, clad in silver armor, holding the lists in a tournament in honor of the bride, and presenting a striking appearance. The poor were not forgotten on the occasion. The royal bridegroom had a largess worth $3,000 judiciously distributed among the most needy and deserving families in the country.

Married the Princess Augusta

After his marriage and until 1840 his life was comparatively uneventful, being passed in military studies, reviews and routine duties. He lost his father in 1840, and on the accession of his childless brother, Frederick William IV., he became known as heir apparent, with the title Prince of Prussia. At the coronation of his brother, he, as General of the Guards, rode at the head of this superb body of soldiers, and did homage to the new King. He was soon afterward put in command of the entire infantry, and in 1842, when Frederick William IV. visited England, he was placed in control of all the affairs of Government. Six years later he was Driven Into Exile.

After the downfall of the Orleans dynasty in France, in 1848, the revolutionary feeling spread from France to Germany. Insurrections broke out in almost all the large German States, and the people became clamorous for a liberal government. This was especially the case in Prussia, whose Government had become a sort of patriarchal despotism. On March 16, 1848, a large crowd assembled in front of the royal palace in Berlin to parley with the King. The building was guarded by soldiers. When the King appeared, to address the multitude, his voice was drowned by the shouts of the assemblage. The King commanded them to be silent and to hear him, but the din grew louder. Then the soldiers were ordered to advance, and a sanguinary street fight ensued in which over two hundred persons were shot down. When order was somewhat restored it was charged that Prince William had ordered the soidiers to advance, and that they had first fired at his command. The feeling against him became so alarming that he was obliged to withdraw to England, where he remained until June, 1848, when he returned and took his seat as a Deputy in the National Assembly. There he avowed his readiness to work for the maintenance of a Constitutional Government, since his brother, the King, had seen fit to adopt one. But he was soon to have more congenial work.

Shortly after his return, the revolution in Wurtemburg and Baden assumed such alarming proportions that Prussian interference was asked. A detachment of the Prussian army, with Prince William in command, was at once sent to suppress the insurrection. One sanguinary conflict ended the uprising in Dresden, but that in Baden was not crushed until after a campaign of several weeks' duration. The Prince took an active part, being frequently under fire, and sharing the hardships of the campaign. It is said that once, when there was a scarcity of provisions, he divided his rations with a common soldier. In October, 1857 the King, his brother, having become mentally incapacitated, Prince William was made Regent, a position which he held until January 2, 1861, when the afflicted monarch died and William of Prussia as William I. He at once inaugurated a firm and determined policy, which aimed at consolidating Germany under Prussian leadership. He selected councillors who were fully in sympathy with his policy, among them Count Bismarck, Von Roon, and Moltke. He regarded a thorough organization of the army as an indispensable condition of success, and proceeded to place it upon a firm basis in the teeth of a strong Parliamentary opposition. When he ascended the throne his prerogatives were assailed by a powerful reactionary party, but he gathered around him the old Conservative leaders and gradually increased the influence and strength of the Conservative element.

Ascended the Throne

The Danish War.

The efficiency to which King William had brought the Prussian army was first seen in 1864 in the war against the Danes, whose King had proclaimed Schleswig a part of Denmark. Notwithstanding Austria's jealousy of Prussia's growing power, King William's diplomatists prevailed upon Austria to unite with Prussia in this war, which resulted in the total defeat of the Danes. The Prussian soldiers and their leaders behaved with remarkable bravery, and after this war Prussia assumed a position among the first military powers of Europe. She had to settle accounts, however, with her ally, and that was not to be done without fighting. In the dispute Austria appealed to the Diet, which decided against Prussia, and called on all the States to arm against her. That was the beginning of so called because in seven weeks Prussia prostrated Austria and her allies, and took the place, for which William and Bismarck had schemed, of leadership of Germany. At the final peace of Prague, August 23, 1866, Austria was excluded from Germany, and Schleswig-Holstein, Hesse-Cassel, Hanover, Nassau, and the free city of Frankfort were annexed to Prussia. A confederation was formed of the States north of the Main, with the King of Prussia as President and Bismarck as Chancellor. The other German States were left at liberty to form a new South German Confederation.

The Seven Weeks' War,

The War With France,

however, was the cause of making a united Germany. Soon after the battle of Sadowa, which ended the conflict with Austria, France began treating with Holland for the purchase of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg. But King William was in a position to forbid the sale, with an army of 900,000 men to back him, and the Grand Duchy was declared to be neutral territory. Napoleon III. was humiliated. Not only France, but all Europe, was amused at the haughty emperor being obliged to retire from a negotiation at the command of the King of Prussia. It was evident that a deadly grapple between France and Germany must come. An occasion soon arose. In 1870, Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern refused the Spanish crown, and Napoleon, presuming that his candidacy was engineered by the King of Prussia, demanded a guarantee from Prussia that no prince of this house should ever again be a candidate for the crown of Spain. The King refused to give such a guarantee, and Napoleon made this refusal a pretext for declaring war. He relied upon the support of Austria and the south German States, which had fought Prussia in 1866; but Bismarck had formed alliances with them, and as result Napoleon found all Germany united against him. The magnificent perfection to which the King and Von Moltke had brought the Prussian army was now seen. In eleven days after Napoleon declared war, three armies, aggregating half a million men, were on their way to the frontier. Few kings have had in their lives a greater personal triumph than King William of Prussia in receiving the surrender of Napoleon III. at Sedan. But a prouder and a greater day for him was when he was made

Emperor of Germany.

Just as the victory of the Prussian armies over Austria in 1866 had filled the souls of William's subjects with a storm of patriotic enthusiasm, which swept away their resentment at the unconstitutional methods by which he made those armies superior to their adversaries, so the new and vastly greater triumphs of 1870 raised all Germany to a pitch of loyal ecstasy in which South Germans and North Germans, all that bore the German name, save Austria, melted into a single confederation and formed the German Empire. In the mirrored hall of the palace at Versailles, on the 18th of January, 1871, while the siege of Paris was still going on, William I., King of Prussia, was proclaimed Emperor of Germany.

The Constitution of Germany was, after the French war, settled afresh; the legislative functions to be exercised by a Federal Council (Bundesrath) representing the various Governments of the States, and the Imperial affairs by a Diet (Reichstag) elected by the whole people. Every German of twenty-one years of age has a vote for the election of a member of the Reichstag, and each district of 50,000 has one member of that body; but Bundesrath, Reichstag, and Ministry are all practically so many tools in the hands of Bismarck, who might say with far more truth than the French monarch that did say it, that he was the State. The State is everything in Germany, the natural result being the spread of Socialism to an appalling extent. During William's long life no less than four attempts were made to assassinate him, besides the dynamiter's plot to blow up the National Memorial at Rudesheim on the occasion of his opening it in 1883. Through these, as on the field of battle, he was preserved, to die peacefully in his palace in Berlin, while crowds of his subjects filled the streets outside, weeping genuine tears for the dying old Emperor.

It should not be forgotten that the foundation of the dead Emperor's character was his religion. "The most important thing of all," he once told a deputation, "is the fostering of a living religious spirit." His piety was simple and sincere. He believed in God with all his heart and it was the confidence he reposed in His protection which kept him calm and steady under the bullet-hail of battle, and unswerving at the great crises of his memorable life.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Tramp's Death by a Brick-Kiln.—"There was a poor tramp who wrongfully wasted in drink most of the money he could beg, and consequently was often forced to sleep out of doors. His favorite place on such occasions was a brick-kiln, where, coming as close to the fire as he thought prudent, he enjoyed the warmth. The brick-makers frequently remonstrated with him, saying it was unsafe, and he had better be careful or some accident would happen; but he heeded them not. One night, being more careless than usual, he lay down, and next morning he was found burned to death. As there was danger to that man in the neglect of repeated warnings, and his carelessness in exposing himself to the fire, so there is danger of eternal fire to the sinner, who ignores God's message of warning and salvation to him."

Unable to Look to Christ.—Mr. Thompson said: "A woman came to me in the street once, and said she wished me to visit her husband, who was ill, and with little hope of recovery. God had often spoken to him and sought to draw him to Himself, but in vain. I did visit him, and saw that he was very far gone. The doctor was present, but he could give no hope of life. Sitting down by the bedside, I tried to direct the dying man's eyes to Jesus upon the cross. I spoke for some time, but it was evident he did not understand me. I prayed, but still he was only semi-conscious, and quite incapable of apprehending the simple truths of the Gospel. There he was living, yet there was no help for him; he could not look to the Saviour, who has promised 'life for a look.' What a state in which to die! Come to Jesus while you have health and strength."

How the Funeral Expenses Were Met.—Mr. Bamford remarks: "I entered a house of mourning a few days ago, where a woman sat by her husband, who was in a dying condition. I spoke to her of her son, who had died only that day; he had been a bright lad of eighteen, and the hope and pride of his mother, until he fell ill. She was a mill-worker, and, although she wrought from six in the morning until six in the evening, it was all she could do to supply her invalid husband and son with the barest necessaries of life. Being now obliged to abandon her work at the mill, she was in the last extremity of poverty, and, as I looked on that calm, serene face, I said, 'How is it that you are able to maintain such calmness and peace under your present circumstances?' 'God is my Father; He knows my need,' she quietly replied. Then, pointing to the dead body of her son, she said, 'I have nothing with which to bury my son, but I know that every requirement will be met by my God.' Just as she had spoken a knock was heard at the door, and she remarked as she rose to open it, 'The Lord has sent what I need.' A young man entered, and placing a sum of money in the woman's hand, he said, 'I have been authorized by your son's companions to give you this money with which to meet the funeral expenses.' The funeral day arrived, but no one had come forward to offer to bury her son. Four of us went up to her house, and found the poor woman starting to go to the grave alone. Her face lighted up when she saw us, and she said, 'God has not failed me; He has sent four of His servants to take the remains of my dear son to their last resting-place!' What a remarkable embodiment of waiting on God was this poor woman!"

A Scotchman in Toronto.—Mr. Ross Relates: "When I was in Toronto, I was walking home one Sunday night with a young man. We had not gone far when we were met by a number of his companions, who stopped him, and asked him to come to the Park and make arrangements about something. 'No, I will not go,' replied the young man firmly; 'you know I told you I would not accompany you on Sunday for such a purpose.' After they were gone I remarked that I was glad to see him stand up so firmly for his Lord. 'You mistook me, sir,' he said, 'I am not saved. I belong to Scotland, and am the child of a godly household there. My parents were the happiest and purest people I ever knew. My conscience will not let me break the Lord's Day.' The moral influence which was brought to bear upon that young man by godly parents was good, but I am glad to say that before that day was gone, he had laid hold on eternal life by accepting Christ."

Two Dead Women.—Mr. Thompson Said: "I was preaching in Middlesboro-on-Tees, some time ago, and one day a woman came to my lodgings and said. 'Mr. Thompson, I am very anxious about my soul, but there is one verse in the Bible I cannot understand. It is that verse which says, "There is no difference."' I heard a story which illustrates this: There lay side by side the dead bodies of two women. The one had been a lady, had moved in the best society, was well-dressed, and wore a quantity of valuable jewelry. Her face was calm and beautiful even in death. But the other had been a fallen woman, and her face was a true index to the life she had led, and in the midst of her sin, she had been summoned to meet her God, having been killed when going home intoxicated the night before. There was no difference in that both were dead. The moral character, the past life, the immediate surroundings, did not affect the main question, the great similarity. Both were dead. So, while there may be difference in degree of iniquity in sinners, yet in the sight of God they are both alike, 'dead in trespasses and sins,' for 'All have sinned and come short of the glory of God.'"

A Mother's Dying Request.—Mr. Miller observed: "I came into this great city when I was fourteen years of age. I was the son of many prayers, but it seemed at one time as if they were all to be in vain. I was led away by evil companions, and wandered far from God, but sometimes, in my wildest moments, the Holy Spirit would strive with me and whisper, 'Remember your mother's prayers. Pray for salvation.' At last I was converted to Christ, and enabled to give up drink and my other besetting sins, leaning on Christ for strength to combat them, and to withstand the jeering of my companions. For some years I was a sleeping Christian, doing no work for Him who had saved me. Then my mother, to the instrumentality of whose prayers I owe my salvation, fell ill. As she lay in bed she had glorious visions of bright ones around her, waiting to bear her to heaven. I stooped over her bed to speak to her; she clasped my hand in hers, and whispered: 'Willie, work for Jesus; work for Jesus.' And there and then I pledged myself to give Him what strength I had, and will work for Him while I have any being. Oh, what happiness, joy and peace He gives to those who do His will!"

REFORMATION OF EVIL HABITS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached in Chicago last Sunday, March 25, 1888.

"When shall I awake, I will seek it yet again." Prov. 23 : 35

Solomon's Portrayal of a Mental Struggle — A Prodigal's First Impulse to Return—Obstacles in the Way of Restoration – Moral Gravitation—The Bonds of Habit –The Tippler Trying to Quit—A Smoker's Struggle – A Burning Ship Going Over Niagara—A Suggestive Statue in Paris—Obstacles in Society—A Prodigal's Reception in a Church—The Gospel in a Handshake—How to Overcome the Obstacles—Seek God—A Wounded Soldier at Antietam – Quit Bad Companions — Seek Christian Advice – A Night on the Old Farm—Returning Too Late.

With an insight into human nature such as no other man ever reached, Solomon, in my text, sketches the mental operations of one who, having stepped of rectitude, desires to return. With a wish for something better, he says: "When shall I awake? when shall I come out of this horrid nightmare of iniquity?" But seized upon by uneradicated habit, and forced down-hill by his passions, he cries out: "I will seek it yet again. I will try it once more."

Aside From the Path

Our libraries are adorned with an elegant literature addressed to young men, pointing out to them all the dangers and perils of life—complete maps of the voyage, showing all the rocks, the quicksands, the shoals. But suppose a man has already made shipwreck; suppose he is already off the track; suppose he has already gone astray,

How is He to Get Back?

That is a field comparatively untouched. I propose to address myself this evening to such. There are those in this audience who, with every passion of their agonized soul, are ready to hear this discussion. They compare themselves with what they were ten years ago, and cry out from the bondage in which they are incarcerated. Now, if there be any in this house, come with an earnest purpose, yet feeling they are beyond the pale of Christian sympathy, and that the sermon can hardly be expected to address them, then, at this moment, I give them my right hand and call them brother. Look up. There is glorious and triumphant hope for you yet. I sound the trumpet of Gospel deliverance. The Church is ready to spread a banquet at your return, and the hierarchs of heaven to fall into line of bannered procession at the news of your emancipation. So far as God may help me, I propose to show what are the obstacles to your return, and how to surmount those obstacles.

The First Difficulty

in the way of your return is the force of moral gravitation. Just as there is a natural law which brings down to the earth anything which you throw into the air, so there is a corresponding moral gravitation. In other words, it is easier to go down than it is to go up; it is easier to do wrong than it is to do right. Call to mind the comrades of your boyhood days—some of them good, some of them bad. Which most affected you? Call to mind the anecdotes that you have heard in the last five or ten years—some of them are pure and some of them impure. Which the more easily sticks to your memory? During the years of your life you have formed certain courses of conduct—some of them good, some of them bad. To which style of habit did you the more easily yield? Ah! my friends, we have to take but a moment of self-inspection to find out that there is in all our souls a force of moral gravitation. But that gravitation may be resisted. Just as you may pick up from the earth something and hold it in your hand toward heaven, just so, by the power of God's grace, a soul fallen may be lifted toward peace, toward pardon, toward heaven. Force of moral gravitation in every one of us, but power in God's grace to overcome that force of moral gravitation.

The next thing in the way of your return is the power of evil habit. I know there are those who say it is very easy for them to give up evil habits. I do not believe them. Here is a man given to intoxication. He knows it is disgracing his family, destroying his property, ruining him body, mind, and soul. If that man, being an intelligent man, and loving his family, could easily give up that habit, would he not do so? The fact that he does not give it up proves it is hard to give it up. It is a very easy thing to sail down-stream, the tide carrying you with great force; but suppose you turn is it so easy then to row it? As long as we yield to the evil inclinations in our hearts and our bad habits, we are sailing down-stream; but the moment we try to turn, we put our boat in the rapids just above Niagara, and try to row up stream. Take a man given to the habit of using tobacco, as most of you do, and let him resolve to stop, and he finds it very difficult. Twenty-one years ago I quit that habit, and I would as soon dare to put my right hand in the fire as once to indulge in it. Why? Because it was such a terrible struggle to get over it.

The Boat up Stream,

Now, let a man be advised by his physician to give up the use of tobacco. He goes around not knowing what to do with himself. He cannot add up a line of figures. He cannot sleep nights. It seems as if the world had turned upside down. He feels his business is going to ruin. Where he was kind and obliging he is scolding and fretful. The composure that characterized him has given way to fretful restlessness, and he has become a complete fidget. What power is it that has rolled a wave of woe over the earth and shaken a portent in the heavens? He has tried to stop smoking! After a while he says, "I am going to do as I please. The doctor doesn't understand my case. I'm going back to the old habit."

And he returns. Everything assumes its usual composure. His business seems to brighten. The world becomes an attractive place to live in. His children, seeing the difference, hail the return of their father's genial disposition. What wave of color has dashed blue into the sky, and greenness into the mountain foliage, and the glow of sapphire into the sunset? What enchantment has lifted a world of beauty and joy on his soul? He has gone back to smoking. Oh, the fact is, as we all know in our own experience, that as long as we obey it, it does not chastise us; but let us resist, and we find we are to be lashed with scorpion whips, and bound with ship cable, and thrown into the track of bone-breaking Juggernauts. During the war of 1812 there was a ship set on fire just above Niagara Falls, and then, cut loose from its moorings, it came on down through the night, and tossed over the Falls. It was said to have been a scene brilliant beyond all description. Well, there are thousands of men on fire of evil habit, coming down through the rapids, and through the awful night of temptation, toward the eternal plunge. Oh, how hard it is to arrest them! God only can arrest them.

Habit is a Task-master;

Suppose a man, after five or ten or twenty years of evil-doing resolves to do right. Why, all the forces of darkness are allied against him. He cannot sleep nights. He gets down on his knees in the midnight and cries: "God help me!" He bites his lip. He grinds his teeth. He clenches his fist in a determination to keep his purpose. He dare not look at the bottles in the windows of a wine store. It is one long, bitter, exhaustive, hand-to-hand fight with an inflamed, tantalizing, and merciless habit. When he thinks he is entirely free, the old inclinations pounce upon him like a pack of hounds with their muzzles tearing away at the flanks of one poor reindeer. In Paris there is a sculptured representation of Bacchus, the god of revelry. He is riding on a panther at full leap. Oh, how suggestive! Let every one who is speeding on bad ways understand he is not riding a docile and well-broken steed, but he is riding a monster, wild and bloodthirsty, going at a death leap.

How many there are who resolve on a better life, and say: "When shall I awake?" but seized on by their old habits, cry: "I will try it once more; I will seek it yet again!" Years ago, there were some Princeton students who were skating, and the ice was very thin, and some one warned the company back from the air-hole, and finally warned them entirely to leave the place. But one young man with bravado, after all the rest had stopped, cried out: "One round more!" He swept around, and went down, and was brought out a corpse. My friends, there are thousands and tens of thousands of men losing their souls in that way. It is the one round more.

I have also to say that if a man wants to return from evil practices, Society Repulses Him.

Desiring to reform, he says: "Now, I will shake off my old associates, and I will find Christian companionship." And he appears at the church door some Sabbath day, and the usher greets him with a look as much as to say: "Why, you here? You are the last man I ever expected to see at church! Come, take this seat right down by the door." Instead of saying: "Good morning; I am glad you are here. Come; I will give you a first-rate seat, right up by the pulpit." Well, the prodigal, not yet discouraged, enters a prayer-meeting, and some Christian man, with more zeal than common sense, says: "Glad to see you; the dying thief was saved, and I suppose there is mercy for you."

The Young Man, Disgusted,

chilled, throws himself on his dignity, resolved he will never enter into the house of God again. Perhaps not quite fully discouraged about reformation, he sides up by some highly respectable man he used to know, going down the street, and immediately the respectable man has an errand down some other street. Well, the prodigal, wishing to return, takes some member of a Christian association by the hand, or tries to. The Christian young man looks at him, looks at the faded apparel and the marks of dissipation; instead of giving him a warm grip of the hand, he offers him the tip ends of the long fingers of the left hand, which is equal to striking a man in the face! Oh, how few Christian people understand how much force and gospel there is in a good honest hand-shaking! Sometimes, when you have felt the need of encouragement, and some Christian man has taken you heartily by the hand, have you not felt thrilling through every fibre of your body, mind, and soul an encouragement that was just what you needed? You do not know anything at all about this unless you know when a man tries to return from evil courses of conduct he runs against Repulsions Innumerable.

We say of some man, he lives a block or two from the church, or half a mile from the church. There are people in our crowded cities who live a thousand miles from church. Vast deserts of indifference between them and the house of God. The fact is, we must keep our respectability, though thousands and tens of thousands perish. Christ sat with publicans and sinners. But if there come to the house of God a man with marks of dissipation upon him, people almost throw up their hands in horror, as much as to say: "Isn't it shocking?" How these dainty, fastidious Christians in all our churches are going to get into heaven, I don't know, unless they have an especial train of cars, cushioned and upholstered, each one a car to himself. They cannot go with the great horde of publicans and sinners.

Oh! ye who curl your lip of scorn at the fallen, I tell you plainly, if you had been surrounded by the same influences, instead of sitting today amid the cultured, and the refined, and the Christian, you would have been a crouching wretch in stable or ditch, covered with filth and abomination. It is not because you are naturally any better, but because the mercy of God has protected you. Who are you that, brought up in Christian circles and watched by Christian parentage, you should be so hard on the fallen?

I think men also are often hindered from return by the fact that churches are too anxious about their membership and too anxious about their denomination, and they rush out when they see a man about to give up his sin and return to God, and ask him how he is going to be baptized, whether by sprinkling or immersion, and what kind of a church he is going to join. Oh! my friends, it is about Presbyterian catechisms, and Episcopal liturgies, and Methodist lovefeasts, and baptisteries to a man that is comiug out of the darkness of sin into the glorious light of the Gospel. Why, it reminds me of a man drowning in the sea, and a life-boat puts out for him, and the man in the boat says to the man out of the boat: "Now, if I get you ashore, are you going to live on my street?" First get him ashore, and then talk about the non-essentials of religion. Who cares what church he joins, if he only joins Christ and starts for heaven? Oh! you ought to have, my brother, an illumined face and hearty grip for every one that tries to turn from his evil way. Take hold of the same book with him, though his dissipations shake the book, remembering that "he that converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins."

A Poor time to Talk

Now, I have shown you these obstacles because I want you to understand I know all the difficulties in the way; but I am now to tell you how Hannibal may scale the Alps, and how

The Shackles may be Unriveted,

and how the paths of virtue forsaken may be regained. First of all, my brother, throw yourself on God. Go to Him frankly and earnestly, and tell Him these habits you have, and ask Him if there is any help in all the resources of omnipotent love, to give it to you. Do not go with a long rigmarole people call prayer, made up of "ohs," and "ahs," and "forever and ever, amens!" Go to God and cry for help! help! help! and if you cannot cry for help, just look and live. I remember, in the late war, I was at Antietam, and I went into the hospitals after the battle, and said to a man: "Where are you hurt?" He made no answer, but held up his arm, swollen and splintered. I saw where he was hurt. The simple fact is, when a man has a wounded soul, all he has to do is to hold it up before a sympathetic Lord, and get it healed. It does not take any long prayer. Just hold up the wound. Oh, it is no small thing, when a man is nervous and weak and exhausted, coming from his evil ways, to feel that God puts two omnipotent arms around him, and says: "Young man, I will stand by you. The mountains may depart, and the hills be removed, but I will never fail you." And then as the soul thinks the news is too good to be true, and cannot believe it, and looks up in God's face, God lifts His right hand and takes an oath, an affidavit, saying: "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth." Blessed be God for such a gospel as this! "Cut the slices thin," said the wife to the husband, "or there will not be enough to go all around for the children; cut the slices thin." Blessed be God, there is that wants it! Bread enough and to spare. No thin slices at the Lord's table. I remember when the Master Street Hospital, in Philadelphia, was opened during the war, a telegram came, saying: "There will be three hundred wounded men to-night; be ready to take care of them;" and from my church there went in some twenty or thirty men and women to look after these poor wounded fellows. As they came, some from one part of the land, some from another, no one asked whether this man was from Oregon, or from Massachusetts, or from Minnesota, or from New York. There was a wounded soldier, and the only question was how to take off the rags the most gently, and put on the bandage, and administer the cordial. And when a soul comes to God, He does not ask where you came from or what your ancestry was. Healing for all your wounds. Pardon for all your guilt. Comfort for all your troubles.

A Full Loaf for Every One

Then, also, I counsel you, if you want to get back, to quit all your bad associations.

One Unholy Intimacy

will fill your soul with moral distemper. In all the ages of the Church there has not been an instance where a man kept one evil associate and was reformed. Go home to-day, open your desk, take out letter paper, stamp and envelope, and then write a letter something like this:

"My Old Companions: I start this day for heaven. Until I am persuaded you will join me in this, Farewell."

Then sign your name, and send the letter by the first post. Give up your bad companions or give up heaven. It is not ten bad companions that destroy a man, nor five bad companions, nor three bad companions, nor two bad companions, but one. What chance is there for that young man I saw along the street, four or five young men with him, halting in front of a grog shop, urging him to go in, he resisting, violently resisting, until after a while they forced him to go in? It was a summer night and the door was left open, and I saw the process. They held him fast, and they put the cup to his lips, and they forced down the strong drink. What chance is there for such a young man?

I counsel you also, seek Christian advice. Every Christian man is bound to help you. If you find no other human ear willing to listen to your story of struggle, come to me and I will by every sympathy of my heart, and every prayer, and every toil of my hand, stand beside you in the struggle for reformation; and as I hope to have my own sins forgiven, and hope to be acquitted at the Judgment seat of Christ, I will not betray you. First of all seek God, then Seek Christian Counsel.

Gather up all the energies of body, mind and soul, and appealing to God for success, declare this day, everlasting war against all drinking habits, all gaming practices, all houses of sin. Half-and-half work will amount to nothing: it must be a Waterloo. Shrink back now, and you are lost. Push on, and you are saved. A Spartan general fell at the very moment of victory, but he dipped his finger in his own blood and wrote on a rock near which he was dying: "Sparta has conquered." Though your struggle to get rid of sin may seem to be almost a death struggle, you can dip your finger in your own blood and write on the Rock of Ages: "Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

Oh! what glorions news it would be for some of these young men to send home to their parents in the country. They go to the post-office every day or two to see if there are any letters from you. How anxious they are to hear! Nothing would please them half so much as the news you might send home to-morrow that you had given your heart to God. I know how it is in the country. The night comes on. The cattle stand under the rack through which bursts the trusses of hay. The horses just having frisked up through the meadow at the nightfall, stand knee-deep in the bright straw that invites them to lie down and rest. The porch of the hovel is full of fowl, their feet warm under the feathers. In no candle is lighted, for the flames clap hands about the great backlog, and shake the shadow of the group up and down the wall. Father and mother sit there for half an hour, saying nothing. I wonder what they are thinking of. After a while the father breaks the silence and says: "Well, I wonder where our boy is in town to-night?" And the mother answers: "In no bad place, I warrant you; we always could trust him when he was home, and since he has been away there have been so many prayers offered for him we can trust him still." Then at eight o'clock—for they retire early in the country—at eight o'clock they kneel down and commend you to that God who watches in country and in town, on the land and on the sea.

The Old Farm-House at Night

Some one said to a Grecian general: "What was the proudest moment of your life?" He thought a moment, and said:

The Proudest Moment

of my life was when I sent word home to my parents that I had gained the victory." And the proudest and most brilliant moment in your life will be the moment when you can send word to your parents in the country that you have conquered your evil habits, by the grace of God, and become eternal victor.

Oh! despise not parental anxiety. The time will come when you have neither father nor mother, and you will go around the place where they used to watch you, and find them gone from the house, and gone from the field, and gone from the neighborhood. Cry as loud for forgiveness as you may over the mound in the churchyard, they will not answer.

Dead! Dead!

And then you will take out the white lock of hair that was cut from your mother's brow just before they buried her, and you will take the cane with which your father used to walk, and you will think and think, and wish that you had done just as they wanted you to, and would give the world if you had never thrust a pang through their dear old hearts. God pity the young man who has brought disgrace on his father's name. God pity the young man who has broken his mother's heart. Better if he had never been born—better if, in the first hour of his life, instead of being laid against the warm bosom of maternal tenderness, he had been coffined and sepulchred. There is no balm powerful enough to heal the heart of one who has brought parents to a sorrowful grave, and who wanders about through the dismal cemetery, rending the hair and wringing the hands, and crying: "Mother! mother!" Oh, that to-day, by all the memories of the past, and by all the hopes of the future, you would yield your heart to God. May your father's God and your mother's God be your God forever.

A PUNDIT'S STORY.

WHILE walking along the street a Pundit saw a man tearing up a book. He cried out to him to stop. The man said, "Why, it is a Christian book!" "Never mind," said the Pundit, "any literature is too precious for tearing." Seeing he wished for it, the man thought it an opportunity for money-making, and began to bargain. The Pundit gave him something, and took the torn book home. The book was St. Matthew's Gospel. He read it with keen interest, and it caused him much thought. He was "almost pursuaded." His wife had been taught in a zenana, and had died longing for baptism. Her dying testimony stayed in his mind; soon after he became very ill, and in his illness God dealt with him; he accepted Christ, and came for baptism, full of faith and full of joy. When all his friends found their clever leader had become a follower of Christ, they thought him mad, and said his illness had affected his brain. But he soon proved that his intellect was as good as ever. He wrote books; he went about preaching; but whereas before his position had been very high, and he had been held in honor, now he was an outcast. His friends forsook him; he was turned out of his family; he was penniless and hated. But after two years' grand testimony for Christ, he had a stroke of paralysis; one side was disabled, Still, his intellect was as clear as ever, his heart as true, ever since he has been confined to the house. He is quite invaluable to the missionaries; they send all inquirers to him; and as he lies there, his whole time is spent in pointing others to the Saviour he has found so precious, and in writing books and pamphlets on the truth of Christianity.

Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a Monthly magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to the Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

A JEW'S CONVERSION.

THE following extract from a personal narrative, published in the Watchword, furnishes a striking illustration of the superior power of prayer and tender appeal over argument, in dealing with opponents of Christianity:

"Brought up a Jew, I was instructed to follow the manifold ceremonial observances which have become so customary to Jews, but I was exceedingly unhappy. I experienced a void which I could not express; I realized a need which I could not define; I hungered and thirsted for I knew not what. After a time I fell in with some atheists. I eagerly devoured the poison contained in their writings, and listened to their blasphemous assumptions. The result was that my mind soon began to yield to their soul-destroying views. I doubted the inspiration of the Bible, and denied the possibility of Revealed Religion. At that time I came across a Christian whose consistent walk in the ways of God attracted me much. I saw he was real. I had to admit that he possessed a secret treasure which I did not. Being rather inclined to be argumentative I frequently reasoned with him about the claims of Jesus as the Messiah of Israel. The result of this was that I became very earnest in the Jewish religion, endeavoring to obtain salvation by my good works, seeking for peace by my own efforts.

"One Sunday afternoon I took a walk, and I heard three Christians singing that hymn:

"'Whosoever heareth—shout, shout the sound,
Send the blessed tidings all the world around,
Spread the joyful news wherever man is found,
Whosoever will may come!'

"The word "Whosoever" struck me forcibly, and one of the friends came up and said to me solemnly, 'Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.' (Acts 4. 12.) But when I began to quibble and argue, he simply said, 'Friend, I will pray for you.' God in His infinite mercy answered that prayer."

A LADY'S WORK IN A VILLAGE.

IN a letter to the Missionary Link, Miss E. C. Eberle gives the following account of her visit to a village about five miles from Cawnpore, as a specimen of the way in which many Christian ladies are now engaged in spreading the knowledge of the gospel in the homes of India:

"We pass by Mohammedan mosques and Hindoo temples, also a railway station, and meet with buffalo, camels, and oxen, with pointed horns and strings of bells around their necks. We see men with almost every conceivable kind of costume, from a bed-quilt in the cool season to a bit of rag in the hot. Women are there too, with rings on their fingers, in their noses and ears, some of them as large as a tea-plate, and with uncombed hair streaming about their dark unwashed faces. Some of the men and boys have their heads shaved with the exception of one lock of hair, which is tied so as to stand out straight on the back of the head.

Reaching the village, I find myself surrounded by these poor ignorant and neglected ones. When I began my work in this and other villages I took with me a few simple medicines, with which I gained access to the houses of the inhabitants. At first they were very much frightened at the appearance of a stranger, one so unlike themselves, in their midst. Women appeared in the door-ways but to vanish at my near approach; others looked down upon me from their house-tops, while men, boys, and a few of the low caste less timid women followed me at every step; dogs came forth to greet me with a bark or growl, and altogether it was a new and strange experience. After one or two visits they were assured of my good intentions, and came to me for medicine with as much confidence as though I were their old family physician.

I am now always greeted by a number of boys, in whom I am greatly interested. Touching their foreheads, they say a salutation, and taking my basket of books they lead the way to one of the houses where I stop, and having called the family they are soon seated on the ground at my feet, these village houses having only the bare earth for a floor. Soon a number of women gather, and after a little pleasant conversation with them I ask them would they like to hear a hymn, and the answer is always the same, "Yes, we want to hear." Then there is silence while I sing. Afterward I teach them a Bible verse and explain it. In this way I visit a number of houses in the same day, and wherever I go the women and children are eager to hear, especially the women, who are not accustomed to learn anything.

A MEXICAN CHRISTIAN DISOWNED.

THE promise of the Saviour to any follower who on His account has lost family and possessions (Mark 10: 29, 30) can be claimed just now by many Mexican converts. Dr. J. Wilton Greene, in the course of a long letter to The Church, mentions one case which is unhappily typical of a large number:

"A very intelligent young man, of excellent family, born and reared in Queretaro, on visiting this city, found his way to one of our services; his heart was touched by the Holy Spirit, and he was led not only to accept the Saviour, but also to dedicate himself to the ministry, in which he has been one of our most useful laborers. At once he was made to feel the displeasure of his sisters—he being an only brother, and both his parents having died. But, notwithstanding all the opposition directed against him, he held steadily on his way. Just before Christmas he resolved, after seven years of absence, to visit his family, and did so, being received cordially by his sisters and by the aunt with whom they live. During his stay he talked much of the gospel in its comforting and sustaining power, as he had proved it during the last year, when he was nigh unto death. The family heard him respectfully, and even eagerly, and he parted from them hoping that his testimony had been a blessing to them; but at the expiration of two weeks he received a letter from the aunt, in obedience to instructions given her by her confessor, discarding her nephew completely and disowning him for his evangelical faith and work. So that henceforth this noble servant of Christ is dead to his kindred, considered as the offscouring of the earth, and all simply for his faith in Jesus and disobedience to priestly authority."

REV. W. F. RE QUA IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

HOPEFUL and encouraging reports of Mr. Re Qua's work among the Indians continue to arrive. The promise for the summer is exceedingly cheering. Calls to labor have reached him from settlements in various parts of the Territory, some of them twenty-five and fifty miles distant from McAlister. He expects to make his way to these settlements during the spring and summer, and hold meetings, and, where schools are needed, to organize. Mrs. Re Qua, whose work among the Indian women has been attended with remarkable success, hopes to accompany her husband on these journeys. Her niece, also, who is an excellent singer and has had some experience in Christian work, has promised to assist. They ask the readers of this journal to pray that a large outpouring of the Holy Spirit may be granted, and that many of the Indians and white settlers may be brought out of darkness into God's light.

It would facilitate this work if a tent capable of holding one or two hundred persons could be obtained. At present there are no funds for this purpose, but Mr. Re Qua and his wife, whose faith seems unlimited, believe that before the time comes to set out on their journeys God will in some way provide them with a tent or the means to purchase one. It is gratifying to learn that these devoted missionaries have not been forgotten, during the winter, by our readers. Mr. Re Qua gratefully acknowledges in his last letter the receipt of gifts from some seventy-eight Christian friends, who, hearing of his work of faith, have ministered to the wants of the family. The bulk of them are strangers to him personally but they have given to him as a brother laboring for Christ, and one of those of whom Christ said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." (Matt. 25: 40.) Mr. Re Qua's address is McAlister Ind. Ter. The smallest contributions will be welcome, and will be gratefully acknowledged.

A CHINESE SHOP-KEEPER'S TESTIMONY.

MR. STEWART MCKEE, who is stationed at Ning-hsia, in China says: "You will be glad to know that God is blessing us. I have been on a tour round the district north of this, and had the opportunity of speaking for the Master to a great many people. I visited three markets, and at the largest had a very happy time. I was quite amused at the way one man showed his respect for the foreigner. I entered his shop, and, at his request, took a seat; I offered him a tract, and while we were talking, a man passing the door called me a foreign devil. I took no notice, but the shopman got into a perfect rage, and, leaping over the counter, went after the man and scolded him right thoroughly for daring to insult one who had come to do his people good. Then standing up in the street, he declared the doctrine of Jesus to be a good doctrine, and proved it by its fruits, telling them how the missionaries during the famine had distributed relief, and so saved thousands of lives; and of how, when he himself was at P'ing-yang, he had been cured of opium-smoking by a missionary, who refused to make one cash out of him, and who always instructed him in the way to be good. The result of this man's zeal was that I had an attentive audience for nearly two hours, while I told of the love of Jesus, and sold a number of Christian books."

A NOBLE SISTER OF A PROFLIGATE.

AN impressive instance of the power of Christian love and prayer for the reformation of the apparently incorrigible is related by Mrs. G. Sale Reany. She says: "In a very wealthy home a great sorrow gathered. The only son of that home was a drunkard. Again and again and again the father had forgiven him his wrong-doings, paid his debts, and started him afresh in life; but at the age of thirty he was so reckless, so unmindful of his father's wishes, that his parents banished him from home. They sent him abroad, only allowing him money so long as he stayed there. One year passed, two years passed, but Alexander grew no better, but rather worse. Now there were several sisters in that home. One, Margaret, was several years younger than Alexander. She loved her brother dearly, and deeply sorrowed over his wrong-doing. One day a new thought came to her. She would go and live with him abroad, and win him to love her Saviour! And after some delay and much pleading, Margaret gained consent to visit her brother, her absence from home being limited to twelve months.

Poor Margaret went with a brave heart, strong in love, and abounding in hope. It took her many weeks to reach him; then, when there, she found the life was rougher, harder, than the one she expected to live, but for Alexander's sake she bore everything patiently, prayerfully. Sometimes he would say to her:

"Maggie, I cannot understand it at all. Whatever makes you come away from home and live with a fellow here?" And Maggie would answer sweetly:

"One word will explain it all, Alec—love."

She did not say much to him, and I know she never talked at him, but she lived her love, and Alexander was softened by it. But he did not really alter; he drank as freely, and gambled whenever he had a chance.

The time passed quickly. Next week she must go home, to get back within the twelve months. Margaret was alone. She felt keenly, bitterly disappointed. It seemed as if her hopes were crushed, her love had failed. She threw herself upon her knees and poured out her soul to God. He must love Alexander much more than she did. . . . She was pleading His promises one by one; claiming them in the name of the Lord Jesus, when some one knelt down beside her and leant his head against her shoulder, weeping bitterly!

It was Alexander, who had heard her praying, and had crept in. His heart was truly broken in penitence for sin that night. . . . To-day Alexander is a brave, good man, doing his work in the world to help others to be good and brave. He says love saved him in those dark, dark days.

THE PYRAMID POINTING to 1888-89 AS YEARS OF TROUBLE.

According to the Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, Professor Smyth's Period of 1,882 Years from the Nativity in A. D. 6.

[In a previous article published in this journal, on February 16 (page 103), the measurements of certain chambers and passages in the Great Pyramid were quoted from Professor Piazzi Smyth's work, and their prophetic significance explained; the dimensions of other parts of the same marvellous structure, no less significant, are now given.]

PROFESSOR Smyth writes: "The excruciating exit-passage from the end of the Grand Gallery, which, being only forty-four inches in vertical height, is painfully low for a full-size man to creep through, is exceedingly short, for after no more than fifty-three inches in length,* it enters into the freedom of the Antechamber, its quiet, peace, and presently granite protection. But the final reception into the Antechamber is not the only mode of mitigating the threatened horrors of that lower exit passage; for before entering that, there is a very peculiar mode of possible entire escape, from the summit of the end of the Grand Gallery itself, though only for a few persons, and not by their own power.

"This escape is by the doorway of exit into a small passage, at the upper southeast corner of the End (or, rather, upper southern end of the east wall) of the Grand Gallery, and is no less than twenty-seven feet above the history-recording floor, only, therefore, accessible to something approaching more to winged and flying rather than walking beings, and leading to more than apartment for earthly life, immediately over the grand final granite hall, the so-called King's Chamber. That said retreat is one of the five hollows of construction which Colonel Howard-Vyse found to exist above the King's Chamber, but while the upper four had been absolutely closed in and about with solid masonry, the fifth and lowest was furnished as above described with the passage-way leading to it from the almost inaccessible top of the southern end of the Grand Gallery, on its eastern side.

A Sort of Retreat,

"Why it was so furnished there is nothing higher in the scientific or Egyptologic theories to show; though in the sacred and historic symbology it immediately reminds us of what the evangelists in the New Testament promise, viz., of the elect being gathered in before the dread period of wars and tribulations on earth begins; and also of those elect thus saved meeting the Lord in the air (1 Thes. 4. 17; Luke 17. 34-37; Rev. 3: 10: 12; 5), and being retained with Him in heaven for awhile before His Second Coming to the earth itself to establish His visible kingdom—the kingdom of the Stone cut out without hands, ordained to rule over nations in truth, righteousness, and universal extent, by grandly supernatural means of which the world under the present Christian dispensation knows nothing practically (Dan. 2. 34-44; 7: 13, 14.)

"The Rapture of the Saints

is necessarily, therefore, one thing perhaps now impending, but the return of Christ the Lord with His glorified saints to commence the Millennium is quite another, and perhaps a more certainly fixable, time—as indicated in the pyramid by the greater proximity of its markings to the chronicling floor-surface.

"But all these things," protest resistingly many devout readers, "have been continually expected every single year since the Ascension, eighteen centuries ago. Can, therefore, any special reason be now shown from Scripture, as well as from the Great Pyramid, why, at all events, this first of the latter-day miracles should be more likely to occur near to the present epoch than to any of the long past years? I reply that those who have studied prophecy earnestly must be aware that a very great number of results have been brought out, all converging to this epoch."

End of 1,260 Years of Mohammedanism about 1896-97.

In Revelation 11: 1-3 we read, "There was given unto me a reed like unto a rod (a measuring rod); and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles; and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months." That is, this injunction implies, "The country outside, even Egypt and Palestine and all the land of Arabia, measure them not; no metrical consequence of any spiritual significance shall be found there by so doing; and they are further given over by God to the Mohammedans to have, to possess, and to tread under foot forty and two months of years (1,260 days,) i. e., 1,260 years." Pasteur M. Rosselet dates the 1,260 years from the taking of Jerusalem by the Saracens in A. D. 636-7, which would give A. D. 1896-7 for the close of Mohammedanism.

The Two Witnesses

to God (Rev. 11: 3) are supposed to be (at least in one fulfilment) the two houses of Israel—Judah and Joseph; and their testimony in sackcloth is the melancholy, though diverse, history of those branches of them in the eastern lands which have been, and are, under the iron-heeled domination of the Mussulman power for the appointed 1,260 years. But when that power shall fall at the end of the 1,260 years, the "drying up" of it, as the mystic Euphrates, by the action of the Sixth Vial being already begun—shall they, those witnesses, then reign on the earth? Far from it; the low, extra low, passage-way from the Grand Gallery to the Antechamber, as already mentioned, forbids the idea; and besides that, the revelation of St. John expressly says that it is at that moment, "when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the city for three days and a half" (denoting in the year day fulfilment three years and a half). Though in a manner ineffectually, the next following verses declare, showing also, most effectually, that God Will Interfere for Them.

But that final salvation is to be in Antechamber days, and the troubles, as the Pyramid's very low passage before that apartment indicates, are to commence previously on all who are left on the earth after the Saviour shall have secretly and supernaturally removed His elect; and after, too, that the shall have been poured out into the air; for it is after that dread action, in accordance with the words of St. John (Rev. 16: 18), there shall be "voices and thunders and lightnings, and a Great Earthquake,

Seventh Vial

such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great; and also the great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent, to fall upon men."

These terms, as Pasteur G. A. Rosselet well remarks in his admirable work, entitled, 'L'Apocalypse et l'Histoire,' are symbols of prophecy, not vague, mystical, or fanciful, but most exact and truly descriptive to the very letter, when the meaning of the symbols is understood; just as the signs of operation of algebra in a mathematical work are anything or nothing to an ignorant person, but the most perfect expression for the things referred to that can be conceived when read forth by an educated analyst. Wherefore, by a wide inductive process, which in the end cannot fail to arrive exceedingly close to the truth, he proceeds to compare the words of St. John with accomplished history from the Apostle's days to these; and finds every jot and tittle capable of full explanation on one uniform system.

But what does the Pasteur say of the days which are still to come? His first note is, that "the rapture of the Church to the Lord in the air will take place at or just before the sound of the seventh trumpet. "Let us hold ourselves ready," says he, "the time is very near."

Future Great Invasion of Southern Europe by Russian and North-German Armies.

Yet what does a "trumpet" mean in the book of Revelation? It means, says the Pasteur, AN OVERWHELMING INVASION OF FIERCE SOLDIERS. The first trumpet of the Apocalypse was that of the Goths. And could the words of the beloved disciple have been better chosen, or more expressive, when they are now found so strikingly confirmed by our greatest, though most sceptical, historian of those times (Gibbon), seeing that he has written in his Vol. V. p. 311, "On the 24th of August of the year A. D. 410, at midnight, the inhabitants of Rome were awakened by the tremendous sound of the GOTHIC TRUMPET: 1,163 years after the foundation of Rome, the imperial city, which had subdued and civilized so considerable a part of mankind, was delivered to the licentious fury of the tribes of Germany and Scythia"? Then follow the second trumpet for the invasion by the Vandals, the third for the Huns, the fourth the Heruli, the fifth the Saracens, and the sixth the Turks. But whom does the seventh trumpet, so soon to sound, announce?

Pasteur Rosselet replies: "The Russians; and when they are let loose, after the destruction of the Turkish Empire, and throw themselves on the more civilized surrounding nations, we shall know that the seventh trumpet has begun to sound, and has commenced. But though both the first and second woes lasted many centuries, the third one is not to do so, for the Word of God tells us that the third woe shall be terminated in brief; or that the Russians shall merely be as a passing, though for the time heavy, Hail (Rev. 11: 19; 16: 21), a term also used in Revelation 8: 7.

The Third 'Woe'

Mr. Sydney Hall, a Pyramidal author, who is inclined to look upon the seven overlappings of the Grand Gallery as the seven times of each series of the Seals, Trumpets, and Vials, after expounding the Hail of the Seventh Vial as the future Russian plague, asks:

"'Is this fearful description of coming events to have no more weight with the mass of men than the warnings given to the old world by Noah? Surely the indifference which is shown to the signs of the times by mankind in general has been put on the record by our blessed Saviour Himself: 'As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the Flood came and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed.'"

*These fifty-three inches of exit-passa e are understood by Professor Piazzi Smyth to symbolize fifty-three years following the 1,882 inches or years of the Grand Gallery. It is probable that the 1,882 years extend from A. D. 6, the date of the birth of Christ, to 1888 the present year, as the beginning of the Latter-day Crisis of Daniel's Troublous Times, lasting for thirteen years, from 1888 to 1901, this thirteen years being the first thirteen years of these fifty-three years, and then the remaining forty of the fifty-three years are commencing forty years of the Millennium from 1901 to 1941, being analogous to the forty years transition period of the Jews from their Exodus out of Egypt until their full entrance into the Promised Land.

Volume X. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1887, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1883, 1884, and 1885 are also for sale. We have none prior to 1883.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents; always payable in advance. Single copies for sale by, or can be ordered at, all newsdealers.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheques, or drafts or express money order, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Receipts are not sent, the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that his remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please advite us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Change of Address. Name of Post Office and State, of both old and new address, should always be given in case of removal.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The International Copyright Bill was Last week reported favorably to the Senate by the Committee on Patents. It has been amended in several particulars. The principal amendment is the insertion of a requirement that a copy of the book or article, or a description of the model, painting, or design, shall be deposited with the Librarian of Congress before publication in this country or the country of origin, and two copies of the book or article printed from type set in this country, or photographs of the work of art to be copyrighted, shall be deposited with the Librarian, and during the existence of the copyright the importation for sale of the book or article is prohibited. It is stated that the bill has the unanimous approval of the committee, and that its prospects of passing the Senate are regarded as favorable. A vigorous opposition to it is, however, expected in the House, which the advocates of the bill are endeavoring to disarm by convincing individual members beforehand of the benefits it is expected to produce.

The Construction of a System of Coast Defences is strongly urged in a report submitted last week by the Senate Committee on Coast Defences. The committee emphasizes that "the numerous cities upon the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and upon the lakes, with their large accumulations of agricultural and manufactured products, their thousands of millions of dollars of destructible property, are wholly defenceless and exposed to destruction or tribute in case of a foreign war with a nation possessing a modern navy." The committee points out that there is a surplus in the Treasury, and that the time is propitious for entering upon the work which has been so long delayed. There is a growing conviction in both parties that forts ought to be built, and that it is rash to leave our great cities at the mercy of foreign powers. The subject, however, demands mature consideration, not only on account of the enormous expenditure involved in fortifying the coast, but because opinion is divided as to the utility of forts when opposed to ironclads.

An Appropriation to Defray the Expenses of the Congress of American Nations, which is to be held in Washington in April, 1889, was made in a bill which passed the Senate on Thursday last. The bill originated in the House, but several changes have been made in it in the Senate. The proposed Congress is called for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations of the Commercial Commission which visited Central and South America during the administration of President Arthur. The bill requests and authorizes the President to invite the several governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo, and the Empire of Brazil, to join the United States in conference for discussing questions of mutual interest, and making such recommendations thereon as will tend, in the opinion of the Conference, to the general welfare. The topics to be discussed at the Conference are: The preparation of a code of international laws, and a mode of arbitration to settle disputes which may hereafter arise between the several American nations, without appeal to arms; a uniform system of weights and measures, Custom-house regulations, and methods for the appraisement of imported goods; a uniform code of copyright and patent laws, for the purpose of preventing the sale of fraudulent imitations of American manufactures; a customs union, regulating the admission of the peculiar products of each country into the others; and direct and regular lines of communication between the several nations.

A Revival of the Shinplaster Era, Contemporaneous with the Civil War, is contemplated. The House of Representatives, on March 19, by a vote of 170 to 67, passed a bill providing for the issue of silver certificates of the denominations of 25, 15, and 10 cents, redeemed, paid, and reissued in the same manner as silver certificates of larger denominations. The chief argument advanced for the passage of the bill was the necessity for providing a fractional currency which can be sent by mail, as inconvenience and loss arise in procuring postal money orders, or postal notes, especially to persons who do not live near a money-order office. It is expected that the bill will be opposed in the Senate, but that it may be passed there in an amended form.

The Telephone Monopoly, After Ten Years of litigation, has been sustained by a decision of the United States Supreme Court, rendered on March 19. The majority of the highest tribunal finds that Bell was the original inventor of the speaking telephone, and declares the validity of his patent. The decision has been so worded that it disposed of the charge of fraud, which was raised by Attorney-General Garland, in the Government suit brought to vacate the patent. Bell's original patent was granted in 1876, and a patent for an improvement the following year. In the infringement suits brought soon afterward by the Bell Company, the defence claimed that the telephone had been invented and used both in this country and in Europe, long before the date of Bell's patent, and submitted evidence that sound had been conveyed by electricity as far back as 1861. The first of these infringement suits was decided in the lower courts in 1881, and others at various times. All but one were won by the Bell Telephone Company, but six of the suits were appealed to the Federal Supreme Court. The main issue in all of them was whether Bell invented the telephone covered by his patent, or had used the discovery of some earlier inventor. The court of last resort has now decided in Bell's favor, by a majority of one, four judges pronouncing for Bell's patent, and three—Bradley, Field, and Harlan—dissenting. The telephone monopoly may therefore be regarded as established until 1893, when the original patent will expire.

The Death of Morrison Waite, Chief-Justice of the United States Supreme Court, on the morning of March 23, was a sad surprise to the public, as no intimation had been given of his illness being serious. The Chief-Justice was exceedingly popular, profound confidence being felt by men of all parties in his sterling integrity and legal ability. The Chief-Justice, though always identified in the public mind with Ohio, was really a New Englander by birth, having been born over seventy-one years ago, on November 29, 1816, in Lynne, Conn. He was the son of a prominent New England jurist. He graduated from Yale College in 1837, and after studying law with his father, he removed to Toledo, O., and there continued his legal education. He practiced law in Ohio until 1874, when President Grant nominated him to the position of Chief-Justice of the United States, made vacant by the death of Salmon P. Chase. The only important public appointment Justice Waite had previously held was that of counsel of the United States before the Tribunal of Arbitration at Geneva under the Treaty of Washington. In holding the highest judicial office in the land, Mr. Waite was careful to maintain its dignity. When in 1875 the suggestion of nominating him for the Presidency was made by some of his friends in Ohio, he wrote a letter declining to permit it, and expressing opinions on the subject which were highly approved throughout the country.

Emperor Frederick, of Germany, in Messages to the Reichstag and the Prussian Diet, declares he will follow the example of his father in maintaining the rights of the crown, while conscientiously observing the constitutions of the Empire of Germany and the Kingdom of Prussia. He expresses the hope that God will help him secure the welfare of the people. The Emperor also issued a proclamation addressed to the people of Alsace-Lorraine, expressing his determination to "preserve the rights of the Empire over the German territories reunited to the Fatherland after a long interval." He promises "an impartial administration of justice and benevolent government, conducted circumspectly, but with a firm hand." On March 22, the ninety-first anniversary of the late Emperor William's birth, Emperor Frederick attended a solemn memorial service in the chapel at Charlottenburg. The latest bulletin describes the Emperor's condition as "satisfactory."

Disastrous Storms are Reported from England and the Continent. In England, sheep have been frozen by hundreds, and many people have been injured or killed by the storms, which in many sections—in Westmoreland in particular—were the worst ever known. In central Germany there was a complete suspension of highway traffic, and in many districts the railways were snow-bound. In France, too, heavy snow-storms have prevailed, and seriously interfered with railroad traffic. In Spain, floods are doing enormous damage. In Italy the rivers have overflowed, and the rising of the Tiber has flooded the lower quarters of Rome. In Hungary thirty villages have been devastated by the floods. The severity of the weather in so many widely separated districts at the same time, is a most unusual characteristic of the season.

A Change in the System of Internal Government in England and Wales of a most radical character is proposed by the Conservative Cabinet now in office. On March 19 a bill was introduced in the House of Commons by Mr. Ritchie, President of the Local Government Board, to remodel the administration of the counties. It is proposed to establish councils, to be elected directly by the citizens, which are to have control of the police, to wield the powers now exercised by the local authorities over gas and water works, artisans' dwellings, the sale of food and drugs, and sanitary conditions, and to make advances in aid of emigration when there is reason to believe that the advances will be repaid. The councils will be under the control of a Government department, which will regulate the borrowing of money, audit the accounts, and also fix the number of members of the county councils. Other provisions give the councils the oversight of lunatic asylums, workhouses, reformatories and industrial schools, and the granting of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors. An important feature of the bill is the rearrangement of the country into urban and rural districts, making large cities into counties, with separate councils. It is the opinion of the London Times that the principle of the bill will probably be extended next year to Scotland. The measure is regarded as the most momentous that has been brought before Parliament in this generation, as it sweeps away time-honored methods which have been in operation for centuries, and substitutes an entirely new system of local government.

Sunday-school Superintendents and Teachers desirous of distributing copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in their schools and classes, may have assorted parcels of back numbers by applying, stating number required, to the manager, 63 Bible House.

A Memorial Service in Honor of the German Emperor William was held on March 20, at Association Hall, New York, under the auspices of the German pastors. The German Consul-General was present as an invited guest. Resolutions were adopted, stating that since it had pleased the King of kings to recall Emperor William from the scene of his active life, after a long and blessed reign, though separated from their native hearths and incorporated into another political community, the assembly, as German evangelical Christians, sympathized with the Imperial household and the entire German people in their loss. At the same time they expressed their gratitude to God for His great mercy in allowing the Emperor to live so long among his people, to complete a glorious work, and on the eve of his life to breathe out his soul at the feet of the Prince of Peace, whose humble follower he was in life.

An Important Decision Adverse to Prohibition was handed down in the United States Supreme Court on March 19. The case arose out of the section of the Iowa Prohibition Law, which forbids any railroad company bringing liquor into that State unless armed with a certificate from the auditor of the county to which the consignment was destined, that the consignee had a lawful right to sell it. Acting under this section, the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad refused to accept five thousand barrels of beer unless the shipper would furnish such certificate. The latter sued for damages, and the railroad company pleaded the Iowa statute in defence. The Supreme Court, to which the dispute was carried, now declares the statute unconstitutional and holds the railroad company liable. It decides that while a State may regulate or prohibit the traffic within its own borders as it sees fit, it cannot without the consent of Congress, expressed or implied, regulate commerce between its own people and those of other States, nor prohibit the importation from another State of liquor or any other article of commerce. That, the court says, is an interference with inter-State commerce, the control of which is vested by the Constitution in Congress. Justice Matthews is the author of his opinion. It is worthy of note that Chief Justice Waite and Justices Harlan and Gray submitted a long dissenting opinion, maintaining the right of a State to protect the health, morals, peace, and good order of its citizens by prohibiting the bringing of intoxicating liquor into it from other States. It is obvious that the Supreme Court decision will prove a serious obstacle to the strict enforcement of State prohibitory laws.

The Marriage of a Dissipated Prisoner to a turnkey was arranged in the police station in Cincinnati, O., recently. A despatch from that city states that a Christian turnkey, employed there, is in the habit of expostulating with the prisoners, and urging them to repent and reform. He does this frequently in the still hours of the night, and when, through excitement or distress, prisoners reveal their wakefulness. On March 14 an intoxicated woman was brought in and incarcerated in the cells under his care. She was noisy at first, but under the turnkey's influence she quieted down and listened to his appeals. Finally, with genuine tears, she deplored her weakness and her sin, and told him the story of her life. The turnkey listened attentively, and, to his amazement, discovered that he was talking to a woman whose lover he had been many years before, when both were in a higher position in life. Being satisfied that the woman's repentance was genuine, the turnkey offered to marry her on the termination of the term of imprisonment to which she would be sentenced on the morrow. The story, however, reached the ears of the judge, who was so much interested that he suspended sentence, in order that the marriage might take place at once. The turnkey was deemed rash by his friends, but he has confidence in his wife, and believes that, through Christ's power, she will be kept from falling. How many of those whom Jesus will own as His bride, have been wooed and won in degradation as abject! (1 Cor. 6:9–11.)

A Fortune is Left to Buy a Tombstone by a recently deceased citizen of Frankford, Pa. The Philadelphia Record, in reporting the proceedings of the Probate Court, mentions the admission to probate of the will of an eccentric resident of Frankford. The testator leaves the whole of his estate, valued at twenty-five thousand dollars, to be expended in the erection of a magnificent monument over his grave. The will was executed on April 11, 1869, and attached to it is a codicil executed in 1886 giving explicit directions for the erection of the monument, which is to be upon his lot in Cedar Hill Cemetary. Three shares of the cemetery stock are bequeathed to the cemetery company, the income upon which is to pay for keeping the monument and lot in good repair. The testator probably hoped that the splendid monument would perpetuate his memory to succeeding generations. He thereby displayed his ignorance and folly. The day is near at hand when all such memorials will be overturned, and only "the righteous will be in everlasting remembrance." (Ps. 112: 6.)

A Chinaman's Dilemma was Pathetically described in Judge Howe's court in Indianapolis, Ind., on March 17. The man, whose name is Ah Sue, runs a laundry in that city. He has been nine years in this country, seven of which he spent in New York. Since he left Canton his father has died, and Ah Sue's brother inherited the paternal property, which is of considerable value. Recently the brother also died, and Ah Sue, being the next heir, is entitled to the property. He dare not, however, return to China, as, having left that country nine years ago without the permission of the authorities, he would, on his return, be thrown into prison and tried for his offence. His object in applying to the Court was to obtain naturalization papers, so that going back to China an American citizen, he might claim the protection of our Minister there. Judge Howe, however, was obliged to refuse the application, as under the enactment of 1881 no Chinaman can become a citizen. Ah Sue, therefore, will probably forego his inheritance in China, rather than acquire it at the cost of his liberty. Sometimes men do not act so wisely when they are confronted with a dilemma more momentous. Many are sacrificing their souls to gain a fortune. (Mark 8: 36.)

A Singular Case of Mistaken Identity is Reported from Minneapolis, Minn. Two years ago a builder left his home, saying that he was going to examine a piece of land with the view to erecting a house. That was the last seen of him by his family until ten days ago. Then he returned in a state of violent indignation and made an extraordinary statement. He said that he went to look at the land, as he had proposed, and sat down on a piece of rock to make his calculations. While there he was seized by two powerful men, and in spite of his protestations, he was carried off to St. Paul, taken before a judge, identified as one Henry Jones, an escaped lunatic and sent to the Rochester Insane Asylum. He was not allowed to communicate with his friends, but was detained there until, realizing that his wisest course was submission, he gained control over his exasperation and became calm and obedient to the keepers. After months of exemplary conduct, he was pronounced cured of insanity and released. He proposes to bring suit for damages for unlawful imprisonment. His sufferings were clearly due to his unfortunate resemblance to the escaped lunatic, which occasioned the mistake of the people at the asylum. The Christian has reason to be thankful for the assurance he has, that even after quitting the body his identity can never be misapprehended or lost. (II Timothy, 2: 19.)

Hospitality to a Bear was Rewarded in California recently. The San Pedro Clipper states that during the late inclement weather a farmer near that town took compassion on an Italian who with a trained bear was belated on his way to the town. The man was lodged in the farm-house for the night, while the bear was placed in the barn for safe-keeping. During the night the family was aroused by a terrible noise in the barn. Some one was screaming "Murder! Help!" and apparently engaged in a struggle for life. The farmer hastened to the spot, and found the bear with a man in his embraces, hugging him tightly, while the scared fellow struggled frantically to escape. The bear was muzzled, and could do the man no serious injury, though he was apparently doing his best to crush the life out of him with his powerful paws. The man proved to be a dishonest butcher, who had come to the barn to steal a fine calf. In the darkness he had stumbled over the bear, who had seized him and held him fast. The man would surely have been killed had not the farmer aroused the Italian, at whose command the bear released his hold on the thief. The farmer in obeying the apostolic injunction to entertain strangers was not among those who have thereby entertained an angel unawares (Heb. 13:2); but his obedience was amply rewarded, as sooner or later the kindness of Christians to the poor and those in distress will be, according to the promise. (Luke 14:14.)

BRIEF NOTES.

It is now definitely decided that the next National Convention of the United Society of Christian Endeavor will be held in the Armory Hall, Chicago, July 5–8.

It is announced that the Presbyterian Council has unanimously agreed to invite the Pan-Presbyterian Council to hold its meeting in 1892 in Toronto, Canada.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Cleveland, O., proposes to buy a $65,000 lot on which to erect a $100,000 building.

The Baptist churches of Louisville, Ky., have over three hundred new members, who ascribe their conversion to the blessing of God on Mr. Moody's recent visit to the city.

Four theological schools and colleges, besides Princeton, have now a foreign missionary in the field supported by the students. They are Knox, Union, Alexander, and Queens.

Peasants entombed by the recent avalanches in Spain and Italy were dug out alive after being buried in the snow, in some instances, for sixty hours. Many deaths are reported.

The new church for sailors in New York, for the erection of which the late Mr. Vanderbilt bequeathed $50,000, was dedicated March 18. Bishop H. C. Potter preached the sermon.

Mr. E. P. Telford's work at Wilmington, Del., has been of a very interesting character. The church has been crowded, and, at the earnest request of pastor and people, Mr. Telford has extended his stay two weeks longer.

At a recent discussion upon the religious condition of South London, a speaker said that in that portion of the city there were only 3,000 church-goers out of a population of 40,000. The chief causes mentioned were drink, overcrowding, and poverty.

A telegraphic despatch announces the sudden death, at Las Cruces, New Mexico, of the Right Rev. George K. Dunlop, Missionary Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in that Territory. Bishop Dunlop was consecrated Missionary Bishop in 1880.

The Episcopal Church Convention of the Diocese of Ohio last week elected as Assistant Bishop of the diocese the Rev. Henry Y. Satterlee, D. D., of Calvary Church, New York. It is not certain that Dr. Satterlee will accept the office.

Gov. Lounsbury, of Connecticut, has appointed Thursday, March 29, as a day of fasting and prayer. The proclamation says: "I recommend to the people of this State that, abstaining from their usual vocations, they spend that day in penitential worship of God in their churches, and private fastings and prayer at their homes.

A cablegram has been received announcing the death, on March 17, at Shanghai, China, of the Rev. Dr. Mathew T. Yates, the celebrated Baptist missionary. Dr. Yates was in his seventieth year. Forty-five years ago he was sent to China, and has been there ever since, except for one short visit to this country about thirty years ago.

A cordial invitation to delegates to represent American Congregationalists at the forthcoming jubilee of Congregationalism, has been extended in a letter from the Secretary of the Congregational Union and Mission of Victoria. The jubilee meetings will be held in Melbourne at the same time as the International Exhibition, which it is expected will attract business men from the United States.

GRACE ABOUNDING.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Moreover the law entered, that offence might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Romans 5 : 20.

The Effect of the Law—A Revelation of Corruption—Conviction of Conscience—As a Curative Agent—Inciting to Contrition—Grace Abounding According to Sin—I. As Seen in its Whole Work—At the Fall—The Ruinous Effects of Adam's Transgression—A Better Paradise Regained—Character Raised to a Higher Level—II. In Special Cases—On Sinai—On Calvary—In the Salvation of the Gentiles—III. In Individual Cases—Sinners Aged, Instructed, Despondent.

THE first sentence will serve as a preface; the second sentence will be the actual text. "Moreover the law entered, that the offence might abound." Man was a sinner before the law or Ten Commandments had been given. He was a sinner through the offence of his first father, Adam; and he was, also, practically a sinner by his own personal offence; for he rebelled against the light of nature, and the inner light of conscience. Men, from Adam downward, transgressed against that memory of better days which had been handed down from father to son, and had never been quite forgotten. Man everywhere, whether he knew anything about the law of Moses or not, was alienated from his God. The law was given, however, according to the text. "that the offence might abound." Such was

The Effect of the Law.

It did not hinder sin, nor provide a remedy for it; but its actual effect was that the offence abounded. How so? It was so, first, because it revealed the offence. Men did not in every instance clearly discern what was sin; but when the law came, it pointed out to man that this evil, which he thought little of, was an abomination in the sight of God. Man's nature and character was like a dark dungeon which knew no ray of light. Yonder prisoner does not perceive the horrible filthiness and corruption of the place wherein he is immured, so long as he is in darkness. When a lamp is brought or a window is opened and the light of day comes in, he finds out to his dismay the hideous condition of his den. He spies loathsome creatures upon the walls, and marks how others burrow out of sight because the light annoys them. He may, perhaps, have guessed that all was not as it should be, but he had not imagined the abundance of the evils. The light has entered, and the offence abounds.

The law causes the offence to abound by making an offender to stand without excuse. Before he knew the law perfectly, his sin was not so wilful. While he did but faintly know the commands, he could, as it were, but faintly break them; but as soon as he distinctly knows what is right, and what is wrong, then every cloak is taken away from him. Sin becomes exceeding sinful when it is committed against light and knowledge. Is it not so with some of you? Are you not forced to admit that you commit many sins in one, now that you have been made to know the law, and yet wilfully offend against it, by omission or commission? He who knows his Master's will and does it not, will be beaten with many stripes, because he is guilty of Abounding Offences.

Why, then, did God send the law? Is it not an evil thing that the offence should abound? In itself it may seem so to be; but God dealeth with us as physicians sometimes deal with their patients. A disease which will be fatal if it spends itself within the patient, must be brought to the surface: the physician therefore prescribes a medicine which displays the evil. The evil was all within, but it did not abound as to its visible effects; it is needful that it should do so, that it may be cured. All this is with a view to his cure. God be thanked when the law so works as to take off the sinner from all confidence in himself! To make the leper confess that he is incurable, is going a great way towards compelling him to go to that Divine Saviour who alone is able to heal him. This is the object and end of the law towards men whom God will save.

Next, consider that there will be no seeking after grace where there is no sense of sin. We may preach till we are hoarse, but who have never broken the law and are not guilty of anything wrong, will never care for our message of mercy. You are such kind people that, out of compliment to religion, you say, "Yes, we are sinners. We are all sinners." But you know in your heart of hearts you do not mean it. You will never ask for grace: for you have no sense of shame or guilt. None of you will seek mercy till first you have pleaded guilty to the indictment which the law of God presents against you. Oh, that you felt your sins! Oh, that you knew your need of forgiveness! for then you would see yourselves to be in such a condition that only the free, rich, sovereign grace of God can save you.

You Good People,

You see, then, the use of the law: it is to bring you where grace can be fitly shown you. It shuts you up that you may cry to Jesus to set you free. It is a storm which wrecks your hopes of self-salvation, but washes you upon the Rock of Ages. The condemning sentence of the law is meant to prepare you for the absolution of the gospel. If you condemn yourself and plead guilty before God, the royal pardon can then be extended towards you.

I. The doctrine of the text itself is this, that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound;" and I shall try to bring out that truth, first by saying that this is of grace, from beginning to end. I would direct your attention to the context. The safest way to preach upon a text, is to follow out the idea which the inspired writer was endeavoring to convey. Paul has, in this place, been speaking of the abounding result for evil of one sin in the case of Adam, the federal head of the race. That one sin of Adam's abounded terribly. Concerning this, Paul says, "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

Seen in the Whole Work

Follow me when I notice, that sin abounded in its ruinous effects. It utterly destroyed humanity. In the third chapter of the Romans you see how, in every part of his nature, man is depraved by sin. Think of the havoc which the tyrant, sin, has made of our natural estate and heritage. Eden is withered—its very site is forgotten. Our life has lost its glory and immortality; for "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." Every woman in her pangs of travail, every man in his weariness of labor, and all of us together in the griefs of death, see what sin has done for us as to our mortal bodies. Alas! it has gone deeper: it has ruined our souls. Sin has unmanned man. The crown and glory of his manhood it has thrown to the ground. All our faculties are out of gear; all our tendencies are perverted. The Lord Jesus Christ found us in a horrible pit and in the miry clay, and He not only lifted us up out of it, but he set our feet upon a rock, and established our goings. Raised from hell, we are lifted not to the bowers of Eden, but to the throne of God. Blessed be His name our Lord Jesus Christ can say, "I restored that which I took not away!" He restored more than ever was taken away from us; for He hath made us to be partakers of the divine nature, and in His own person He hath placed us at God's right hand in the heavenly places. Inasmuch as the dominion of the Lord Jesus is more glorious than that of unfallen Adam, manhood is now more great and glorious than before the Fall. Grace has so much more abounded, that in Jesus we have gained more than in Adam we lost. Our Paradise Regained is far more glorious than our Paradise Lost.

Again, sin abounded by Degrading Human Character.

What a wretched being man is, as a sinner against God! Unchecked by law, and allowed to do as he pleases, what will not man become? See how Paul describes men in these progressive times—in these enlightened centuries: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." Human nature was not at all slandered by Whitefield when he said that, "left to himself, man is half beast and half devil." I do not mean merely men in savage countries, I am thinking of men in London. Read human history, Assyrian, Roman, Greek, Saracenic, Spanish, English; and if you are a lover of holiness, you will be sick of man.

But now look on the other side, and see what the grace of God has done. Under the moulding hand of the Holy Spirit becomes the noblest work of God. Man, born again and rescued from the Fall, is now capable of virtues to which he never could have reached before he sinned. An unfallen being could not hate sin with the intensity of abhorrence which is found in the renewed heart. We now know by personal experience the horror of sin, and there is now within us an instinctive shudder ing at it. An unfallen being could not exhibit patience, for it could not suffer, and patience has its perfect work to do. When I have read the stories of the martyrs in the first ages of the Christian Church, and during the Marian persecution in England, I have adored the Lord who could enable poor feeble men and women thus to prove their love to their God and Saviour. What great things they suffered out of love to God; and how grandly did they thus honor Him! O God, what a noble being the grace has made man to be! I have felt great reverence for sanctified humanity, when I have seen how men could sing praises in the fires.

A Gracious Man

Again, dear friends, sin abounded to the causing of great sorrow. It brought with it

A Long Train of Woes.

The children of sin are many, and each one causeth lamentation. We cannot attempt to fathom the dark abysses of sorrow which have opened in this world since the advent of sin. Is it not a place of tears—yea, a field of blood? Yet, by a wonderful alchemy, through the existence of sin, grace has produced a new joy, yea more than one new joy. The calm, deep joy of repentance must have been unknown to perfect innocence. This right Orient pearl is not found in the rivers of Eden. Yea, and that joy which is in heaven in the presence of the angels of God over sinners that repent is a new thing whose birth is since the Fall. God Himself knows a joy which He could not have known had there been no sin. Behold, with tearful wonder, the great Father as he receives His returning prodigal, and cries to all about him, "Let us eat, and be merry: for this My son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found." God hath greater joy in man, and man hath greater joy in God, because grace abounded over sin. We are getting into deep water now! How true our text is!

II. I find time always flies fastest when our subject is most precious. I have a second head which deserves a lengthened consideration, but we must be content with mere hints. The great fact, that where sin abounded, grace did much more abound, crops up everywhere. This is to be seen in Special Cases.

The first special case is the introduction of the law. When the law of Ten Commands was given, through man's sin, it ministered to the abounding of the offence; but it also ministered to the aboundings of grace. It is true there were ten commands; but there was more than tenfold grace. With the law there came forward a High Priest. The world had never seen a High Priest before, arrayed in jewelled breastplate, and garments of glory and beauty. The was the law; but at the same time there was the holy place of the Tabernacle of the Most High, with its altar, its laver, its candlestick, and its table of shew-bread. There was, also, the secret shrine where the majesty of God dwelt. God had, by those symbols and types, come to dwell among men. It is true, sin abounded through the law; but, then, sacrifices for sin also abounded. Sins of ignorance, sins of their holy things, sins of all sorts, were met by special sacrifices; so that the sins uncovered to the conscience, were also covered by the sacrifice.

The story of Israel is another case in point. How often the nation rebelled; but how often did mercy rejoice over judgment! Truly the history of the chosen people shows how sin abounded, and grace did much more abound.

Run your eye down history, and pause at the crucifixion of our Lord Jesus. This is the highest peak of the mountains of sin. They crucified the Lord of glory. Here sin abounded. But do I need to tell you that grace did here much more abound? You can look at the death of Christ till Pilate vanishes, and Caiaphas fades away, and all the clamor of the priests and Jews is hushed, and you see nothing and hear nothing but free grace and dying love.

There followed, upon the crucifixion of our Lord, the casting away of the Jewish people for a while. Sin abounded when the Lord thus came to his own, and His own received Him not. Yes; but the casting away of them was the saving of the nations. "We turn to the Gentiles," said the apostle; and that was for you and for me. Was it not? They that were bidden to the feast were not worthy, and the master of the house, being angry, invited other guests. Mark, "being angry"! What did he do when he was angry? Why, he did the most gracious thing of all; he said, "Go ye out into the highways and hedges, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the supper." Sin abounded, for Israel would not enter the feast of love; but grace did much more abound, for the heathen entered the kingdom.

A Blessed Turning

The heathen world at that time was sunk in the blackest darkness, and sin abounded. You have only to study ancient history, and you will fetch a heavy sigh to think that men could be so vile. A poor and unlettered people were chosen of God to receive the gospel of Jesus, and they went about telling of an atoning Saviour, in their own simple way, until the Roman Empire was entirely changed. Light and peace and truth came into the world, and drove away slavery and tyranny and bestial lust. Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound.

If I were to ask you, now, to give the best illustrations of grace abounding in individuals, I think your impulse would be to choose men in whom sin once abounded. What characters do we preach of most, when we would magnify the grace of God? We talk of David, and Manasseh, and swearing Peter, and the dying thief, and Saul of Tarsus, and the woman that was a sinner. If we want to show where grace abounded, we naturally turn our eyes to the place where sin abounded. Is it not so? Therefore, I need not give you any more cases—it is proven that where sin abounded, grace did much more abound.

III. Lastly; and this is what I want to hold you to, dear friends, at this time: this Holds True to Each One.

Let me take the case of the open sinner. What have you been? Have you grossly sinned? Have you defiled your body with unhallowed passions? Have you been dishonest to your fellow-men? Does some scarlet sin stain your conscience, even as you sit in the pew? Have you grown hardened in sin by long perseverance in it? Are you conscious that you have frequently, wilfully, and resolutely sinned? Are you getting old, and have you been soaking these seventy years in the crimson dye of sin, till you are saturated through and through with its color? Have you even been an implacable opponent of the gospel? Have you persecuted the saints of God? Have you tried by argument to batter down the gospel, or by ridicule to put it to reproach? Then hear this text: "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound"; and as it was in the beginning, it is now, and ever shall be, till this world shall end. The grace of God, if thou believest in the Lord Jesus Christ, will triumph over the greatness of thy wickedness. "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men." Throw down your weapons of rebellion; surrender at discretion; kiss the pierced hand of Jesus which is now held out to you, and this very moment you shall be forgiven, and you shall go your way a pardoned man, to begin a new life, and to bear witness that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

Perhaps this does not touch you, my friend. Listen to my next word, which is addressed to

The Instructed Sinner.

You are a person whose religious education has made you aware of the guilt of sin; you have read your Bible, and you have heard truthful preaching; and, although you have never been a gross, open sinner, yet you know that your life teems with sins of omission and commission. You know that you have sinned against light and knowledge. You have done despite to a tender conscience very often; and therefore you rightly judge that you are even a greater sinner than the more openly profane. Be it so; I take you at that. Do not run back from it. Let it be so; for "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Believe this! Give glory to God by believing it; and according to your faith, so be it unto you.

I address another, who does not answer either of these two descriptions exactly; but he has lately begun to seek mercy, and the more he prays the more he is tempted. Horrible suggestions rush into his mind; damnable thoughts beset and bewilder him. Ah, my friend, I know what this means: the nearer you are to mercy, the nearer you seem to get to hell-gate! When you most solemnly mean to do good, you feel another law in your members bringing you into captivity. You grow worse where you hoped you would have grown better. Very well, then; grip my text firmly as for your life. Look over the heads of all these doubts and devils, and inabilities, and see Jesus lifted on the cross, like the brazen serpent upon the pole; and look thou to Him, and the fiery serpents shall flee away from thee, and thou shalt live. Believe this text to be true, for true it is: "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

For the Desponding.

"Ah!" saith another, "my case is still worse, sir; I am of a despondent turn of mind; I always look upon the black side of everything, and now if I read a promise I am sure it is not for me. If I see a threatening in God's Word, I am sure it is for me. I have no hope. It does not seem as if I should ever have any. I am in a dungeon into which no light can enter; it is dark, dark, dark, and worse darkness is coming. While you are trying to comfort me, I put the comfort away." Yes; I know you; you are writing bitter things against yourself; this morning you have been dipping your pen in gall; but your writing is that of a poor bewildered creature; it is not to be taken notice of. I see you writing, in text hand, great black words of condemnation: but there is nothing in them all. If thou canst grip it, and know it to be of a certainty the great principle upon which God acts, that grace shall outstrip sin, then there is hope of thee; nay, more than hope, there is salvation for thee on the spot. If thou believest in Jesus, whom God has set forth to be a propitiation for sin, thou art forgiven.

Oh, my hearers, do not despise this grace! Come, and partake of it. Does anyone say, as Paul foresaw that some would say, "Let us sin, that grace may abound"? Ah, then, such an infamous inference is the mark of the reprobate, and your damnation is just. He that turns God's mercy into a reason for sin, has within him something worse than a heart of stone; surely his conscience is seared with a hot iron. Beloved, I hope better things of you, for I trust that on the contrary, the sound of the silver bells of infinite love, free pardon, abounding grace, will make you hasten to the hospital of mercy, that you may receive healing for your sinfulness, strength for your feebleness, and joy for your sorrow. Lord, grant that in this house, in every case wherein sin has abounded, grace may yet more abound, for Jesus' sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A PUERPERAL FEVER CURED.*

AFTER my own healing and sanctification, the thought of praying with others occasionally presented itself to me. I left it with the Lord, and bided His time. The day came when my own darling wife lay in a puerperal fever, with a pulse running to one hundred and eighty in a minute. I ventured to lay hands on her in the name of the Lord, and claim the promise in Mark 16: 18. In an hour the fever had gone, the pulse was nearly normal, and the skin moist. Shall not Jesus have the praise? After this, for some time, I had no call; but the matter lay upon my heart. Once I was asked to pray with a lady, and felt that I dared not refuse. God honored faith this time, also. At length I felt a constant pressure to call upon the subject, and prayed long and earnestly for light and guidance. Walking alone one day in the open country, the burden of my heart was "Lord, use me, if thou canst, in this work. I have been healed and the words keep ringing in my ears, 'freely ye have received, freely give.' Lord send me. It is a complete mystery how such a soul as mine can be fit for thy service, but I will take Thy word for it, and believe it. Yes, I will even believe that my heart and my body are actually fit to be a temple of the Holy Ghost, and to receive the 'gifts' of the spirit. Made so by the blood that cleanseth; how, I cannot comprehend, but fit for Thy service. Here I am; Lord, send me."

A Sign Given.

In a few days I received a note from a lady, unknown to me, asking me to call on her for prayer for healing. I prayed earnestly that if the Lord had really given me what He means by "gifts of healing," that I might have a certain specific sign while praying over this case, and in the event of this sign being given I solemnly promised never to doubt that God had really bestowed these "gifts" upon me. Suffice it to say that the sign asked for was distinctly given. From that day to this I have never entertained a doubt of God's "gifts." I have not been "called," very frequently, but that is a matter I leave with Jesus entirely. A single case will be all I can give here.

A Complicated Disease.

A man came to me, suffering intensely from a strange and complicated disease, which had absolutely baffled the combined skill of the physicians at the Jefferson Hospital at Philadelphia. He had shortly before sought and obtained the blessing of a clean heart, and was rejoicing in the grace of God. After some conversation, I prayed with him, with anointing and laying on of hands. He had come to my house with difficulty, pale and covered with a clammy perspiration. As soon as the prayer was ended, he arose from his knees, grasped his hat, shook my hand and abruptly departed, going off with a vigorous step. He at once began to tell of his healing; and from that day to this he has not had a symptom of the disease. After six months of health, he got into spiritual trouble, and was dangerously ill with another disease. So serious was this that the physician left word at the church for special prayer on his behalf. When I visited him, he was lying on a lounge, gasping for breath. His pain had been so severe that he could not bear the weight of a sheet on his chest. His spiritual difficulties had been all removed, and his simple faith took hold of Jesus again for the Healer. After prayer he sat up at once, and shortly amazed his physician and family, beyond description, by rising and going about his business. The next day he walked upward of six or seven miles, and has been perfectly well ever since.

* From "Divine Healing; or, the Atonement for Sin and Sickness" (enlarged edition) By Captain R. Kelso Carter. 189 pages. Price 50 cents; by mail, 57 cents. Published by John B. Alden, New York.

The Scene Outside the Royal Palace When the Emperor's Death Was Announced

Modern Thorns in the Flesh.

It may be pertinently asked, whether the experience of those who believe for faith healing ever coincides with the theory, Are there any modern "thorns in the flesh?" I suggest this question intentionally, as I wish to open every possible point to the light of God's truth.

Yes, there are many instances of "thorns." This serves to show that cases like Paul's, and other Bible characters, are not rare exceptions, but rather types of a pretty general experience. In Miracles of Healing I related how I was led to trust God for my eye. Well, all these years He has kept me. I have used the eye constantly: teaching, reading, and writing, and have never taken my glass out of the case to this day. But whenever I close my normal eye, I find the old defect of dimness in the sight still there. This indicates that the astigmatism still remains. But at the same time it wonderfully speaks of God's power; for my physician said that, unless relieved by the glass, my eye would be unfit for use and give me great pain. Since I trusted the matter with Jesus, however, I have used it as much as I pleased and yet have not suffered any serious pain. Thus the Lord's power is constantly manifested in the continued miracle of healing, by which the natural consequences of using an astigmatized eye are entirely prevented. When both eyes are open, my sight is very good, and I am conscious of no defect whatever. Nevertheless I have prayed for its removal, many times. I have earnestly besought God to give me some indications, from the Word, that it is His will for me to retain it; but none such have ever been given. On the contrary, I have been directed to Scripture as explicit as possible for absolute healing. Therefore I claim this: by faith in the promise, it is mine potentially, in God's word; and I know it shall be in the physical fact. Meanwhile I keep constantly asking for light to see God's leading in the matter, and for apprehension to learn the lesson intended. When the lesson is fully learned, I know I shall be delivered, even from this.

THE EMPEROR'S DYING MOMENTS.

THE following narrative of the last hours of the Emperor's life has been published by one who was present, probably the Emperor's chaplain: Dr. Kogel repaired to the Emperor's sick-room at five o'clock on Thursday evening, March 8. After a few observations, in the course of which the chaplain spoke of the nation's prayerful sympathy with the august patient, he repeated the verse of Psalm 23: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." Then the tenth verse of Isaiah 54. "For the mountains shall depart and the hills be removed, but my kingdom shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of My grace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." And afterwards part of the first verse of Isaiah 43: "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee by thy name; thou art Mine." After each of the quotations the Emperor rejoined: "That is beautiful." When the chaplain continued, "I know that my Redeemer liveth; Christ is the resurrection and the life," the dying monarch broke in with, "That is right."

During the evening a number of further Scriptures were repeated, among them Isaiah 14: 27; Rom. 5: 1; Mat. 28: 40; 1 John 1: 7; John 1.: 29; and Rom. 14: 7-9. These were not repeated at one time, but at intervals, so that the Emperor's strength might not be overtaxed. Verses were also read from the Emperor's favorite church hymns. When the chaplain repeated the words of Simeon, "Lord, now lettest Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word, for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation," the Grand Duchess of Baden, the Emperor's daughter, asked her father if he had understood what had been said. He gave an affirmative reply by repeating the last words of the passage, "Mine eyes have seen Thy salvation."

In one of the pauses the Emperor remarked spontaneously. "God has helped me with His name." At another time he said, like one dreaming, "We are going to have a devotional hour together." Then after an interval he said, on coming to himself, "I have had a dream; it was the last ceremony in the Cathedral." He evidently had in mind the picture of his own obsequies. At four o'clock on Friday morning, March 8, Court Chaplain Kogel offered up a prayer, and in the repetition of the Lord's Prayer, which followed, the Empress joined aloud. Then the chaplain began Psalm 27, The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life: of whom shall I be afraid?" And the Grand Duchess of Baden again asked, "Papa, do you understand?" The expressive answer was, "It is beautiful." Upon this the devoted daughter inquired, "Do you know that mamma is sitting by your bed and holding your hand?" At these words the dying Emperor opened his eyes, and turned them for a long time upon his mournful consort. When he closed them again, it was forever. Thus his last looks were given to his wife.

REGINA'S RESTORATION.

(See Illustration on page 205.)

THE following incident is related in a work written in Danish by Pastor Rone, formerly of Elsinore. He says: "About a hundred years ago several German families left their native land and settled in America, among whom was a man from Wirtemberg, who with his wife and large family established himself on a grant of land which he cleared himself in the forest. There were no churches or schools in the neighborhood, but he did not on that account neglect the observance of the Sabbath. He always spent the day of rest at home with his family, instructing them himself to read the Bible and pray to God. Those were times of danger even for families living in towns, and much more for isolated districts. A tribe of Indians went on the warpath, and ravaged the country far and near. Eventually they reached the dwelling of the poor family from Wirtemberg, while the wife and one of the sons were absent, the husband, the eldest son, and two little girls named Barbara and Regina, were at home. The father and this son were killed by the savages, but they carried the two little girls into captivity, with a great many other children who were taken in the same manner. They were led many miles through the forest, the Indians taking care to cover the trail so that nobody might follow them. In this condition they were brought to the hunting-ground of the tribe, where the captured children were divided among the families.

"Barbara was at this time ten years old, and Regina nine. It was never known what became of Barbara, but Regina, and a little girl of two years old, whom she had never seen before, were given to an old widow, who was a very cruel woman. Her only son lived with her and maintained her; but he was sometimes absent for weeks together, and then the two white children were forced to go into the forests to gather roots and anything they could find in the nature of food for the old woman; and when they did not bring her enough to eat, she would beat them in so cruel a manner that they were nearly killed. The little girl always kept close to Regina, and when she knelt down and repeated the prayers to the Lord Jesus, and the hymns which her father had taught her, the little girl prayed with her, and learned the hymns and prayers by heart.

"In this melancholy state these children remained nine long years, till Regina reached the age of eighteen, and her little companion was eleven years old. Regina continually repeated the verses from the Bible, and the hymns which she had learned when at home, and she taught them to the little girl. They often used to cheer each other with one hymn from the hymn-book used at Halle, in Germany:

"Alone, yet not alone am I,
Though in this solitude so drear."

They constantly hoped that the Lord Jesus would some time bring them back to their Christian friends.

Regina Recognizes Her Mother.

"At last the hope of these children was realized. The Indians themselves sued for peace. The first condition was, that they would restore all the prisoners they had taken. Thus the two girls was released. It was an affecting sight to see the condition into which many of them had fallen in captivity. Some who were quite little when carried away, had acquired the habits of the Indians, and looked almost as wild as they. Scarcely any of them were recognizable at first sight. The news of the release soon spread, and parents who had lost their children long years before, hurried anxiously to see if their treasures were among the liberated crowd. Poor Regina's sorrowing mother came, among many other bereaved parents, but, alas! how could she tell whether, among those grown up girls, was the little nine-year-old child whom she had lost ten years before. Yes, her child had become a stranger to her; Regina had acquired the appearance and manner, as well as the language, of the natives. The poor mother went up and down among the young persons assembled, but by no efforts could she discover her daughters. She wept in bitter grief and disappointment. The Colonel in charge, pitying her distress, said, "Do you recollect nothing by which your children might be discovered?" She answered that she recollected nothing but a hymn which she used to sing with them, and which commenced:

"Alone, yet not alone am I,
Though in this solitude so drear."

The Colonel advised her to sing this hymn. Scarcely had the mother sung the first two lines of it, when Regina rushed from the crowd, began to sing it also, and threw herself into her mother's arms. They both wept for joy, and the Colonel gladly restored the daughter to her mother.

"It was a mutual recognition, but the hymn might not have availed to bring it about had not the daughter found in it precious comfort during her time of trial and suffering. There are many Christian men and women in the world who, looking forward to the time when, their earthly pilgrimage being over, they will enter into heaven, wonder if there will be recognition between them and loved ones who have preceded them many years. It may be that, if in no other way, by this community in some common joy and consolation, 'They will know even as they are known.'" (Cor. 13: 12.)

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 191.)

A Bargain.

IT was a wonderful change for me, after that sad time in the poorhouse, to be back again in the dear old cottage, and I was thankful for it all the time. I used to thank God every morning and evening, and ask Him to bless Philip and his father, the good friends who had done it all for me.

Yes, they repaid me nobly. Captain John Champion had brought home with him stores of gold and ivory, not enough to make him rich, but ample and to spare for starting himself and Philip again in a way of getting more wealth. But first, they said, they were bound to provide for me; though I told them again and again I had done nothing to deserve it.

Well, by some means or other they prevailed upon our old landlord—who was Philip's uncle, you remember—to let me have my old cottage back again. He was more friendly with them now they had no need of any friendship from him. They bought furniture for me, as far as possible like that which Pippin could remember; though we could not have the old loom back, nor Willie's chair. And because I told them, and made them believe it, that I could not be happy to be idle and burdensome upon them, they set me up again with benches and books, and went themselves to the people living in the dingle, to ask them to send their lads and lasses to my school. There was only one great change.

But ah! that one change was almost more than I could bear. Never to have Transome sitting opposite to me in the chimney nook all through the long, lonely evenings; never to hear him move about in the room overhead, or see him pass by the window! When Pippin and Captain John Champion were gone, then I felt how desolate it was. There were the flowers, and the spring sunshine, and the fresh air blowing over the brow of the hill, but Transome was not there with me to enjoy them. He was dead. I could not get it out of my mind, and he had died in the poorhouse. Still, I was happy in my quiet way, and thankful; but there was another change coming for me, and it came in a strange way.

I had gone down to pay my rent one cold day in November, just such a day as that which drove Transome and me to seek shelter in the poorhouse for the winter. It made me feel very low and down, thinking of that bitter, bitter day. Rebecca opened the door for me, and took me into the kitchen, where there was the poorest pretence of a fire I ever saw. But when she sent me into the master's parlor, there was no fire at all there; and the old man sat with his feet on the fender, and a tattered shawl over his knees, shivering with the cold. He was hard upon eighty by that time; and the most withered skeleton of anatomy you could have found in all our country.

"Why, dear sir!" I cried, "you'll catch your death of cold, sitting without a fire a day like this! Whatever has Rebecca let the fire out for?"

He turned to me; his face was ghastly, with purple lips and watery eyes. I could hardly believe that so much misery could look out from a human creature's face; one of God's creatures, whom He loved, and for whom Christ died. Yet I had seen misery in my time.

"I've lost all my money," he said, in a weak, complaining voice; "every penny is gone, and there's nothing before me but the poorhouse."

He spoke so solemnly, that just at first I was quite taken aback. It all flashed across me how he had turned us out of our old home, and so forced us into the poorhouse, and I thought, Maybe the Lord's words are coming true, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." But do not think that I was glad. Nay; I felt grieved for the old man, who looked so desolate and forlorn, and I prayed silently, in my inmost heart, that he might not fall so low in his old age.

"How have you lost your money, sir?" I asked.

"I don't know," he said, with a trembling, sobbing voice, "only it's all gone, and I must go to the poorhouse to-morrow."

But just then I caught sight of Rebecca at the door, which stood ajar. She was tapping her forehead, and nodding at her master, as much as to say his head was not quite sound. So then I understood that it was only a notion that had taken possession of his brain, and troubled and distressed him as if it had been real.

"Ay, to the poorhouse!" he went on, "where you and Transome went once: but nobody will come to take me out, as Philip Champion took you. No, no. I shall die there, and be buried in a pauper's coffin and a pauper's grave."

Then I thought of Transome being buried in a pauper's coffin and a pauper's grave, all through our landlord's hard-heartedness and covetousness. But I knew well that through that gloomy door he had entered into God's house, where he was at home now, like a child gone home for his holidays. All the while my landlord kept on groaning and shivering, and lamenting that he must die in the poor-house.

Now when I came to ponder over it, it seemed a more dreadful thing for this rich man to lose the sense of being rich, and to suffer all the terror of poverty, than for us who were actually poor, and could feel that poverty was only a trial and a lesson sent us from our heavenly Father. For we were but like His Son, who for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty might be made rich. But this rich man, with his hoards of money—how was he like the Son of God?

Still, it was not in my nature to stand quiet and see sorrow, without trying to comfort it. So I went up to my poor landlord, and put my rent in his numbed hand, which closed tightly over the money, as Transome's fingers closed over mine when he lay dying.

"There," I said, "that is enough to keep you nearly a week at least. Let Rebecca light a fire and get you some food, and you'll forget the poorhouse."

"You're a good woman," he said; "you'd be sorry to see me go to the poorhouse?"

"That should I," I answered; "but don't be afraid, sir. Turn your thoughts to God Almighty, who loves us all—"

"Ah!" he said, interrupting me with a long, long sigh, most pitiful to hear in one so old, "it's God who is taking away my money, no one else. Who can keep it, if He takes it away? I'm a poor man, Mrs, Transome—a friendless, penniless man."

"But how is God taking it from you?" I asked.

"I cannot tell how," he answered; "but it is melting away, melting away; and I cannot keep it. Every night and every morning I know it is going; but I cannot see or hear anybody taking it. It is God, I tell you; and who can help me, if He begins to take away my treasure?"

"But tell me," I urged, "how you know it is going?"

"I do not know," he said; "only I feel it. The moth and the rust have got at it, and I shall die in the poorhouse."

It was all in vain to argue with him, or try to comfort him. He hid the money I had brought in the breast of his ragged coat, and clasped both hands over it when Rebecca came to the door. I bade him good-day, and went out into the kitchen, grieved to the very core of my heart.

"A maundering old fool!" said Rebecca, "he's been going on like that the last week or more; and nothing 'ill put it out of his head. I sent on the sly for Mr. Saunders, the lawyer; but, thank you! master was too 'cute to say a word of it to him, and Saunders was quite naggy with me, though he'll take care to be paid for his trouble in coming. I don't know how to carry on, for I can't get a penny out of him."

"It's hard for you," I answered, "but you've been a good servant to him for many years, and you must bear on to the end now."

"Ay!" she said, with a long breath, "twenty good years, the best of my life. I should have been wedded long ago but for him. If he don't leave me the fortune he's promised me over and over again, I've made a bad bagain. But he's left it to me in his will; he's told me so scores of times."

This was more than Rebecca had ever said to me; and I went home turning it over in my mind, and wondering how folks can do things for money that they would never do for love.

All through the coldest and darkest month of winter, my landlord was tormented by the dread of going to the poorhouse, and dying there. He stinted himself of necessaries even, often lying all day in bed to save a fire; as people are compelled to do who are brought down to the lowest poverty. How Rebecca managed was a puzzle to me; but she had a hard time of it, you may be sure.

Many and many a time did the old man send for me, that I might tell him what the poorhouse was like: and every time I had to speak of it, my heart was made sore by the remembrance of Transome. Yet I could not refuse the poor rich man the only comfort he had in questioning me, and hearing my answers. For truly he would have been more cared for, and had better food and firing, in the poorhouse than he allowed to himself. Now and then I tried to turn away his thoughts from this miserable delusion, and to fix them upon God, and His Son, whose love can cover every sin, even the sin of covetousness. But he could not keep such things in his mind.

But one day when I was down there while Rebecca was gone out on some errand or other, though there were few errands to do in that house, the master tottered across the floor, opened the door, looked if anybody could be listening, and then came back to me, whispering in almost a frightened voice:

"She robs me," he said; "there is always money going; and nobody but her to steal it. But I dare not send her away, and have a stranger in the house."

"No, no, sir," I answered; "she's served you too long to rob you now. You must not get such a fancy into your head. Remember what a many years she's been with you."

"Yes," he said sharply, "because I said I'd make it worth her while to be faithful to me. But she's not to be trusted now, I tell you. She thinks my wits are going; but I'm sharp enough to know when I'm being robbed."

There was such a frightful, sneering look on the old man's withered face, that I could not bear to see it. I turned away my eyes to the dusty window, through which the sun was trying to shine into even that gloomy room; like God's grace into his gloomy heart, if he would but let it in.

"Ah!" he said, "I could have trusted Transome with untold gold, and you are like him. Come and live here, and keep your eye on Rebecca."

"Oh! no, no!" I cried hastily, thinking of my peaceful little cottage on the brow of the hill, with the flowers that would soon be blooming in the garden, and the birds chirping of a morning under the eaves, and my scholars trooping up merrily from the town. It made his large house seem a doleful prison.

"I'll make it worth your while," he began, but there I stopped him at once.

"You couldn't make it worth my while, sir," I said; "please God, I'm not long for this world, and my old home is better to me than any spot in the world; and your nephew, Philip Champion, has promised I shall have all I want, when I cannot win it for myself.

The old man sank down in his chair, almost in a heap, for he had very little strength left in him. But still I saw his sharp, glittering eye fixed upon me.

"Mrs. Transome," he said, after a while, "if you'll come and take care of me till I die, I'll leave all I have to Philip Champion."

That was different. I could not say no to that hastily. If I consented, Philip Champion, my little scholar Pippin, whom I loved more than anyone else in the world, would become a wealthy man. And I knew what Philip would do with riches—lay them, where he had laid himself, at the feet of Christ. Rather than see him grow like his uncle, I would have joyfully followed his coffin to the grave. But I had no fear of that. If Philip came into his uncle's money—and no one had a better claim to it—he would take it as a loan from God, to be laid out in His service.

"You must give me time to think of it," I said to my landlord.

And I did think of it, turning it over and over, till my poor head was fairly weary. Philip was gone away on a voyage with his father, and I could not write and ask him for counsel. Besides, if I did it, I should do it for his sake; and you cannot ask anyone you love how much you must give up for their sake. I had never thought I should be called upon to leave my old home again. But even my home spoke for Philip, who had taken me out of the poorhouse, and bought everything that was in it, and promised to take care of me when I was past work. It was but a little thing I could do in return; and it seemed as if I heard Transome's voice, saying, 'Ally, lass! Faithful in little; faithful in much!' After that I made up my mind to go, and quit my home a second time.

So the next day I dismissed my scholars, bidding them good-bye sorrowfully, and I went down again to my landlord's house. It looked more gloomy and dismal than ever: a large, square, dark house, of three stories, standing alone in a big garden, though there were plenty of other dwellings just beyond the garden walls; the windows were crusted over with dust and cobwebs, the only curtain they had, and here and there a pane was broken. The woodwork had not been painted for so many years that no one could guess what color it had been at first. All one side of the house was utterly desolate, for the rooms were unoccupied. But on the other side there was the master's parlor, with the kitchen behind it, his bedroom, and a spare room on the floor above, and Rebecca's bedroom and an attic over that. Yet even that side of the house seemed neglected and comfortless; for the sun was shining full upon it, making it look more dreary then it did on cloudy days. I thought of my own cheery home, and half turned away. But there was Philip to remember. I went on slowly down the gravel walk, overgrown with grass and dock-leaves, and was soon face to face with my landlord.

"You've made up your mind to come?" he said eagerly.

"Yes, sir," I answered; "but only on conditions. You'll leave your money to your own nephew, Philip Champion?"

"Ay, ay!" he said; "I'll send for Saunders at once, and alter my will; and I'll not forget you, Mrs. Transome. So now you must look sharp after Rebecca, you know, and see there's no waste or extravagance. You know what it is to be in the poorhouse, and I look to you to keep me out of it. I've very little money left to spend on housekeeping, and now I have three mouths to feed instead of two; so you must look sharp after Rebecca."

I had made up my mind he must promise a settled sum for every week's expenses; but we had a hard struggle before I won the victory. He beat me down, moaning over his poverty; and it was only when I threatened to leave him altogether, that he gave way. Then I went out to tell Rebecca; but, to my surprise, Rebecca knew all about it, and expected me to stay. Her story was, that she had told her master it was impossible for her to go on any longer without some help either in the day or at night; a nurse or charwoman they must have. He had grumbled at the expense, and refused to listen to her, till she suggested me. How he had prevailed upon me to go, paying no more than for my food, I have told you already.

"He knew a nurse 'ud ask such high wages," continued Rebecca, "and eat and drink so much; and as for me, I hate 'em. They give themselves such airs, and are no end of trouble. Besides, master's afraid to have any strangers in the house, for fear of 'em robbing him, I couldn't get him to hear of anybody, till I thought of you, and that suited him. He's as cunning as an old fox; and I'll be bound he's engaged you to come for next to nothing but victuals and lodging."

She waited for me to tell her what he was to pay me, but I had not given up my own home for money. I should be paid well enough when Philip came into the old man's property. Yet I felt downcast at the thought of so much cunning and deceit in a man so near the grave as he was. I went back to spend the last night in my house, and make arrangements for a neighbor to keep the key, and give an eye to it. For instead of being paid, I had made it a condition that I should keep on my cottage, and have every Sunday quiet to myself in it. The next morning I quitted it once more, not as when Transome and me were turned out of it, after living there nearly forty years, but still sadly, and with a great craving after the peace and quietness I was giving up for the sake of Philip.

(To be Continued.)

CHRIST'S LAST WARNING.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for April, 8. Matt. 23 : 23-39. Golden Text, Ps. 51 : 10.

The Religion of the Pharises—A Religion of Empty Words—Avoiding Burdens—Craving Worldly Honors—The Woe Pronounced—Inconsistency and Hypocrisy the Bane of Religious Work—Proselytes Excelling the Teachers—The Other Side—The World Overcome—Sophistical Teaching—Scrupulous in Minute Details—Negligence in Weighty Matters—Persecution Foreseen—The Culmination—The Depth of Desolation.

WHEN God says blessed, "He creates blessing by His Word; then the Lord commanded the blessing." (Ps. 33 : 3); When He says, "Woe unto you," His word is equally creative. "He spake, and it was done; He commanded, and it stood fast." (Ps. 33 : 9.) Christ's last words to the multitude were words of warning, and the warning was against unreality. He spoke to the multitude and His disciples, for there is no lesson given to the unconverted from which the child of God can learn nothing. He said, "The Scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat;" i. e., they are in the place of authority, and are to be obeyed and respected for the sake of their office. "Obey them that have the rule over you." (Heb. 13 : 17.) "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers." (Rom. 13 : 1.) "All, therefore, whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works; for these leaders of the people's religion had no personal acquaintance with God; their religion was only empty words, only sounding brass or tinkling cymbal. Their unreality came out in the fact that they required of others what they would not do themselves. Others must deny themselves, while they lived in luxury; others must be humble, while they indulged in pride; others must be criticized and judged, imposed upon and wronged, but none must move a finger or speak a word against them. O how unlike Jesus! The Pharisees and Scribes took for granted that their very position made them superior to other people, and they presumed that everybody should know and acknowledge their superiority. Thus they expected their supposed inferiors to do all those things which they deemed unnecessary for such saints as themselves. How different from Jesus! Before He imposed a yoke upon His disciples, He bore it Himself; "Take My yoke upon you, for I am meek and lowly in heart" (Matt. 11 : 29); before He taught us to love our enemies, He loved us back from our enmity; before He taught us to deny ourselves, He "had not where to lay His head." What a glorious example for evangelists and missionaries! O let us be all which we teach others to be!

They Say, and Do Not."

The Pharisees and Scribes, while professing to worship God, really worshipped themselves; "All their works they do, for to be seen of men;" they laid themselves out to attract admiration. They "love the uppermost rooms at feasts, the chief seats in the synagogues and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi." It was a matter of the last importance to them to be appreciated and honored by men. They were not satisfied in society without being made much of and introduced as the chief guests. In the very synagogue, they must be first; they went there, not to secure an audience with God, but to be well thought of among men. They loved titles, and could not exist without being distinguished some way or other.

O How Unlike Jesus;

"I am among you as He that serveth" (Luke 22 : 27); "the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." (Matt. 20 : 28.) And again, "He that is greatest among you, shall be your servant, and whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased, and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted." It is the very nature and spirit of the world to seek its own glory and to exalt itself; but this is altogether foreign to the spirit of Christ.

It was and is to those possessing such a spirit that Jesus said, "Woe unto you." When the woman taken in adultery was brought before Jesus, and no man was found without sin to condemn her, Jesus had said, "Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more." (John 8 : 11.) It was urged against Jesus, "This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them" (Luke, 15 : 2); yet this same Jesus said to the hypocrites who made such a profession of piety, "Woe unto you." First, "Woe unto you" because ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." Inconsistency and hypocrisy on the part of teachers do more to hinder the salvation of souls than any other one thing. O, what will be required at their hands on the great day of account! Another charge is, "Ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers;" defrauding the helpless of their little all under the garb of religion, and vaunting a communion with God which does not exist! "Therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation;" "ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte," to indoctrinate another into the miserable, wicked sophistry which dishonors God and ruins His blessed work with souls, and the proselyte soon exceeds his master in the work of religious deception. What a picture! But how strikingly lifelike! Who has worked for God in this generation without being almost broken-hearted at the very state of things here depicted. Thank God, there is Another Side.

The same Jesus who thus draws aside the veil, and shows us things as they look on God's side, tells us "in the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer: I have overcome the world." (John 16 : 33.) Bad as is the heart of man, God can inhabit and transform it. Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." (Luke 12 : 32).

His next accusation was of the unprincipled teaching of these false teachers, who made nothing of swearing by the temple, but everything of the gold of the temple, as though gold were more than God! He asks, "Whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that sanctifieth the gift?" and He shows that we cannot touch a holy thing without touching God Himself. Again, in the matter of tithes, these teachers were scrupulous; they gave the tenth even of the smallest herbs in their gardens, thus making a show of the greatest devotion to God, while they omitted all which involved the yielding up of their will, "judgment, mercy, and faith." There was no sacrifice of will in giving a tenth of their mint and sage, as well as of other fruit and vegetables, in that land where everything grew in such profuse luxuriance; but when it came to a question of actual justice between man and man, they shirked all responsibility which would make demands upon them, they would exact their own rights, but would not yield to the just claims of others. With them the law was, "I will have my rights; my neighbor must look after himself; I am a person of importance; he is nobody; why should I put myself to inconvenience for a person who is nothing to me?" Such is the hard, cruel, wicked spirit of the world, and of many professedly religious people too. "And faith." This, again, is neglected by the Pharisees. A man without faith is a man without God; his religion is like a hollow eggshell, which cracks and breaks into nothingness with the least pressure. Another charge was, "Ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but they are full of extortion and excess." A shop which is all outside, a beauty which is all made up of paint and finery, a character which is only surface-deep—O how despicable all these!—and such were the Scribes and Pharisees of those days; such are many professedly religious teachers of our day! God can see through the polished surface; His eyes, which are as a flame of fire, can detect the "extortion"—the wronging of others and the sinful oppression—which represents anything rather than the love of the Father; and the "excess" of self-gratification, self-love, self-exaltation, which accompanies it, and He styles it "full of hypocricy and iniquity." His last charge against them was, that they built the tombs of the prophets, and garnished the sepulchres of the righteous, and condemned their fathers for slaying just such as they were themselves daily persecuting. "Ye be witnesses unto yourselves that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets." Like father, like son; and then He prophecies that the prophets, the wise men and Scribes whom He will send unto them, will be slain by their hands, and persecuted from city to city. Jesus saw, in prospect, at that hour, Stephen stoned, James the brother of John slain with the sword, and the persecution against the Christians, both at Jerusalem and wherever there were Jews after He was risen from the dead.

Within

Can a religious hypocrite ever become a true disciple of Jesus? Yes, praise God, with Him "all things are possible." "The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1 : 7.) He who made the heart, knows how to create in us clean hearts and to renew a right spirit within us, where there has been a wrong spirit.

Jesus closed His denunciation—His first and His last while on earth—by declaring that all the righteous blood which had been shed upon the earth, should be required of that generation. Why did He speak words of such terrible severity? He, the Son of God, was about to be slain by those very religious teachers; the crucifixion of Jesus would be the culmination of all the persecution of God's messengers, which had been perpetrated from the time that Cain had murdered Abel, and the generation or race of the Jews would be counted responsible for the blood of the Son of God! Having said this, He who would not, could not, force men to believe in Him and be saved, yearning with unutterable love to those whom He died for, but could not save, cried "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"

I Would, But Ye Would Not.

"Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life." (John 5 : 40.) Such is the Lord's grievance. O that it might melt hearts! "Your house is left unto you desolate." So it is with the heart which does not receive Jesus, or does not receive Him in His fullness—there is nothing so desolate on earth as a heart where Jesus does not reign. "Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." O sinner, why not say it now? Why not now accept a Saviour, a Cleanser, a Ruler? Why not gladden now the heart of Jesus and your own?

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for March:

The Wonderful Birthday of 144,000 Translated Ones on Thursday, March 5, 1896. By the Rev. M. Baxter.

Views of Anti-Christ in the 12th Century.

The History and Peculiar Features of the Great Pyramid. By Rev. M. Baxter.

Prince Jerome Napoleon, the "Despised Person" of Dan. 11 : 21.

Singular Brighton Fanaticism: One of the Signs of the Latter Days.

Is Prince Bismarck's Recent Speech to be Accepted as a Guarantee of European Peace?

The Sun in Prophecy. By Rev. E. J. Hytche.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes, containing the monthly numbers for 1884, and 1883 may be had; price $1.]

EASTER ANGELS.

God hath sent His angels
To the earth again,
Bringing joyful tidings
To the sons of men.
They who first at Christmas
Thronged the heavenly way,
Now beside the tomb-door
Sit on Easter Day.

In the dreadful desert
Where the Lord was tried,
There the faithful angels
Gathered at His side;
And when in the Garden
Grief and pain and care
Bowed Him down with anguish,
They were with Him there.

Yet the Christ they honor,
Is the same Christ still,
Who in light and darkness,
Did His Father's will,
And the tomb deserted,
Shineth like the sky,
Since He passed out from it,
Into victory.

God hath still his angels,
Helping at His word,
All His faithful children,
Like their faithful Lord,
Soothing them in sorrow,
Arming them in strife.
Opening wide the tomb-doors,
Leading into life.

Father send Thine angels
Unto us, we pray;
Leave us not to wander,
All along our way,
Let them guard and guide us,
Wheresoe'er we be.
Till our resurrection
Brings us home to Thee.

—Selected.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO'S LEADING SPECIALTIES.

ROSES

ALL VARIETIES, SIZES AND PRICES
FINE EVER-BLOOMING PERPETUAL, CLIMBING AND MOSS* ROSES.
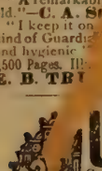
NEW AND RARE FLOWER SEEDS.
HARDY PLANTS, New Moon Flower, Clematis, Spring Bulbs, JAPAN LILIES, New Chrysanthemums, and our Wonderful ORNAMENTAL VEGETABLES. Everything sent safely by mail or express to all points. We offer Choice NEW THINGS and STERLING NOVELTIES in all departments. Our NEW GUIDE 100 pp., elegantly illustrated, describes over 1800 NEWEST and CHOICEST Varieties of ROSES, SEEDS, PLANTS and BULBS, and tells how to grow them Free. ☞ If you wish to plant anything, send for it. 20 Years Established. Over 60 Large Greenhouses.
THE DINGEE & CONARD CO.
ROSE GROWERS, WEST GROVE, Chester Co., Pa.

The New Cyclopedia of Family Medicine.

Our Home Physician

By Geo. M. Beard, M.D., of N. Y., and Ten Associate Editors, and 170 Authors. Gives Causes, Symptoms and Reliable Remedies for every Ill (Allopathic and Homœopathic). "It cannot fail to be useful wherever it goes."—J. M. Buckley, D.D., LL.D., Ed. N. Y. Christian Advocate. "A remarkably accessible and valuable work for young and old."—C. A. Stoddard, D.D., Ed. N. Y. Observer. "I keep it on a prominent shelf in my library, and find it a kind of Guardian Angel of the household in matters sanitary and hygienic."—Rev. Joseph Cook. 1,500 Pages. Illustrations. Reduced $12.00 to $6.00. Agents Wanted.
E. B. TREAT, Publisher, 771 B'way, N. Y.



UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35
MARCHAL & SMITH,
285 East 21st Street, New York.

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

LACTATED FOOD

For Young Infants a perfect substitute for mother's milk, often saving life; for the invalid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great value. Thousands who have used it say it is the

FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD.

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infants and Invalids sent on application.
Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, VT.

(33 Colors.)* DIAMOND DYES

are the Purest, Cheapest, Strongest, and most Durable Dyes ever made. One 10c. package will color 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, Rags etc. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Fancy Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bronzing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instructions and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Druggists.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON, VT.

A SPECIAL OFFER

To all Subscribers of the Christian Herald.

I have made a special arrangement with one of the best Life Insurance Societies of New York City by which I am enabled to offer to all the subscribers of this paper (in good health),

A Life Insurance Policy
Free of Charge,

provided that application is made to me within thirty days from this date. Circulars giving full particulars will be sent on application.

J. E. JEWETT,
MARCH 22, 1888. 77 Bible House, New York

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LIBRARY.

Send to me for a full Catalogue of the cheapest and best Sunday-School Books ever offered, and our Special Offer to Sunday-Schools.

Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

A long-needed book. Thoroughly practical

Young People's Prayer Meetings

HOW TO CONDUCT THEM; TOGETHER WITH A GREAT MANY CHOICE THEMES AND TEXTS USED IN MANY SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS.
By REV. F. E. CLARK.

Founder and Originator of "The Society of Christian Endeavor." A book that fills a long felt want. Just the thing for "Societies of Christian Endeavor." 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

"It is an unusual combination of Christian common sense, with a broad and also minute knowledge of the Needs, Desires, Tastes and Feelings of young people. The training of young converts, and the making of them before they are trained, the place and work of the young people's meeting, the best methods of conducting it, and its relation to the development and power of the Church—these, under various heads, are considered fully and wisely. . . . We commend it heartily. It is especially indispensable to every live minister."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

CHURCH ORGANISTS, SEE HERE! PALMER'S Book of 516 short and interesting Interludes and Modulations in all keys. Ready March 20 $1.50 net. H. R. PALMER, Lock Box 2841, N. Y. City.

WANTED:—MEN AND WOMEN to sell our "Child's Bible," the best book without question in the hands of agents to-day. Introduction by Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D. Nearly 200,000 already sold and the demand still increasing. One woman without experience paid us $1792 last year. We have sold in many places to three-fourths of the Protestant families.

How can any household where there are children afford to be without it? Rev. J. H. VINCENT, Supt. Instruction, C. L. S. C. Editor S. S. Journal.

It cannot but be a great blessing to every family in which it may find a place. Rt. Rev. FRANCIS M. WHITTLE, D.D. L.L.D., Bishop of Virginia.

I shall be glad to know that all the families of the church in the diocese of Nebraska, in which there are young children, possess a copy of this interesting and well-arranged book. Rt. Rev. GEORGE WORTHINGTON, D.D., L.L.D., Bishop of Nebraska.

The idea is most happy and the execution admirable. It is more interesting to the little ones than any story book I know of. Prof. GEO. L. WINSTON, University of North Carolina.

All have not time nor talent to simplify and winnow the Scriptures, and find the child's portion of the gospel feast. It will gladden every mother to have this done in such winsome and attractive form. Rev. ROBT. McINTYRE, Pastor M. E. Church, Charlestown, Ill.

By the hour have my children read and looked at the illustrations, then come and ask their little questions, till their hearts have seemed to be filled with the true conception of the Word. Rev. M. S. WELLS, Weedsport, N. Y.

I wish that all dear children to whom I have had the pleasure of preaching the gospel, might have the privilege of reading it daily. Rev. E. P. HAMMOND, Evangelist.

For terms and particulars, address
CASSELL & CO., B. B. S. D.
40 Dearborn St., Chicago. 104 & 106 Fourth Ave., N.Y.

"THE WORD FOR THE DAY."

Text, Hymn and Prayer for every day in the year. Compiled by A. J. A. R.

"The word for the day" has been compiled with reference to real every-day needs not ficticious or sentimental ones. Its thoughts are very well selected, and its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for devoutness it is admirable.—New York Evangelist.

"The word for the day" is one of those strong helps to a true Christian life.

16mo, Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00; American Seal, $1.75; Calf, flex., $2.50.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

NOVELTY DRESS GOODS.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.

Several invoices of Novelty Dress Goods have just been received and will be shown on Monday, March 26th. Among them are materials suitable for Lawn, Beach, and Traveling Dresses in new weaves and colors, Cashmere Laine, and Dromedary Cloth with Sicilienne Stripes for accompanying use. Light-weight Cassimere in checks and mixtures for ladies' tailor-finished costumes.

The styles mentioned above cannot be duplicated this season.

Orders by mail receive prompt attention.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.,
Broadway and 11th St.
NEW YORK.

DIVINE HEALING

Or, The ATONEMENT for SIN and SICKNESS. By CAPT. R. KELCARTER, author of Miracles of Healing, Supernatural Gifts of the Spirit, etc. New edition, written and enlarged. Small quarto, about 200 pages. Small Pica type, paper covers, 25 cents post-paid; cloth binding, 50 cents; postage 7c.

The following notices and unsolicited letters from purchasers of the previous edition, are, doubtless, indication of the reception which may be expected for this new and greatly enlarged edition:

"The best work of the kind we have ever seen; we advise any afflicted in body to get it and read it."—Words of Truth.

"While we dissent in toto from the doctrinal and practical conclusions of the work, we commend its perusal to our readers as a devout and earnest attempt to find in Scripture teaching a doctrinal basis for the notion that miraculous healing of bodily disease, through faith in Jesus Christ, is an established and perpetual law of the Gospel dispensation, under which a privilege has been conferred upon the Christian world concerning which it has remained in almost total ignorance for more than eighteen centuries."—Presbyterian Observer, Baltimore.

The Literary Revolution Catalogue (84 pages) sent free on application. ALDEN'S publications are NOT sold by book-sellers—no discounts except to Stockholders. Books sent for examination before payment, satisfactory reference being given.

JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, NEW YORK
393 Pearl St.; P. O. Box 1227. CHICAGO: Lakeside Building, Clark and Adams Sts.

SPECIAL NOTICE. Any readers of the Christian Herald who wish to procure the above book or any other publications of Mr. J. B. Alden, can send their orders to me at his published prices, and the books will be forwarded promptly and guaranteed to reach you safely. J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,

it makes no difference where you see them advertised, or by whom or where they are published or sold, send your orders to me and I will attend to them promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

WANTED—Agents to sell "The Child's Bible." Introduction by Dr. J. H. Vincent. 68 copies were sold in one village of 620 people: 78 in one of 674. One agent sold 32 copies in 3 days last week, $72 worth in 7 hours.
CASSELL & CO., B. B. S. D.
104 to 106 Fourth Ave., N.Y. 40 Dearborn St., Chicago.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

FOR GAS.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD and ...edorate POSTAGE STAMPS used to 1865. These stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT ON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $2 each. Send stamp for circulars describing wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address
G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 14. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF BENITO JUAREZ, the Patriot President of Mexico.

SPAIN AND THE SPANISH-AMERICAN REPUBLICS, by James Hosmer, M. A.

THE ANGELS OF THE GRASS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

PROPHETIC FEATURES OF THE GREAT PYRAMID, by Rev. M. Baxter.

A Young Bramin's Disappointment—A Ruined Speculator—A Japanese Idea of Christianity—Diamond Light—Preaching Under Fire—A Question at a Chinese Fair.

THE INFALLIBILITY OF THE BIBLE. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

DR. DIX ON VICE IN MODERN SOCIETY.

PICTURE OF THE IMPERIAL MAUSOLEUM at Charlottenburg, Germany.

Gems From New Books: Mud by Measure, etc.

MRS. WILLOUGHBY'S FRIENDS. (With Illustration.)

PORTRAIT OF JOHN CURRIE, the Canadian Evangelist.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL. A Serial Story. (Continued.)

CHRISTIAN WATCHFULNESS, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

REFORMED CHURCH, MEXICO.

R. C. CATHEDRAL, MEXICO.

INTERIOR OF REFORMED CHURCH, MEXICO.

REFORMED CHURCH, SEVILLE, SPAIN.

BENITO JUAREZ, LATE PRESIDENT OF MEXICO.

BENITO JUAREZ.

The Patriot President of Mexico.

The portrait on the preceding page is that of a man whose name is a hallowed memory in Mexico. Ever since his death, "Juarez Day" is kept as a holiday, his tomb is decorated with flowers, students and soldiers march in procession through the streets of the capital, and eulogistic orations are made. Accompanying his portrait is a picture of the interior of the principal church of the Mexican Church of Christ in the city of Mexico. Also on the left of the page a picture of the leading church building of the Spanish Reformation in Seville, Spain; and above that two small pictures, one of which represents the Church of San Jose in Mexico, which was given by Juarez to Bishop Riley, and the other the Roman Catholic Cathedral of the city of Mexico.

Juarez first became prominent in the country by his election in 1848 to the office of his native State. He was at that time forty-one years old, having been born in 1807. His administration of the State, and still more his active Liberalism, gave him a national reputation, which was strengthened by the antipathy of the dictator, Santa Anna, by whom he was driven into exile. In 1855, however, he returned, was elected to the new Congress, and subsequently, by his appointment to the office of Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court, became practically Vice-President of the Republic. By the flight of President Comonfort in 1858, during the troubles arising out of the suspension of the Constitution,

Governor of Oaxaca,

Juarez Became President

by right, but he was unable to organize a government in the capital, which was in the hands of the reactionary Government. It was not until 1861, after a bitter struggle, during which he promulgated his famous "Laws of Reform," that Juarez succeeded by the aid of Diaz in capturing the City of Mexico, and assuming the duties of his office. The French intervention near the close of that year, and the struggle it precipitated, was the next episode in the eventful life of Juarez. Driven to Chihuahua, and thence across the frontier, Juarez never altogether lost heart nor abandoned the struggle for the independence of his country. It was not, however, until 1866, when, the Civil War being over, the United States were at leisure to interfere, that Juarez had any real ground for hope. Then Napoleon, heeding the protest of the Washington government, withdrew his troops, and the reign of Maximilian came to a tragic close. Juarez entered the City of Mexico in triumph, July 15, 1867. His conduct at that time showed the true greatness of the man: a train of provisions preceded the conquering army, and the famished inhabitants of the captured city, instead of being plundered by the victorious army, received from it gratuitous supplies of food.

Government and Death.

Only five years more of life remained to the gallant statesman and soldier, and they were passed in the work which he delighted to perform. To repair the waste of war, to reorganize the distracted country, and to carry out the enlightened policy embodied in the Laws of Reform, were congenial tasks. His countrymen elected him President for another term, and in 1871 he was re-elected, and on December 1, took the oath of office for the third time. That his third term would have been commenced in civil strife and bloodshed, seemed at first inevitable. Jealousy and fear lest Republican institutions might be imperilled by the continuous occupation of the Presidency by one man for so long a time aroused a strong opposition. Before it was thoroughly organized, however, the sudden death of Juarez occurred, July 18, 1872, and the movement collapsed. Even his strongest opponents could not refrain from joining in the national grief, and the dead hero and statesman went to his grave in his sixty-sixth year, amid signs of general mourning and public esteem, which has not diminished to this day.

SPAIN AND THE SPANISH-AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

By James Hosmer, M. A.

All lovers and students of God's Holy Word recognize His hand in the affairs of both individuals and nations, and, looking back over the history of the past, observe with what manifest design Almighty God has directed and controlled the course of human events, in consonance with His Divine plan for the fulfilment of His foreordained purpose; and all in perfect harmony with the free agency of men, and even through it.

It is my purpose, with God's help, to give some practical knowledge about Spain and Spanish America, and also about the great work which has been undertaken in the Spanish-American Republic of Mexico, toward conversion from error and the spread of pure religion among its people, and endeavor to show how marvellously the hand of our blessed Lord has been in the work from its beginning; tracing it, step by step, in its progress through national vicissitudes and changes of various character.

To understand fully the present condition of Spain and Spanish America, we must learn something of their past. Bear with me, then, while I go back to and recall to mind the fact that complete copies of the Old and New Testaments were first printed in the original languages under Ximenes, Archbishop of Toledo; and that the first Church Council, after the days of the Apostles, whose decisions have been carefully preserved and handed down to us—namely, that of the town of Elvira, situated near the modern city of Granada, which was held A. D. 305—bore the signature of the Bishop of Cordova in Spain as second on its canons; and that in the year of our Lord 325, the same distinguished ecclesiastic, Hosius of Cordova, helped to frame the Nicene Creed at the Council held at Nicea, the ancient capital of Bithynia. Spain having preserved the faith and order of the primitive Church, successfully resisted the intrusion of the Roman anti-canonical tyranny until the latter part of the 11th century, when the National Church was obliged to succumb to its baneful influence through the power of the throne. This was brought about by the importation of a French female sovereign, who succeeded in introducing the rites and ceremonies, as well as the ecclesiastical government, of the Romish usurpation. But it is a curious and most interesting fact, showing to my mind Divine interposition and manifest purpose of God's foreknowledge, that there still exists, as a part of the Cathedral of Toledo, a chapel in which the ancient Mozarabic liturgy of the primitive Spanish Church is used.

Ancient Spain,

This grand cathedral, as may be known, is that of the Primate of the Spanish Church, standing in relation to Spain the same as Canterbury does to England. And when it was endowed with the immense wealth it now possesses, part of the endowment was made subject to the provision for the permanent chapel to which I have referred; so that at a certain hour, while the Latin mass is being celebrated in the main cathedral, the public worship of the ancient Church of Spain, according to the Mozarabic liturgy, is being carried on in the chapel which is a part of the same imposing structure, and within ear-shot of each other. Please mark this fact, and trace the analogy, that while the Jews were carried captive into Babylon, God "left not Himself without witness," speaking to His people even in the land of their exile by His servants the prophets! So while Romish error and idolatry have aggressively entered the primitive Spanish Church, the seed of her pure extraction was left to germinate within the very walls of the chief sanctuary, subsequently to bear fruit in a far distant soil, with a responsibility we may not overlook in its planting, and an earnest, consistent effort we must not neglect in its watering, that God may give it increase.

Passing over details in connection with the rapid colonization of the West Indies, I come to the period when Cortes fitted out vessels of war, and proceeded to

The Conquest of Mexico.

He finds his way to Vera Cruz, on the Gulf, founding and fortifying that city, and from thence penetrates to the heart of the country and establishes what is now its capital, the City of Mexico. He learns a tradition extant among the people, that they had been formerly visited by a white man, with long beard and flowing robe, who told them, as they described it, about heavenly things, and promised that white men should come among them again. Nor does Cortes fail to take due advantage of this tradition to aid him in his conquest. Thence he proceeds to the western coast of that country. Wherever he goes he plants the Cross and builds a church. His mission is that of a crusader, ostensibly at least, and such is the result; for in the hands of Almighty God he is evidently chosen and used as an instrument to spread some knowledge of the truth, and prepare the way for Christian civilization.

Next in prominence we trace in Spanish-American history the name of Pizarro. He lands on the Isthmus of Panama, and in the course of time finds his way down the Pacific coast to Peru. Here he subjugates the powerful native rulers, and founds on the site of the ancient city of Cuzco—the capital of the nation, where the Inca has his court and reigns in majestic splendor—the modern city of the same name. It may be reasonably inferred that the original inhabitants of Peru found their way there from Asia across the Pacific. Pizarro founds the city of Lima, the present capital of Peru. He captures rich treasures from the natives, and demonstrates the exceeding mineral wealth of the soil from which they had been obtained. Whatever may be the verdict of history as to the cruel means frequently employed to grasp their silver and gold, he was, at all events, consistent in his work for the Spanish Church, illustrating it by aiding to build church edifices on a scale of grandeur only to be equalled by the magnitude and opulence of those at home. He was a fierce and mighty conqueror, but at the same time justice demands his recognition as one who at least wished to be a hero of the Cross.

Thus Spanish power became firmly fastened on American soil, and the then mighty nation of Spain reaped the advantages of its wealth in mineral and other products. Thus continued in America for a period of three hundred years. During this period the tide of immigration rapidly set in, until, at one time, many towns in Spain were largely depopulated of males, leaving, as it was said, wellnigh only the old men and women at home. Thus by intermarriages with the natives, in the course of time, a Spanish mixed race obtained pre-eminence; so that it is estimated there are now over forty millions of people speaking the Spanish language throughout Spain and Spanish America. Vast multitudes of native South American Indians, moreover, were driven, by conquest and occupation of their lands, to the interior, where they now exist in as pure a state of positive heathendom as many of the Africans of the so-called "dark continent."

Spanish Colonial Rule

In thus rapidly sketching the outlines of Spanish history in Spanish America it must be borne in mind that the ancient Spanish Church, perverted and enslaved by the Roman schism, kept pace with the growth of Spanish power and influence. The mainspring of that Church, to maintain ascendency and supremacy by material wealth, was not lost sight of. In Mexico its cathedrals were among the richest in the world, and the revenues of Church and bishopric were enormous. The Archbishop of Mexico rejoiced in a salary of $130,000 per annum; the Bishop of Puebla, $110,000; the Bishop of Valladolid enjoyed a similiar amount; and the Bishop of Guadalajara, $90,000.

At the beginning of this century the period of

South American Independence

was inaugurated by General Simon Bolivar, and that of Mexico by the famed Presbyter, Miguel Hidalgo. Between the years 1857 and 1861, in Mexico, the period of political reform set in. Then rapidly followed the Ecclesiastical Reformation, out of which is growing an evangelical work which may well rejoice the heart of every true Christian believer, and prompt in him an earnest desire to be in some way associated with its progress.

In regard to the period of political reform and material progress just referred to, I will confine myself chiefly to Mexico, although it may be stated generally that the same cause produced a similar effect, at different times, in many other parts of Spanish America. From the year 1821 to 1857 Mexico was greatly disturbed by a succession of conflicts growing out of the opposition of the Roman Catholic party to the constitutional government. On the one hand was a patriotic party favoring freedom, progress, and universal education; on the other, an intolerant and bigoted Romish Church organization that feared the dominance of principles which would destroy its power and influence.

Some of the Grand Results

which have marked the heroic struggle for political reform in Mexico are summed up by a writer as that of "National Independence; a Constitutional Republic; freedom of worship, opinion, speech, and of the press; open doors to the interchange of the benefits of modern civilization; and an earnest endeavor in behalf of national education." These are results of contesting principles from 1810 to 1857, culminating in the final establishment of the present constitution of Mexico. I have not referred in detail to the various struggles which, in the hands of an overruling Providence, have brought order and political reform out of the chaos of conflict, but have endeavored only to trace out, in the progress of history, the evident Divine purpose, in my humble judgment, in the preparation of the way for His work, in an unmistakable ecclesiastical reformation, by the more thorough purification and evangelization of a mass of people hitherto degraded and demoralized by bigotry and intolerance.

When the Mexican Government became emancipated from the rule of the Roman Catholic Church, and liberty of worship was enacted, a heavy burden of restraint seemed to be removed, and the path made clear for material progress. The Romish Church observances, hitherto so absorbing, became merely conventional and to a great degree voluntary. Hence, while no doubt infidelity increased for the time, the work of internal improvement manifested itself. English capital vied with that which found its way from the United States in opening up new avenues for trade, and the operation of the varied resources of land and climate. In this, however, England has maintained the lead and preference, owing to the very strong spirit of nationality which is jealous of interference from its close neighbor and great sister Republic, and which dreads the possibility of an attempted annexation. And it is this same spirit of intense nationality which prompts the more intelligent Mexican people, in the reformation of their religious observance, to demand an autonomous reformed Church in preference to foreign missionary effort.

Moreover, to England belongs the credit of having been priviliged to sow the first seeds, which have now taken so deep root in Mexican soil, and which are bringing forth the fruit of a lasting reformation. As early as the year 1827 the British and Foreign Bible Society shipped which fell into the hands of the people at a price which they could afford to pay. And for fifty years succeeding, the same good work was carried on. Since then Christian writings, by Church of England authors, translated into the Spanish tongue, have been freely distributed among some of the population of the City of Mexico. So that when the Mexican Presbyter, Manuel Aguilar, and a few devoted followers, took the first steps toward a National Church organization, during the year 1864, they found a number of people, with minds already prepared by a study and knowledge of God's Holy Word, to enter heartily into a pure and simple form of worship. Prior to this, however, in Santa Barbara, about the year 1861, a Mexican ecclesiastical organization was outlined by a former Roman Catholic Presbyter, Ramon Lozano, which he styled the Mexican Catholic Apostolic Church, but it was not until the year 1864–66 that a permanent Reformed Church was established.

The First Lot of Bibles,

Some four or five years later the Rev. Henry Chauncey Riley, a native of Chili, of American extraction, who was educated partly in the United States and partly in England, and who had been devoted to Spanish Christian work for several years in New York, came to Mexico. It was at a period when to undertake in that country was attended with no little personal danger; but trusting in the Lord, and confiding his safety to His care, he pursued a bold and heroic course in exposing the errors and fallacies of the Romish Church. With eloquent discourses and able publications in the Spanish tongue he fought down opposition. Having issued a powerful pamphlet, founded upon the unanswerable arguments contained in the writings of Bishop Ryle, of Liverpool, he aroused the pointed antagonism of the Romish Church, which called upon a certain Dominican friar, Manuel Aguas by name, noted for his ability, learning, and powerful eloquence, to reply to the arguments which had been so boldly set forth in this telling pamphlet. The friar read the pamphlet, pondered over it, studied it carefully and prayerfully, and, instead of attempting, to controvert, acknowledged that he was converted through its instrumentality.

Evangelical Work

Here manifestly was the Lord's Hand. Like Saul, "yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord," who, when his eyes were opened, became Paul the apostle to the Gentiles, so this Dominican friar, having realized the truth, became at once the most zealous and earnest worker in behalf of the Reformed Church. With all his mighty eloquence and untiring zeal, he worked indefatigably for evangelization, helping to gather, in the course of his earnest labors, during part of which he was the Bishop-elect of the native Mexican Church, some fifty congregations. Then he suddenly fell asleep, with the words—"yes, the precious blood of Jesus"—on his dying lips. He was one of the earliest workers of the Reformed Church in Mexico. The whole history of the self-sacrificing efforts to establish and maintain the work of the Mexican Branch of the Church has been marked by more or less of martyrdom and a succession of struggles, self-denials, and personal dangers, involving in some cases brutal murders, and therefore the saying, that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church," may not be inaptly applied to the reformed effort before us.

After the death of Manuel Aguas, Dr. Riley was Consecrated Bishop

of the Valley of Mexico. He continued the work of his predecessor with zealous and untiring efforts, and, by the blessing of the Lord, numbers were added to the Church. He founded schools and orphanages, which, at one time, numbered nearly five hundred children. He had purchased and repaired, largely with his own private means, the magnificent Cathedral of San Francisco, and another church edifice in the City of Mexico. Besides this, Bishop Riley has expended the larger part of the income reserved from his patrimony for his own modest requirements in the support of the work confided to his care. He has been constantly advancing funds to meet the heavy expenditures of so large and important a work, and taking upon himself obligations to cover the current demand for means to carry it on. At present, the evangelizing effort in Mexico is crippled for lack of funds with which to continue it effectively, with the imminent danger of a possible sacrifice of some of its church buildings to meet outstanding obligations, in case the friends of the work do not rally in its behalf. Some of the schools have been disbanded, and most of the small band of heroic preachers have been at times left almost penniless.

If we properly regard the grand opportunity placed in our hands for an

Evangelizing Work in Mexico,

and the precious privilege afforded us of being co-workers together with Him, how shall we escape the responsibility if we neglect that which now appeals to us with such force? Fellow-Christians, think of it! Shall we withhold aid, when it may be that a large number of girls from the orphanage of the City of Mexico will be cast adrift upon the waves of immorality, amid an ocean of vice in that city? Such a danger confronts them. Shall we stand still and permit the opportunity of extending the work already commenced, by establishing a Divinity-school for the education of native preachers, to pass by unheeded? Unless pecuniary aid is at once afforded, such an opportunity may be lost. For if the work is stopped for lack of funds to carry it on, then the self-denying and earnest laborer in that vineyard of the Lord will be compelled to dispose of the church buildings and land, to meet accruing obligations. It must not be. If the true friends of the work of the Mexican Branch of the Church should now rally and make a combined and systematic effort to secure monthly, quarterly, and half-yearly subscriptions, the work will be revived and extended with all the grand possibilities which, by the blessing of God, may be expected in such a field where the harvest is already ripe; where the laborers are so few; and where the pathway has been so clearly marked out by the Lord.

Consider for one moment what a grand opportunity for evangelical work our Lord and Master places before us! Here is a pure and redeemed Church planted in the midst of Mexico, among the ruins of an institution which had lost not only its grasp of temporal power, but even the respect of a large number of its former adherents. Around it is clustered a tender vine bearing the fruit of youth reclaimed from misery and crime. A small sum, comparatively, will enable the earnest, zealous, and devoted little band of workmen to build up a school and college for instruction, by which many young Christian preachers and teachers may be sent forth to evangelize the Spanish-speaking nations.

Three Great Centres

of Christian effort, wide apart in geographical location, but united by a common tongue and sympathy of race and habits—namely, Madrid, in Spain; the City of Mexico; and Santiago, in Chili, the capital of the model republic of South America—present themselves to our consideration for the great work of the Lord in His Church, among the more than forty millions of Spanish-speaking people, as well as to bring the light of His Holy Word to the millions more of darkened heathendom now existing in South America. Out of this nucleus of the Mexican Branch of the Church, its schools and orphanages, may be developed the mighty work, by God's blessing, which I have but briefly outlined here. Let us remember that the Spanish race occupy one of the fairest portions of the whole globe. With the yoke of Romish thraldom cast off, a great future lies before it. In their midst a work of Christian faith has been commenced, restoring the purity and primitive simplicity of their early Apostolic Church, and a grand vantage-ground has been already gained. In the interest not only of Mexico, but of the entire Spanish race, this Christian evangelizing work in the Republic of Mexico should be effectively carried on. The danger of paralysis, for need of adequate means to maintain the work recently inaugurated, threatens. Shall the deadly disease be checked? Fellow-Christians, the case is in your hands! It is the work of the Lord!

THE ANGELS OF THE GRASS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday morning, April 1, 1888.

"If then God so clothe the grass, which is to-day in the field and to-morrow is cast into the oven: how much more will He clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Luke 12: 28.

The Queen of Bible Flowers—Lilies as Teachers—Divinely Appointed—The Mission of the Flowers—I. Evidences of God's Providential Care—Prophetesses of Adequate Wardrobe—A Roman Emperor's Feast—The Flower on Luther's Desk—II. To Grace the Bridal—A Widow's Floral Relic—III. To Give Comfort at the Obsequies—The Dead Watching their Graves—Looking at Wild-Flowers in the Woods—Floral Pillows, Anchors, and Crosses—IV. As Religious Symbols—Almost Human—Symbols of Christ—Of Resurrection—The Trumpeters at Nelson's Funeral—The Archangel's Resurrection Blast.

THE lily is the queen of Bible flowers. The rose may have disputed her throne in modern times, and won it; but the rose originally had only five petals. It was under the long-continued and intense gaze of the world that the rose blushed into its present beauty. In the Bible train, cassia and hyssop and frankincense and myrrh and spikenard and camphire and the rose follow the lily. Fourteen times in the Bible is the lily mentioned; only twice the rose. The rose may now have wider empire, but the lily reigned in the time of Esther, in the time of Solomon, in the time of Christ. Cæsar had his throne on the hills.

The Lily had her Throne

in the valley. In the greatest sermon that was ever preached, there was only one flower, and that a lily. The Bedford dreamer, John Bunyan, entered the House of the Interpreter, and was shown a cluster of flowers, and was told to "consider the lilies."

We may study or reject other sciences at our option. It is so with astronomy, it is so with chemistry, it is so with jurisprudence, it is so with physiology, it is so with geology; but the science of botany Christ commands us to study when He says: "Consider the lilies." Measure them from root to tip of petal. Inhale their breath. Notice the gracefulness of their poise. Hear the whisper of the white lips of the Eastern and of the red lips of the American lily.

Belonging to this royal family of lilies is the lily of the Nile, the Japan lily, the lady Washington of the Sierras, the Golden Band lily, the Giant lily of Nepaul, the Turk's Cap lily, the African lily from the Cape of Good Hope. All these lilies have the royal blood in their veins. But I take the lilies of my text this morning as typical of all flowers, and this Easter day, garlanded with all this opulence of floral beauty, seems to address us, saying: "Consider the lilies, consider the azaleas, consider the fuchsias, consider the geraniums, consider the ivies, consider the hyacinths, consider the heliotropes, consider the oleanders." With deferential and grateful and intelligent and worshipful souls, consider them. Not with insipid sentimentalism, or with sophomoric vaporing, but for grand and practical and every-day, and, if need be, homely, uses, consider them.

The flowers are the angels of the grass. They all have voices. When the clouds speak, they thunder; when the whirlwinds speak, they scream; when the cataracts speak, they roar; but when they always whisper. I stand here to interpret their message. What have you to say, O ye angels of the grass, to this worshipful multitude? This morning I mean to discuss what flowers are good for. That is my subject: What are flowers good for?

The Flowers Speak,

I. I remark, in the first place, they are good for lessons of God's providential care. That was Christ's first thought. All these flowers seem to address us to-day, saying: "God will give you apparel and food. We have no wheel with which to spin, no loom with which to weave, no sickle with which to harvest, no well-sweep with which to draw water; but God slakes our thirst with the dew, and God feeds us with the bread of the sunshine, and God has apparelled us with more than Solomonic regality. We are Prophetesses of Adequate Wardrobe.

"If God so clothed us, the grass of the field, will He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Men and women of worldly anxieties, take this message home with you. How long has God taken care of you? Quarter of the journey of life? half the journey of life? three-quarters the journey of life? Can you not trust Him the rest of the way? God does not promise you anything like that which the Roman emperor had on his table at vast expense—five hundred nightingales' tongues—but He has promised to take care of you. He has promised you the necessities, not the luxuries—bread, not cake. If God so luxuriantly clothes the grass of the field, will He not provide for you, His living and immortal children? He will.

No wonder Martin Luther always had a flower on his writing-desk for inspiration! Through the cracks of the prison floor a flower grew up to cheer Picciola. Mungo Park, the great traveller and explorer, had his life saved by a flower. He sank down in the desert to die, but seeing a flower near by, it suggested God's merciful care, and he got up with new courage and travelled on to safety. I said the flowers are the angels of the grass. I add now they are the evangels of the sky.

II. If you insist on asking me the question, What are flowers good for? I respond, they are day. The bride must have them on her brow, and she must have them in her hand. The marriage altar must be covered with them. A wedding without flowers would be as inappropriate as a wedding without music. At such a time they are for congratulation and prophecies of good. So much of the pathway of life is covered up with thorns, we ought to cover the beginning with orange-blossoms.

Good for the Bridal

Flowers are appropriate on such occasions, for in ninety-nine out of a hundred cases it is the very best thing that could have happened. The world may criticise and pronounce it an inaptitude, and may lift its eyebrows in surprise and think it might suggest something better; but the God who sees the twenty, forty, fifty years of wedded life before they have begun, arranges for the best. So that flowers, in almost all cases, are appropriate for the marriage day. The divergences of disposition will become correspondences, recklessness will become prudence, frivolity will be turned into practicality.

There has been many an aged widowed soul who had a carefully locked bureau, and in the bureau a box, and in the box a folded paper, and in the folded paper slightly fragrant, discolored, carefully pressed. She put it there forty or fifty years ago. On the anniversary day of her wedding she will go to the bureau, she will lift the box, she will unfold the paper, and to her eyes will be exposed the half-blown bud, and the memories of the past will rush upon her, and a tear will drop upon the flower, and suddenly it is transfigured, and there is a stir in the dust of the anther, and it rounds out, and it is full of life, and it begins to tremble in the procession up the church aisle, and the dead music of a half century ago comes throbbing through the air; and vanished faces reappear, and right hands are joined, and a manly voice promises: "I will, for better or for worse," and the wedding march thunders a salvo of joy at the departing crowd: but a sigh on that anniversary day scatters the scene. Under the deep-fetched breath, the altar, the flowers, the congratulating groups are scattered, and there is nothing left but a trembling hand holding a faded rosebud, which is put into the paper, and then into the box, and the box carefully placed in the bureau, and with a sharp, sudden click of the lock the scene is over.

A Half-blown Rose,

Ah, my friends, let not the prophecies of the flowers, on your wedding day, be false prophecies. Be blind to each other's faults. Make the most of each other's excellences. Above all, do not both get mad at once! Remember the vows, the ring on the third finger of the left hand, and the benediction of the calla lilies.

III. If you insist on asking me the question, What are flowers good for? I answer, They are good to honor and comfort the obsequies. The worst gash ever made into the side of our poor earth, is the gash of the grave. It is so deep, it is so cruel, it is so incurable, that it needs something to cover it up. Flowers for the casket, flowers for the hearse, Flowers for the Cemetery.

What a contrast between a grave in a country churchyard, with the fence broken down, and the tombstone aslant, and the neighboring cattle browsing amid the mullein stalks and the Canada thistles, and a June morning in Greenwood, the wave of roseate bloom rolling to the top of the mounds, and then breaking into foaming crests of white flowers all around the pillows of dust. It is the difference between sleeping under rags and sleeping under an embroidered blanket. We want Old Mortality with his chisel to go through all the graveyards in Christendom, and while he carries a chisel in one hand, we want Old Mortality to have some flower-seed in the palm of the other hand.

"Oh," you say, "the dead don't know; it makes no difference to them." I think you are mistaken. There are not so many steamers and trains coming to any living city as there are to earth; and if there be instantaneous and constant communication between this world and the better world, do you not suppose your departed friends know what you do with their bodies? Why has God planted "golden-rod" and wild-flowers in the forest and on the prairie, where no human eye ever sees them? He planted them there for invisible intelligences to look at and admire, and when invisible intelligences come to look at the wild-flowers of the woods and the table-lands, will they not make excursion and see the flowers which you have planted in affectionate remembrance of them?

Convoys Coming from Heaven

When I am dead, I would like to have a handful of violets—anyone could pluck them out of the grass, or some one could lift from the edge of the pond a water-lily—nothing rarely expensive, or insane display, as sometimes at funeral rites, where the display takes the bread from the children's mouths, and the clothes from their backs, but something from the great democracy of flowers. Rather than imperial catafalque of Russian czar, I ask some one whom I may have helped by gospel sermon or Christian deed to bring a sprig of arbutus or a handful of China asters.

It was left for modern times to spell respect for the departed and comfort for the living in letters of floral gospel. Pillow of flowers, meaning rest for the pilgrim who has got to the end of his journey. Anchor of flowers, suggesting the Christian hope which we have as an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast. Cross of flowers, suggesting the tree on which our sins were slain.

If I had my way, I would cover up all the dreamless sleepers, whether in golden-handled casket or pine box, whether a king's mausoleum or Potter's field, with radiant or aromatic arboresence. The Bible says, in the midst of the garden there was a sepulchre. I wish that every sepulchre might be in the midst of a garden.

IV. If you insist on asking me the question, What are flowers good for? I answer

For Religious Symbolism.

Have you ever studied Scriptural flora? The Bible is an arbetum, it is a divine conservatory, it is a herbarium of exquisite beauty. If you want to illustrate the brevity of the brightest human life, you will quote from Job: "A man cometh forth as a flower and is cut down." Or you will quote from the Psalmist: "As the flower of the field, so he perisheth; the wind passeth over it, and it is gone." Or you will quote from Isaiah: "All flesh is grass, and the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field." Or you will quote from James the Apostle: "As the flower of the grass, so he passeth away." What graphic Bible symbolism!

All the cut flowers of this Easter day will soon be dead, whatever care you take of them. Though morning and night you baptize them in the name of the shower, the baptism will not be to them a saving ordinance. They have been fatally wounded with the knife that cut them. They are bleeding their life away: they are dying now. The fragrance in the air is their departing and ascending spirits. Oh, yes!

Flowers Are Almost Human.

Botanists tell us that flowers breathe, they take nourishment, they eat, they drink. They are sensitive. They have their likes and dislikes. They sleep, they wake. They live in families. They have their ancestors and their descendants, their birth, their burial, their cradle, their grave. The zephyr rocks the one, and the storm digs the trench for the other. The cowslip must leave its gold, the lily must leave its silver, the rose must leave its diamond necklace of morning dew. Dust to dust. So we come up, we prosper, we spread abroad, we die, as the flower—as the flower!

"Change and decay in all around I see;
O Thou who changest not, Abide with me!"

Flowers also afford mighty

Symbolism of Christ, who compared himself to the ancient queen, the lily, and the modern queen the rose, when He said: "I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys." Redolent like the one, humble like the other. Like both, appropriate for the sad who want sympathizers, and for the rejoicing who want banqueters. Hovering over the marriage ceremony like a wedding bell, or folded like a chaplet on the pulseless heart of the dead. Oh, Christ! let the perfume of thy name be wafted all around the earth—lily and rose, lily and rose—until the wilderness crimson into a garden, and the round earth turn into one great bud of immortal beauty laid against the warm heart of God. Snatch down from the world's banners eagle and lion, and put on lily and rose, lily and rose.

But, my friends, flowers have no grander use than when on Easter morning we celebrate the reanimation of Christ from the catacombs. The Flowers Spell Resurrection.

There is not a nook or corner in all the building but is touched with the incense. The women carried spices to the tomb of Christ, and they dropped spices all around about the tomb, and from those spices have grown all the flowers of Easter morn. The two white-robed angels that hurled the stone away from the door of the tomb, hurled it with such violence down the hill that it crashed in the door of the world's sepulchre, and millions of dead shall come forth.

However labyrinthine the mausoleum, however costly the sarcophagus, however architecturally grand the necropolis, however beautifully parterred the family grounds, we want them all broken up by the Lord of the Resurrection. The forms that we laid away with our broken hearts must rise again. Father and mother—they must come out. Husband and wife—they must come out. Brothers and sisters—they must come out. Our darling children—they must come out. The eyes that with trembling fingers we closed, must open in the lustre of Resurrection morn. The arms that we folded in death must join ours in embrace of reunion. The beloved voice that was hushed must be returned. The beloved form must come up without its infirmities, without its fatigues—it must come up.

Oh, how long it seems for some of you! Waiting—waiting for the Resurrection! How long! how long! I make for your broken hearts today a cool, soft bandage of Easter lilies. Last night we had come in the mails a beautiful Easter card; on the top of it a representation of and under it the inscription: "The trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised." I comfort you this day with the thought of Resurrection.

The "Trumpet Creeper."

When Lord Nelson was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral in London, the heart of all England was stirred. The procession passed on amid the sobbing of a nation. There were thirty trumpeters stationed at the door of the Cathedral, with instruments of music in hand, waiting for the signal, and when the illustrious dead arrived at the gates of St. Paul's Cathedral, these thirty trumpeters gave one united blast, and then all was silent. Yet the trumpets did not wake the dead. He slept right on.

But I have to tell you, what thirty trumpeters could not do for one man, one trumpeter will do for all nations. The ages have rolled on, and the clock of the world's destiny strikes nine, ten, eleven, twelve, and time shall be no longer!

Behold the Archangel Hovering!

He takes the trumpet, points it this way, puts its lips to his lips, and then blows one long, loud, terrific, thunderous, reverberating and resurrectionary blast. Look! Look! They rise! The dead! The dead! Some coming forth from the family vault. Some from the city cemetery. Some from the country graveyard. Here a spirit is joined to its body, and there another spirit is joined to another body, and millions of departed spirits are assorting the bodies, and then reclothing themselves in forms radiant for ascension.

The earth begins to burn—the bonfire of a great victory. All ready now for the procession of reconstructed humanity! Upward and away! Christ leads and all the Christian dead follow, battalion after battalion, nation after nation. Up, up! On, on! Forward, ye ranks of God Almighty! Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates, and let the conquerors come in! Resurrection! Resurrection!

And so I twist all the festal flowers of this church with all the festal flowers of chapels and cathedrals of all Christendom into one great chain, and with that chain I bind the Easter morning of 1888 with the closing Easter of the world's history—Resurrection! May the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Unexpected Answer.—Rev. Mr. Arthur says: "A minister not long ago was preaching in a place in the country, and as he came to the middle of his sermon he suddenly stopped and solemnly inquired, 'Is there anyone here who will come to Jesus now?' He did not expect an audible answer, but a man immediately rose in his pew and earnestly replied, 'I will, sir,' and with that 'I will' he passed from death unto life. If more people would make their acceptance of Christ as definite a transaction they would have a more robust Christian life."

A Seaman's Sad Doom.—"An Evangelist heard there was a sea-captain dying close at hand. He said he would visit him at once, but was told it was of no use, as none who had previously visited him had ever seen him touched by the power of God. However, the evangelist called on him, and told of the love of the Lord Jesus. The man listened to him quietly enough, but all unmoved. At last he said, 'Look here, young man, it is of no use speaking to me about these things. Nearly as far back as I can remember, God's Spirit was working with me, continually convincing me of my sin, but I always stifled His appeals. This went on for a long time, but during one long voyage I noticed He had left me. When I came ashore, and was going up a street, I came upon a crowd, in the centre of which was an evangelist. As I stood there listening, the Holy Spirit came upon me with redoubled power, urging me to give myself to God. I turned away muttering, 'Oh, bother!' and walked straight into a liquor saloon, and got drunk to drown consciousness. God's Spirit left me, never to return.' Just then the man's wife came in; the evangelist remarked to her, 'This is, indeed, awful.' 'Awful,' she replied. They had spoken a few words, when the captain raised himself and said, 'It is getting dark, darker, dark—' He did not complete the word; he was dead."

Retribution in This Life.—About Fifty years ago there lived a gentleman, owner of a small property on the Welsh coast. Though a landowner, he was the leader of a band of men who lured vessels by false lights on the rocks, and stole their cargoes. One evening he heard that a Spanish trader was in sight and in distress. Immediately the false beacon fires were lit, and the poor seamen, thinking they were friendly guides, steered for them, and came right in among the breakers, where the ship was soon dashed to pieces. The wicked wrecker went down to the seaside, and the first body he saw on the shore, his face turned up and the moon shining full upon him, was his only son, to whom he was deeply attached. Unknown to the father, he had embarked on board this ship for home, little thinking that his own father would become the author of his destruction.

The Idols of the Heathen.—The Rev. John Thomas, missionary in India, was one day travelling through the country, when he saw a great number of people waiting near an idol temple. He went up to them, and, as soon as the doors were opened, he walked into the temple. Seeing an idol raised above the people, he walked boldly up to it, held up his hand, and asked for silence. He then put his finger on his eyes, and said, "It has eyes, but it cannot see! It has ears, but it cannot hear! It has a nose, but it cannot smell! It has hands, but it cannot handle! It has a mouth, but it cannot speak! Neither is there any breath in it!" Instead of doing injury to him for affronting their god and themselves, the natives were all surprised; and a Brahmin was so convinced of his folly, by what Mr. Thomas said, that he also cried out, "It has feet, but it cannot run away!"

Twenty Years "Thinking about It."—"A young lady was converted to Christ at a Gospel-meeting. As she was leaving the building, after the happy change, she felt so full of joy that she spoke to a woman about her soul. This woman was much older than she, and when asked, 'Have you come to Christ?' she replied, 'No; but I am thinking about it.' Twenty years passed. The young lady is married, and still she finds time, even among her household duties, to preach Christ. She was speaking at a meeting lately, and after the address went down among the audience. There she found that same woman, and again asked her the same question, and again got the reply, 'I am thinking about it.' Twenty years thinking about accepting the most gracious invitation that was ever offered! Twenty years considering if one should flee from danger, from certain destruction into peace and safety! How many souls are going to hell thinking of going to heaven! 'Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?'"

Encouragement of a Brave Chief.—There is a touching fact related in the history of a Highland chief, of the noble house of M'Gregor, who fell, wounded by two balls, at the battle of Prestonpans. Seeing their chief fall, the clan wavered, and gave the enemy an advantage. The old chieftain, beholding this effect of his disaster, raised himself up on his elbow, while the blood gushed in streams from his wounds, and cried aloud: "I am not dead, my children, I am looking at you to see you do your duty." These words revived the sinking courage of his brave Highlanders. There was a charm in the fact that they still fought under the eye of their chief. It roused them to put forth their mightiest energies; and they did all that human strength could do to stem and turn the dreadful tide of battle. And is there not a more powerful charm for thee, O Christian, in the fact that you contend, in the battle-field of life, under the eye of your Saviour? Wherever you are, however oppressed by foes, however exhausted by the stern strife with evil—the eye of Christ is fixed most lovingly upon thee.

PREACHING UNDER FIRE.

A visit recently paid by the Rev. H. W. Rankin to Brighton, Colo., when he preached in a neat brick church, recalled to his memory his appalling experience on a previous visit to that town, which he describes in a letter to the Church. He says: "My first visit to this field was made four years ago, when I held the first service ever held in the place, preaching in a saloon, the only place that could be secured. That meeting will never be forgotten by those who attended it. A company of cow-boys, hearing that a meeting was going to be held, came galloping in on their ponies, with the determination to break up the meeting and run the preacher out of the place, as they had done in several others. They began by running their horses around the building, whooping like Indians, and firing their revolvers, then running their revolvers through the broken panes of glass in the windows and firing through the building. Many of the people became terribly frightened and ran out. I entreated the people to remain, saying that I was going to continue the service, with God's help, even if all left. This gave the people confidence, and many kept their seats. I went through with the service, and a few minutes before the meeting closed they jumped on their horses and rode off vanquished. The next day they rode into the place. I went and spoke kindly to the leader, and invited them to come to the meetings. The big tears rolled down his cheeks, and, taking me by the hand, he said, 'You are the greatest brick of a fellow we ever met, and we will never try to break up one of your meetings again. We will do anything you want done.' And they were my friends from that time."

A JAPANESE IDEA OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Government school at Sendai, in Japan, was closed a short time ago, but not until the step had been discussed in the provincial assembly. The discussion elicited several remarkable expressions of opinion. Mr. De Forest, who reports the debate to the Missionary Herald, says: "It is no small gain to have our school discussed in the provincial assemblies. Here, when the question of abolition of the Government Middle School was presented, it was strongly opposed by one member, who said that such a step would leave the city with nothing but that Christian school, where they had prayers every morning, and where there was so much religion that it might be called 'priest-ridden' or 'stinking with religion.' To this the vice-governor replied that the school was doing a regular educational work that would compare well with other schools, and that the prayers were only two or three minutes long, the time, twenty-five minutes, being taken up mainly with addresses that conveyed useful information and helped to make character. A lawyer followed in the same strain; and the talk has cleared the track so that now it is fully understood that our school stands pledged to do all that is possible to develop character, as well as to quicken the intellect; and the means used are the principles of the Christian religion."

A QUESTION AT A CHINESE FAIR.

During a recent journey in China, to various places to the south of Tung-cho, where fairs were being held, Mr. Beach, a missionary of the American Board, preached at Sin Ling. In a letter to the Missionary Herald, he thus relates what occurred: "There was the densest crowd I have ever seen in my life, owing to its being a fair-day, and a theatre day too. The streets being full, the housetops were occupied by sight-seers. The passage of our cart through this solid mass of humanity was an exciting and dangerous piece of business. Just outside the town was a hill, from which I preached to an immense crowd. One fine old man of seventy-three stood for more than an hour, listening intently, and then, owing to the infirmities of age, he came and sat down just behind me. In reply to a man who wished to know whether I was explaining a method for getting rich, and learning that I was not, went off disgusted, I tried to show that the reason why he wished to get rich was that he might attain happiness, and that he showed his unwisdom in not asking whether there was not a way to attain happiness that was eternal and not ephemeral. At this point the old gentleman took up the thought, and talked to the people very feelingly of the transitory nature of this world's joy. His words, being those of age and respectability, had effect. Later I talked personally to the old gentleman about his own relation to God, and his prospects for the other world, so soon to dawn upon him. I have some hope of the old man.

VICE IN MODERN SOCIETY.

In the course of his Lenten lecture the Rev. Morgan Dix, D. D., the rector of Trinity Church, New York, startled his aristocratic hearers by a graphic portrayal of the dangerous habits and conditions of the upper ranks of society. Having deplored the vice of the lower classes, which has its origin in the crowded tenements, he asked: "But what shall be said of the higher classes, for those whose sins are without justification, and denote simply carelessness, irreligion, unbelief?

"Look how young girls are trained—in softness and luxury, with the one idea of making a figure in society, and a brilliant marriage; of making the most of their physical advantages, and alluring the other sex by the acts best adapted to that purpose. See them on the drive, through the troubled social sea, at their lunch parties, with a dozen courses and half as many kinds of wines; at the opera, immodestly attired; at the ball, giving the whole night to dissipation; at the summer haunts of fashion, without due oversight or sense of responsibility; treated with easy familiarity by careless men, and, apparently, without a vestige of an idea of what is due to a gentlewoman from a man. Listen to the low gossip among these young women, to the broad speeches and unclean stories by which they are prepared for that final surrender of the last ideas of propriety and of all faith in the honor and virtue of men.

"Then pass on, and let us look at the woman as married—married, perhaps, for her money, or marrying some man for his money, without love and without respect; married, but with no idea of living thereafter under bonds; resolved to be more free and enjoy life more; eager for admiration, athirst for compliments and flattery, so that the husband early drops into a secondary position, and some other man, who does the madly devoted for the time, engrosses the larger share of her thoughts. Follow out this subject till you come to the divorce suit and the separation, and thence to the next, and now adulterous marriage, when those whom Christ and the gospel forbid to marry so long as some one else liveth, snap their fingers at the attempted restriction, and commence a second partnership without fear and without remorse.

"We all know that these are the commonest things of the day. I have gone as far as I dare to go, and yet I have done no more that to skim the bubbling caldron and take off what comes to the top, leaving the black broth below, a thing too foul to be described. But the scum is an index to what is underneath; and if these things whereof we have spoken go on in sight, what, think you, goes on out of sight?"

DIAMOND LIGHT.

An interesting question, in connection with diamonds, has been submitted to a practical experiment in Paris. It has long been asserted by some and denied by others, that the diamond has the power of retaining light and of afterward emitting it in the dark. The theory has been often stated, but has not been easy of test. All, or nearly all, the great diamonds—such as the Kohinoor, the Regent, the Grand Mogul—cannot be made the subject of experiment, and stones of a lesser size do not always give satisfactory results. Happily, a private individual, the owner of a gem of remarkable purity, lent his diamond for scientific investigations. These have been most satisfactory, and the "phosphorescence" of the stone may be regarded as proved. The diamond was exposed for an hour to the direct action of the sun's rays and afterward removed into a dark room. For more than twenty minutes afterward it emitted a light so bright as to render visible objects within reach of its rays. It then gradually paled until again submitted to the sun's rays. It is thus with God's jewels. The light they give in the world is derived from the Sun of Righteousness, and they would not give out light if they did not live always in "the light of God's presence." "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord." (Prov. 29 : 27.)

A YOUNG BRAHMIN'S DISAPPOINTMENT.

In an interesting autobiographical narrative published in the Indian Witness, a converted Brahmin describes the chagrin which he experienced when, as a youth, he attempted to destroy a playmate by a miracle and failed. He says: "Immediately after the performance of the sacred-thread ceremony—a ceremony consisting of putting the Brahmical badge round the neck, I was confined for three days in a closed room, and was not allowed to have intercourse with anyone except my grandmother, a venerable old lady, universally loved and respected. During these three days she became my teacher, and reminded me of my new duties and responsibilities, and what honor I could justly expect from the lower orders of society simply because I was a Brahmin. I thought that I was in possession of divine power, and could destroy anyone who would dare stand against me, simply by the breath of my mouth. I was very glad to have been told that I had this great power, and I thought of making an experiment, immediately after my release, on one of my playmates, who belonged to a caste next to the Brahmin, and with whom I was not always on good terms. So, after I was set free to walk about the village and join the company of my former playmates, one of the first things that I did was to find an occasion of a quarrel with the boy whom I wanted to destroy. I found the occasion very soon, and in the quarrel gave him two or three severe blows, and then warned him not to touch my person, as I had now the power of reducing him to ashes. Notwithstanding my warning, he retaliated and had given me the same number of blows, or perhaps more. I tried in vain to destroy him by the breath of my mouth, and at last threw my sacred thread at his feet, thinking that this time he would be burnt up with fire. But seeing that I was defeated in my attempt to destroy him, and all the magical power of my sacred thread failed, I ran crying to my grandmother."

A RUINED SPECULATOR'S CHANGE.

In a new work, by the Rev. W. Haslam, the following incident is related: A wife and daughter who had received blessing at a mission, came to ask prayer for the husband and father at home. "He cannot come out," they said; "will you pray for his conversion?" As the mission went on, the ladies became more and more urgent for the object of their solicitude. The gentleman, it appeared, had been in a high station of life, and "well off," as it is called. Ultimately he lost all! After this he was obliged to work, and was fortunate in obtaining a lucrative situation, which provided a sufficiency for himself and family. It was very galling, however, to him to have to do this; and instead of humbling himself under God's hand, he tried to comfort himself by taking stimulants and smoking. Presently he lost his appointment, and in so doing brought poverty and destitution upon himself and his family. At length he fell ill, and before long was unable to leave the house, so that he could not obtain his accustomed stimulants. During this illness he was brought to a better mind. He was told that if he repented and prayed he would make his peace with God. He did repent, as he thought; that is to say, he was sorry for his wasted life and ruined state. I visited him. He was suffering from rheumatism, and consequently could not rise from his chair to welcome me. At last I said to him, "Do you think that your repentance and prayers can save you?" "Yes," he said; "I do not know of any other way." I pointed out to him God's way of salvation. A few days after this I called again, and, ringing the bell, waited for admittance. I had not waited long before I heard some one with a heavy footstep approaching the door. It was opened wide, and there stood my friend with a beaming face. "Come in," he exclaimed. "thou blessed! God has blessed you to my soul." I was taken all by surprise to see him up and walking about, "Oh, yes!" he said, "God has made me well. My burden of sin is gone, and my rheumatism is gone, too; I am quite another man. I cannot help thanking and praising God all day." I cordially thanked God with him, and then we walked back to the room where he used to be so dismal. "Everything," he said, "looks bright to me now; but," he continued, "the thing I wonder at most, is, why I did not see this simple and plain truth before."

PROPHETIC FEATURES OF THE GREAT PYRAMID.

By Rev. M. Baxter.*

Its Site—Its Plan—Its Astronomical Relations—The Ratio of the Cubit—The Pyramidal Inch A Typical Coffer—A Perpetuated Measure of Contents—The Seven Overlappings of the Grand Gallery—A Summary of the Teachings.

THE question, "Why was the Pyramid built?" has been freely discussed of late years. The view maintained by Professor Smyth, and Dr. Seiss in his "Miracle in Stone,' and by others, is, that the Pyramid was built not only for scientific purposes, but for chronological and prophetical also. Thus it is held that the object for which the Great Pyramid was erected, was to treasure up in its stone pages a record of Divine Wisdom relating to meteorological, astronomical, chronological, and other important truths. Further, that this storehouse of knowledge was kept perfectly sealed until the times we are living in, for the reason that it was to be a "witness unto the Lord of Hosts." (Isa. 19:19, 20.) The fact of its revelation being made now, also confirms the conviction that we are living in the last days—a truth that has been ascertained and proclaimed from numerous other standpoints in harmony with the Word of God.

In the first place.—In now pointing out some of the Pyramid's Oriental architect, with the best aids which modern science affords, we notice that the site chosen for the point of erection was eminently inconvenient for constructional purposes, as the rocky outcrop of the Ghizeh Hill had to be cut down and leveled; but it was essential to the grand design, it being in the 30th parallel of latitude, the very parallel which has to the north and south of it an equal distribution of terrestrial semi-surface. In this respect the Pyramid is absolutely unapproached by any other building, ancient or modern.

Special Features in the Work

Secondly. We find that this structure was designed and built in its entirety on a plan so scientifically perfect that the sum of the measured four sides of the base bears, within the nearest possible practical approach, the same relation to the measure of its vertical height that the circumference of a circle bears to its radius. We find, moreover, that a certain standard measure was used in the construction of all the standard expressional features of the Pyramid. That standard was a cubit of 5×5 pyramid inches, and when one side of the square base is measured, it is found to contain this cubit 365 times with a fraction plus, thus giving our sidereal year of 365 days, and the plus fractions of the four sides giving, in their sum, the equivalent of one day in four years, or showing leap year in the cycle of four years, such cycle being indicated in the four pyramidal sides.

Thirdly. We discover that this huge pile of solid masonry was built to a microscopic nicety, accurately squared, and Astronomically Oriented.

Nearer investigation reveals a still more impressive fact, viz., that the vertical height of this Pyramid, which has already spoken in its practical manner of the time of the earth's revolution around the sun, in its annual orbit, speaks likewise of the length of radius of the earth's orbit round the sun.

Fourthly. It appears that the cubit of 25 Pyramid inches bear an exact relation to the only true and unchanging standard in the knowledge of man, viz., the polar axis of the earth (8,000 miles) of whose semi-length or distance from the earth's centre to either pole (4,000 miles) this cubit of the pyramidal architect is the ten-millionth part precisely.

Fifthly. It is ascertained that the pyramid inch is critically the five-hundred-millionth part of the earth's axis length; also, that when the length of the diagonals of the base of the pyramid is found in such inches, the sum total of the length of one diagonal multiplied into the other, expresses the precession of the equinox in an inch to a year—namely, 25,827 years.

Sixthly. In the central King's Chamber, as already mentioned, there is a Stone Coffer, which is of the designer's skill and knowledge. The mass of its sides and bottom is cubically identical with its internal space-capacity, viz., 71,250 cubic inches; also the length of two of its adjacent sides is to its height as the circumference of a circle to its diameter. We find that this stone coffer corresponds and is commensurable with the sacred Ark of the Mosaic tabernacle in space-capacity, although much more massive and durable in its material, for the Coffer and the Ark each contain about 71,250 cubic inches as the total size of their interior space. The contents-capacity of the Coffer is also found to be precisely equal to the Hebrew laver, four chomers, and to that of the old Saxon chaldron, the quarter part of which is the ordinary quarter measure used by farmers for the quarter of wheat. It has also other indications of a remarkable character.

A Marvellous Illustration

Seventhly. In the Entrance Passage from the outside of the Pyramid there is a very significant angle, which has been found to have a special astronomical use in indicating the date of the Pyramid's erection, and has, therefore, an axis-angle as tested by the most perfect scientific apparatus. Thirty years ago Sir John Herschell showed that such an angular position pointed to the transit of the then polar star, Draconis, below the pole, and at a measurable distance therefrom, and thereby enabled the building to tell its own absolute date of erection, which is thus inferred to have been about 2,170 years before Christ, because it was the exact point of time when that polar star, in its movements in the sky, would be in just such a position that its light would shine directly down the whole length of the tube of the Entrance Passage.

Eighthly. We find in that noble ascending passage, known as the "Grand Gallery," seven overlappings in the ascending walls, indicative alike of into a week of days, visible to the naked eye, and the number of Pleiades, which constellation held so important a determining value in the adoption of the date of construction. Its angle, rising from north to south, is 26° 18' 10"; its length some 157 feet; its height 27 feet 5 inches; breadth varying from 3 feet 6 inches to 6 feet 10 inches—a truly grand passage, in itself commemorative of history, and leading to a notably symbolic and scientific chamber.

Time-Division

Thus this wonderful pyramid, computed to be built about B. C. 2170—nearly seventy years before the birth of Abraham, and 570 years before the Exodus led by Moses—is held to be an "altar in the midst of Egypt, even a pillar (or monument) in the border thereof, which shall be a sign and witness unto the Lord of Hosts in the midst of Egypt."

THE ETHICAL READINGS OF THE PYRAMID are of profound interest. The first descending Eastern Passage is 985 inches long, which are held to denote figuratively 985 years, beginning about eighty years before the Flood, and ending with the triumphant entrance of the Israelites out of the Wilderness into Canaan. At that point their comparative ascent to liberty and wealth becomes denoted by the commencement of the Ascending Passage.

The first Ascending Passage is 1542 inches in length, which are understood to represent figuratively 1542 years from the entrance of the Jews under Joshua's leadership into the full possession of the promised land until the birth of Christ.

Then at the end of 1542 inches of the first Ascending Passage, there commences the Grand Gallery, which is 1882–3 inches in length, which are understood to signify 1882–3 years of this Christian dispensation from the Birth of Christ in A. D. 6 at the end of which the Troublous Times and Distress of Nations will commence, as indicated by the Grand Gallery merging at that point into a low, narrow, difficult exit passage, and will run its course for an additional twelve years.

But this is not all, for at a distance of 33 inches from the beginning of the "Grand Gallery" we come upon a square partly in its floor, from the bottom of which a passage leads westerly for a short space to the edge of a dark, almost perpendicular, abyssmal shaft, which leads down into the deep and dismal subterranean descending passage, just before it falls into the Hades chamber or pit, which lies some 180 feet down in the living rock. Now, taking the thirty-three inches along the line of the floor of the "Grand Gallery" to represent thirty-three years, this sepulchral chamber shows the date of the Crucifixion of Christ in A. D. 39 which was the 33d or 34th year in our Lord's life. The inhumation of His body in the tomb, and His resurrection, are thus thought to be exhibited in these mechanical features, which symbolize the fact that the grave could not detain Him beyond the appointed time.

Sepulchral Aperture,

The result of the learned labors of scientific men who have unfolded the mystery of the Great Pyramid, is that its chronology points to the duodecennial period of twelve years from 1888–9 to 1901, as an epoch of no common interest to the human family; but especially to that portion of it who love the truth and the God of truth, who serve "the living and true God," and wait for His Son from heaven, even Jesus, who delivered us from the wrath to come. Those who will candidly listen to the testimony, and have "an ear to hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches," will find enough in the conclusions drawn from the Pyramid concerning events in the near future, to fill the heart of every faithful child of God with joy and rejoicing, and to incite him to be ever on the alert, watching, hoping, praying, believing, and seeking daily, hourly, to be kept "unspotted from the world."

To sum up, then, the scientific features of the Great Pyramid are mathematically exact, and consist in part of the following: It squares the circle, tells its own latitude, its own age, the true shape of the earth, the distance of the sun, the law of gravitation, the density of the earth, the days in a year, the length of the precessional cycle, and contains a standard of weights and measures, temperature, etc.

* An extract from an exhaustive article in the March number of the Prophetic News. For sale, price six cents, at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

Rev. G. H. Pember's New Prophetic Work, entitled "Earth's Earliest Ages and Their Connection With Modern Spiritualism and Theosophy,' is for sale at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Office. Price $1.50. This volume of 500 pages draws a parallel between our time and the age before the Deluge, showing how closely in spirit and moral tone they resemble each other, and how many of the distinguishing features of the earlier age have reappeared among us in modern dress. Thus proving that it fulfils the conditions which were to indicate the time of Christ's Secood Advent (Matt. 24:37–39).

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents; always payable in advance. Single copies for sale by, or can be ordered at, all newsdealers'.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheques, or drafts or express money order, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Receipts are not sent, the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that his remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please advise us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Change of Address. Name of Post Office and State, of both old and new address, should always be given in case of removal.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Measure of Retaliation Directed Mainly against those countries prohibiting the importation of American hog products, is now before Congress. Senator Farwell, of Illinois, on March 29, introduced a bill reciting that products of the United States are unjustly discriminated against by certain foreign States, on various ill-founded pretexts, laying restrictions on the importation of such products, and that the diplomatic negotiations conducted through a series of years by the United States have failed to secure the removal of these unjust restrictions. It then provides that whenever the Minister or other chief diplomatic representative of the United States to any foreign State shall officially report the failure of the efforts of the United States to secure the removal of any discrimination by such foreign State against any product of the United States, the President shall be authorized to make proclamation directing that such products of the foreign State as he may deem proper shall be excluded from importation to the United States. The President may modify, revoke, or renew such prohibition as the public interests may require.

The Enlargement of the Yellowstone National Park, and the protection of the forests, game, and natural wonders within its limits, is enacted in a bill which passed the Senate on March 29. The area to be added to the park is about 2,000 square miles. This additional area abounds in large streams and lakes, the sources of the Columbia and Yellowstone, the waters running to both oceans. For the preservation of the water in this natural reservoir, the dense timber which covers the region is of immense value, and Senators believe that the best way to prevent its destruction is to include it within the park. The added country includes favorite resorts of deer, elk, bears, and mountain sheep, while the present limits of the park are said to be much too small for a satisfactory large-game preserve. The bill provides that roads are to be laid out and sites for bridges selected by an army engineer officer. Similar bills passed the Senate during the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses; the House, however, failed to act upon them.

The International Council of Women, now in session in Washington, is attracting general public attention. The address of welcome was delivered on March 26 by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who reviewed the history of the woman suffrage movement. "To celebrate our fortieth anniversary," she said, "we have here representatives in person, or by letter, from near every State in the Union, from Great Britain, France, Finland, Italy, Sweden, India, Denmark, and Norway. In welcoming representatives from other lands we do not feel that they are strangers and foreigners, for the women of all nationalities, in the artificial distinctions of sex, have a universal sense of injustice that forms a common bond of union between them." Among the papers read at the subsequent sessions, was one by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, on "The Power of Organization." She recognizes three elements in society of which account must be made in any large plan of organization. First, she instances the class of leaders, small in number, powerful in its correspondence with certain needs of the body politic; secondly, the class of the led, strong in numbers and in the magnetic multiplication of sympathy. Between the two there is a class, moderate in extent, which neither aspires to lead nor asks to be led. This is a deliberative class, whose function is very important, intervening with deliberation between the few and the passion of the many. The "Legal Condition of Women in the Three Kingdoms" was the subject of a paper read by Mrs. Alice Scatcherd, one of the English delegates, who was sent by the Edinburgh Women's Suffrage and Women's Liberal Association. About thirty Women's Rights Associations are represented in the Council, and it is considered the largest gathering of notable women in the history of this country.

An Outbreak of Lawlessness in Connection with the strike on the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad was a deplorable phase assumed last week in this gigantic strike of railroad employees. A band of men, regardless of the good name of the organization, and the advice of their best friends, attacked a switch engine on the track in Chicago, on March 29, threw the company's agents off the train, and maltreated the Superintendent of the road, who fell into their hands. It required a strong police force to scatter the rioters. Closely following these acts of violence, the yard force of the Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul Railroad in Chicago, 200 men in all, went on strike, to show their sympathy for the Burlington men. Subsequently they listened to conservative advice, and returned to work again. Wise counsel, however, did not prevail long; for after a few hours the same men went on strike again. The strikers have added to their acts of violence by setting a railroad shop at Aurora, Ill., on fire, and attempting to burn a car standing on a side-track.

Master-Workman Powderly, the Head of the Knights of Labor, has issued a significant manifesto, in which he urges that the members work for the education of the rank and file to a higher standard, and discourage strikes. He confesses that the Knights of Labor strikes have not been successful, and that the time to call a halt has arrived. "It is agreed," he says, "that strikes do good. So does a fire. Strikes do good! Go to the coal fields of Pennsylvania and count the victims; go through the Lehigh region and count the sufferers; go into the homes of the brave, heroic men who waged the unequal battle, and ask of the wives and children you will find there if strikes do good, and note the answer. Let the ones who have felt the pangs of hunger testify. Do not go to those who, standing far from the scene of conflict, will say strikes do good." While Mr. Powderly is thus giving sound advice, a movement among his followers is gaining in strength, designed to bring about his removal from the chief office of the organization.

A Terrible Mine Disaster Occurred on March 29, at Rich Hill, a mining town of 5000 inhabitants, about 75 miles south of Kansas City, Mo., While the day men were at work in coal mine No. 6 about noon, and fifteen of them had just come up and were standing at the mouth of the shaft, an explosion took place that shook the earth for miles around, and was followed by a burst of flame from the mouth of the shaft that leaped fifty feet in the air. The men at the mouth of the shaft were badly burned. There were fifty-two men in the mine when the explosion occurred, of whom twenty-one were killed outright, and many others so severely burned as to render recovery almost impossible. It is a providential circumstance that the catastrophe occurred at a time of the day when a smaller number of men are down the mine than at any other time. A little earlier or later, over one hundred men would have been in the workings. The work of rescue was commenced as soon as it was possible to descend, and before danger of more explosions was past, the men showing marvellous heroism in volunteering for the perilous task. The superintendent and four men made up the first party of rescuers, and they had just found one injured man and put him on the cage to be drawn up when another explosion occurred, bruising and burning the brave rescuers at the foot of the shaft. They were soon drawn up, and after a brief interval another party descended. These extricated and brought up fourteen imprisoned men, who were more or less burned. The gallant men worked all night, and relaxed their efforts only when all hope of saving more lives was evidently futile.

The Financial Statement of Great Britian was presented to the House of Commons on March 26 by Mr. Goschen, the Liberal financier, who is now serving in the Conservative camp as Chancellor of the Exchequer. His financial proposals for the ensuing year are framed on Liberal principles, and the Conservatives, who will be bound in party honor to support them, will have to stultify many of their former votes. It appears that the total expenditure for the past year was over $437,000,000, and the income nearly $448,000,000. The revenue from wine and spirits showed an increase over the previous year of $1,500,000. The national debt had been decreased during the year by $38,000,000. Mr. Goschen proposes, for the coming year, to reduce the income tax, to increase the duties on wine, to put a tax on foreign securities, so as to prevent so much money going out of the country for investment, and to put a tax on horses. He stated that the Government intended to spend ten million dollars in adding to the fortifications on the coasts. An amusing result of this financiering is that the Liberals, to be consistent, must support it, though they so thoroughly detest Mr. Goschen for being a deserter that they would be glad to oppose any measure he advocated.

Empress Victoria of Germany, who is the eldest daughter of Queen Victoria, has made a speech which shows a gratifying sense of her responsibilities in her exalted station. Replying to addresses presented to her by seventeen associations of which she is a patroness, she said her foremost and most sacred duty will be the care of her suffering husband. She is conscious of the task devolving upon her as Queen and Empress, and will accomplish it to the best of her ability. At the same time, she is reminded that she has other social duties. The moral and intellectual education of women, the sanitary condition of the laboring classes, and the improvement of the facilities by which women may earn a livelihood, will constantly be before her. The noblest vocation of a princess, she says, is an untiring activity in the work of ameliorating the suffering of the masses. Owing to the difficulty of her task, she is doubtful whether she will succeed as well as her heart desires.

The Overthrow of the French Cabinet which occurred on Friday last is an event which has startled Europe. The Chamber of Deputies, by a vote of 268 to 237, carried a measure for the revision of the Constitution. The proposal was vigorously opposed by the Cabinet, and when it was carried the Ministers resigned. The advocates of the revision intend to make radical changes in the Constitution, one of the most important being the election of the President of the Republic directly by the people, as in the United States, instead by the Legislature, as conducted at present. General Boulanger has strongly advocated the revision, and this triumphant success of the scheme in the Legislature is consequently regarded as an ominous sign of his coming elevation to place and power.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

Three Men in Strange Garb in a Church in New York on March 25 aroused the interest of the congregation. They were at the Methodist Episcopal Church in West Forty-first Street, and their object was to enlist the sympathy of the hearers in foreign mission work in their native lands. One of them was a Japanese named Takaki. He wore a flowing robe of gray silk. He described the good effected by Christianity in his country, and made his hearers smile by his unaccustomed English. Avac Cutujian was introduced as a Turk, but he subsequently explained that he was an Armenian. He gave an interesting report of mission progress in Turkey, and explained the urgent need existing for help in men and money. Mr. Cutujian was gorgeous in a green jacket, purple turban, and trousers of red and black stripes. He succeeded in persuading his audience that more money was needed in Armenia. The third, Marin Delchoff, a Bulgarian, wore a red fez, green waistcoat, cardinal jacket, and blue and silver trousers. His address was listened to with deep interest, as it dealt with the home life of Bulgarians, and presented in graphic words their sad need of Christian teaching.

The Home Missionary Society of the Congregational Church has made a vigorous protest against the admission of Utah as a State. The Rev. M. W. Montgomery, representing the Society, delivered an earnest address before the Senate Committee on Territories, on March 26. He spoke of the evils of Mormonism and said the 11,000,000 Protestants and 6,000,000 Roman Catholics of the country are a unit in condemnation of Mormonism. They asked that Congress shall break the delusions under which the Mormon people live—the delusion that their Church is stronger than the United States Government. He assured the committee that Congress could not legislate intelligently upon this question until it adopted as one of its fundamental principles that Mormonism is a lie and a fraud. The Committee evidently agreed with Mr. Montgomery, for on the same day Senator Cullom, on behalf of the committee, made a report declaring it to be the sense of the Senate that the Territory of Utah ought not to be admitted into the Union as a State until it is certain beyond doubt that the practice of plural marriages, bigamy or polygamy, has been entirely abandoned by the inhabitants of that Territory, and until it is likewise certain that the civil affairs of the Territory are not controlled by the priesthood of the Mormon Church.

The Discovery of a Hermit in a Cave on the Ramapo Mountains, in New Jersey, is reported in a despatch from Nyack, N. J. It is stated that some young men, who ventured, on March 27, into the forests in the wildest parts of Rockland county, observed a remarkable structure of rough planks on the mountain-side. They were curious as to what could be concealed there, and climbing up to it, they plunged through the snow-bank outside, and found a rude door, which they pushed in. Inside was a hut at the entrance to a cave, and there, on a pile of rags, lay a man, apparently in acute suffering. He was too weak to talk, but after the young men had lighted a fire and given him some nourishment, he revived, and yielding to their solicitation, consented to their wrapping him up and taking him to the nearest house, where he was hospitably received. Inquiries about him showed that he had lived in the cave for six or seven years. He is believed to have come from Pennsylvania about that time. It is known that such a man arrived at Suffern and purchased some planks, which he carried, one at a time, into the woods. He would give no information as to himself or his mode of life, and resented any attempts at conversation. There is reason to believe that he used the planks to build the hut around the cave, and lived there until he was found the other day. His motive for thus secluding himself cannot be imagined, but whatever it was, the narrow escape he had of dying from cold and hunger will probably overcome it. He owes his life to the fact that others did not neglect, as he has done for six or seven years, the duties every man owes to his fellowman. It may be hoped that, as he realizes that fact, his life may be so changed as that he may be able to say in the apostolic sense, "None of us liveth to himself." (Rom. 14:7.)

Warnings of a Menacing Derelict have been brought to New York by the captain of the steamer Caland. He states that in his voyage here he narrowly escaped collision with an abandoned lumber-laden bark which had her mizzenmast still standing. She was drifting in the great highway of transatlantic steamers, and was therefore liable to cause serious mischief. Calculations have been made of the probable effect on her course of the currents and of the winds, so as to locate as nearly as possible the position of the abandoned ship, and give warning to outgoing steamers. The reason is obvious: There is no one in command or controlling the movements of the derelict, and she may drift across the track of some other vessel, or run into another vessel and do serious damage and put lives in peril. It is probable that a cruiser will be sent from the navy-yard to take her in tow or blow her up. In the voyage of life much harm is done by human derelicts—men who drift along carelessly and heedlessly, not intending harm, but, being without God's guidance, going astray themselves and menacing the spiritual safety of others (Eccles. 9:18.)

The Discovery of Perpetual Motion is Again announced. An inventor at Lyons, Wayne County, N. Y., claims that a machine which he has patented and will place on exhibition on April 12, will run any length of time without the application of motive power. It consists of an ordinary chain, made of iron links two inches in length, running over a triangular framework. The chain runs on wheels placed at the three angles, and is so constructed that when descending the long side of the triangle the links double up, and the increased weight keeps up the motion. From the character of the motive power, the movement of the chain constantly increases in rapidity, and a brake is required to regulate it. The inventor states, that having determined to solve the problem which so many generations have believed to be unsolvable, he has spent thirty thousand dollars in experiments, and has given twenty-one years of labor to the task. He is confident that he has succeeded, but at present he cannot get practical men to believe in his success. It does not appear that any actual utility is accomplished by the machine, but the inventor will doubtless be satisfied if it renders his name famous. He is not the only man who has spent time and fortune to achieve that result, and he will probably learn, as others have done, that life so spent is wasted (Isa. 55:2).

A Dangerous Land-slide Occurred Near Kansas City, Mo., on March 26. A heavy rain fell on the two preceding days, which is supposed to have loosened a huge bluff, facing the Union Railroad Station. Fully fifteen hundred feet of the bluff appears to have been pushed forward by some irresistible agency, hundreds of tons of rock and earth sliding down the steep hillside. For several hours previous to the land-slide a peculiar snapping noise came from the face of the bluff, and this was followed by a crash which startled the whole city. Tons of earth and huge boulders had crashed down, demolishing the engine-house at the entrance of the street cable line tunnel. Along the face of the bluff, about half-way from the base to the top, is a ledge about thirty feet in width, on which are a number of shanties occupied by families of colored people. This ledge is now seamed with immense fissures, which extend its whole length, and houses are tilted in every direction. The residents were compelled to flee for their lives, and there was a general stampede from the houses which the bluff still overhangs. It would have been the wildest folly to remain in a dwelling that might be crushed at any moment. This was readily perceived, though preachers and Christian workers are unable to arouse men to similar alarm, though a far more terrible peril is impending, and though a way of escape is provided. (II Peter 3:10.)

The Daring Rescue of a Child From a Well is reported by an Indianapolis journal. It states that on March 26 a little two-year-old boy, while playing around his home, fell into a well thirty-seven feet deep, that had been cleaned out and left open. The mother heard the screams of the little one as he fell, and, rushing to the well, saw him floundering in two feet of water. Wild with desperation, the mother started to make the perilous descent to rescue her darling. At the risk of losing her life by falling to the bottom, she carefully but rapidly went down, and reached him none too soon. Clasping the child to her bosom, she called to her five-year old son to go to the neighbors, a half-mile distant, for help to rescue her from the well, it being walled with brick, and furnishing no footing for her to climb up. After nearly two hours of mental agony, the boy arrived with help, and she and the child were rescued. The child's head is terribly cut, but otherwise he was not hurt. As he grows older and hears of the act of devotion by which his life was saved, he will surely be inspired with more than ordinary filial affection. It will be well also if he is led to see in it a type of that infinite sacrifice on Calvary, by which his soul may be saved, and to render to his Saviour the consecration of his life. (Rom. 12:1.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. Thomas Harrison has promised to visit Bloomington, Ill., at the conclusion of his labors in New York City.

The famous Hungarian patriot, Louis Kossuth, is seriously ill. He is now at Turin, Italy, and his death is daily expected. He is eighty-seven years of age.

The Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor in the State of Rhode Island are doing effective work. During 1887 one hundred and eighty-nine joined the Church from those societies.

Rev. E. K. Love, pastor of the First African Baptist Church, Savannah, Ga., has baptized over fourteen hundred persons during his pastorate there of two and a half years. It has more than 5,000 communicants.

Revival services are being conducted in the Grand Army Republic building of Lynn, Mass., by Messrs. McLean and Willis. The building is densely crowded every evening. Over three hundred persons have made a profession of faith.

The physicians in attendance on Rev. J. Denham Smith, the well-known evangelist, who is dangerously sick, consider that he may pass away very soon. His sufferings are great, but his heart is filled with peace.

Rev. George C. Needham is continuing his work at Springfield, Mass. Last week he held four services each day but Monday. The young men of the College for Christian Workers, who are being trained for Y. M. C. A. secretaries, pastors' assistants, etc., attend the Bible readings, which are of special utility to them.

Rev. B. Fay Mills has commenced services in Indianapolis. He is assisted by Prof. and Mrs. Towner, who not only conduct the singing, but labor personally in the meetings. The work just concluded by the evangelists, at Providence, R. I., is being continued by the churches, and by the Young Men's Christian Association.

Rev. J. Jackson Wray, of London, Eng., lectured last evening in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, on Æsop, the Hunchback of Greece. The lecture was in aid of the funds of the N. W. C. T. U.

Rev. E. P. Hammond's work in California is being much blessed. Dr. Dwinell, of the Theological Seminary, at Oakland, who attended the Sacramento services, says: "There does not seem to be so much effort to collect names and count numbers as I have sometimes known, yet the hopeful conversions, I was told, reach into the hundreds. My own impression is that far larger blessings are now held out to the churches in that city than they have yet received."

An important conference of Christian Band Secretaries recently held in London, recommended "the summoning of a conference of ministers to take into consideration the formation of Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor, in connection with their churches." The feature of the movement which especially commends it to the English clergymen, is the close and vital relation of the Society to the church, in this respect differing from any other young people's organization established there.

Sunday-school Superintendents and Teachers desirous of distributing copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in their schools and classes, may have assorted parcels of back numbers by applying, stating number required, to the manager, 63 Bible House.

THE INFALLIBILITY OF SCRIPTURE.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."—Isaiah 1 : 20.

The Old Testament Quoted by the Saviour—Reverenced by the Apostles—Five Inferences from its Divine Origin—I. A Warrant for Teaching To be Taught with Awe—With Fidelity—With Courage—With Diligence—II. Is Entitled to Attention—Creation a Child's Picture-Book—Intrinsic Importance of the Bible—III. Has a Special Character—Unique Dignity—George Moore's Avowal—Absolute Certainty—IV. Is a Ground of Alarm—Its Threatenings Invariably Fulfilled—Babylon and Nineveh—A Visit to an Imprisoned Infidel—V. Gives Reason and Rest for Faith.

WHAT Isaiah said was, therefore, spoken by Jehovah. It was audibly the utterance of a man; but, really, it was the utterance of the Lord Himself. The lips which delivered the words, were those of Isaiah, but yet it was the very truth that "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." All Scripture, being inspired of the Spirit, is spoken by the mouth of God. However this sacred Book may be treated nowadays, it was not treated contemptuously, nor negligently, nor questioningly by the Lord Jesus Christ, our Master and Lord. It is noteworthy how He reverenced the written Word. The Spirit of God rested upon Him personally, without measure, and He could speak out of His own mind the revelation of God, and yet He continually quoted the law and the prophets, and the Psalms; and always He treated the sacred writings with reverence, strongly in contrast with

The Irreverence of "Modern Thought."

I am sure, brethren, we cannot be wrong in imitating the example of our divine Lord in our reverence for that Scripture which cannot be broken. The like valuation of the Word of the Lord is seen in our Lord's apostles; for they treated the ancient Scriptures as supreme in authority, and supported their statements with passages from Holy Writ. The utmost degree of deference and homage is paid to the Old Testament by the writers of the New. We never find an apostle raising a question about the degree of inspiration in this book or that. No disciple of Jesus questions the authority of the books of Moses, or of the prophets. If you want to cavil or suspect, you find no sympathy in the teaching of Jesus, or any one of His apostles. You and I belong to a school which will continue to do the same, let others adopt what behavior they please. As for us, and for our house, this priceless Book shall remain the standard of our faith and the ground of our hope so long as we live.

I. Coming closely, then, to our text, "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," our first head shall be—this is

Our Warrant for Teaching

Scriptural truth. We preach because "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." It would not be worth our while to speak what Isaiah had spoken, if in it there was nothing more than Isaiah's thought; neither should we care to meditate hour after hour upon the writings of Paul, if there was nothing more than Paul in them. We feel no imperative call to expound and to enforce what has been spoken by men; but since "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," it is woe unto us if we preach not the gospel! We come to you with, "Thus saith the Lord," and we should have no justifiable motive for preaching our lives away, if we have not this message.

The true preacher, the man whom God has commissioned, delivers his message and trembling, because "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." He bears the burden of the Lord, and bows under it. Ours is no trifling theme, but one which moves our whole soul. They called George Fox a Quaker, because when he spoke he would quake exceedingly, through the force of the truth which he so thoroughly apprehended. Perhaps, if you and I had a clearer sight and a closer grip of God's Word, and felt more of His majesty, we should quake also. Martin Luther, who never feared the face of man, yet declared that when he stood up to preach, he often felt his knees knock together under a sense of his great responsibility. Woe unto us if we dare to speak the Word of the Lord with less than our whole heart and soul and strength.

With Awe

Dear brethren, because the mouth of the Lord hath spoken the truth of God, we therefore endeavor to preach it with absolute fidelity. We repeat the Word as a child repeats his lesson. It is revelation, but simply to echo it. I do not take it to be my office to bring you new and original thoughts of my own; but rather to say, "The word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me." It is not mine to amend or adapt the gospel. What! Shall we attempt to improve upon what God has revealed? The Infinitely Wise—is He to be corrected by the creatures of a day? Is the infallible revelation of the infallible Jehovah to be shaped, moderated, and toned down to the fashions and fancies of the hour? God forgive us if we have ever altered His Word unwittingly; wittingly we have not done so, nor will we. His children sit at His feet and receive of His words, and then they rise up in the power of His Spirit to publish the Word which the Lord has given.

Not Ours to Correct the Divine

Again, dear friends, as "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," we speak the divine truth with courage and full assurance. Modesty is a virtue; but hesitancy, when we are speaking for the Lord, is a great fault. If an ambassador, sent by a great king to represent his majesty at a foreign court, should forget his office and only think of himself, he might be so humble as to lower the dignity of his prince, so timid as to betray his country's honor. God forbid that he who speaks for God of kings by a pliant subservience. We preach not the gospel by your leave; we do not ask tolerance nor court applause. We preach Christ crucified, and we speak boldly, as we ought to speak, because it is God's Word and not our own. We are accused of dogmatism; but we are bound to dogmatize when we repeat that which the mouth of the Lord hath spoken. We cannot use "ifs" and "buts," for we are dealing with God's "shalls" and "wills." If He says it is so, it is so; and there is an end of it. Controversy ceases when Jehovah speaks.

Should Dishonor the King

We are urged to be charitable. We are charitable; but it is with our own money. We have no right to give away what is put into our trust and is not at our disposal. When we have to do with the truth of God we are stewards, and must deal with our Lord's exchequer, not on the lines of charity to human opinions, but by the rule of fidelity to the God of truth. We are bold to declare with full assurance that which the Lord reveals. When we speak for the Lord against error, we do not soften our tones; but we speak thunderbolts.

I will also add, under this head, that, because "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," therefore we feel bound to speak His Word with diligence, as often as ever we can, and with perseverance, as long as ever we live. Surely, it would be a blessed thing to die in the pulpit; spending one's last breath in acting as the Lord's mouth. Dumb Sabbaths are fierce trials to true preachers. O my brethren, the Word of the Lord is so precious that we must in the morning sow this blessed seed, and in the evening we must not withhold our hands. It is a living seed and the seed of life, and, therefore, we must diligently scatter it.

Brethren, if we get a right apprehension concerning gospel truth—that "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it"—it will move us to tell it out with great ardor and zeal. How can you keep back the heavenly news? "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it"—shall not your mouth rejoice to repeat it? Whisper it in the ear of the sick; shout it in the corner of the streets; write it on your tablets; send it forth from the press: but everywhere let this be your great motive and warrant—you preach the gospel because "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

II. Let us now row in another direction for a moment or two. In the second place, "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." This is upon your attention. Every word which God has given us in this Book claims our attention, because of the infinite majesty of Him that spake it. I see before me a Parliament of kings and princes, sages and senators. I hear one after another of the gifted Chrysostoms pour forth eloquence like the "Golden-mouthed." They speak, and they speak well. Suddenly there is a solemn hush. What a stillness! Who is now to speak? They are silent because God the Lord is about to lift up His voice. Is it not right that they should be so? It is He that made you; in His hands your breath is; and if He speaks, I implore you, open your ear, and be not rebellious. Hear what Jesus preaches from the tree. He says, "Incline your ear and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live."

The Claim of God's Word

God's claim to be heard lies, also, in the condescension which has led Him to speak to us. It was something for God to have made the world and bid us look at

The Work of His Hands.

Creation is a picture-book for children. But for God to speak in the language of mortal men is still more marvellous, if you come to think of it. I wonder that God spoke by the prophets; but I admire still more that He should have written down His word in black and white, in unmistakable language, which can be translated into all tongues, so that we may all see and read for ourselves what God the Lord has spoken to us; and what, indeed, He continues to speak; for what He has spoken He still speaks to us, as freshly as if He spake it for the first time.

God's Word has a claim, then, upon your attention because of its majesty and its condescension, but yet, further, it should win your ear because of its intrinsic importance. "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it"—then it is no trifle. God never speaks vanity. No line of His writing treats of the frivolous themes of a day. He speaks to thee of great things, which have to do with thy soul and its destiny. Treat not the Word of the Lord as a secondary thing, which might wait thy leisure and receive attention when no other work was before thee; put all else aside, but hearken to thy God.

Depend upon it, if "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," there is an urgent, pressing necessity. God breaks not silence to say that which might as well have remained unsaid. His voice indicates great urgency. Without reserve answer to His call, and say, "Speak, Lord; for thy servant heareth." When I stand in this pulpit to preach the Gospel, I never feel that I may calmly invite you to attend to a subject which is one among many, and may very properly be let alone for a time, should your minds be already occupied. No; you may be dead before I again speak with you, and so I beg for immediate attention. I do not fear that I may be taking you off from more important business by entreating you to attend to that which the mouth of the Lord hath spoken; for no business has any importance in it compared with this: this is the master theme of all.

III. And now, thirdly, this gives to God's Word a very special character. When we open this sacred Book, and say of that which is here recorded, "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," then it gives to the teaching

A Special Character.

In the Word of God the teaching has unique dignity. This Book is inspired as no other book is inspired, and it is time that all Christians avowed this conviction. I do not know whether you have seen Mr. Smiles's life of our late friend, George Moore; but in it we read that, at a certain dinner-party, a learned man remarked that it would not be easy to find a person of intelligence who believed in the inspiration of the Bible. In an instant George Moore's voice was heard across the table, saying bold

"I do, for one!" Nothing more was said. My dear friend had a strong way of speaking, as I well remember; for we have upon occasions vied with each other in shouting when we were together at his Cumberland home. I think I can hear his emphatic way of putting it—"I do, for one!" Let us not be backward to take the old-fashioned and unpopular side, and say outright, "I do for one!"

Where are we if our Bibles are gone? Where are we if we are taught to distrust them? If we are left in doubt as to which part is inspired and which is not, we are as badly off as if we had no Bible at all. I hold no theory of inspiration; I accept the inspiration of the Scriptures as a fact. Those who thus view the Scriptures need not be ashamed of their company; for some of the best and most learned of men have been of the same mind.

There is also about that which the mouth of the Lord hath spoken

An Absolute Certainty.

Once spoken by God, not only is it so now, but it always must be so. The Lord of Hosts hath spoken, and who shall disannul it? The rock of God's Word does not shift like the quicksands of modern scientific theology. One said to his minister, "My dear sir, surely you ought to adjust your beliefs to the progress of science." "Yes," said he, "but I have not had time to do it to-day, for I have not yet read the morning papers." One would have need to read the morning papers, and take in every new edition, to know whereabout scientific theology now stands; for it is always chopping and changing.

The only thing that is certain about the false science of this age is that it will be soon disproved. Theories vaunted to-day will be scouted to-morrow. The great scientists live by killing those who went before them. They know nothing for certain, except that their predecessors were wrong. Even in one short life we have seen system after system—the mushrooms, or, rather, the toadstools, of thought—rise and perish We cannot adapt our religious belief to that which is more changeful than the moon.

Here let me add that there is something unique about God's Word, because of the almighty power which attends it. "Where the word of a king is, there is power." where the word of God is, there is omnipotence If we dealt more largely in God's own Word as "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," we should see far greater results from our preaching. I will say no more on this point, although the theme is a very large and tempting one; especially if I were to dwell upon the depth, the height, the adaptation, the insight and the self-proving power of that which "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken."

IV. Fourthly, this makes God's word

A Ground of Alarm

to many. Shall I read you the whole verse? "But if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Every threatening that God hath spoken, because He hath spoken it, has a tremendous dread about it. Whether God threateneth a man or a nation, or the whole class of the ungodly, if they are wise they will feel a trembling take hold upon them, because "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." God has never yet spoken a threatening that has fallen to the ground. When He told Pharaoh what He would do, He did it; the plagues came thick and heavy upon him. When the Lord at any time sent His prophets to denounce judgments on the nations, He carried out those judgments. Ask travelers concerning Babylon, and Nineveh, and Edom, and Moab, and Bashan; and they will tell you of the heaps of ruins, which prove how the Lord carried out his warnings to the letter. Depend on it, then, that when Jesus says, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment," it will be so, When He says, "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins," it will be so. The Lord never plays at frightening men.

"Alas," says one, "I shudder at the severity of the divine sentence." Do you? It is well! I can heartily sympathize with you. What must he be that does not tremble when he sees the great Jehovah taking vengeance upon iniquity! The terrors of the Lord might well turn steel to wax. Let us remember that the gauge of truth is not our pleasure nor our terror. It is not my shuddering which can disprove what the mouth of the Lord hath spoken. It may even be a proof of its truth. Did not all the prophets tremble at manifestations of God? One of the last of the anointed seers fell at the Lord's feet as dead. Yet all the shrinking of their nature was not used by them as an argument for doubt.

The Cause of Unbelief.

O my unconverted and unbelieving hearers, do remember that if you refuse Christ, and rush upon the keen edge of Jehovah's sword, your unbelief of eternal judgment will not alter it, nor save you from it. I know why you do not believe in the terrible threatenings. It is because you want to be easy in your sins. A certain sceptical writer, when in prison, was visited by a Christian man, who wished him well, but he refused to hear a word about religion. Seeing a Bible in the hand of his visitor, he made this remark: "You do not expect me to believe in that book, do you? Why, if that book is true, I am lost forever!" Just so. Therein lies the reason for half the infidelity of the world, and all the infidelity in our congregations. How can you believe that which condemns you? Ah! my friends, if you would believe it to be true, and act accordingly, you would also find in that which the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, a way of escape from the wrath to come; for the Book is far more full of hope than of dread. Therefore, I pray you, treat the sacred Scriptures with respect, and remember that "These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His name."

V. And so I must finish, for time fails, when I notice, in the fifth place, that this makes the word of the Lord

The Reason of Our Faith.

"The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," is the foundation of our confidence. There is forgiveness; for God has said it. Look, friend; you are saying, "I cannot believe that my sins can be washed away, I feel so unworthy." Yes, but "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Believe over the head of your unworthiness. "Ah," says one "I feel so weak I can neither think, nor pray, nor anything else, as I should." Is it not written, "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly"? "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it"; therefore, over the head of your inability still believe it, for it must be so.

I think I hear some child of God saying, "God has said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee," but I am in great trouble; all the circumstances of my life seem to contradict the promise": yet, "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," and the promise must stand. "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." Believe God in the teeth of circumstances. If you cannot see a way of escape or a yet still believe in the unseen God, and in the truth of His presence; "For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." I think I have come to this pass with myself, at any rate, for the time present, that when circumstances deny the promise, I believe it none the less. When friends forsake me, and foes belie me, and my own spirit goes down below zero, and I am depressed almost to despair, I am resolved to hang to the bare word of the Lord, and prove it to be in itself an all-sufficient stay and support.

A Means of Help,

By and by we shall come to die. The death-sweat shall gather on our brow, and perhaps our tongue will scarcely serve us. Oh that then, like the grand old German Emperor, we may say, "Mine eyes have seen Thy salvation," and, "He hath helped me with His name." When we pass through the rivers He will be with us, and the flood shall not overflow us; "For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

Brethren, we have not followed cunningly devised fables. We abide where heaven and earth are resting; where the whole universe depends; where even eternal things have their foundation; we rest on God Himself. If God shall fail us, we gloriously fail with the whole universe. But there is no fear; therefore, let us trust, and not be afraid. His promise must stand; for "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." O Lord, it is enough! Glory be to Thy name, through Christ Jesus! Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE MUD BY MEASURE.*

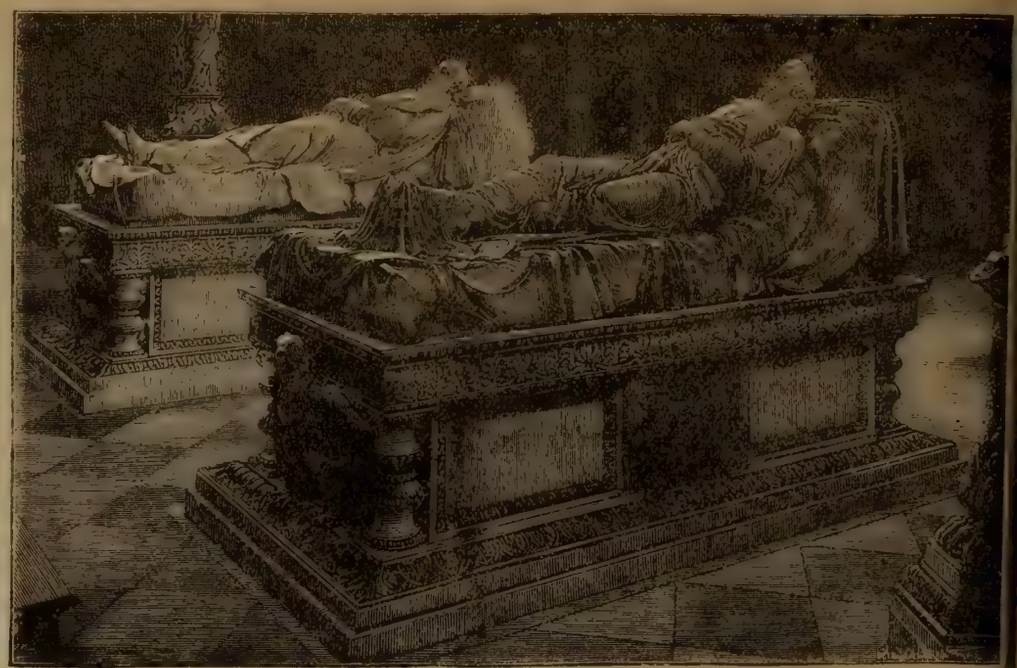
People waste their time in mud-measuring. One says, "My foot is only covered with the mud; but look at that fellow, he is ankle deep in it." The one who is ankle deep in mud says, "Look at that man! he is up to the knees in mud;" while he in his turn says, "I am not so bad as that man; he is up to the neck in mud." It is of no use to talk like that: here is a rope-ladder to help you all up from the pit. "Oh," says one, "I am as good as my neighbor and better than many." Very true, perhaps, but that is only the difference between being up to the knees in mud or up to the neck; if you are in the pit, you need a rope-ladder that you may get out and place your feet on a rock, for there is no difference. One man with decent boots on, and only one foot a little muddy, says, "I do not believe there is no difference. Do you mean to say I am no better than that fellow there up to his neck in mud?" No, my friends; and very likely that fellow up to his neck will get hold of the ladder first, for he is so shocked at the mud that he is glad to get out of it; while the respectable man spends his time in arguing about the depth of mud he is in. It is not mud-measuring, but salvation, we have to do with, for "There is no difference, for all have sinned and come short of the Glory of God."

The Prisoner's Plea.

Think of the day and ordeal of judgment. Will you plead guilty or not guilty? Guilty, not as leading a wretchedly bad life as a thief or a murderer, but of breaking God's law in one point? You say, "I must acknowledge breaking it in one point." Then you are guilty. Have you any excuse to make? "Yes, much." Have you prayed? "Yes, all my life." Then pray on. Have you been charitable? "Oh yes, I give to the infirmary and to the famine fund." Then sell all you have and give to the poor. You say, "That is very hard." Yes, but I cannot help it: such is the way you have chosen with your excuses, prayers, and good works. Another man pleads "guilty" at once. Have you any excuses, any prayers, any good deeds, any endeavours to do right, to plead in your behalf? "No." Have you nothing good to say for yourself? Are you only fit to be cast away from God? "I have not a single excuse or palliation to present." Then God says, "I have nothing but a Saviour for one so bad as you are." If you come as a sinner alone,

* From "The Seeking Saviour and other Bible Themes" by the late Dr. W. P. Mackay, M. A., of Hull. This work was commenced by Dr. Mackay before he died, and has been completed by other hands, from his papers. Among the series is one sermon entitled "the Glory of God," which has a mournful interest from its being the last sermon the sainted man ever preached. Had Dr. Mackay lived to prepare the volume for the press, there might have been more polish in its style, but it would not have breathed, as it now does, the very spirit of the man as if he were speaking. 243 pages. Price $1.25. Published by Anson D. F. Randolph, 38 West Twenty-third St., New York.

John Currie, the Canadian Evangelist.



The Imperial Mausoleum at Charlottenburg, Germany.

not sinner and company, God will give you Christ, for it is grace now, as it will be judgment then. The righteousness which is of faith is for any man who will take the place where righteousness can flow. The place of the lost sinner now; for "behold, now is the day of salvation."

The Missing Line.

I remember when at school we used to work out long problems; and I have often worked out some problem in algebra, and at the end come to some most absurd result. What was the reason? Merely one line left out. Our great rationalistic thinkers have brought out a wondrously stupid result with all their thinking, a very unscriptural result; and why? They forget one factor, and that factor is sin. The Bible is the history of sin, and the doctrine of the Bible is the doctrine of sin put away, from Genesis to Revelation. "Without shedding of blood" (blood, blood and sin) "there's no remission of sin." They tell us that we preach the theology of the shambles; let us stand by the blood theology and sound it in every ear. God first shed blood in providing a covering for the sinner Adam; God last shed blood in sheathing His sword in the Man His Fellow. He is the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the ending, the first and the last, the author and finisher, of the blood theology.

JOHN CURRIE.

(See Portrait on this Page.)

John Currie, whose evangelistic labors among the poor in the United States and Canada have been much blessed, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, on December 2, 1843. He is therefore now in his forty-fifth year. His father was foreman in a baker's shop, and his mother was a dressmaker. For some six years after his birth the family were in comfortable circumstances, but at the end of that time the father began to drink heavily, and soon all the money that had been saved by the joint earnings of himself and his wife were spent. The young mother was almost heartbroken. She would sit for hours and cry over John and his little sister, who needed clothes and food, while she waited for her husband's return, wondering if he would bring home any money. Things grew worse and worse, until at last Mrs. Currie went wrong in her mind through grief, and after much suffering she died. She recovered her reason a short time before her death, and in her last moments was able to commend to God's keeping the two orphans she was leaving behind.

The boy passed under the care of his grandmother, but appears to have had no education, or to have derived no profit from such as he had. He had been a sufferer by the dissolute habits of his father, and had by painful experience proved how much misery indulgence in liquor involves, yet, strange to say, he was not deterred by the awful example. Foot-racing, boxing, dancing, and drinking occupied his time, and he soon sank into degradation. Hoping to get rid of his evil habits and associations, he in 1869 left his native country and crossed the Atlantic. Many have tried this experiment without success, for change of scene without change of heart is but a vain remedy. Currie found it to be so, and the first five years of his residence in America were marked by dissipation as debasing as that of his life on the other side the Atlantic.

At length, while he was in Montreal, he was induced by a Christian worker to visit the Young Men's Christian Association, and there he was persuaded to sign the pledge. Three nights afterward he attended a religious service and heard the testimonies of converted men. He was so deeply impressed that he became anxious to secure the same blessing for himself. Finally he made a profession of his faith in Christ and began a new life. Six months' experience of the blessing of Christianity moved him to testify of them to others. He began a work in the slums of Montreal in a saloon known as Joe Beef's Canteen, the proprietor of which not only allowed him to talk with the poor degraded creatures who haunted the place, but actually set up a platform from which he could give gospel addresses. The work succeeded from the outset. Currie was in earnest, and the people who came to the Canteen were not fastidious about the language or grammar of the preacher. Many were rescued from vice and misery, and Currie was fairly launched in his career as an evangelist. Since that time he has travelled extensively in the United States and Canada, holding successful meetings in many of the large cities. He has worked in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Albany, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco, and Leadville; and everywhere his labors have been attended with blessed results.

THE IMPERIAL MAUSOLEUM.

(See Illustration.

The final resting-place of the remains of the deceased Emperor William is a familiar spot to the citizens of Berlin. It stands in Charlottenberg (Charlotte's town), the western suburb of Berlin named after Queen Charlotte. The visitor to Berlin always goes to the pretty suburb to see it and the park and the castle. In less than half an hour the "Stadtbahn" takes him out from the heart of Berlin to the "West End," where eminent politicians and illustrious personages have their residence.

So deeply is the mausoleum hidden by the trees which surround it, that the visitor must keep steadily to the main road, bordered by mighty pines and firs, or he easily loses his way among the winding paths. Down that road William I. was borne to his grave on Friday, March 16, to take his place in the silent tomb side by side with his venerated mother and his noble father. It is a place of tender and hallowed associations with him, for there in the most solemn hours of his life he was accustomed to go for meditation and prayer.

Outside its gates stands day after day a veteran sentinel of stalwart frame, guarding the chamber of death. The pines whisper mysteriously overhead, but no harsh, loud sound disturbs the solemn peace. Every head is bared as the door at the top of the broad steps is opened and visitors enter the mausoleum.

MRS. WILLOUGHBY'S FRIENDS.

(See Illustration on page 221.)

"You are my adviser-general," said a lady newly come to reside in Greenburg, to Mrs. Willoughby, the clergyman's wife, "perhaps you can tell me if there is anyone within a mile or two, who can make a dress for me, well and quickly?"

"Oh yes," was the reply; "that is a matter I shall be very glad to arrange for you. If you will come with me this morning I will introduce you to a family thoroughly worthy of confidence. I am deeply interested in them, and have a sincere respect for each one. When you know them I think you will be glad to put work into their hands."

"Not a charitable arrangement, is it?" inquired the lady. "I have always preferred to give money rather than work in cases of charity. One always pays a high price for poor work to persons whom one employs because one is sorry for them."

"Come and see," said Mrs. Willoughby. "If you think the girls look incompetent, you need say nothing about employing them. I am so friendly with them that I can call with a friend without their expecting a commission."

Mrs. Willoughby was content to let the matter depend on the impression the Misses Fr... would make on a prospective employer, without uttering any further eulogy. And her confidence as justified. Entering the uiet home in which they ved, the clergyman's wife assed unannounced into the orkroom with the easy con- dence of an intimate friend, nd her new acquaintance ac- ompanied her. They paused n the threshold, unnoticed y the four bright-looking irls within. One of them was olding up a bonnet for the dmiration or criticism of ie others, and each seemed o be deeply interested in the xhibition.

"You have succeeded to a iarvel, Marion," said one ho was seated at a sewing iachine. "That is exactly hat the old lady ought to o into ecstacies about. I am ire she will like it." Mrs. Villoughby and her compan- n entered the room as this pinion was given, and it was isy to see by the welcome ie four sisters gave to the ergyman's wife, that a very arm friendship existed be- veen them. Marion would ive retired with the bonnet, it her sisters would not ermit it. Mrs. Willoughby's inion must be had; for is was, in fact, Marion's st achievement in that line, id was the result of a very ief experiencein a city mill- er's workroom. Praise uld be given very conscientiously, and the ung lady was cheered by the unstinted en- miums of her friend and the strange visitor. ie latter at once proceeded to the object of r visit, evidently satisfied by the manner and ords of the young people that incompetence d high charges were not the characteristics their business.

"Who are they? How did you come to know em?" were the questions she put to Mrs. illoughby when, after a long and pleasant con- rsation with the four girls, the two ladies left eir busy home.

"I have known them many years," said the rgyman's wife, "in fact, from their school-girl ys. Their father was a warm friend of my sband's, and one of his most zealous support- , and their mother was one of the most saintly men I ever knew. Husband and wife were a st affectionate couple, and very proud of ir four pretty, intelligent daughters and their ."

"They seem to be well-educated, ladylike ls; how is it they have to earn their living this way?"

Ah! that is a sad story," said Mrs. Willough- "I suppose their present condition was ut the last thing Mr. Francis expected for daughters. He was a physician, with a large ctice, and had accumulated a considerable tune before he died. He left it entirely in wife's hands, and she, after his death, allow- her son to manage it for her. Poor lady! believed him to be one of the best, as he tainly was one of the smartest, young men of circle. During his father's life he had be- ed, but when that restraint was removed, he had control of so large a sum of money, began to develop evil tendencies, of which mother had no suspicion. Reports of fast ng and lavish expenditure began to circulate, eventually we had to believe them, but Mrs. ncis would not. I think his sisters must have wn soon afterward, and at last even his poor. owed mother was horror-stricken to find that son was surely a villain. The discovery was death-blow, and it did not come until every ar of the fortune was gone. These four girls e left actually penniless, with their mother dead in the house, and their brother a fugitive in a foreign land.

Mrs. Willoughby's Friends.

"It was saddening to see how their relatives and friends fell away from them. It seemed as if no one would help them. Finally, I suppose the family name and honor was thought to be at stake, and their uncles found money for funeral expenses, and proposed to place the four girls in different families connected with them by distant relationship. That kind of semi-pauperism, and more than all, the separation from each other, killed the project. One or two friends assisted them, and they were enabled to get some instruction and commence business, with such success as you see. It is now two years since the experiment was first made, and they are earning a comfortable livelihood, with satisfaction to themselves and those who employ them. They are a thoroughly united, happy family, and I am happy to say they are all treading in their mother's footsteps, loving and serving their Saviour with full purpose of heart."

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 207.)

A Tragedy.

If I had not loved my dear Philip so much, if his image when he came to me begging me to take him as a pupil had not been all the time before me, along with that later aspect of him as my friend and benefactor, I could not have endured the wretchedness of my position. Nothing supported me but the old man's promise to leave all his wealth to Philip Champion. I knew it would be a blessing to Philip; it was anything but a blessing to its present owner. That was one of the many things I learned in that sad time. Do you want to know what they were?

Well! then I learned what a cruel bondage the love of money is. It was a bondage, not only to our old master, but to Rebecca and me. To get a shilling from him was as painful to him as giving a drop of his life's blood. He grudged himself every morsel he ate; and he could not bear to see the fire burning bright, and clear from ashes, but he must have the grate choked up with them, and a little handful of live embers on the top. That spring-time he would have no fire kindled in the kitchen, because of the extra expense my living was to him; and we sat with him in his parlor, and did what little cooking was done there. He was the poorest man I ever knew.

But it was at night that the bondage pressed upon him most cruelly. As soon as it grew dark, he was tormented with fears of robbers, which prevented him from falling asleep, until he was quite worn out with weariness. He never knew what it was to lay his head down on his pillow, and sleep soundly and peacefully. His money kept him waking worse than rheumatism ever kept poor Transome. He would not hear of Rebecca and me both going to bed, but one of us must sit up in the spare room joining his, within call of him. Dreary hours of darkness were those. Never a night passedby, but he cried out in his troubled sleep that thieves were breaking in to steal his treasure. Many a time I found him crying and wringing his hands, as he sat up in bed, between waking and sleeping; and it was harder to pacify him than a frightened child who has been awaked by some terrifying dream. Yet as soon as he could recover himself he would vow and declare that he had no money in the house, and thieves would be finely disappointed if they came. I never knew what to believe.

"Tell me," I said to him, one day when we were alone, "why you are so full of fear. If there is no money in the house, how is it you cannot sleep for terror?"

"I cannot tell," he answered, with a troubled face, "but as soon as I fall asleep it seems as if all my money, all I ever had, was hoarded up in my room. There's gold under my pillow, and in all the boxes, and all the drawers, and hidden under the flooring; gold everywhere; and thieves are always trying to break in to steal it. I hear them whispering, and creeping about; and boring stealthily at the door to get in, till I cry out; and that wakes me, and you or Rebecca come in and tell me I've been dreaming. But it is not like a dream. I wish the night would never come, for it is always the same thing."

"Every night?" I said.

"Every night," he repeated, with his wavering, trembling voice.

"But you should ask God to deliver you from these terrors," I said, for I felt grieved for the miserable old man. "He is ready to help all those who cry to Him. He brought me out of all my troubles, and He can save you."

"I dare not," he answered, his shaking head falling lower on his breast, "if I ask Him for anything, He will require me to give up my money. I know it; I tried it years ago. I wished to be safe, and be a Christian, but I could not give up my money. It is too late now. I cannot part with it."

He spoke slowly, and as it were unwillingly, in a low tone, as though he were thinking aloud, not talking to me. So awful the words sounded to me that I trembled and shivered.

"No," he said, "no! it is too late."

He was silent for a few minutes. Then a cunning look came over his wrinkled face, and he looked at me sharply with his small, sunken eyes.

"I've been talking nonsense," he said. "I've no money to give up. I'm a poor, penniless old man, with nothing before me but to die in the poorhouse."

He began to groan over his poverty, and mutter about the poorhouse. But I could bear it no longer, and I rose up, and left him to groan and mutter to himself. The dark, gloomy house seemed like a prison to me, and the air in it stifled me. I went out into the wilderness of a garden, and walked up and down its grass-grown walks, thinking of the wretched man who was tossed from one delusion to another; at night tormented with fears for his riches, by day burdened with dread of the poorhouse. Truly, he had pierced himself through with many sorrows.

How gloomy were the long nights of the next winter! Before it was dusk in the afternoon our master would begin to worry about the doors being locked, and the shutters fast; and there was no rest until Rebecca and I had been all round the house to see if every place was safe. Even then he would send us again and again during the night, to make sure that no fastenings had been forgotten; and sometimes when he was well enough he would go round to satisfy himself. I can see him now—his poor, bent body, hardly strong enough to bear its own weight, and his shaking head, and his searching eyes peering into the darkest corners, where he fancied some robber might be lurking. I begged him often and often to have some honest, decent man to sleep in the house for our protection, for what could I or Rebecca do if his fears came true? But he would not give ear to my words. He could trust no man, he said. I knew that he could not trust God.

Philip Champion had been once in England since I had left my cottage to dwell with his uncle; but he had not had time to visit me, and I did not tell him what I was doing for his sake. My landlord had told me that his will was altered, and all was right for Philip. Without that I think I could not have borne up.

I was beginning to be a little timorous myself; though I had never known what fear meant when Transome and I lived in our little home, even when it stood quite close at the head of a clough that had no very good name. The poor food, and bad nights, and the prison-like feeling of the place, began to tell upon me almost as much as the poorhouse did. It seemed as if there was nothing in the world to be thought of, or talked about, or cared for, but money. Rebecca was constantly telling me of her expectations from her old master, and what she meant to do with her thousand pounds. So both in parlor and kitchen, whenever I was alone with either of them, all the talk and all the thought was money. Nay, my mind began to dwell upon it, though it was for Philip's sake; and I seemed to forget the sunshine, and the fresh air, and the singing of birds, and the love one of another, even God's love.

Whether I should have grown like Rebecca and our master, I cannot tell. But after Christmas was past—a Christmas with no good-will or gladness in it—and while the nights were still long and dreary, the end came. It was almost as if a voice had come from God, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee!"

I had fallen asleep for very weariness one night in the large old chair, where I kept watch in my turn for our master. It was more of a doze than a sleep; for he had been quiet only for a little while, after crying out once or twice that he could hear thieves trying all the doors and shutters in the house. It was so old an alarm, like the boy's cry of "Wolf!" that it had not disturbed me at all; and when he went quiet, I fell off into an uneasy doze in my chair. The back of it was toward the door, a high back, which kept my head free from draughts, and hid me from the sight of anybody in the master's room. Just before me, over the mantel shelf, there stood an old cracked looking-glass, in a tarnished gilt frame, where, when I looked up, I could see dimly the light in my master's bedroom.

Suddenly, as I was dozing, a bright gleam from the looking-glass shone across my face, and I woke up, broad-awake, as though some voice had called me; but there was no sound. Only in the dim glass I could see a fuller light than ever was given by a farthing rush-light, and it was moving about in the room beyond. Yet I kept still, why, I scarcely know, watching the flitting of the light in the dim glass above me. But all in an instant a shrill, wavering, terrified cry ran through the house, and I saw a man's figure cross hastily to my master's bedside.

What was I to do? A poor, feeble old creature like me! I had not strength to contend with a child; and how could I defend my master and his money from a thief? There were but two courses open to me. I might either go into the chamber, and do whatever I could to protect the poor old man, or I could steal quietly and wake Rebecca, and try to get help from my neighbors. I was not long in deciding. Before the thief turned away from my master's bedside I crept noiselessly, quaking with fear, across the floor, and made my way upstairs to Rebecca's room.

She was sleeping soundly, for though her room was above the master's, she was too much used to hear him cry for help, to be disturbed by that last cry of his. But when I put my hand on her, she awoke in a moment, and looked at me with eager eyes.

"Hush!" I whispered, the thieves are here at last. Be quiet, Rebecca. Steal out of the back door, and call for help. You will be quicker than me."

"Thieves!" she said, in a scornful tone; "are you out of your mind, too?"

"No," I said, "it's true this time. Get help, Rebecca, quickly. They may murder him. Hark! he is as quiet as death now."

For in the room below, our master's cries had ceased entirely, and all was still. That frightened Rebecca. She sprang up, and throwing on a cloak that hung behind the door, she stole silently down the stair-case. I followed and saw her tarry for a moment or two, peering in through the open doors, through which the light was shining brightly; and then very swiftly, but very steadily, she sped on her way; and presently the click of a latch down-stairs told me she was fairly out of the house. I was alone with the thieves!

But those were terrible minutes! Never shall I forget them. I hid myself in a dark corner of the stair-case, listening and watching with all my might. The house was so still I could hear their footsteps moving about the room, and the hurried opening and shutting to of boxes and drawers. There were more boxes in that chamber than anywhere else in the house, but nobody had seen the contents of them except the master. There was also an old-fashioned desk, full of little drawers, and secret recesses, which I have often and often seen since, that gave the thieves a world of trouble. They were not so quiet now, and I could hear two voices speaking; but the master's voice I could not hear, though I hearkened for it anxiously. A great dread came over me, lest he should have been murdered.

I could hear the thieves at work with their tools, just as the master had described it to me, sawing and boring, and breaking open locks, with very little precaution against noise now. It seemed so long that I began to think Rebecca must have fled away in her fright, and left me and her poor old master to their mercy. To be sure I might have followed her; the way was free, and the house-door open. But I could not make up my mind to go, and leave the old man quite alone, even though I could give him no help, save to stand there behind the door, praying that Rebecca might come back soon.

At length—but oh, how long it seemed!—I heard footsteps treading cautiously along the gravel walk towards the house; and I held my breath to listen, and trembled the more, lest the thieves should catch the sound. But they had grown too secure, having been so long undisturbed, and they were too busy with their tools to hear so slight a noise as that. Nearer and nearer, into the hall below, and quietly up the dark stair-case, came three or four of our near neighbors, with Rebecca leading them, and so, quietly, without wavering, they broke in upon the thieves, and caught them almost before they knew they were in danger.

What a sight that room was when I went in! I told you there were more locked-up boxes and drawers there than anywhere else in the house, which no one had ever seen opened; but now all their contents were strewed and scattered about the floor. Well! the old master's mother must have been as fond of hoarding as he was: but she had hoarded clothing, and there were all her old satin dresses and petticoats, and high-heeled slippers, and laces and linen, all faded and mildewed. There was also good warm clothing that might have kept many a poor creature from dying of cold, but now it was moth-eaten and useless. I saw packets of yellow letters, and a miniature portrait or two lying among them. But I could not wait to look well at these things. I pressed on to the head of the bed, and drew the old tattered curtain aside, and looked down at the master's face.

Was he dead? The poor withered face lay on the pillow, with its mouth fallen half open, and its filmy eyes staring with a look of terror, such as I never saw before or since. I spoke to him softly, then loudly; and laid my hand upon the bent and crooked fingers, which seemed to be grasping at something. After that I knew it was true. He was dead!

There was no one in the room with me; for there had been a little scuffle with the thieves and they had been dragged by our neighbors into the room beyond. But at my sudden cry one of them came running in quickly. He saw in a moment what had happened; and quietly as if awe-struck at the terrible face of the corpse he drew me away out of the room, and himself locked the door, and said he would carry the key at once to the police-station.

How it was I cannot tell. Neither he nor I spoke a word of it; but whether it was from our faces, or from him locking the door so silently, the truth seemed to flash upon all the rest. The thieves themselves were struck dumb for a minute; and then one of them cried out with a loud and terrified voice:

"We never laid a finger on him!" he said "I swear 't. Rebecca, speak for me! Thou know'st aw could na' have th' heart to kill an oud man like him. Rebecca, doesn't thee know me? See! I'm Robin Cherrick, thy sweetheart i' the oud time, as th' oud mester persuaded thee to turn off. Eh! lass, if thee had been true to me I should never ha'e come to such a pass as this!"

I turned about to look for Rebecca, and there she stood, with a face like death; only her dark eyes were fastened upon the man that had spoken, and her lips moved as if she were speaking, only no sound came through them. All at once, before any of us could run to her, she fell down on the floor like one dead.

Some of them carried her up-stairs, and laid her on her bed; and I was left alone with her to bring her back to her senses. I could hear many strange sounds down in the house below, voices and footsteps echoing through the deserted room, and such a stir, and noise, and confusion all about him, as would have brought the old master to life again if there were any hope of stepping back over the threshold he had just crossed. My own mind seemed to be wandering, as if I were only passing through a frightful dream: only there was Rebecca's face white and rigid, with lips close set, under my very eyes, and her heart scarcely beating when I laid my hand upon it.

I almost thought she was dead too; but after a long while I saw her eyelids quiver a little, and a deep, heavy sigh came through her pale lips. I had no light save a small candle, such as had been burning in the master's room; and her face looked ghastly, with the hair all rumpled about it. I did not speak to her, but I bathed her forehead again with some cold water.

"Mrs. Transome?" she whispered.

"Ay, it's me," I said, "you're very ill, Rebecca. Lie quiet, my dear."

She lay still, as I bade her, for a few minutes;

t she was busy thinking and remembering at had happened. All at once she started up, d clung to me like a child that has been scared d frightened.
'Was there anybody robbing the master?"
e asked, in a hurried but faint voice.
'Hush! my dear," I said. "Yes, there have en thieves in the house; but they're taken ay now."
'Did one of them say his name?" she asked ain.
'Ay!" I answered.
'Tell me what it was," she said eagerly, lon't be afraid to tell me."
'Robin Cherrick," I answered; "who is he, ebecca? Tell me all about it, my poor dear!"
She had fallen back again upon the bed, and d hidden her face in the pillow; but all her dy was shaken by her heavy sobs. It was a ng time before she could speak to me again.

(To be Continued.)

CHRISTIAN WATCHFULNESS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. Lesson for April 15, Matt. 24: 36-51. Golden Text, Mark 13: 37.

hat Watchfulness Implies—The Watchman's Duties—The Call to Christians—To Watch for he Lord's Coming—The Signs Accumulating—The Gospel Being Preached as a Witness—The Coming Tribulation—The Classes of Mourners—Lovers of Nature—Of Architecture—Vain Attempts at Suicide—Mistaken Ideas of Prophetic Dates—The Doom of the Indifferent—The Advent Surely Pre-Millennial—The Functions of True Watchmen.

"WHAT I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." lark 13: 37.) To watch is to be awake, to be guard, to observe and take account of all ings around us. A good watchman does not lk much, lest he should fail to notice some-ing which is taking place. The duty of a tchman, in old times, was to keep watch on e top of a tower, or some elevated place, from ich he could perceive the approach of an en-y; he was awake when others were sleeping; could observe what others saw not, and his ty was to apprise them. The world is lying darkness and death; eight hundred million athens, as well as the larger number of people so-called Christian lands, are on their way to rdition, but they are asleep to things eternal, d the apostle Paul says to us: "Let us not ep, as do others, but let us watch and be so-r." God calls His children as He did Ezekiel, ien He said to him, "I have made thee a tchman unto the house of Israel; therefore, ar the word of My mouth, and give them rning from Me."

n our chapter for to-day, we are exhorted by r Lord Himself to Watchfulness in Relation to His Coming

ain. After speaking of those things which ould mark the whole dispensation till He nes again—false Christs, false prophets, wars, nors of wars, famines, pestilences, earth-akes in divers places—all which things He ls "the beginning of sorrows," saying "the f is not yet"—He goes on to speak of the dis-ctive signs of the end itself. "This gospel of Kingdom shall be preached in all the world a witness unto all nations; and then shall end come." Thank God, the impetus to ssionary zeal has increased enormously the few years; let us watch, let us look up and up our heads, for our redemption, as well as t of the Jews "draweth nigh;" Christ is ar, even at the doors." Another sign is e abomination of desolation" (translated by e "the idols of the desolator" Dan. 9: 27, gin) standing in the holy place, i. e., the ple of Jerusalem, which is to take place at same time as the great tribulation, "When shall see the abomination of desolation ding in the holy place . . . then shall great tribulation, such as was not since the inning of the world unto this time, no, nor shall be. And except those days should be tened, there should no flesh be saved; but the elect's sake those days shall be short-ened. . . . Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Such are the signs of the end of this age, and the coming of the Lord.

The Gospel is Being Preached as a Witness, but idols have not yet been set up in the "holy place," for the temple is not yet rebuilt, so that the idols cannot yet have been set up there. But we are taught to watch, because when we see all these things we may "know that He is near (see margin, v. 33), even at the doors."

The tribulation is the terror of the world; for where their treasure is, there will their hearts be also. The merchants will mourn in those days, "for no man buyeth their merchandise any more." (Rev. 18: 11.) The great men of the earth shall mourn, the "kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, hid themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of His wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" (Rev. 6: 15-17.) Those who have lived for the lust of the eyes in beautiful scenery, shall mourn, for "Every island fled away, and the mountains were not found." Those whose pride and admiration have been set upon the architecture of grand cathedrals, or proud public buildings, shall mourn, for "there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great; and the cities of the nations fell." (Rev. 16: 18-20.) Men who die unsaved have to leave behind them all they have lived for, men who live to the time of the tribulation, will behold all they have lived for vanish from their grasp while they are yet alive. Some of them, in their terror, will "seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them." (Rev. 9: 6.)

But while the world thus loses its all, the expectant bride of the Lamb has everything to gain from the coming of the Lord. "But of that day and hour knoweth no man." Many sit down under these words, and make them an excuse for not understanding the book of Revelations, of which Christ has said, "Blessed is he that readeth—and they that hear the words of this prophecy.'" (Rev. 1: 3.) And also "Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand." (Rev. 22.) God would have us search His word and watch for the fulfilment of what He has predicted. Paul says to the Thessalonians, "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." It will overtake, as a thief, all who are living for things present. As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. For as in the days that were before the Flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also, the coming of the Son of Man be." And this exhortation is especially strong to believers. (Luke 21: 34) "And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares . . . Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." There is a spirit of bitter opposition abroad, to any who, having given their lives to the study, think they have arrived at a knowledge of the time. May it not be that those who are altogether indifferent about the matter, may be put to shame when Jesus finds they have not so much as troubled themselves to inquire about the time of His coming, and so were taken unawares? "Then shall two be in the field—the one taken and the other left"—similarly occupied with their hands, but the affections of the one set on things above, and of the other on things upon the earth! "Two grinding at the mill"—the one taken and the other left. "Watch, therefore." What for? That we may know how and when to expect our Lord, and to be ready for Him. "Ye know not (but it does not follow that we never shall know) what hour your Lord doth come." "If the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched." If we have some idea of the time when we may expect a visitor, we make up the fire, lay the table, and make ready, and say, "He may be here any moment, now." "Therefore, be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

Knew Not

The majority of Christians believe that Jesus will not come again until after the Millennium, and that the Millennium is to be brought about by the earnest preaching of the gospel; and to them the exhortations to watch for the coming of Christ have no meaning, except as applied spiritually, or understood to mean the final judgment. But these are such as have not studied the Word of God about the coming of the Lord. If the world were all to be converted before Christ came, how then do we find that the state of things when Christ comes is likened to the time before the Flood, when God was obliged to destroy the world because of the sin which dwelt in it?

Our blessed Lord shows that

The True Character of the Watchman

is not only that of warning the sinner, as in Ezek. 3: 18-21, but also to be "a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over His household, to give them meat in due season." God's rule is a rule of giving, of supply. Just as Jesus fed the multitudes by the hands of His disciples, so would He now have every true child of His to be a dispenser of the blessings of His kingdom, a dispenser of salvation in the name of Jesus, of liberty from the power of sin, of freedom from anxiety, from sickness, and from misery by faith in Him. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, "That He shall make him ruler over all His goods;" just as Pharaoh made Joseph ruler over all Egypt. He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much. (Luke 16: 10.) There may be a sentimental talking about expecting the Lord, but unless we are in word and deed setting forward the interests of His kingdom, such an expectation can only condemn. A man living in every luxury, and spending most of his income upon himself, is surely not a "faithful and wise servant," for he is appropriating to himself what God gave him in trust for His kingdom. There are servants, evil servants, who say, "My Lord delayeth His coming;" and the effect of such a belief leads to oppression of their fellow-servants, and to their own gross self-indulgence. But "the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for Him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

"A SOLITARY WAY."

PSALM cvii., 1 TO 9.

Proverbs xiv. 10; I Corinthians ii. 11.

There is a mystery in human hearts,
And though we be encircled by a host
Of those who love us well, and are beloved,
To every one of us, from time to time,
There comes a sense of utter loneliness.
Our dearest friend is "stranger" to our joy,
And cannot realize our bitterness.
"There is not one who really understands,
Not one to enter into all I feel:"
Such is the cry of each of us in turn.
We wander in "a solitary way,"
No matter what or where our lot may be;
Each heart, mysterious even to itself,
Must live its inner life in solitude.

Job vii. 17; Matthew x. 37.

And would you know the reason why this is?
It is because the Lord desires our love,
In every heart He wishes to be first.
He therefore keeps the secret-key Himself,
To open all its chambers, and to bless
With perfect sympathy, and holy peace,
Each solitary soul which comes to Him.
So when we feel this loneliness, it is
The voice of JESUS saying, "Come to Me;"
And every time we are "not understood,"
It is a call to us to come again;
For Christ alone can satisfy the soul,
And those who walk with Him from day to day
Can never have "a solitary way."

Isaiah xlviii. 16; Psalm xxxiv. 22.

And when beneath some heavy cross you faint,
And say, "I cannot bear this cross alone,"
You say the truth. Christ made it purposely
So heavy that you must return to Him.
The bitter grief, which "no one understands,"
Conveys a secret message from the King,
Entreating you to come to Him again.
The Man of Sorrows understands it well,
In all points tempted, HE can feel with you;
You cannot come too often, or too near,—
The Son of God is infinite in grace,
His presence satisfies the longing soul,
And those who walk with Him from day to day.
Can never have "a solitary way."

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

Farmers and others who have a little leisure time for the next few months will find it their interest to write to B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, whose advertisement appears in another column. They offer great inducements to persons to work for them all or part of their time.

SILKS and VELVETS.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.

Invite attention to a Special Showing they will make this week of High Novelties in Dress Silks. The most modern and approved Weaves are shown in the Oriental and Antique Classic Shadings that are now so essential for fashionable Costumes. Exclusive Styles in Rich Novelties where combination costumes are desired.

They will also offer 24, 26, and 28-inch Black Dress Velvets at $1 50, $2, and $2 50 per yard; the previous price has been $2, $3, and $4.

Orders by mail promptly executed.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.,

Broadway and 11th St.,

NEW YORK.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

LACTATED FOOD

For Young Infants a perfect substitute for mother's milk, often saving life; for the Invalid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great value. Thousands who have used it say it is the

FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD.

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infants and Invalids sent on application.

Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, VT.

(33 Colors.) DIAMOND DYES

are the Purest, Cheapest, Strongest, and most Durable Dyes ever made. One 10c. package will color 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, Rags etc. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Fancy Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bronzing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instruction and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Druggists.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON, VT.

A CHEAP EDITION.

The Crisis of Missions.

By Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., 16mo. Cheap Edition, in paper covers, 35 cents. Fine edition, cloth, gilt top.....$1.25

All denominations have vied with each other in their earnest commendation of this remarkable book. The fact that five thousand copies were sold during the first year of its publication is the best evidence of the hearty appreciation of it by the Christian public.

Spurgeon's Sermon Notes.

Completed by the Publication of

Sermon Notes, Vol. 4, Rom. to Rev. $ 100
Sermon Notes Complete. 4 vols. in box, - - - - - - 4 00

I. Genesis to Proverbs, - $1 00
II. Eccl. to Malachi, - - 1 00
III. Matthew to Acts, - - 1 00
IV. Romans to Revelations, 1 00

"Every paragraph opens a mine of riches."—Interior.

Come Ye Apart; daily morning readings in the Life of Christ. By J. R. Miller, D.D., 12mo, - - - $1 50

ROBERT CARTER & BROTHERS,
530 Broadway, New York.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price.

QUEENS NURSERY, ESTABLISHED 1870.

FLOWERS. One trial asked. SEEDS.

Special Offers.

OFFER No 1. | We will send by mail 1 Fuchia (Storm King), strong plant; 1 Hardy Pink (Snow); and 5 packets of choice summer blooming flower Seeds, for 30 cts.

OFFER No. 2. | Will send two of the best new grown, Storm King, and 1 Pe... strong plants for 25 cents.

OFFER No. 3. | Will send offer No. 2 and 1 ... 1 Petunia Exquisite, 1 Hardy ... 5 packets choice summer blooming ... cts., which is half catalogue price.

WAYTE & CO.

Import...

Funds are urgently needed ... nance of THE NEW YORK ... MISSION both for Mission and Sun... purposes also gifts of Clothing, Papers and ... will be gratefully received, as a means of deve... Christian work among the poor in this vicinity. ... is the time to render assistance when most needed. All donations should be addressed to Walter H. Villiers, Supt. of the N. Y. Christian Mission, 254 W. 18th Street, New York.

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

FILIFERA PALM

New Seeds, Bulbs, Plants, Fruits,—Rare Tropical Fru

GRAND PALMS FROM SEE

WE are now able to offer for the first time, both seed plants of that King of Ornamental plants, the FILIFERA PALM. Stately and beautiful beyond scription, it is the finest addition that can be ma... any collection of plants, and can be grown in any... dow or garden as... as a geranium. It is of a com... growth with elegant large leaves, from which hang... thread-like filiments, giving the plant a most odd... beautiful appearance. In fact there is nothing like... cultivation and good specimens sell for enormous p... Plants are easily raised as the seed are large, germ... quick and grow rapidly. Per packet 25cts. ... $1.00. Year old plants 40 cts. each, 3 for $1.00, ... $2.00 by mail postpaid. Will also mail 3 Storm ... Fuchsias for 50cts., 12 Excelsior Pearl Tube... for 85cts., 12 Choice Mixed Gladiolus for 30cts. ... Giant Excelsior Pansies, best in the world, 2... per packet. New Primrose Verbena, yellow, a ste... novelty, 25cts. per packet. True Pygmae ... 50cts. per packet.

Our Seed Catalogue for 18...

Is the most elegant ever issued. Illustrated with ... ored plates, stipple-litho. covers and hundreds o... engravings. In it is offered a great variety of Fl... and Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs and Plants of all... New Fruits and Rare Tropical Fruits suitab... pot culture, such as dwarf Oranges, Pine Apples, ... anas, Figs, Guavas, Sugar Apple, &c. This ele... and Expensive Catalogue will be sent for ... 10cts., which is only a part of its cost to us. Or ... order a packet of Palm seed or anything here o... and ask for Catalogue, it will be sent free. Sp... Offer. For 50 cts. we will send Palm, Pansy ... Primrose Verbena Seed and Catalogue. Write at once as this offer may not appear again. To ... order we will add an elegant Seed or Bulb novelty free. Address, JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, FLORAL PARK, Queens Co., N...

GREAT CÆSAR,

Or whoever the great Roman was who said it, might well have had ... book in mind when he exclaimed, Multum in Parvo!

ALDEN'S HANDY ATLAS of the WORLD. 138 Colored Maps, Diagr... Tables, etc.; a greater amount of information than ever before published in even a $... Atlas. Yet this volume, 192 pages, cloth binding, sells (like "hot cakes") for 25c.; pos...

"A perfect gem of its kind."—Journal of Ed., Boston. "I th... so much intrinsically valuable information was never before ... pressed into so small a space."—BENSON J. LOSSING, LL.D. "...

The Earth

information is wonderfully conde... and covers a great variety of top... —Journal, Indianapolis. "It gives better maps than far more c... books do."—Mirror, Carthage, Tenn. "Like everything he publis... it must be seen to be fully appreciated."—Review, Dayton, O. ... pocket cyclopedia, and to be de- ... sired, needs but to be seen."— ... Morning Star, Boston. "Information every newspaper reader sh... have; it will assist him greatly in absorbing the news of the world ... Inquirer, Philadelphia. "A vast amount of information in very ... venient form. Statistics of every country on the globe are given, ... the maps are excellent."—Pioneer Press, St. Paul. "A pocket ... without folding maps seems to be an impractical problem—but ... Alden has solved it in a most practical manner. It is a minia... cyclopedia of the world."—Lutheran Observer, Philadelphia. ... most admirable little book, as full of information as 'an egg is of m... and so cheap! I should not be surprised if you should sell a mi... copies."—BENJ. TALBOT, Columbus, O. "In my judgment it is ... most wonderful book for the price you have yet published. ... geographical cyclopedia for 25 cents! You want it right at hand e... time you read a newspaper."—CALVIN GRANGER, East Poultney, ...

For 25 Cts

The Literary Revolution Catalogue (84 pages) sent free on applica...

ALDEN'S publications are NOT sold by book-sellers—no discounts except to Stockholders. ... sent for examination before payment, satisfactory reference being given.

JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, NEW YOR...

393 Pearl St.: P. O. Box 1227. CHICAGO: Lakeside Building, Clark and Adam...

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Any readers of the Christian E... who wish to procure the above book or any other publicatio... Mr. J. B. Alden, can send their orders to me at his published ... and the books will be sent promptly and guaranteed to reac... safely. J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New Yo...

UNIVERSITY PIANOS FROM $180 TO $1500.

FINEST PIANOS IN THE WORLD. SOLD DIRECT TO FAMILIES, saving the enormous expenses of agents. Sent with beautiful cover, stool and book, for trial in your own home before you buy. Guaranteed six years. Send for catalogue to

Marshal & Smith Piano Co., 285 E. 21st St., N. Y.

AGENTS Send for E. B. TR... of new book... ing MOTHER... and HEAVI... and poetry ... authors. 146.00 ... egantly ill... $1 for outfit. A... Curiosities ... Bible. $2.00. By Mail. E. B. TREAT, 757 Broadw...

TEAS LADIES Send at c... our new ... THE GREAT AMERICAN ... 31 and 33 Vesey St., New Y...

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cure ... to 20 days. No pay til ... Dr. J. Stephens, Leban...

$100 to $300 A MONTH can be made working for us. Agents preferred who can furnish their own horses and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & Co., Publishers, 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 15. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF DR. T. J. BARNARDO AND REV. ARCHIBALD BROWN.

CURSING AND SWEARING. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

PROPHETIC CONFERENCE IN PARIS.

HEARING AND SIGHT. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

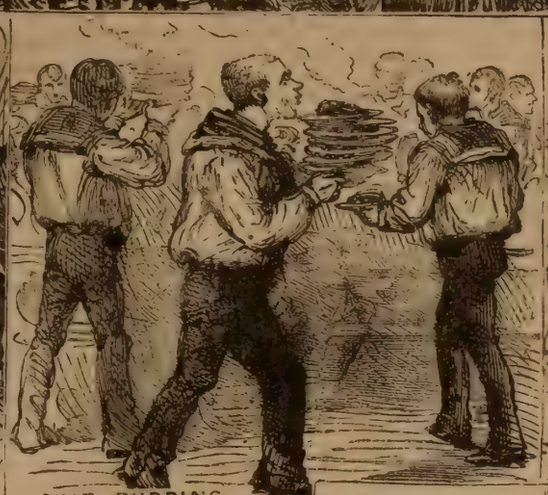
PORTRAITS OF MISS DOUGLASS AND HER BURMESE LADY MEDICAL STUDENTS.

PICTURE OF THE GREAT PYRAMID.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL. (Continued.)

THE TEN VIRGINS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

BRINGING IN THE BEEF



THE PUDDING

THE TEA

ENTERTAINMENT BY THE PIPERS

SONGS BY LADY FRIENDS

DR. T. J. BARNARDO and REV. ARCHIBALD G. BROWN—Scenes at the Recent Dinner to the London Poor.

DR. T. J. BARNARDO.

The Benefactor of Homeless Children.

Character of his Work—Birth and Medical Education—Preparing for the Foreign Mission Fields—A Visit to a City Slum—Carrying a Boy to a Hospital—Nightly Explorations—Seventy-three Children under a Tarpaulin—His Institutions—2,430 Children Sheltered—A Supper for the Aged.

WORLD-wide fame has been attained by the work being done for the homeless waifs of the British metropolis, by the indefatigable philanthropist, whose portrait, with that of Rev. Archibald Brown, his fellow-laborer in the same cause, appears on the preceding page. His visits to this country have made him known to the public of the United States and Canada, and many of our readers in the latter country have been brought into closer and pleasant relations with him, by taking into their homes boys rescued from the streets and trained in his institutions. His portrait and a brief account of will therefore be acceptable to his many friends who are readers of this journal. Briefly stated, Dr. Barnardo does a work which the Government of his own and other countries has neglected, that of prevention of crime. In all the great cities of the world there are to be seen boys who have no home; some who have not even a shelter, and many others who have a place they call home, but which has none of the associations about it which give to the word its meaning and true import. Such boys soon become criminals. Their necessities, their associations, their companionships, all tend in that direction. But in London, Dr. Barnardo has been led to interpose between them and their apparent destiny, so far as his strength and means would allow. As the result of his efforts, many a young man is now earning a livelihood by his honest labor, who a few years ago was just commencing in sheer desperation a life of crime. The methods Dr. Barnardo employs, and the origin and progress of the work, form a very interesting and suggestive narrative.

His Work

Dr. Barnardo is an Irishman. He was born in Dublin, in 1845, and is now in the forty-third year of his age. When he was about nineteen years old, he was brought to a knowledge of Christ as his Saviour, and after prayerful deliberation, he resolved to devote himself to the Lord's service as a medical missionary in China, and removed to London for the purpose of preparing himself for the vocation he had chosen.

At London Hospital.

Accordingly, in 1866, he entered the London Hospital as a student of medicine. It was at this time that he became acquainted with the necessitous condition of the children of the London streets; and utterly oblivious of all apprehension that the work of helping and rescuing these unfortunate ones would prove an obstacle in the way of realizing his early hopes, he magnanimously devoted the whole of his leisure to an attempt to effect their reclamation.

The finger of God soon indicated with unmistakable clearness that his life and energies were to be occupied and expended in the interests of the hapless youth, whose destitute and perilous condition he so deeply commiserated, and, as time wore on, the conviction that this was the pathway of duty and service which his Heavenly Father would have him adopt, at length led him to unreservedly give himself to the colossal task, in which he has been blessed in a remarkable manner.

In 1876 he obtained the diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinboro', and subsequently proceeded to the fellowship. But although a properly qualified medical man, and always taking a keen interest in professional matters, he has for more than twenty-one years been almost wholly absorbed in his present large and growing work.

Gratuitous Service.

It is a noteworthy fact that Dr. Barnardo has given his life to the work without any hope of worldly remunerations. He commenced it in faith, and though large sums of money have been given him to enable him to carry it on he has not used any of it for his own support, but has given it all to the work. It has now grown to vast proportions, but still he has accepted neither fee nor reward for all he has done. (Heb. 11 : 26.) Referring to this fact, which is not generally known, the late Lord Cairns who was Lord High Chancellor of England, remarked in the course of an address which he made at a public meeting in connection with the work: "Dr. Barnardo has given to this arduous labor an energy and ability and constant care which no money could have purchased, and no money could pay for—he has done all this without money and without price."

A Visit to a City Den

was the occasion of his attention being first called to the need for such a work as he has done. In 1866, while Dr. Barnardo was preparing to qualify himself for the medical profession, he happened to visit a miserable lodging-house of the lowest type, in one of the densely crowded thoroughfares of the East End of London. The apartment was a horrible den, and it was filled with men and women whom in many instances destitution had made criminals, and who now seemed to be beyond the possibility of amelioration, and to whom the approach of death and the sheltering darkness of the grave might prove the greatest of blessings.

In this lodging-house Dr. Barnardo found a boy in the very extremity of sickness, and whose only hope of recovery lay in immediate removal to a neighboring hospital. The owner, or lessee, of the lodging-house, a very virago of a woman, in the most peremptory manner, intimated her determination to prohibit the departure of the lad until he had paid his arrears of rent, and at once seized upon his tattered clothing as a security for the liquidation of the debt. The young medical student, however, was quite equal to the emergency, and taking off his great-coat, snatched up the lad from the filthy pallet on which he was helplessly lying, and, wrapping him in it, speedily carried him in his arms to the hospital, and had the satisfaction there of seeing him gradually gather strength, and finally recover.

Nightly Explorations.

Having thus commenced the Christ-like work of "rescuing the perishing," he continued his labor of love, and every night after his hours of study were over, instead of visiting the theatres or spending the evening in dissipation, as was the habit of many of his fellow-students, Dr. Barnardo started off on a tour of exploration in the abodes of the poor, looking for sick people to whom his skill might be of service. Once, on a moonless night, in the very depth of midwinter, he saw no fewer than seventy-three children, lying one upon another, packed like sardines, the small fellows above, and the bigger below, under a tarpaulin by a wharf, on the bank of the river Thames. He heard of thousands of city Arabs whose hand, even in youth, was against every man, and every man's hand against them, and with the determination of his naturally resolute character, made more intense by his prayerful waiting upon God, he resolved that whatever loss of ease, strength, or money it might entail, a home should be found for these destitute ones, for whom no man seemed to have the least solicitude. He has been faithful to his mission, and it has grown so vigorously in his hands that now he has in his Home no less than 2,430 Rescued Children.

Notorious lodging-houses and haunts of vice were visited with nightly regularity. Sometimes the genial visitor was made the target of scorn, and at other times he might be seen confronting peril from those who had every reason to fear the invasion of their immoral lairs. But, at last, having secured a dilapidated house in Stepney Causeway, which has since developed, under his administrative ability and persistent purpose, into the present Home for Destitute Lads, he deliberately, and with true nobility of character, resolved that henceforth it should be the work of his life to work for the salvation, both temporally and spiritually, of the crowds of half-famished, half-naked children who were to be found prowling about the narrow alleys, and railway arches, fruit-markets, and the river foreshore, graduating in vice, becoming adepts in criminality, and constituting an increasing danger in the midst of an apathetic community.

The Institutions

which have gradually grown up in connection with Dr. Barnardo's work are of a three-fold character, the leading departments of which may be thus described: The first, or Preventive Department, for the rescue and reclamation of orphan, destitute, or neglected children, includes the Boys' Home, which was founded in 1870; the Girls' Village Home, which was opened in 1873; the Little Boys' Home; the Infirmary for Sick Children of the destitute class, founded in 1876; the Labor House for Destitute Youths, opened in 1882; and Leopold House Orphan Home for Little Boys in 1883. The second, or Industrial and Educational Section, for the instruction and employment of boys and girls not absolutely helpless, comprises the various brigades of boys who are employed out of doors, Shoeblack Brigade, City Messengers, etc.; the Ragged and Day School work; Factory Girls' Mission; the Free Dinner-Table to Children; and the Young Workmen's Hotel. The third, or the Adult Mission Section, embraces the Mission Halls and Coffee Palaces, of which he has several in operation; Deaconess House, Medical Mission, and all the network of beneficent agencies—Evangelistic, Temperance, and Medical—at work among the laboring poor.

A Dinner for the Aged Poor, to the number of twelve hundred, is depicted in the various panels of the first page illustration. It was recently given at one of Dr. Barnardo's institutions, through the munificence of Mr. John Howard Angas, of Angastein, South Australia, who, desiring to do something for the relief of the distress in London, decided on this method of feeding the poor, and wisely chose Dr. Barnardo's as his almoner. The guests were of the poorest class, from fifty years old and upwards, were composed of the entirely destitute, homeless, and friendless, many of whom had doubtless moved in respectable society. The system adopted on this occasion to obtain guests, was the appointment of a number of friends to visit the lodging-houses, the casual wards and night refuges, and give the tickets to the most destitute, with a kind and hearty invitation. A company of Dr. Barnardo's boys acted as waiters, and showed almost as much delight in placing the hot roast beef and potatoes, and plates of steaming pudding before the guests, as the latter did in their consumption.

After the dinner there was an entertainment, to which a number of boys in the institution contributed. They were dressed as Scotch pipers, and their peculiar music seemed to delight the guests. Genial speeches from several distinguished visitors followed, among which was one from Mr. Farwell, of Chicago, who appeared intensely interested in the gathering.

REV. ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

THE eminent Baptist clergyman, whose portrait accompanies that of Dr. Barnardo on the first page, is the intimate friend of that gentleman, and is in his own sphere doing a similar work. He believes that Christianity is a practical power to be used for the physical as well as the spiritual benefit of the masses, and he has acted on that belief. Mr. Brown was born at Brixton Hill, London, on July 18, 1844, so that he is now in his forty-fourth year. His father and mother were sincere Christian people, and he enjoyed all the priceless advantages of a pious home. During the period of his school-life, at Brighton, he attended the ministry of the late Rev. Mr. Sortain, which proved of immense value to him.

His First Public Service

was at the meeting of a city missionary, who had invited him to go and read to the people.

This piece of service he readily undertook, as he had given some considerable attention to the art of elocution. He reasonably supposed that the reading-book would be the Bible; but on arriving at the meeting-place, he was told that nothing was wanted beyond a few extracts from the "Pilgrim's Progress." "Is that all you are to give the people?" asked the young man with characteristic warmth; "there should be preaching—preaching Christ." "If you think so," the missionary dryly replied, "you'd better preach." Mr. Brown replied, "Well, I've never done such a thing: but, rather than simply read the 'Pilgrim's Progress' to them, I'll try."

Not content with preaching the good news to about twenty people, he sallied forth into the streets, and into several saloons, and succeeded in inducing between thirty and forty of those who were "taking their glass" to come and attend the service. His text on the occasion was, "Thou shalt call His name Jesus." Soon after this, his first sermon, Mr. Brown saw that he could be useful as a Sunday-school teacher, and without hesitation he once more went into the streets and gathered for himself for whom no one seemed to care. All these efforts were made while he was "diligent in business," and before he had thought of devoting himself to the ministry. His father was a deacon at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and when in 1860, the son felt that he had been called to pulpit labor, he entered the Pastor's College, to study under Mr. C. H. Spurgeon. There he spent two years in preparing for his future life-work. At the end of his academical course he accepted an urgent invitation from a church in Kent, where he labored with success for about four years. In 1867 he accepted an invitation from a church of London, and ever since he has labored in that poverty-stricken locality. The church soon had to be rebuilt on a larger scale to accommodate the crowds which were drawn to his ministry, for his preaching, which strikingly resembles that of Mr. Spurgeon, has the same charm for the people, and enjoys the same success. The new building was called the East London Tabernacle, and like the Metropolitan Tabernacle, has become a centre of a wide circle of blessing in the neighborhood. It holds a congregation of 3,500, and cost $66,500. Since he has labored there, 4,000 members have been added to the church.

A Class of Young Arabs

In the Eastern District

The question was once put to Mr. Brown, "Can you tell me any sermon of yours which you have known to be specially useful in conversion of sinners?" His reply was: "The largest number I have known to be converted by one sermon was upwards of a hundred. It was the night when I preached on the text, 'Young man, I say unto thee, Arise.'" The sermon was almost an extemporaneous one, but he felt, even while preaching it, that it was being accompanied with power from on high.

In addition to the ordinary Church work which Mr. Brown directs, may be mentioned an Orphan Home, a Soup Kitchen; a depot for free meals, with distribution of food, fuel, and clothing; and a Seaside Home at Herne Bay.

Like the majority of successful evangelists, Mr. Brown is a firm believer in the Pre-millennial Second Coming of Christ, His personal reign for 1,000 years over the nations of the earth, and in the future literal restoration of the Jewish nation to Palestine. His hope for the world's salvation and happiness depends on the predicted Personal Advent of the Prince of Peace Himself.

Volume X. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1887, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1883, 1884, and 1885 are also for sale. We have none prior to 1883

The Antichrist Babylon and the Coming of the Kingdom, by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages; Price in cloth covers, 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Frenchman's Dream.—Mr. Thompson Said: "On one occasion we had a testimony-meeting, and a Frenchman rose and said, 'Some years ago I had a dream that Jesus was coming round among men, and I offered my hand to Him, but He would not have it. That dream made such an impression on me that I came to Christ. And though in my dream Christ refused my hand, it was only a dream: in the reality He did not refuse me. Christ casts out none that come to Him."

The Danger of Avarice.—A Servant of an Indian rajah was ordered to keep away from a cave near the rajah's residence, and to keep all others away. The servant began to consider the probable reason of his having been forbidden to enter the cave. He made up his mind that his master must have great treasure hid there, and resolved to get it. Taking a fellow-servant with him to secure the prize, they rolled away the stone at the mouth of the cave, when a tiger sprang upon them and tore them to pieces.

The Gates Closed upon the Captain.—"There was a captain serving with his regiment in India. His colonel was a true Christian, and many times spoke plainly to the young man about coming to Christ. But the captain would reply, 'What is the use of speaking to a young fellow about that? Wait till I am old and gray-haired.' By and by they were separated, and the younger man, the captain, was sent to a station where there were very few white people. He continued his old godless life for a time, but disease came suddenly upon him. His wife attended to his every comfort, but he manifestly grew worse, until at length the doctor told him there was no hope of recovery. Just at that time his old colonel was passing through a neighboring district, and when the sick man heard this he sent to see him. The colonel quickly came. He strove to comfort and point the dying man to Jesus, and as he was by the bed-side praying, the patient opened his eyes and exclaimed, 'Oh! I see the gates of heaven open. Oh! what a glorious sight.' Then he shut his eyes again, but suddenly shrieked out, 'Oh! I am lost! I am lost! I am lost! They are shutting the gates; I am too late.' The next minute he was dead."

Moral Suicide Prevented.—Mr. Knox, an evangelist said: "Some time ago I casually met an old friend in the street. In earlier life we had been very close companions, and had walked into town every morning to business. But a time of spiritual change came to me, bless the Lord. I was led to give my heart to Christ, while my companion remained in the world doing the devil's service. From that time our companionship was broken, for 'how can two walk together except they be agreed?' We had been separated for some years, when I again met him. We grasped each other warmly by the hand as I asked him, 'How are you getting on, George, my dear fellow?' 'Oh, well enough; doing the best I can—an angel cannot do more,' was the half-hearted but flippant reply. 'George,' I said, 'that is not right; it is nothing less than moral suicide. Let there be no more putting off of this matter; you may die any minute, and be lost forever. Come to Christ at once.' The poor fellow's eyes filled with tears; he was only too willing to come, for evidently he was heartily tired of the world and its amusements. And, thank God, he now no longer rests his hope of salvation on the best he can do, but on what Christ has done for him."

A French Pastor's Story.—Pasteur Barnier remarks: "I was the child of Christian parents, my father being a missionary, and my mother his faithful helper in all his work. It is about thirty-five years ago that there was a great evangelistic revival in my father's district in the south of France. I remember well one of the speakers addressing the young, and asking them to try the love of Christ, and see if it did not make up for all the pleasures of the world. In the middle of that crowded meeting, without any one knowing of it, I resolved to come to Him, and bowing my spirit at the foot of His cross, shed tears of repentance, but thinking the while of the many years I had given to the enemy. What a happy night that was! but the communion that followed was still more blessed. When my father saw me, for the first time, at the Lord's Table, he said in surprise, 'Harold, why are you here?' 'Because Christ has touched my heart, I replied. He took me by the hand and praised God. At that meeting over two hundred young people were brought to the Lord. What a mighty meeting that was! Fourteen societies arose from it, besides home and foreign missionaries. When the Holy Spirit comes in power, we can yet have Pentecostal blessing."

A Successful Prescription.—A Christian worker relates: "A doctor in a country district was, one very stormy night, quietly sitting by his room fire, and hoping, as he listened to the wind and rain without, that he would not be called out. A minute or two later a servant entered with a note. Looking at it, the doctor said, 'Seven miles' ride; I suppose I must go.' Silently he rode for the first six miles without meeting any one, then he noticed a cart drawn by a half-starved looking horse. He looked for a driver, but found none. On he went for another mile, when he noticed a dark object staggering along in the middle of the road. As the doctor came up, the owner of the lean horse stammered out, 'I say, doctor, is that you? I want you to give me a prescription; they say you are real good to the poor; perhaps you will give it to me for nothing.' 'Well, my friend, what is it that ails you?' said the doctor. 'I want a prescription for keeping my legs from turning into the saloon.' 'I cannot give you it my man, but there is a Great Physician, a Friend of mine, who will give you what you want.' 'Oh tell me where he lives, that I may go to him, for I am in danger of losing both body and soul.' Months passed, and again the doctor saw the same figure on the road, but not intoxicated this time. He came up, caught the doctor by the hands, and with tears rolling down his face, he said, 'God bless you!' That was all, but the doctor understood that the Great Physician had dealt with him, and had effected a cure of both body and soul. For Him no case is too desperate; He can save unto the uttermost."

The Unopened Letter.—Mr. Scroggie relates: "I heard only lately of a poor lad who, getting among fast companions, began to go to the theatre. Having once begun, he felt he must keep it up. He could not afford it, but in order to pander to his evil desires, he took some money from his master's till; then fearing he would be found out, he ran off and joined the army, and soon, to the distress of his widowed mother, was ordered to India. His mother wrote to him regularly, filling her letters with good advice and motherly love. This so annoyed her son that at length he wrote, telling her that as there was nothing but religion in her letters, he would not open them again; and when the next letter came it was tossed unopened into his box. Some time afterwards he was attacked by fever, and brought very low. A Christian comrade sat down by the sick man's bed, and opening his Bible began to read. His sick comrade interrupted him, saying, 'Oh, if you are going to read, just get my mother's letter out of my box.' He got it, and the first words it contained were to the effect that now she had saved enough money to buy his discharge, and enclosed was an order for the money. When he heard this the poor soldier exclaimed, 'Is it true? is the money there?' Being told that it was, he exclaimed, 'If I had only known, I might have been in Scotland now instead of lying here dying of the fever. Oh! if I had but known.' Like that mother's letters the Bible is lying neglected in many a house, and those who might learn from it that Christ has purchased their discharge from sin and Satan, remain in bondage, unconscious of the blessing within their reach."

CURSING AND SWEARING.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, April 8, 1888.

"So went Satan forth from the presence of the Lord, and smote Job with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown. And he took him a potsherd to scrape himself withal; and he sat down among the ashes. Then said his wife unto him, Dost thou still retain thine integrity? Curse God, and die." Job 2:7-9.

A Series of Catastrophes—A Foolish Wife's Counsel—Job's Better Sense—Blasphemy a Prevalent Sin—A Two Days' Awful Record in a Car—How the Habit Grows—Children Thinking it Manly—The Example of Fathers and Bosses—From Infirmity of Temper—From Profusion of Bywords—Leads to Perjury—What is the Cure?—Entreat God to Deliver—Often Punished in this World—A Scotchman's Awful Death—A Blasphemer at Catskill—An Appalling Oath—Who is Blasphemed—The Dark Day in New England—A Rainbow Arch.

A STORY oriental and marvellous. Job was the richest man in all the East. He had camels and oxen and asses and sheep, and, what would have made him rich without anything else, seven sons and three daughters. It was the habit of these children to gather together for family reunion. One day, Job is thinking of his children as gathered together at a banquet at the elder brother's house.

While the old man is seated at his tent door, he sees some one running, evidently from his manner bringing bad news. What is the matter now? "Oh," says the messenger, "a foraging party of Sabeans have fallen upon the oxen and the asses, and destroyed them, and butchered all the servants except myself." Stand aside! Another messenger running. What is the matter now? "Oh," says the man, "the lightning has struck the sheep and the shepherds, and all the shepherds are destroyed except myself." Stand aside! Another messenger running. What is the matter now? "Oh," he says, "the Chaldeans have captured the camels, and slain all the camel-drivers except myself." Stand aside! Another messenger running. What is the matter now? "Oh," he says, "a hurricane struck the four corners of the tent where your children were assembled at the banquet, and they are all dead." But has not ended. Job was smitten with elephantiasis, or black leprosy. Tumors from head to foot—forehead ridged with tubercles—eyelashes fall out—nostrils excoriated—voice destroyed—intolerable exhalations from the entire body, until, with none to dress his sores, he sits down in the ashes with nothing but pieces of broken pottery to use in the surgery of his wounds. At this moment, when he needed all encouragement and all consolation, his wife comes in, in a fret and a rage, and says: "This is intolerable! Our property gone, our children slain, and now you covered up with this loathsome and disgusting disease! Why don't you swear? Curse God and die!"

The Chapter of Calamity

Ah, Job knew right well that swearing would not cure one of the tumors of his agonized body, would not bring back one of his destroyed camels, would not restore one of his dead children. He knew that profanity would only make the pain more unbearable and the poverty more distressing, and the bereavement more excruciating. But, judging from in our day, you might come to the conclusion that there was some great advantage to be reaped from profanity. Blasphemy is all abroad. You hear it in every direction: The drayman swearing at his cart, the sewing girl imprecating the tangled skein, the accountant cursing the long line of troublesome figures. Swearing at the store, swearing in the loft, swearing in the cellar, swearing on the street, swearing in the factory. Children swear. Men swear. Women swear! Swearing, from the rough calling on the Almighty in the low restaurant, clear up to the reckless "O Lord!" of a glittering drawing-room; and the one is as much blasphemy as the other.

The Profanity Abroad

There are times when we must cry out to the Lord by reason of our physical agony or our mental distress, and that is only throwing out our weak hand toward the strong arm of a father. It was no profanity when James A. Garfield, shot in the Washington depot, cried out: "My God, what does this mean?" There is no profanity in calling out upon God in the day of trouble, in the day of darkness, in the day of physical anguish, in the day of bereavement; but I am speaking now of the triviality and of the recklessness with which the name of God is sometimes used.

The Whole Land is Cursed with it. A gentleman coming from the far West sat in the car day after day behind two persons who were indulging in profanity; and he made up his mind that he would make a record of their profanities, and at the end of two days several sheets of paper were covered with these imprecations, and at the close of the journey he handed the manuscript to one of the persons in front of him. "Is it possible," said the man, "that we have uttered so many profanities the last few days?" "It is," replied the gentleman. "Then," said the man who had taken the paper, "I will never swear again."

But it is a comparatively unimportant thing if a man makes record of our improprieties of speech. The more memorable consideration is that every improper word, every oath uttered, has a record in the book of God's remembrance, and that the day will come when all our crimes of speech, if unrepented of, will be our condemnation. I shall not to-day deal in abstractions. I hate abstractions. I am going to have a plain talk with you, my brother, about a habit that you admit to be wrong.

The habit grows in the community, by young to swear. Little children, hardly able to walk straight on the street, yet have enough distinctness of utterance to let you know that they are damning their own souls, or damning the souls of others. It is an awful thing the first time the little feet are lifted, to have them set down on the burning pavement of hell! Between sixteen and twenty years of age, there is apt to come a time when a young man is as much ashamed of not being able to swear gracefully as he is of the dizziness of his first cigar. He has his hat, his boots, and his coat of the right pattern, and now, if he can only swear without awkwardness, and as well as his comrades, he believes he is in the fashion. There are young men who walk in an atmosphere of imprecation—oaths on their lips, under their tongues, nesting in their shock of hair. They abstain from it in the elegant drawing-room, but the street and the club-house ring with their profanities. They have no regard for God, although they have great respect for the ladies! My young brother, there is no manliness in that. The most ungentlemanly thing a man can do is to swear.

People Thinking it Manly

Fathers Foster This Crime.

There are parents who are very cautious not to swear in the presence of their children; in a moment of sudden anger, they look around to see if the children are present when they indulge in this habit. Do you not know, O father, that your child is aware of the fact that you swear? He overheard you in the next room, or someone has informed him of your habit. He is practicing now. In ten years he will swear as well as you do. Do not, O father, be under the delusion that you may swear and your son not know it. It is an awful thing to start the habit in a family—the father to be profane, and then to have the echo of his example come back from other generations; so that generations after generations curse the Lord.

The crime is also fostered by master mechanics, boss carpenters, those who are at the head of men in hat factories and in dock-yards, and at the head of great business establishments. When you go down to look at the work of the scaffolding, and you find it is not done right, what do you say? It is not praying, is it? The employer swears—his employee is tempted to swear. The man says: "I don't know why my employer, worth $50,000 or $100,000, should have any luxury I should be denied simply because I am poor. Because I am poor and dependent on a day's wages, haven't I as much right to swear as he has with his large income?" Employers swear, and that makes so many employees swear. The habit also comes From Infirmity of Temper.

There are a good many people who, when they are at peace, have righteousness of speech, but when angered they blaze with imprecation. Perhaps all the rest of the year they talk in right language, but now they pour out the fury of a whole year in one red-hot paragraph of five minutes. I knew of a man who excused himself for the habit, saying: "I only swear once in a great while. I must do that just to clear myself out."

The habit comes also from the profuse use of bywords. The transition from a byword, which may be perfectly harmless, to imprecation and profanity, is not a very large transition. It is "my stars!" and "mercy on me!" and "good gracious!" and "by George!" and "by Jove!" and you go on with that a little while, and then you swear. These words, perfectly harmless in themselves, are next door to imprecation and blasphemy. A profuse use of bywords always ends in profanity.

The Habit is Creeping Up into the highest styles of society. Women have no patience with flat and unvarnished profanity. They will order a man out of the parlor indulging in blasphemy, and yet you will sometimes find them with fairy fan to the lip, and under chandeliers which bring no blush to their cheek, taking on their lips the holiest of names in utter triviality.

Why, my friends, the English language is comprehensive, and capable of expressing all shapes of feeling and every degree of energy. Are you happy—Noah Webster will give you ten thousand words with which to express your exhilaration. Are you righteously indignant—there are whole armories in the vocabulary, righteous vocabulary—whole armies of denunciation, and scorn, and sarcasm, and irony, and caricature, and wrath. You express yourself against some meanness or hypocrisy, in all the oaths that ever smoked up from the pit, and I will come right on after you and give a thousandfold more emphasis of denunciation to the same meanness and the same hypocrisy, in words across which no slime has ever trailed, and into which the fires of hell have never shot their forked tongues—the pure, the innocent, God-honored Anglo-Saxon in which Milton sang, and John Bunyan dreamed, and Shakespeare dramatized.

There is no Excuse for Profanity when we have such a magnificent language—such a flow of good words, potent words, mighty words, words to suit every crisis and every case.

Do you know that this trivial use of God's name results in perjury? Do you know that people who take the name of God on their lips in recklessness and thoughtlessness are fostering the crime of perjury? Make the name of God a foot-ball in the community, and it has no power when in court-room and in legislative assembly it is employed in solemn adjuration! See the way, sometimes, they administer the oath: "S'help you God—kiss the book!" Smuggling, which is always a violation of the oath, becomes in some circles a grand joke. You say to a man: "How is it possible for you to sell these goods so very cheap? I can't understand it." "Ah!" he replies, with a twinkle of the eye, "the Custom-house tariff of these goods isn't as much as it might be." An oath does not mean as much as it would were the name of God used in reverence and in solemnity. Why is it that so often jurors render unaccountable verdicts, and judges give unaccountable charges, and useless schemes pass in our State capitals?

What is an oath? Anything solemn? Anything that calls upon the Almighty? Anything that marks an event in a man's history? Oh, no! It is kissing the book! There is no habit, I tell you plainly—and I talk to hundreds and thousands of men to-day who will thank me for my utterance—I tell you, my brother—I talk to you not professionally but just as one brother talks to another on some very important theme — I tell you there is no habit that so depletes a man's nature as the habit of profanity. You might as well try to raise vineyards and orchards on the sides of belching Stromboli, as to raise anything good on a heart from which there pours out the scoria of profanity. You may swear yourself down; you cannot swear yourself up. When the Mohammedan finds a piece of paper he cannot read, he puts it aside very cautiously, for fear the name of God may be on it. That is one extreme. We go to the other.

What is the Cure

of this habit? It is a mighty habit. Men have struggled for years to get over it. There are men in this house of God who would give half their fortune to get rid of it. An aged man was in the delirium of a fever. He had for many years lived a most upright life and was honored in all the community; but when he came into the delirium of this fever he was full of imprecation and profanity, and they could not understand it. After he came to his right reason he explained it. He said: "When I was a young man I was very profane. I conquered the habit, but I had to struggle all through life. You haven't for forty years heard me say an improper word, but it has been an awful struggle. The tiger is chained, but he is alive yet."

If you would get rid of this habit, I want you, my friends, to dwell upon

The Uselessness of It.

Did a volley of oaths ever start a heavy load? Did they ever extirpate meanness from a customer? Did they ever collect a bad debt? Did they ever cure a toothache? Did they ever stop the twinge of the rheumatism? Did they ever help you forward one step in the right direction? Come now, tell me, ye who have had the most experience in this habit, how much have you made out of it? Five thousand dollars in all your life? No. One thousand? No. One hundred? No. One dollar? No. One cent? No. If the habit be so utterly useless, away with it!

But you say: "I have struggled to overcome the habit a long while, and I have not been successful." You struggled in your own strength, my brother. If ever a man wants God, it is in such a crisis of his history. God alone, by His grace, can emancipate you from that trouble. Call upon Him day and night, that you may be delivered from this crime. Remember, also, in the cure of this habit, that it arouses God's indignation. The Bible reiterates, from chapter to chapter, and verse after verse, the fact that it is accursed for this life, and that it makes a man miserable for eternity. There is not a sin in all the catalogue that is so often peremptorily as the sin of profanity. There is not a city or a village but can give an illustration of a man struck down at the moment of imprecation. A couple of years ago, briefly referring to this in a sermon, I gave some instances in which God had struck swearers dead at the moment of their profanity. That sermon brought to me from many parts of this land and other lands statements of similar cases of instantaneous visitation from God upon blasphemers. My opinion is that such cases occur somewhere every day, but for various reasons they are not reported.

Punished in This World

In Scotland a club assembled every week for purposes of wickedness, and there was a competition as to which could use the most horrid oath, and the man who succeeded was to be president of the club. The competition went on. A man uttered an oath which confounded all his comrades, and he was made president of the club. His tongue began to swell, and it protruded from the mouth, and he could not draw it in, and he died, and the physicians said: "This is the strangest thing we ever saw; we never saw any account in the books like unto it; we can't understand it." I understand it. He cursed God and died.

At Catskill, N. Y., a group of men stood in a blacksmith's shop during a violent thunderstorm. There came a crash of thunder, and some of the men trembled. One man said: "Why, I don't see what you are afraid of. I am not afraid to go out in front of the shop and defy the Almighty. I am not afraid of lightning." And he laid a wager on the subject, and he went out, and he shook his fist at the heavens, crying, "Strike, if you dare!" and instantly he fell under a bolt. What destroyed him? Any mystery about it? Oh, no.

He Cursed God, and Died.

Oh, my brother, God will not allow this sin to go unpunished. There are styles of writing with manifold sheets, so that a man writing on one leaf, writes clear through ten, fifteen, or twenty sheets; and so every profanity we utter goes right down through the leaves of the book of God's remembrance. It is no exceptional sin. Do you suppose you could count the profanities of last week—the profanities of office, store, shop, factory? They cursed God, they cursed His Word, they cursed His only Begotten Son.

One morning, on Fulton Street, as I was passing along, I heard a man swear by the name of Jesus. My hair lifted. My blood ran cold. My breath caught. My foot halted. Do you not suppose that God is aggravated? Do you not suppose that God knows about it? Dionysius used to have a cave in which his culprits were incarcerated, and he listened at the top of that cave, and he could hear every groan, he could hear every sigh, and he could hear every whisper of those who were imprisoned. He was a tyrant. God is not a tyrant; but He bends over this world, and He hears everything—every voice of praise, every voice of imprecation. He hears it all. The oaths seem to die on the air, but

They have Eternal Echo.

They come back from the ages to come. Listen! listen! "All blasphemers shall have their place in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." And if, according to the theory of some, a man commits in the next world the sins which he committed in this world—if unpardoned, unregenerated—think of a man's going on cursing in the name of God to all eternity!

The habit grows. You start with a small oath, you will come to the large oath. I saw a man die with an oath between his teeth. Voltaire only gradually came to his tremendous imprecation; but the habit grew on him until, in the last moment, supposing Christ stood at the bed, he exclaimed, "Crush that wretch! Crush that wretch!" Oh, my brother, you begin to swear, and there is nothing impossible for you in the wrong direction.

Who is this God whose name you are using in swearing? Who is He? Is He a tyrant? Has He pursued you all your life long? Has He starved you, frozen you, tyrannized over you? No! He has loved you. He has sheltered you. He watched you last night. He will watch you to-night. He wants to love you, wants to help you, wants to save you. He was and your mother's God. He has housed them from the blast, and He wants to shelter you. Will you spit in His face by an imprecation? Will you ever thrust Him back by an oath?

Your Father's God,

Who is this Jesus whose name I heard in the imprecation? Has He pursued you all your life long? What vile thing has He done to you that you should so dishonor His name? Why, He was the Lamb whose blood simmered in the fires of sacrifice for you. He is the Brother that took off His crown, that you might put it on. He has pursued you all your life long with mercy. He wants you to love Him, wants you to serve Him. He comes with streaming eyes and broken heart, and blistered feet to save you.

Where is the hand that will ever be lifted in imprecation again? Let that hand, now blood-tipped, be lifted, that I may see it. Not one. Where is the voice that will ever be uttered in dishonoring the name of that Christ? Let it speak now. Not one. Not one. Oh, I am glad to know that all these vices of the community, and these crimes of our city, will be gone. Society is going to be bettered. The world, by the power of Christ's Gospel, is going to be saved, and this crime, this iniquity, and all the other iniquities, will vanish before the rising of the Sun of Righteousness upon the nation.

There was one day in New England memorable for storm and darkness. I hardly ever saw such an evening. The clouds which had been gathering all day unlimbered their batteries. The Housatonic, which flows quietly, save as the paddles of pleasure-parties rattle the oarlocks, was lashed into foam, and the waves hardly knew where to lay themselves.

Oh, What a Time It Was!

The hills jarred under the rumbling of God's chariots. Blinding sheets of rain drove the cattle to the bars, or beat against the window pane as though to dash it in. The grain fields threw their crowns of gold at the feet of the storm-king. When night came in, it was a double night. Its mantle was torn with the lightnings, and into its locks were twisted the leaves of uprooted oaks and the shreds of canvas torn from the masts of the beached shipping. It was such a night as makes you thank God for shelter, and open the door to let in the spaniel howling outside with terror. We went to sleep under the full blast of heaven's great orchestra, the forests with uplifted voices, in chorus that filled the mountains, praising the Lord. We woke not until the fingers of the sunny morn touched our eyelids. We looked out the window, and the Housatonic slept as quiet as an infant's dream. The trees sparkled as though there had been some great grief in heaven, and each leaf had been God-appointed to catch an angel's tear. It seemed as if our Father had looked upon the earth, His wayward child, and stooped to her tear-wet cheek and kissed it. So will and crime leave our world before the dawn of the morning. The light shall gild the city spire, and strike the forests of Maine and the masts of Mobile, and all between. And one end resting on the Atlantic coast and the other resting on the Pacific beach, God will spring a great rainbow arch of peace, in token of everlasting covenant that the world shall nevermore see a deluge of crime.

The Darkness of Sin

"But," says some one, "preaching against the evils of society will accomplish nothing. Do you not see that the evils go right on?" I answer, we are not at all discouraged.

It seemed insignificant for Moses to stretch his hand over the Red Sea. What power could that have over the waters? But the East wind blew all night; the waters gathered into two glittering palisades on either side. The billows reared as God's hand pulled back upon their crystal bits. Wheel into line, O Israel! March! March! Pearls crash under the feet. The shout of hosts mounting the beach answers the shout of hosts mid-sea; until, as the last line of the Israelites have gained the beach, the shields clang, and the cymbals clap; and as the waters whelm the pursuing foe, the swift-fingered winds on the white keys of the foam play the grand march of Israel delivered, and the awful dirge of Egyptian overthrow. So we go forth, and stretch out the hand of prayer and Christian effort over these dark, boiling waters of crime and sin. "Aha! Aha!" say the deriding world. But wait. The winds of divine help will begin to blow; the way will clear for the great army of Christian philanthropists; the glittering treasures of the world's beneficence will line the path of our feet; and to the other shore we will be greeted with the clash of all heaven's cymbals; while those who resist and deride and pursue us will fall under the sea, and there will be nothing left of them but here and there, cast high and dry upon the beach, the splintered wheel of a chariot, and, thrust out from the surf, the breathless nostril of a riderless charger.

PENITENTIAL STONE CARRYING.

A CURIOUS penance was undergone recently in Brazil by the inhabitants of Larangeiras, at the instigation of two monks, who succeeded in convincing them that they had committed sin in allowing the Protestant preachers to hold services in the town. The monks characterized the preachers as thieves and assassins, and so excited the people that the native Protestants petitioned the local judge for protection for their lives and property. The Rev. J. B. Kolb, in a report to the Church, thus describes the tactics of the two so-called "Holy men:"

"The monks had what is called a 'day of penitence,' when the inhabitants of the town, almost to a man, followed the monks to a stone quarry, and, each one putting a stone on his head, carried them for more than a mile. The president of the province, the judges of the courts, and everybody almost were found in the procession. As they passed our home and that of some believers, they were not sparing in their remarks."

After this came the crowning act of the "mission," an "auto da fe," or burning of books. The monks ordered the people to bring their Bibles, and whatever tracts they had in their houses, and have a grand festa in burning them. Two large baskets, it is said, were brought, and as the Bibles and other printed matter were thrown into the fire, the people would cry "death" to this or that member of our church. All this was done at the foot of a great cross which the monks had had the people set up.

About a week after this had happened we arrived at Larangeiras. There was a large crowd of people at the steamer landing, which had been gathered to give us a warm reception. It had been arranged that certain persons were to have met us and warn us not to land at the peril of our lives, but they did not have the courage to do so. We landed, and, as the good Lord would have it, we were welcomed home by some persons of the highest consideration in the city. Thus was the wrath of our enemies frustrated. "It is encouraging to read that, although the missionaries were absent, the native Protestants never wavered or showed signs of faltering."

A BRAHMIN'S TRICK.

A CONVERTED Brahmin, who has recently been lecturing in Calcutta, in the course of his remarks described an incident which he says first shook his faith in the doctrines and ceremonies of the native religion. He said:

"At the annual festival in connection with the worship of the god Mohadeva, whose name you may have heard, I was selected to officiate at his altar. My duty consisted in placing a few leaves of the Tulshi tree on the head of the god, Mohadeva, and repeating a verse from the Veda, the sacred book of the Hindus, until the leaves would fall down. I was told that the leaves would fall of themselves, which would be taken as a sign that the god had been pleased, and the worshippers received his favor. I did as I was directed, and the women, who fasted all the previous day, prostrated themselves on the ground, in the belief that they would accelerate the falling down of the leaves thereby. Having placed the leaves of the Tulshi tree, I began repeating the verse from the Veda, and the women remained inside the temple in the position I have described, while a number of men stood outside calling on the name of their god, and asking him to bestow his favor on them. Well, I continued repeating the verse for full two hours, and anxiously waiting for the falling down of the leaves, but the leaves would not fall. The women, who thought that a great calamity would soon take place in our village, began to strike their heads against the ground, while the men busied themselves in the discussion of the cause or causes which might have led the god, Mohadeva, to show his disfavor in this way.

"At this juncture a priest, more experienced in the art of worshipping the gods and goddesses, came to our rescue. He was provided with a cushion near the god, and began to repeat the same verse that I was repeating. To my great surprise, he finished the business in five minutes, and there was great joy in the company of the worshippers. You might ask, How did he do it? Well, I shall tell you how he did it. Having taken his seat near the god, he in the pretence of repeating the verse from the Veda, lowered his head a little towards the altar, and blew away the leaves by the breath of his mouth. I was near him, hence I was able to detect the deception. This act of the priest shook my faith in the Hindu gods."

A CHINESE INFIDEL'S EXPERIMENT.

THE disinterested kindness of a missionary has been the cause, under God, of the conversion of a Chinese infidel and his wife. One of the missionaries of the China Inland Mission says: "I visited an out-station, and met a Chinese gentleman there. He came to me, not to inquire about the truth, but about foreign science, railways, and telegraphs, etc. After I had satisfied his curiosity, I took the opportunity to speak to him about spiritual things. He said he did not believe there was a God, and if a God did exist, he did not think it was possible He would hear and answer prayer. He had tried to read the Word of God, but had found it very uninteresting. I told him, 'If you wish to read it and to understand it you must pray to God, you must have the Holy Spirit. Then you will be able to understand that book; and I can tell you that you will find it the most wonderful book you ever read.' I urged him very earnestly to come to Christ. I felt a special responsibility, and as he went away I said I would pray for him. He said to himself, 'This is very strange; here is a foreign devil, who is so interested about my salvation and my eternal welfare that he will pray for me—it is very odd, to say the least of it.' The more he thought of it the stranger it became. He said, 'I will pray as an experiment.' He went into his room and prayed—he had no idea that anything would come of it, it was a mere experiment—and then he read a few verses of Scripture. He kept on for months, and he found the Word of God became more and more interesting, until he found he was a new creature in Christ Jesus, and that light had come into his soul. He was afraid to tell anyone about it, but at last he decided to speak to his wife, and told her the story of God's love. He expected that she would be angry; but, instead of that, she said, 'That is exactly what my heart has been longing for all my life,' She too became a true Christian."

A HUSBAND'S FAITH.

THE following testimony to Divine Healing recently given at Bethshan is reported in Thy Healer:*

Mr. J. Harris, a Gospel Union evangelist, said: I came to Bethshan five weeks ago to hear about Divine Healing. I did not seem to get much satisfaction to my mind, but I came again. I was something like Thomas, and could not believe unless I had seen; and when I had seen some slight cases, Satan tempted me as regards their genuineness. But the Lord's will was to show me something very definite. Last Wednesday morning I received a telegram from my dear mother, telling me to go home at once, as my wife was seriously ill. The enemy said, "What about your Divine Healing now? Your wife will be dead before there is a train for you to go and see her." I went on my knees, and said: "Lord, tell me what Thou art going to do with my wife?" The words of Christ came to me with much force: "This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby." I did not then trouble about the train, but went by the first one possible.

My friends met me at the station, and said: "I am afraid you are too late." We hurried home as fast as the horse could take us. My dear mother said: "You are too late." The doctor also told me I was too late. Another doctor met me on the stair, and said: "Ah! Mr. Harris, you are too late." Another doctor—for there were three engaged in the case—met me higher up, and said: "You cannot come higher up at present; it is too late." The enemy said: "What about your faith now? What about your Healer now?" But the words kept ringing in my soul, "Not unto death." The third doctor then said: "You may just come in." I went in and took my wife's cold, icy hand in my own. "The enemy said: "What do you think now?" There was not a word from her lips. She was cold, yet my faith still claimed from God.

Presently my wife opened her eyes. I said: "You are very sick." "Yes," she said, "I am going to die." "No, my dear," I said, "God is going to bring you through, He is going to bring you off more than conqueror." I said to the three doctors and hospital nurse: "Can you do any more?" "Nothing," they said. "Now, God," I said, on my knees, "it is Thy turn now;" and God did answer prayer in a wonderful way. I left my wife on Saturday morning, progressing most wonderfully. I have to thank Him for the lesson, and for what He is teaching me. My prayer is that I may know more of God.

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a monthly magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to the Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

A STOLEN SON RESTORED.

A DISCOVERY which has made several persons happy is reported in a despatch from Camden, N. J., to the New York World. It appears that a Philadelphia reporter recently made the acquaintance of a young man, whose history interested him, and which he published in his journal. The young man, who is twenty years old, has been wandering over the United States for nearly twelve twelve years, not knowing where he came from. He never had a name until the Centennial year, when he was abandoned in Philadelphia by a man whom he knew as "Jim." At the direction of this man he called himself John Burns, and by that name he has known himself since that time. The first he remembers of his existence is of his wandering over Pennsylvania with this "Jim" and two other men, who he says were thieves, and who tried to make a thief of him. When he refused to steal, they beat him and treated him like a dog.

After being cast adrift, he wandered to Bath, Me. From there he went to Bangor, where a kind-hearted farmer took him in and gave him all the schooling he ever got. He drifted from there to Lowell, Mass., to towns in New York State, and then to a Pennsylvania town within half a dozen miles of Beaver Falls. Then he went down to Philadelphia and over to Camden. That was about two years ago, and he has resided there ever since, working in Anderson's canning factory. He is a sober, industrious, and honest young man, and has gained lots of friends who have become deeply interested in his life's story. A few days after the history of his case was published in the Philadelphia newspaper, the young man got a letter from a gentleman at Beaver Falls, urging him to send on his picture, and as many details of his history as were possible. He replied to this letter, inclosing his picture. Three days after, there came another and longer letter from his correspondent. He and all his friends remarked the strong family resemblence of Burns's picture to themselves and their children. They said their boy was stolen when he was two and a half years old, or about eighteen years ago, and that in spite of all their efforts they could never get a clue to him. They are satisfied that he is their son, as he bears a peculiar mark on his neck, which, in addition to his resemblance of feature, is a convincing proof of his identity. The young man set out the next day to visit them. He said that all that night he was unable to sleep for joy at the thought of finding his family. His separation was involuntary, and he had only to be informed of his father's home to seek reunion; but those voluntary wanderers from their heavenly Father may be assured that they would experience still greater joy if they would seek His face. We know, too, that in Heaven also, there is rejoicing over the returning wanderer. (Luke 15: 10.)

A COLPORTEUR'S WORK IN AUSTRIA.

In the report sent to the American Bible Society, by its agent in Prague, several incidents are mentioned of an encouraging character. One Colporteur writes: "Entering a poor dwelling, I saw the father lying very ill on a miserable bed. Offering the Scriptures at the usual price, a feeble voice from the bed replied: 'What can I do with that? My children need food.' Upon this the poor mother began to weep. There stood the children, just home from school, begging for bread, but there was no bread nor any money in the house. The words of Christ, 'Give ye them to eat,' came to me with such force that I could not do otherwise than go to the nearest bakery and purchase bread for the hungry family. Then sitting down by the bedside of the poor man, I found a willing listener to the words of Jesus. On leaving I gave him a Testament, which he received with marked gratitude, kissing the book tenderly and then weeping as I went away."

Another Colporteur writes of two recent cases that have given him pleasure. Several months ago he sold a workman a Bible. It was a new book to him and he read it earnestly for truth and light. Meeting him not long since, the man told him of his joy and faith, and of Christ's help in emergency. In the factory where he worked there was something very difficult to be repaired. All hesitated to undertake it. The foreman asked this man if he would attempt it. "With God's help, I will." While others were preparing to help him, he went to a quiet corner for earnest prayer. The divine blessing was not withheld, and the difficult task was soon accomplished.

"The other case was of a man of bad reputation who had long abused and neglected his family, who had, in frequent absences from home, indulged in all forms of sin and vice. He returned to the village where I was stopping. Seeing him one day walking away from town, I followed him, and soon persuaded him to buy a Bible, which he promised to read diligently. After some weeks I had the pleasure of meeting him again and of finding he was quite a changed man, penitent for his sinful life, and fully resolved to live according to the good book that had brought him light."

A SEPTUAGENARIAN BUDDHIST.

An earnest old lady, on the verge of threescore years and ten, waited on the Rev. J. W. Stevenson, one Sunday afternoon, during his residence in a town of eastern China, where he was the only Christian missionary among nearly 300,000 heathen. She introduced herself as "a very religious person," and, with the air of a connoisseur, asked to have the new religion explained to her. She said: "Every religion I have heard of I have attached myself to. Will you please tell me about this religion? How much money shall I have to pay? what journeys shall I have to make? and what prayers shall I have to offer?" "I could see the woman was intensely in earnest," says Mr. Stevenson, "and I listened to her story. She told me she had abstained from animal food for eighteen years, and she had a room fitted up full of idols, and she had got up every morning at four o'clock, and on her knees, counting over her beads, kept on repeating the name of Buddha. Every hundred beads counted would reckon ten cents to her credit in the next world, and lessen her sufferings in purgatory. Poor woman! I told her about the Lord Jesus Christ coming down from heaven, and I explained it to her, but she could not understand it. The gracious character of the gospel was utterly opposed to her ideas, and she went on mumbling Buddha's name, counting her beads and plying me with questions. Months afterwards she came again and said, "I cannot understand this religion of yours—it seems a puzzle. I have been trying to believe, but I cannot—it is the most difficult task I have ever attempted." At last she got light, and the Holy Spirit revealed the Lord Jesus Christ and His perfect work. Then peace flowed into her soul; she laid aside her beads, her idols, and other things, and gave up her trust in her good deeds. She came to live near to us, so that she might attend all the services and the prayers, morning and evening.

NOTES OF THE RECENT PROPHETIC CONFERENCE IN PARIS.

What is supposed to be the first Advent Conference ever held in the French capital, was convened in Miss De Broen's Mission Hall, Belleville, on Wednesday March 14. The Revs. Messrs. Pym, H. Gill, J. Anderson, M. Wood, Dr. Anderson, from Sweden, etc., spoke.

The Rev. Melville Pym said that this gathering was not for the purpose of bringing forward any special or minute prophetic views, but of meditating upon the general fundamental truth of the speedy Second Advent of Christ. The first promise to this effect was given in the Garden of Eden, "The Seed of the Woman shall bruise the Serpent's Head." About 4,000 years afterwards this promise began to be fulfiled, when the Babe of Bethlehem was born, and in due time died for the ungodly upon the Cross, but before doing so, He said to His disciples, "I go away to prepare a place for you, and I will come again to receive you to Myself." And then after His crucifixion and resurrection two angels announced to His disciples, "This same Jesus which is taken from you, shall so come in like manner as He has been taken." The Jews for the most part neglected to discern and to recognize that the time of Christ's First Advent was arrived. Many are committing the same mistake now with reference to His Second Advent. Surely it is our duty to strive diligently, with God's help, to do His Will, to prepare for our Saviour's Advent, and to show forth the praises of Him who has called us out of darkness into light. I once saw the Sandwich Islands, so fertile and beautiful, the hill from which the idolatrous natives in this century cast their idols into the sea. Now we, too, have an idol, if there is anything in our hearts which takes a place above the Lord Jesus. And it is impossible for us to be in a proper attitude of waiting for the Lord from heaven, if we have any cherished idol in our heart. Do we show love to all our other brethren in Christian work? Let us ask ourselves, is our work a labor of love? Do we manifest the same love as was exhibted towards the prodigal son by his Father? Are we humble, like Him who is meek and lowly? A gentleman travelling in America was kind to a little girl travelling with her mother. At the end of the journey she asked him, "Does my gentleman love Jesus?" The question followed him till it led to his conversion. Let us similarly be zealous to win souls to Christ, and to aim to have the same mind in us which was in Christ Jesus.

The Signs of the Times,

The Rev. Howard Gill contended, and in proof cited and explained the second chapter of Titus, that the subject of the Lord's Second Coming is the most practical in the Bible. The servant who believes his Master is at the door will be In Readiness for His Return.

The Old Testament, the Epistles, the Apocalypse, are full of the snbject, and this Scriptural attitude was much more attained by the early Church than by the Church of the present day.

The Rev. Mr. Lewis said: To the child of God, although not to the man of the world, the Second Advent is full of practical importance, exerting an influence upon his actions every day of his life. The Book of Revelation, which is tabooed and shunned by so many, is the only book in the Bible commencing with a spiritual blessing upon its perusal. The Early Church were ever looking for Christ from heaven, but modern Christians are looking for Him in heaven, expecting to leave this earth to meet Christ in heaven. The Seventh Day of 1,000 years is now about to dawn, as we are, according to the most reliable chronology, arrived of the Six Days of 1,000 years each, as typified by the Six Days of Creation, according to the general belief of the Primitive Church. What manner of persons should we be in all holy conversation in view of these things?

Nearly at the End

The Rev. Mr. Anderson, minister of the Congregational church meeting in the Rue Royale, Paris, said: Some affirm that Christ will come only spiritually—that He comes in dispensations of His providence, or in the infliction of judgments, or in the bestowment of spiritual and temporal blessings. such as the abolition of slavery, and the removal of abuses, and to destroy the Man of sin, who will soon be desolating the earth; and that thus the world will grow better and better. But the Word of God says that Christ will come personally and visibly to restore all things (Acts 3: 21) to a state of comparative purity and innocency, and to set up His throne of temporal government over the House of David and over all the Gentiles. Instead of the world growing better, it will deteriorate and retrogress until Christ's Second Coming, to the state it was in in the days of Noah, when the whole earth was full of violence and all flesh had corrupted its way upon this globe; and its wickedness provoked the wholesale destruction of the Flood. In evil men and seducers are to wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. The Apostle Paul also says that in the last days perilous times shall come, and scoffers arise, saying, Where is the promise of His Advent? If the world is to become good and righteous before the return of Christ, we could never hope to see Him come back at all. But it is His personal return that will cause righteousness to cover the earth, as the waters cover the channels of the great deep

The Last Days

Now we are not to wait in idleness and inactivity for Christ's Second Coming; but the command is, "Occupy till I come". There were many types given in the Bible by which the manifold character of that occupation is made clear. We should imitate Noah, who warned the Antediluvians as a preacher of righteousness. We should be diligent Christian preachers, and at the same time builders, in a sense, of an ark of refuge for our perishing fellow-creatures, by bringing salvation to their very doors, and compelling them to come in, and sit down at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. We should in Sodom, who laid hold of Lot and his family, and brought them out of the city of destruction to the hill of safety. We should be laboring to snatch sinners as brands from the burning and to rescue the perishing, if we truly believe in the speedy Advent of Christ. We should resemble the wise virgins of the Parable, holding forth the lamp of light, and of Scriptural instruction to our fellow-men. We should be like the diligent servants, putting out the pound entrusted to us to usury, so that it may become ten pounds. We should be found in the attitude of the Bride waiting for the Bridegroom. Like sheep waiting for their shepherd to lead them into green pastures, and beside still waters. Like obedient subjects, willing that this Man should reign over us. And like good seed, not tares, furnishing spiritual food for others.

Imitate the Angels

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York It is an exhaustive treatise on the three lines of the Prophetic Scriptures, showing their unity of design, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price $1.50.

New Edition of Rev. M. Baxter's Pamphlets.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Important Financial Measure Authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use any part of the surplus that, in his judgment, is expedient for the purchase of bonds in the open market, which, as stated in these columns on March 8, has passed the House, also passed the Senate last week, but in an amended form. The most important of the amendments provides for buying silver bullion to the amount of bank circulation that may be surrendered, if not taken out again by other banks within thirty days, and coining it into standard dollars in excess of the minimum of $2,000,000 per month, now required by law. Senator Beck, of Kentucky, was the author of this proposition. Its adoption by a vote of thirty-eight to thirteen, is considered a decided victory of the advocates of unlimited silver coinage. It is taken for granted by Senators of both parties that the House conferees will accept the bill as passed by the Senate, and that it will go to the President in that shape. If so, Mr. Cleveland is very likely to veto it, unless his views have changed very much since 1885, when, before his inauguration, he wrote to Congressman Warner and others his famous anti-silver letter.

A Change of the Day of Inauguration of the President from March 4 to April 30, and a change of the date of the meeting of Congress, so as to bring that body together two months after its election, instead of thirteen months, as now, was the object of a joint resolution introduced in the House of Representatives in the early part of the present session. It was called up last week, and defeated by a vote of 80 to 154. The Republican members strongly opposed the inauguration day change, because it would extend the term of the President nearly two months; and the Republicans and Democrats alike objected to the Congressional change, on the ground that it would involve changes in Senatorial as well as Representative terms, and produce confusion; and by one member the suggestion was made that thirteen months was not too long a time to give a newly elected member to arrange his own business concerns, so as to admit of his attending Congress and become familiar with the rules of the House and the business that would come before it. Thus the constitutional provision regarding the Presidential term and the meeting of the national legislature, will remain undisturbed for the present.

The Education of the Indians is the Subject of a letter written by President Cleveland in response to a resolution adopted by the Philadelphia Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church protesting "against the recent action of the Government in excluding the use of native languages in the education of the Indians, and especially the exclusion of the Dakota Bible among those tribes where it was formerly used." The President says this protest must have been based upon a misconception of the Government policy and the rules of the Indian Bureau. "It will not do," he explains, "to permit these wards of the nation, in their preparation to become their own masters, to indulge in their barbarous language because it is easier for them or because it pleases them." This rule, however, applies only to secular teaching, and "surely there can be no objection to reading a chapter in the Bible in English, or in Dakota, if English could not be understood, at the daily opening of those schools, as is done in very many other well-regulated secular schools." As regards missionary schools, moral and religious instruction may be given in the Indian language as an auxiliary to English. The President then says that provision is made for the theological training of young men in missionary schools to fit them as Indian preachers, and the possession and use of the Bible, so far as it does not interfere with the secular English teaching, insisted upon, is especially secured. As to the rules of the Indian Bureau, the President thinks "there need be no fear that in their execution they will at all interfere with the plans of those who sensibly desire the improvement and welfare of the Indians. At any rate, until it is demonstrated that these rules operate as impediments to Indian advancement, they will be adhered to, while the Government will continue to invoke assistance of all Christian people and organizations in this very important and interesting part of the labor intrusted to it."

The International Council of Women, recently in session at Washington, previous to final adjournment formulated its objects, aims, and demands, as follows: It is the unanimous voice of the Council that all institutions of learning and of professional instruction, including schools of theology, law, and medicine, should, in the interests of humanity, be as freely opened to women as to men; that opportunities for industrial training should be as generally and liberally provided for one sex as for the other; and the representatives of organized womanhood in this Council will steadily demand that in all avocations in which both men and women engage, equal wages shall be paid for equal work; and, finally, that an enlightened society should demand the only adequate expression of the high civilization which is its office to establish and maintain—an identical standard of personal purity and morality for men and women.

The Great Railroad Strike in the West, which has of late been attended by various acts of violence, is again confined to the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad. The workmen on the other roads connecting with the "Burlington," who had refused to handle trains or cars containing freight for its lines, have raised this boycott and returned to work, with the understanding that they will refrain from any discrimination in the handling of freight. The withdrawal of these "sympathetic" strikers from their brothers of the "Burlington" is a heavy blow for the latter. Chief Arthur is reported having favored the raising of the boycott. The strike on the Burlington road has now been in force since February 27.

A Terrible Railroad Accident Occurred on April 5, four miles west of New Hampton, Iowa, on the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad. A passenger train plunged into a swollen creek, the bridge of which was washed out. A scene of the wildest confusion ensued, and it was with great difficulty that the passengers could be reached, owing to the rushing of the waters through the car windows. Nine persons lost their lives, and about twenty were injured, some of them so dangerously that it is feared they cannot recover. There had been nothing to show that there was danger ahead, and the train plunged into the swollen stream while running at full speed.

The Probability of the Resignation of Prince Bismarck as Chancellor of the German Empire is announced by no less an authority than the Cologne Gazette. It is officially denied, but little credence is placed in these denials. The motive for Bismarck's intended retirement is said to be the proposed marriage of Prince Alexander of Battenberg and Princess Victoria of Prussia, the second daughter of the Emperor of Germany. "Until the Bulgarian question shall have been settled," says the Cologne Gazette, "the projected marriage can only be judged from a political point of view, and on that account the marriage is an impossibility. The German policy has its root in the endeavor to avoid anything that would be likely to arouse the slightest inducement for suspicion. As long as Bulgaria is in question, this course of action affords the only means of retaining the full confidence of the opposing Governments. That confidence would be disturbed in an instant if the Czar's most detested antagonist were to become the son-in-law of Emperor Frederick." It is believed in Germany, that the arrangement of the marriage is to be charged to Queen Victoria, the mother of the Empress, who has become infatuated with the Battenbergs; and with the tenacity characteristic of her race clings to her infatuation the more firmly for the opposition it excites. She is about to visit, her daughter at Berlin, and it was expected that the betrothal would be announced during her visit but as such an announcement will involve the resignation of Bismarck, it is likely to be postponed.

Emperor Frederick of Germany is Reported gaining in strength. The London Lancet says that while the condition of the larynx is unchanged, the Emperor's general strength has increased. He is able to perform some official acts, and has issued an amnesty decree. The offences to which it applies are: insulting the sovereign; crimes and misdemeanors in the exercise of civil rights; insulting or resisting officers of the law; disturbing the public order; press offences; infractions of the law of public meeting, &c. The Emperor has also addressed a rescript to the Minister of War, recommending changes in army tactics in keeping with the progress made in the art of manufacturing fire-arms. Another rescript, addressed to Prince Bismarck, is to the effect that he desires to follow his father's example and to labor with his entire strength for the welfare of the German people.

The Appalling Earthquake in China, a brief report of which was received in January, shortly after its occurrence, appears to have been more disastrous to both life and property than was then supposed. A lengthy despatch from China was published by the New York Herald on April 2, from which it appears that not less than fifteen thousand persons were killed during the four days during which at short intervals the shocks continued. The capital district of Yunnan is absolutely one mass of ruins. At Lainon, another Chinese town, the effect on buildings has been almost as terrible, with the additional horror of the earth yawning till a frightful chasm was produced, from which red-colored water was ejected. Further north, at Lo Chan, where ten thousand met their doom, the aspect of the country has been completely changed. Large tracts of land suddenly disappeared in the course of the visitation, and in their place lakes formed.

One of Those Brutal Mexican Exhibitions, a bull fight, was given in the town of Zelaya on Easter Sunday. It ended in a frightful catastrophe. Some prisoners who had obtained permission to attend the savage performance set fire to the amphitheatre, which was rapidly enveloped in flames. Eighteen persons were burned to death, and sixty-eight others so seriously injured that some of them are not expected to survive. Fifty other persons were knocked down and trampled upon by the panic-stricken audience and badly injured. The bulls, maddened by the roaring of the flames, broke loose from their stalls and rushed wildly through the surging mass of humanity, tossing aloft and knocking over all who stood in their way. Among the eighteen dead were two women, who were first gored to death by the bulls and their bodies afterward burned. The prisoners who had caused the disaster made their escape. Surely, the desecration of the Sabbath by such a vile exhibition had fearful consequence for those making the Lord's Day a season of wicked sports.

Sunday-school Superintendents and Teachers desirous of distributing copies of The Christian Herald in their schools and classes, may have assorted parcels of back numbers by applying, stating number required, to the manager, 63 Bible House.

The Rev. Jacob Freshman's Tour in the South has resulted in stirring up the Christian public to an increased interest in the evangelization of the Jews. He held large meetings in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Md., Washington, D. C., and extended his tour to Richmond, Va. In all the cities he visited, he made his way to the quarters chiefly occupied by the Hebrew residents, and distributed large quantities of Hebrew-Christian literature and conversed with the people. He returned in time to hold his services in the Hebrew-Christian Church in St. Marks Place, New York. The work going on there is of a most encouraging character. Inquirers increase in number and baptisms are frequently taking place of Jews who, under Mr. Freshman's earnest preaching and private conversation, have come to recognize in Jesus of Nazareth their Messiah. Mr. Freshman has excellent plans for extending his work in New York and other cities, but at present, lack of funds prevents his executing them. He depends solely on voluntary contributions, and would be grateful for help, however small. His address is 17 St. Mark's Place, New York.

An Interesting Wedding was Solemnized last week at the Florence mission for fallen women in New York. Both bride and bridegroom are described as being from "the salvage of the big city." The bride, Miss Kitty Eagan, was converted at the Florence mission, and the bridegroom, Mr. James Edwards, who is a Scotchman, was converted at the Jerry McAuley mission. The latter is a reformed drunkard. He hasn't touched a drop of liquor for two years, and though before his reformation he was in abject poverty, he is now earning his $4.50 a day as a bricklayer. His wife also has given good evidence of her change of heart and life; she has entirely reformed, and for six months past has been the assistant matron at the Florence mission. The wedding ceremony was performed by the Rev. Stephen Merritt, who presented the happy couple with a fine illuminated Bible as a wedding gift. The young couple, as they received the congratulations of their friends, looked the picture of happiness.

Ignorance was Punished as a Crime by a Judge in Newark, N. J., on April 4. The prisoner brought before him for sentence was a practicing physician, who, in treating a patient, had blundered so grossly that the patient died. Medical witnesses had testified that under proper treatment she would have recovered, and the jury, believing their evidence, convicted the physician of manslaughter. The Judge, in passing sentence of six months' imprisonment, said: "You were actuated, doubtless, by good motives. If you had known the right you would gladly have done it. Your crime was ignorance. As a result of your ignorance and incompetence the life intrusted to you was lost, and the law holds you accountable. The public must be protected, and those who are ignorant and unskilful made to understand that they cannot, with impunity, trifle with human life." There are men occupying our pulpits, who, at the day of final account, will discover that this principle applies to them. Through ignorance of God's Word they are preaching error, and the souls of their hearers, being deluded, are being lost. Though their motives may be good, they will be held accountable. (Ezek. 33 : 6.)

The Construction of an Alien-Sifting Machine is a work urged on Congress by Senator Palmer, of Michigan, and seven other statesmen, who have each attempted the task in definite measures. Senator Palmer in a recent interview said it was "about time we as a nation went out of the asylum business," as already the inmates of lunatic asylums and prisons were chiefly of foreign birth; and in New York State, of the foreign born population, one in every thirty-five was supported by the people in the almshouses, while they contained only one in a hundred and sixty-eight of the native population. Senator Palmer's project is to refuse admission to every immigrant not provided with a certificate from the United States consul of the district from which he comes, and to compel the consul, under penalties, to make diligent inquiry before granting the certificate as to the antecedents of the intending immigrant, to satisfy himself that the man is neither criminal, lunatic, pauper, anarchist, Mormon, nor laborer under contract. This system, the Senator thinks, would sift out undesirable immigrants, and give us only the best. If it should go into operation it will exclude even those wrongdoers who desire to reform, and begin a new life in the New World. Happily for them no such system excludes them from that better kingdom, the Founder of which sought for His subjects, not "the best," but the lost (Matt. 9 : 13.)

A Perilous Escape from a Desert Island was accomplished by a citizen of Michigan recently, He and a friend went on a yachting expedition along the coast of the Gulf of Mexico. During a storm they were cast on the rocks of a small uninhabited island about two miles from the mainland. Their boat was wrecked, and after three days they began to give up all hopes of rescue, no boats passing near the island. Some wild berries which grew there served to prevent starvation. On the fifth day one of them decided to try and reach the mainland by swimming. After a severe struggle he succeeded in reaching the shore at a point several miles from any habitation. He was nearly naked, and had to walk along the flinty coast for six miles before he saw a human being, to whom he related his story. He was taken in charge, and after several hours a boat was found to bring off the other man, who had by this time given his companion up for dead and resigned himself to his fate. If a vessel had come to the island before the desperate expedient of swimming was tried, how gladly the two men would have welcomed the means of escape! Yet spiritual castaways, though in worse danger, reject the offer of salvation brought to them by the life-boat of the gospel (Heb. 2 : 3).

The Practice of Shanghaeing Will Probably receive a check from a sentence pronounced on a ship's captain in the United States Court at Baltimore, Md., on April 5. It appears that some time ago three young men passed through Baltimore on their way from New York to Atlanta, Ga. They went out in the evening for a walk and were met by a stranger who invited them to drink, and they accepted his invitation. He afterward invited them to go for a sail in his pleasure yacht, and took them on board that night, as he said the yacht would sail early in the morning. They were too stupefied with liquor to perceive the character of the vessel when they went on board, but the next morning they found they were on an oyster vessel. They state that they were brutally treated, and were forced to work like galley-slaves at the oyster grounds, and narrowly escaped with their lives. On their complaint the captain was arrested on his return to Baltimore, and being convicted, was last Thursday sentenced to sixty days imprisonment and to pay a fine of one hundred dollars. It is hoped that this exemplary punishment will serve as a warning to other captains who are in the habit of recruiting their crews by stealing men in our ports. It will be well also if the account the victims give of their sufferings saves others from being similarly entrapped. Unhappily the painful experience of one person does not always suffice to put others on their guard, or the testimonies of those who have been delivered from Satan's bonds would have long ago kept men from falling into his snares. (Job. 12 : 5.)

A Mammoth Hotel Drawn by Locomotives, was a spectacle which attracted thousands of spectators to Coney Island on April 3. The Brighton Beach Hotel—an edifice 460 feet long and 130 feet wide, covering nearly an acre and a half of ground, and worth a quarter of a million dollars—was in danger of being swept away by the sea, which is rapidly encroaching on the island. During the winter the waves have undermined the hotel, and it was determined to move it bodily to a site nearly six hundred feet farther from the water. Excavations were made, and huge beams placed under the building. Underneath these were placed a hundred and twelve iron platform cars, which rested on twenty-four railroad tracks previously laid from the hotel to its proposed site. Heavy cables, rove on tackles, were then attached to the hotel and connected with six powerful locomotives. When all was ready for the journey the signal was given, and the six engines, pouring out volumes of steam, applied their strength to their five thousand ton burden. There was a straining and snapping of the cables, but soon the building was seen to be moving slowly, and before night it had travelled one-fourth of its journey without the fall of a bit of plaster or the disturbance of a board. The expense of moving the hotel is estimated at fifty thousand dollars. Men who build on the sand are not always so successful in saving their property from destruction. In this case skill and ingenuity have averted the catastrophe for the time, but for those persons whom the Saviour compared to such builders, there are no means of escape available, and their eternal ruin is inevitable. (Matt. 7 : 26, 27.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Every man on the Kansas City police force is, it is said, a church member. Two of the officers are elders in the church, and a number of them are deacons.

The local option campaign in Michigan has closed for the summer. Of thirty-seven counties that have voted on the question, all but two gave majorities for prohibition.

The Franz Brewery, in Sioux City, Ia., managed by John Arensdorf at the time of Rev. Haddock's murder, has become a butter and egg depot since the adoption of Prohibition in Iowa.

Mr. and Miss Parker, the evangelists from Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's church, have been holding revival meetings at Bristol, Pa. During the fifteen days of their mission large numbers were led to Christ.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cleveland had been invited by the Common Council of that city to name two women who shall act as janitor and matron at the Central Police Station.

In the recent elections in Massachusetts, out of 102 towns, 82 voted against and 20 for license. In a total vote of 33,908, the majority against license is 7,826; an increase of more than 1,000 over the majority last year.

At St. James Episcopal Church, Chicago, Ill., an entirely silent service was recently conducted. It was the baptism of the child of two deaf mutes, and the sermon was preached in the sign language by a clergyman who was a deaf-mute.

Major J. H. Cole commenced services at Warrensburg, Mo., on the conclusion of his work at Carthage. In the latter town nearly seven hundred persons gave their testimony to faith in Christ, as the result of God's blessing on his labors.

A Parisian astrologer has cast the horoscope of General Boulanger, and had the result sold by peddlers in the Paris streets. He asserts that the General is destined to overthrow Germany on November 7, 1890, and to become President of the Republic in May, 1891.

The present Prime Minister of the Sandwich Islands is an earnest Christian. When he visited Berlin, in connection with a commercial treaty, it was his practice to attend Bible readings on Sunday nights, and he found it easy to decline diplomatic invitations on the Lord's Day.

Judge Wm. A. Cheney, of California, says, that during his term as a criminal judge, out of every one thousand cases which came before him, whisky had something to do with making the criminal in nine hundred. He adds that, in his opinion, it is the greatest evil on earth, and that he will die before another drop passes his lips.

Messrs. Brown & Avis have been enabled to do an excellent work at Central City, Neb. Not only have large numbers been converted at the meetings in the Opera House, but a spirit of unity and brotherly feeling has been seen rapidly growing in the churches, as the ministers and members have been brought into contact as fellow-laborers in the revival.

The oldest man in the world is said to be James James, a colored citizen of the United States, who resides in Santa Rosa, Mexico. He is 135 years old. He was born near Dorchester, S. C., in 1752. He was one of the laborers at Fort Moultrie during the unsuccessful attack by the British fleet in 1776. He was then twenty-four years old. His master, James James, manned one of the guns during the fight. His last owner was Henry James, who moved to Mexico in 1858 in order that his slaves might become free before his death.

HEARING AND SIGHT.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"As we have heard, so have we seen in the City of the Lord of Hosts, in the City of our God: God will establish it forever" Psalms 48: 8.

Sight not Always Confirming Hearing—Reports That do not Bear Investigation When Sight Surpasses Hearing—I. Importance of Listening to True Witnesses The Voice of the Bible Of the Prophets—Of the Fathers—A Misunderstood Test—A Universal Taster II. Good Hearing Leading to Seeing—Inviting to See by Examining Facts—Testing the Promises—Cheques Needing Presentation—III. The Truth Confirmed—Experience of Repentance—Of Regeneration—Of Answered Prayer—IV. Seeing Leads to Witnessing—V. Brings Fuller Assurance.

"As we have heard, so have we seen:" this is seldom true. In many places we see what we have not heard, and what we have heard we do not see. Time was when many simpletons believed that the streets of London were paved with gold. Ten thousand idle tales there are in every country, of mines where fortunes may be dug out of the earth, and plains where wealth forces itself on the immigrant; but how seldom do we hear the good news, "As we have heard, so have we seen."

But when you come into the "City of the Lord of Hosts, in the City of our God," the reports about it are true, and the truth exceeds the report; for, like the Queen of Sheba, we cry, "The half was not told me." When we speak of the privileges of the Church of God on earth it is impossible to exaggerate. And if we speak of the city of God as it shines in full splendor above, words fail us to set it forth. I doubt not when we arrive at its blest abodes, and tread its golden streets, and wear our crowns of immortality, we shall not only say, "As we have heard, so have we seen," but we shall be lost in wonder and surprise at the overwhelming revelations of divine love.

It is always true of the things of God, and of the Church of God—"As we have heard, so have we seen." What His Word promises, His Work performs. This thought will be the clue of my sermon, and my line of discourse will be guided by the text.

I. Our first observation upon the text is this—it is most important that we for, else, we shall not be able to say, "As we have heard, so have we seen." If we listen to false witnesses, the more we believe them the worse for us: it will not be faith but credulity, and in due time there will be a sad awakening from the dreams. It is of the first importance to you all that you should hear the word of God, and receive the truth as it is in Jesus; so that, both in the throng of life, and when you stand upon the borders of death, and in the changeless state of eternity, you may be able to say, "We thank God for the gospel which we heard; for what we heard with our ears has been verified in our lives.

Listen to True Witnesses;

The Israelites who sang this forty-eighth Psalm had heard of Jerusalem and its Temple; of Jehovah, and of His sure defence of His chosen city: how had they heard of it?

They had heard of it by reading for themselves, or listening to the reading of the Word of God. They had five books of Moses, and other writings. In these books they read marvellous stories of what Jehovah had done for His people. They would remember well how the Lord wrought for His chosen in Egypt, and how He brought them out of the house of bondage with a high hand and outstretched arm. My brethren, attend carefully to what this Book records and reveals. It is now enlarged for your greater edification. Let this record be the report which you hear, concerning the Lord our God and His ways of grace. Let us give earnest heed to prophets and apostles and evangelists, who wrote in the name of the Lord; for in that case we shall hear truths which shall be so verified by experience, as to make us joyfully exclaim, "As we have heard, so have we seen."

These good people had also listened to the ministers of God. The priests, when they were not engaged in actual attendance at the Temple, were expected to teach the people. It is said of the tribe of Levi, "They shall teach Jacob Thy judgments, and Israel Thy law." Prophets also went through the land declaring the mind of God, and when the people heard these messengers, whom the Lord had sent to speak in His name, they heard that which the Lord fulfilled; for none of the words of His servants were suffered to fall to the ground. How necessary it is that you should hear the truth spoken by those that are sent of God; for many false prophets have gone forth into the world. That which a man fetcheth out of his own mind may or may not be true; in any case, you have a right to criticise and discuss it; but he that speaketh with "Thus saith the Lord" at the back of his words, stands on another platform.

No doubt, also, these good people had Listened to Their Fathers.

In these days the proud notion is abroad, that our fathers cannot have been so wise as their highly cultured sons. Yet in the long run, these same youths will alter their opinions as their years increase. Wisdom is neither in age nor in youth, but in God alone; yet I love to hear what gray-headed men have to say, who are further advanced in the journey of life than I am; for there is weight in their testimony. They may not speak with all the brilliance and fire of youth; but their speech has salt in it, derived from the certainty of actual experience.

Some, nowadays, are inclined to hear everything, bad, good, and indifferent. I believe that hearing everything will end in hearing nothing. That text is often quoted and misunderstood, which says, "Prove all things."

False Doctrines Cannot be Proved, and you need not make the attempt. It is only the truth which is capable of proof. The text does not mean "experiment upon everything"; but receive nothing until it has been proved to be true and good. The most of us are not appointed to the office of Universal Taster: we are not commissioned to taste all deadly things that we may know their precise effect: we are far better employed in holding fast that which is good. The truths which we have already proved to be the truth of God, we hold as with a death-grip; and, as we hold them fast, we also hold them forth.

II. Secondly, good hearing leads on to seeing—"As we have heard, so have we seen." You cannot all use those words. Some of you have heard, and heard, but have never yet seen. The man who is to his mind, namely, his ears, but never uses his eyes, must imagine that God has made a mistake, and has given him more senses than he needs. Surely this argues a want of sense. Dear friends, you are not only invited to hear the gospel, but the Lord Jesus says to you, as He said to His first disciples, "Come and see." "O taste and see that the Lord is good." You are invited to see for yourselves whether these things be so. You will ask, How can a hearer of the gospel become a seer of it?

Content with One Inlet

Note first, that he can do this by examining the facts which he hears stated, and judging whether they are really so. The Scripture tells you that your heart is deceitful—see whether it be not so. It tells you that there is a natural inclination in man towards evil—study yourself, and see whether this is not the case. It tells you that there is in human nature an impotence towards that which is truly good, and an aversion to God. Seriously consider whether your own life, as a natural man, does not prove the truth of these charges. There are some things about yourself, while as yet you are unconverted, which you have heard of in the Scriptures, and I would urge you to see whether they are not true in your own case. It will be a great help to you if you will examine into these things in reference to your own self. The subject for consideration is near at hand, and it will be, in many ways, useful to yourself to know whether Holy Scripture gives a true description of human nature, as you find it in yourself.

We further see what we hear, when we obey the commands and receive the blessings promised upon obedience. For instance, you are bidden to confess your sins; now see whether this is true. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins"—not only hear the precept, but see whether

The Promise Is True.

Here is another test: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." You have heard it hundreds of times; come and see for yourself whether rest is given.

We also turn hearing into sight when, receiving the blessings which are promised to faith, we enter into a new life. Some of us can bear witness that we have entered into a new world; that things which are now everything to us, were nothing to us a little while ago. As to a deaf man there is no sound, as to a blind man there is no light, so to us a few years ago there were no spiritual things; for we were devoid of those spiritual faculties by which spiritual things are discerned. But, now that we have believed in Jesus, we have passed into another universe; and we now possess a life as much above the life of our former state as the mental life is above that of the brute, which perisheth. The promises of God are of little service to a man if he merely hears them or reads them, and has no further dealing with them. They are like a cheque which is kept for months and years in a drawer, and never presented at the bank.

III. I beg your attention to the third point, which is this: that seeing wonderfully of what we hear. We are bound to believe God, even when we cannot see. That the Lord has said it, would be quite enough for us if we reverenced Him as we ought. But it does help us very much when, having implicitly believed in God's testimony, He grants us grace to see that what we have believed is most surely true. Let me show how the experience of a believing man confirms the truth of what he has heard.

Confirms the Truth

To go back to where I was just now, all that Holy Scripture says about our ruin may be seen to be true. Many of us have not only heard, but we have felt the evil result of sin upon our minds and hearts. We know that sin dwelleth in us, and strives for the mastery. We can never doubt that our natural tendencies are faulty, and that our best desires are imperfect. It does not matter what modern deceivers preach; you may depend upon it, that men when they come to die, if their consciences are at all awake, are persuaded that the threatenings of Holy Scripture are true. Sentiment kicks against eternal punishment; but conscience cries "Amen" to the righteous sentence of the law.

We believe in our personal desert of the wrath of God, for we are sure it is so, and our only comfort is that the sentence of death has been fulfilled in us, in the death of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Substitute. All that the Holy Scripture saith about sin and its results, we do from our heart of hearts confirm, for, "As we have heard, so have we seen,"

Brighter things, however, have we heard and seen. Brethren, we heard that if we came to Jesus as we were, He would receive us; and He did receive us. We heard that He would graciously forgive; and He did forgive. We heard that in forgiveness, He would give us peace, and

We have Found it So.

"Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ," We heard that poor sinners, justified by faith, received a joy unspeakable, and we have received that joy. We bear our testimony that "This man receiveth sinners": we bear witness that He casts out none that come to Him. We declare to you that, in the fullness of His grace, He puts rebels in the children's place. Yes, "As we have heard, so have we seen."

Then we heard that there was such a thing as regeneration. We used to hear with wonder that declaration, "Ye must be born again."

We were told that we must pass from death unto life: that old things must pass away, and all things must become new. We heard it attentively and believingly; but now we have gone further—we have seen it. Many of you know the great and radical change, because you have experienced it. You can say, "One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see." We have passed out of a dead world into

A Living World.

Having been buried with Christ, we have also risen with Him, and our life dwells and flourishes in a new world. We are conscious that a new heart beats within us; a new life looks out of our eyes, and moves in our members. The new birth is a fact.

Further, to show you how experience supports the Word of God, we were told many times over that God hears prayer. There are numbers of persons here whom any lawyer would be glad to put in the witness-box on any matter of fact; for their statements would be questioned by nobody, since they are well known for integrity and truth. These persons are prepared to bear solemn witness, as in the presence of God, that many a time God has as distinctly heard their prayers as if He had thrust His hand through yonder skies. As we have heard about prayer, so have we seen; and none can drive this faith out of us, since it is confirmed by what we have seen over and over again in actual experience. So long as reason holds her seat, we must and will believe in prayer.

Yes, let me remind you, also, that we heard with our ears, that there is a God of Providence who rules and over-rules all things. We were glad to sing, "The Lord will provide." We believe in a gracious providence, and we have also seen it! Time does not suffice this morning for us to narrate personal incidents, but assuredly teems with them: in times of need the Lord has showed Himself quite as able and willing to supply the needs of His servant in these days as He was to feed the nation in the wilderness when He rained manna from heaven for them, day by day. All things have worked together for good to them that love God, even until now. We can look back upon experiences which, at the time, were especially bewildering and perplexing; and of those very experiences we can now say, "Blessed be God for them!"

My Own Experience

One thing more I will notice, and have done with these verifications which sight gives to hearing. We have often heard that those who believe in God have hope in their deaths. We have been told over and over again, that

"Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are."

Now, we have not seen this for ourselves, for we have not yet forded the last river; but we have seen it in others. I suppose that the most of you have distinctly seen that the end of the righteous man is peace. I, from my calling have many scores of times seen saints in their last hours. This is the witness I put on record—the very happiest persons I have ever met with have been departing believers. I have not met at weddings, nor at jubilee feasts, nor in moments of singular prosperity, such joyful persons as I have seen amid weakness and pain upon their dying beds. The only sons of men for whom I have felt any envy have been dying members of this very church, whose hands I have grasped in their passing away. Saintly death-beds are grand evidences of Christianity. It is something to say in our last hours, "As we have heard, so have we seen."

I can truly say that hitherto my own experience and observation have confirmed the teachings of the Word of God. I have not yet met with anything which could shake my confidence in the divine revelation. I trust I am neither an absolute fool nor a blind bigot, who would shut his eyes to reason: I would not ignore a certified fact, either in science or history, or in the world of mental life; and yet I know of no fact which can disprove so much as one of the solemn declarations of God, nor even cast a shadow of suspicion upon a doctrine of Holy Scripture. I have heard much, but I have seen nothing of the science which disproves the Scriptures: there is no such science; it is an imposture which has stolen the name. Our knowing is far better than our theorizing; and whatever our theorizing may have done our actual knowledge has never been on the side of the baptized infidelity of the advanced school. All our experience makes us say, "As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the Lord of hosts."

On this point I have spent the strength of my discourse; the remaining two heads shall be treated briefly, although they are of great practical value.

IV. When hearing turns to seeing, and is confirmed by it, then it Leads to Witnessing.

The text, you see, is itself a testimony: "As we have heard, so have we seen." In these days every man that can witness for the truth ought to do so: even if he stammers, he must not be silent. So many are decrying the truth, that, if in your heart and conscience you have proved it true, you are bound to give to the Lord the testimony of even a stammerer. I suppose Moses could do no more than that, for he was a man slow in speech; but when he would have preferred to be quiet, the Lord said to him, "Who hath made man's mouth?" Your mouth is as God made it: use it as best you can, and speak up for His name and cause.

Such testimony as that of our text is sometimes involuntary, and is none the less precious on that account. When you have tasted and handled of the good things of God, I am sure you will have to tell others of your glorious discoveries! your mouth will be filled with laughter, and your tongue with singing, till those who are round about you will be compelled to say, "The Lord hath done great things for them," and you will answer, "Yes, the Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad." Jesus said, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength," when the children were shouting in the Temple. Young converts, if they have newly tasted that the Lord is gracious, must sound out their joys. Who would stop them? If these should hold their peace, the stones would cry out. But your involuntary witnessing must lead up to constant voluntary witnessing for your Lord, and His holy cause. O ye who are on the Lord's side, awake, arise, or be condemned as traitors!

Our testimony should be very frequent. Believers would do a thousand times more good if they were not so particularly careful to avoid offending men of the world. If Christ Jesus offends people, they ought to be offended; for He is sure to be a "stumbling-stone and rock of offence" to those who stumble at the Word, being disobedient. We have heard of a great warrior, who was more at home on the field of battle than amid the ceremonies of courts; his sword nearly tripped him up when walking backwards from the throne, and his majesty remarked that his sword seemed very much in the way. "Yes," said the brave man, "and your majesty's enemies find it so."

V. For lastly, hearing, seeing, witnessing, God will give you a yet than you have as yet. Permit me to read the text again: "As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the Lord of hosts, in the city of our God: God will establish it forever." That is the conclusion which the saint comes to when he has tried the truth for himself, and borne witness to the result of his trial. God will never leave His church, God will never forfeit His word. God will never desert His Gospel. Because He is Jehovah of hosts and changes not, and has all power at His disposal; because He is our Lord, our God in covenant. He cannot desert the work of His own hands, nor leave the people of His love. Because His honor is bound up in the whole enterprise that Christ undertook, He must go through with it, and He must arrive at a glorious conclusion. God will establish it forever. Come, my brethren, let us cast aside all doubts about what the future is to be. The battle rages, the foe is as furious as he is subtle, while we are weak as water and can do nothing by ourselves; but let us not despond; for, if the gospel be God's gospel, He will take care of it; if the church be Christ's Church, the gates of hell cannot prevail against her. The battle is not ours, but the Lord's: in His name let us set up our banners and cry with full confidence of victory, "The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge." Hallelujah, hallelujah. Amen.

Fuller Assurance

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE FOUNDER OF MORMONISM*

An unpleasing picture has been drawn of Joseph Smith by one who knew him as a boy, and by another, who perhaps studied his character at closer range and from a more intimate personal acquaintance. Between twelve and thirteen years of age he is remembered by this witness as "a dull-eyed, flaxen-haired, prevaricating boy, noted only for his indolent and vagabondish character, and habits of exaggeration and untruthfulness. He seldom spoke to anyone outside of his intimate associates, except when first addressed by another, and then, by reason of his extravagances of statement, his word was received with least confidence by those who knew him best. He could utter the most palpable exaggeration or marvellous absurdity with the utmost apparent gravity. He nevertheless evidenced the rapid development of a thinking, plodding, evil-brewing mental composition—largely given to inventions of low cunning, schemes of mischief and deception, and false and mysterious pretensions. He was, however, proverbially good-natured, very rarely, if ever, indulging in any combative spirit toward any one, whatever might be the provocation."

As the boy advanced in years he developed a mental attitude that, amid more favoring circumstances, and under the stress os some moral encouragement, might have grown to fullness. His reading took a theological turn, and the Bible became a book of daily study. His mind was retentive; he was possessed of a rude eloquence of speech, and had that rare power of expression that, to the strangers or the simple, would seem the outward form of a sincere belief within.

A Remarkable Document.

It has been again and again quoted that even Brigham Young declared that "the prophet was of mean birth; that he was wild, intemperate, even dishonest and tricky in his youth." Smith's neighbors gave the same testimony. Eleven of the most prominent and respectable citizens of Manchester, N. Y., under date of November 3, 1833, affixed their names to this emphatic declaration: We, the undersigned, being personally acquainted with the family of Joseph Smith, Sen., with whom the so-called Gold Bible originated, state: that they were not only a lazy, indolent set of men, but also intemperate, and their word was not to be depended upon; and that we are truly glad to dispense with their society."

As if the above did not cover the ground with force and exactness, a supplemental declaration was made on December 4, 1833, and signed by sixty-two residents of Palmyra: "We, the undersigned, have been acquainted with the Smith family for a number of years, while they resided near this place, and we have no hesitation in saying that we consider them destitute of that moral character which ought to entitle them to the confidence of any community. They were particularly famous for visionary projects; spent much of their time in digging for money which they pretended was hid in the earth, and to this day large excavations may be seen in the ground

* From "Early Days of Mormonism" by J. H. Kennedy. A narrative compiled from original sources, clearly showing how the pernicious fraud originated and the circumstances that fostered its growth. 275 pages; Price $1.50. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway New York.

Dr. Maria Douglass, Director of the Countess Dufferin Medical College of Rangoon, Burmah, and Her Pupils.

not far from their residence, where they used to dig for hidden treasures. Joseph Smith, Sen., and his son Joseph, were in particular considered destitute of moral character, and addicted to vicious habits."

Smith's Own Confession.

Despite the attractive ingenuity of the story Smith gave to his followers about the revelation and discovery of the gold plates, there is substantial reason for the belief that the whole fabrication grew out of an impromptu jest on the part of young Smith, which was received in such earnest, that his subtle cunning saw in it a new way to distinction and possible gain. The story is told plainly and fully by Peter Ingersol, a near neighbor of the Smiths, and at that time one of Joseph's most intimate friends. He declares that one day the future founder of Mormonism called upon him, his countenance and manner betraying evident enjoyment of some hidden jest. Upon being questioned he made the following statement: "As I was passing yesterday across the woods after a heavy shower of rain, I found in a hollow, some beautiful white sand that had been washed up by the water. I took off my frock and tied up several quarts of it and then went home. On entering the house I found the family at the table eating dinner. They were all anxious to know the contents of my frock. At that moment I happened to think of what I had heard of a history found in Canada, called the 'Golden Bible,' so I very gravely told them it was the 'Golden Bible. To my surprise they were credulous enough to believe what I said. According, I told them I had received a command to let no one see it; 'for,' said I, 'no man can see it with the naked eye and live.' However, I offered to take out the book and show it to them, but they refused to see it, and left the room. 'Now,' said Jo, 'I have got the fools fixed, and we will carry out the fun."

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes. by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

A MOTHER'S VOW.

The conversion of a woman in China, through the recovery of her son from a dangerous sickness, is a remarkable incident related by Rev. J. W. Stevenson, one of the China Inland Missionaries. He says: "A young workingman heard the Gospel; he was naturally quick—a fiery, enthusiastic youth. He believed in the Lord Jesus Christ with all his heart. When he went about his business he talked about Christ; he could not help speaking of Christ and His great love.

He had a great desire to see his mother saved. He spoke to her with tears, prayed with her, and entreated her to come to the Lord, that she might share in the joy and peace that filled his heart. She said, 'I am too old; you young people may take up this new religion; the religion of my ancestors will do for me.' This distressed his heart; and when he was talking to others he often thought of his own mother. He was burdened with the fact that his mother was quite indifferent to the claims of Christ, and he cried to God for her. God was sure to hear such prayers. How did He do it? He laid that young man on a bed of sickness prostrated with typhus fever.

The mother went to the doctor, she went to the temples; she did all she could, but it was of no avail—the young man got worse, till all hope was gone. Then, in her distress and despair, she came to the chapel, and said, 'O, sir, will you come and pray for my son? He is dying.' We went, and knelt down by the bedside, and we prayed to God there and then. The woman rose with tears streaming down her cheeks, and said, 'If your God will save my son, I vow that I will serve Him in future.'

God did graciously restore him, and this woman became an inquirer, then a candidate for baptism, and is to-day a consistent member of the church. The Chinese are not so different from us, they have hearts; and though this woman's spiritual nature was dead, there was a tender chord in her heart, and God could put His finger on that chord. Through her love for her son an entrance was found for the Gospel, and she was saved."

LADIES' MEDICAL CLASS, OF BURMAH

(See Illustration.)

Mention has already been made in these columns of the deep interest taken by Lady Dufferin in the welfare of the women of India, and the effort she made to organize a corps of trained female physicians and nurses, who could be admitted to the jealously guarded homes of the women who were dying of maladies which medical science could cure or alleviate. In February, 1886, when the Earl of Dufferin was Viceroy of India, he and the Countess of Dufferin visited Burmah. Her ladyship received at Rangoon the committee and active supporters of a society formed under the presidency of Sir Charles Bernard, then Chief Commissioner, to establish in that province a branch of the National Association which she had organized. A public meeting was held in the Rangoon Town Hall on April 14 in that year; grants of money were promised by the Government of Burmah and the Municipality of Rangoon; a large bungalow was rented on lease for a hospital, and Dr. Maria Douglass was appointed Resident Medical Officer and Superintendent.

The instruction of Burmese native women in nursing and midwifery is an essential part of this institution; and classes for that purpose have been formed by Dr. Maria Douglass, whose portrait, with those of her first pupils, we are glad to be able to give this week to our readers. The president of the Rangoon Association is now Mr. C. H. T. Crosthwaite, who has succeeded Sir Charles Bernard as Chief Commissioner of Burmah. The Bishop of Rangoon, Mrs. Spearman, and Mr. F. A. Gillam, well-known local philanthropists, are on the managing committee and subscriptions, private donations, and grants from local municipalities, contribute to the funds. The work of the past year has been of a most satisfactory and promising character, and the Gospel of Christ is being read and studied on all hands, for the people have learned that they are indebted to the teachings and influence of Christ for this splendid agency and vehicle of blessing in their midst.

The late Lady Brassey, when she and Lord Brassey, in the yacht Sunbeam, visited Rangoon, in March, 1887, took much interest i his undertaking, and presented a set of anatomical charts and obstetric diagrams to serve in teaching the native pupils. Since the hospital was opened, in April of last year, 142 patients were treated, to November 30, of which eighty-eight were cases in childbirth; and there were only five deaths, three being those of new-born children. Eighteen students are being trained, and books for their learning are translated into the Burmese language.

In a recently published volume, "The Coming of the Great Queen," by Major E C. Browne, are some extracts from Dr. Pedley's able treatise on Burmese midwifery, showing the barbarous treatment suffered by the women of that country from the stupid ignorance of their ordinary attendants. They are stewed or baked and smoked almost to death, in close, airless chambers, made as hot as possible, and filled with steam, during some days and nights before and after childbirth; many die, and the health and strength of many more are destroyed. We are glad to learn that, through the National Association and the Hospital over which Dr. Maria Douglass presides, measures are being taken to correct these deplorable practices in Burmah, and very soon, with God's blessing, they will be numbered with the things that are no more.

The Pyramids of Cheops, Chephren and Mencheres, from the Nile.

THE PYRAMIDS.

(See Illustration.)

MUCH interest has been manifested by our readers in the articles on the prophetic significance of the Great Pyramid, published in recent numbers of this journal. Herewith is an illustration depicting the exterior view of it and its two smaller companions, which are known as the pyramids of Chephren and Mencheres. They stand about six miles west of the river Nile, and ninety miles from the Mediterranean, and are built on a hill two hundred and fifteen feet above the sea-level, and one hundred and fifty feet above the level of the desert. It is a remarkable fact, proved by incontestable evidence, that this whole region was once covered by the sea. The traveller, to this day, finds at the base of the hills quantities of the shells of fishes which live only in the bed of a deep sea, and pebbles which could only have obtained their present shape by the action of tidal water. The work of levelling the top of the hill, digging the foundation to the solid rock, and erecting the Great Pyramid, must have occupied an army of one hundred thousand men for twenty years. This is exclusive of the time and labor required for cutting a canal from the Nile to the site chosen for the Pyramid, by which alone the vast blocks of granite could have been brought from the quarry to the hill. How these blocks were raised from the base of the hill to the elevation which they now occupy, is still a puzzle to civil engineers.

The area prepared for the base was 750 feet square, or thirteen and a half acres, which is larger than the area of Union Square in New York. The second and each succeeding tier was of course smaller than the one below it, receding like the steps of a stairway. There are now two hundred and two of these tiers. But originally there were two hundred and twenty tiers, varying in height from twenty to fifty-six inches, and on the top, the apex, a magnificent block was placed at a height of 486 feet, which is within seventy feet of the height of the Washington Monument, and nearly twice the height of the towers of the Brooklyn Bridge. Its bulk is enormous—fully eighty million cubic feet. Its workmanship displays consummate ability. Practical men who have carefully examined it say that the tools used must have been long straight saws, circular saws, and drills of various kinds pointed with jewels. Previous to the commencement of the recent careful study of the construction of the Pyramid, it was supposed that the work of building it was continuous during the lifetime of one or more kings, a casing of stone being added as a covering to an original small nucleus at stated periods; but that theory was speedily abandoned when careful examination proved the unity of design and the conception of plan from the beginning of the work of construction. It is now clearly proved that when the building was commenced the architect had the design of the present gigantic structure drawn out in all its majestic proportions. The position of "the King's Chamber," and the evident intention to make that apartment the grand focus of the entire structure, is a convincing proof of the unity of design from the beginning.

The building was completed 2,170 years before Christ, and therefore had already been standing four hundred years when Joseph became chancellor of Egypt, and sent the wagons to fetch Jacob his father, and his brethren, to Egypt. Doubtless the priests of that day were acquainted with the road into the interior of the Pyramid, but the secret was lost, and it was not until 820 years after Christ, or about three thousand years after the Pyramid was built, that the entrance was found. The Caliph Al Mamoun was convinced that the structure was not solid, as was supposed, but contained rooms, which might be filled with treasure. He therefore determined to pierce it, and had it carefully examined for traces of any stone which had the appearance of a door. He decided to attempt the north face, and fixed upon a spot to commence operations. The point selected proved to be twenty-five feet lower than, and about twenty feet west of, the true entrance, but as the tunneling proceeded horizontally, the workmen struck into the descending passage, with its regular walls, leading to the interior and exterior. The excited workmen ran along the passage with flaming torches into the Grand Gallery under the beautiful arch with its granite portcullis, and on into the King's Chamber, in the very heart of the mountain of stone. There the famous coffer was found, but it was empty. As there was no treasure there, explorations were discontinued, and eight hundred years elapsed before interest in the interior revived. Even then, little was done, and it was not until this generation that, through the efforts of Professor Piazzi Smyth, the full beauty and prophetic significance of the vast structure were made known to the world.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 223.)

Rebecca Disappointed.

DOWN-STAIRS there was a concourse of strange people about. Two or three policemen, a doctor, and Mr. Saunders, the lawyer. Mr. Saunders called me into the parlor.

"You are as likely as anybody to tell us where Philip Champion can be found," he said. "He is your master's next relative and heir-at-law, if he has made no will."

"But I thought you had made his will, sir," I answered.

"Not I," he said. "He was often talking about it; but I could never persuade him to give me the necessary instructions."

Down, down sank my heart; for I knew nothing of law or inheritance. The old man had not kept his promise to me, or to Rebecca.

"If there is no will," said the doctor, "young Champion takes every penny, I suppose?"

"Yes, yes, Philip Champion comes into it all!" answered Mr. Saunders.

I think it frightened me to hear there was so much money coming to my Philip—Pippin, my little scholar. I sank down on the nearest chair.

A strange Sabbath-day was that; so different from any other in my life! I had been used to escape from the weary care of our master's dismal house to the quiet of my own cottage, where I could gather strength and comfort for the week. But that Sunday I could not quit the house, with all those strange men about it. As for finding a nook for myself, where I could collect my thoughts a little, and have a quiet spell over my Bible, that was out of the question, save for a few minutes, by the side of Rebecca's bed, while she still slept. But she roused up soon after noon-tide, and gave me no rest with asking questions about Robin Cherrick, who by this time was fast bound in Lancaster jail, or in some secure place, maybe, nigh at hand. All I could tell her was that there would be a coroner's inquest early the next morning.

"Rebecca," I said, "our old master is gone where he can do nothing for himself or you with all his riches."

She stared at me for a few moments with glaring eyes; and after that she screamed again and again like a maniac, till the doctor came up from the floor below to see what was the matter with her. It was a long while before he could control her; and then he gave her a draught, which presently threw her into a sound sleep.

I was free now to go down-stairs. Through the long, narrow window on the stair-case, I saw the dawn breaking, in clear gray light, with rosy clouds floating across the east already bright from the shining of the unrisen sun.

But after nightfall the place grew quiet. Mr. Saunders, who had been searching through every desk and drawer for a will, was gone; and that room was locked up carefully, as though it contained some precious treasure. One policeman alone remained to guard it. Then—but how can I tell you the awful stillness that seemed to gather and brood over the place which held the corpse of the poor miser? Rebecca, who had been wailing and weeping all day, fell into silence, as though she dared not hear the sound of her own voice. The wind moaned through the empty rooms in the other part of the house, and whistled through the key-hole, but there was nothing else to be heard; though we held our breath, and listened—listened as though we might perhaps catch the old man's foot-fall, or the jingling of his keys, in the locked-up room overhead. It grew fearsome at last—that silence like the grave.

"Rebecca," I said, "I'll read a verse or two up loud."

My voice sounded through the stillness as if I had shouted out the words. I opened my Bible at random, as I remember mother used to do when I was a girl, if she lacked special comfort or direction. I had never been used to do it myself, but that night it came natural to me. Surely if my mother ever needed special comfort through the common troubles of her country life, I needed it more sorely in that trouble. But my eye fell upon these words, and I kept silence, and did not read them aloud to Rebecca, "The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered: he openeth his eyes, and he is not.

"Terrors take hold on him as waters; a tempest stealeth him away in the night.

"The east wind carrieth him away, and he departeth; and a storm hurleth him out of his place.

"For God shall cast upon him, and not spare: he would fain flee out of his hand.

"Men shall clap their hands at him, and shall hiss him out of his place."

The next morning early an inquest was held by the coroner and twelve jurymen. All the doctors that had come in on Sunday to look at the master's corpse, were of one mind as to his death. No one had laid a hand upon him. He had waked up suddenly from his dreams of terror to find they were no longer dreams, but real. His life had been nothing better than the flickering flame of a candle, ready to go out if a puff of wind reached it; and the sudden shock had come upon him as if a door had opened, and a mighty rushing wind, had swept over his soul, carrying it away like a leaf into the other world. There was no reason to think that Robin Cherrick and his mate had any direct hand in his death.

But they were carried from the town-jail, where they had been locked up, and taken before the magistrates; and both me and Rebecca were forced to go, and witness against them. Poor Rebecca! It was years since she had seen Robin: and now she had to look him in the face, a sullen, evil face, and swear to him being the man who had courted her in old times, and how he used to come about the place, and knew the house well, and the master's riches, and his lonely way of living. He scarcely looked at her after the first minute; but she could not keep her eyes away from him; and even when she was speaking to the magistrate, answering the questions he put to her, her white face was turned toward Robin, and her frightened gaze fastened upon him. We heard him and his mate sentenced to jail, there to wait till the next assizes, when they would be tried by the judge. Then we returned to our dismal dwelling-place, which could never be called a home, where preparations were being made, under Mr. Saunders's directions, for the funeral of the dead man.

No news came of Philip Champion, except that the lady in London who had adopted him and brought him up, wrote word that she did not expect him home from his voyage with his father for several weeks to come. The old master had made no friends in the town, or such as he once had had forgotten him, and did not care to come to his burial. Even Rebecca refused to go. So it came to pass that there was none but me, save Mr. Saunders and one doctor, who would both be paid for their trouble, to follow him to the grave.

I went into the death-room just before the coffin-lid was fastened down upon the poor, wrinkled, withered face. The men were gone away; for they had forgotten to bring the proper nails with them; so the room was empty, but for me and the corpse. So still it lay, so lifeless, that I could hardly believe that somewhere apart from it the soul was living yet! Then the remembrance came across me how once I said to Transome "If God would ask me what I wished for, like He did Solomon, I'd have chosen to write a book that would prick our old master's heart to the quick." Ay! but God Himself had written a book for him that ought to have pricked his heart to the quick over and over again. I wondered how he could have read about God's own Son being a poor man, and all His blessed words against the love of riches, and yet go on loving money till it cast out all other love. And I thought of Jesus and His great sacrifice of Himself, and His dying upon the cross, and how all this had been cast aside, and counted as nothing by the side of gold. He had known it all; once he professed to believe it all. He had put Christ and his own soul into the balance with money; and he had chosen money! "And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy; and they were forgotten in the place where they had so done."

I was very sorrowful that evening; but Rebecca was more lively, and inclined to talk more than she had done while the corpse was in the house. She was restless, too, and made herself busy about the kitchen, doing first this thing and then that, for the mere sake of moving about, and keeping her face away from me.

"I suppose the will won't be read till the heir comes back," she said to me from the far end of the kitchen.

"There is no will," I answered; "for Mr. Saunders had told me for certain, as we drove home from the burial, that there could not have been one made.

"No will!" she repeated, coming swiftly across the floor, and looking down upon me with eyes all aflame, "no will!"

"No," I said; "Mr. Saunders says he's searched everywhere, and there isn't one."

'But how shall I get my thousand pounds?" she cried, in a shrill voice.

There it cropped up again—that terrible love of money, which had destroyed our poor old master, body and soul. It was almost as though I saw some devil glaring at me through her eyes. I got up from my chair, and stood opposite to her, trembling like a leaf.

"My poor lass!" I said, for she would be as poor as I now, "God is too good to you to let you have the money you've sold yourself for. He'll give you something better than that. He has given you His own Son, who for our sakes became poor, though He was very rich, that we through His poverty should become rich."

My voice was choked and unsteady; but I felt as though God gave me the words to speak. Rebecca stood staring at me for a minute, as if she did not fairly hear me; and then she flung her apron over her face, and sank down in my chair, and broke out into a passion and a fit of sobs and crying.

"Poor Robin!" I said, after a while, "if you had the thousand pounds, it 'ud be the price of his soul."

"Ay!" she sobbed, "it would. I've been the ruin of him. I'm a wicked woman, and very foolish, Alice Transome. Tell me what I can do now."

So, in the firelight, I told her as well as I could, of what our blessed Lord and Saviour did to prove His love to every one of us, and to teach us how little count He set upon what we are apt to prize most. He never cared for money; what He looked for was love. She listened and listened, sobbing now and then, and catching her breath so as not to lose what I was saying about Him. And I spoke also to her about Transome and me, how we had lived together forty years, learning more and more about God's ways, until we came to know that we were nothing, no more than helpless little babes in His hand, but that He was all, Master, King, Father. And I began to say how it might have been the same with her and Robin; but there she cried out as if my words wounded her sorely.

"If I could but have my time over again!" she said.

But not one of us can have our time over again. I thought of Transome, and our early days; and how if those could come again I would take care so that he should not have to die in the poor-house. No, no. Only one moment at a time belongs to us; and we have no more power over yesterday than over to-morrow.

Thank God, Philip reached us before Robin's trial came on. I was so rejoiced to see his face that I was ready to say, "Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace." Yes; peace came back with him. I went home to my own cottage, and lighted a fire on my own hearth; and sat in my own chimney-nook again. Philip was close at hand; and no more charge or anxiety rested upon me.

Yet when the time came, I was obliged to go to Lancaster Assizes, and appear before the judge, and bear witness against the prisoners who stood for trial before him at the dreadful bar. Rebecca was forced to be there too. It was not a very long trial, so they told us afterwards; but to her and me it seemed as if it would never, never be ended. We sat together in a little room, not far from the great hall where the trial was going on, hearkening for some one to come with news. At last Philip opened the door just as the daylight was growing dim, and we could not clearly see his face. He sat down on the bench beside Rebecca, and put his hand kindly upon hers.

"Rebecca," he said, in that voice of his which always seemed to go straight to one's heart, "it is a heavy sentence."

"Tell me;" and she whispered, in a hoarse tone.

"Remember," he went on, "that my uncle's death was caused by their crime; and that Robin has been in prison for theft before, five years, for stealing a letter with money in it. Now he is sentenced to transportation for fifteen years."

"It was me that did it," she said again, in the same loud whisper, and she burst into uncontrollable weeping.

"Yes!" Philip answered, for he knew all about it, "yes! in one sense, you did it. You loved money more than you loved him. If men and women were only true to one another, faithful to one another, whom they have seen, they would be more faithful to God, whom they have not seen."

"What can I do?" she asked, "what can I do? There is no way now that I can make it up to him. And I do love him, spite of all; I do, indeed."

But there did not seem to be anything she could do for Robin. Philip found out for her that he was to be transported to some place in Australia, where there was a convict settlement for prisoners with long sentences like his. By his influence he got an order for Rebecca and me to visit him before he went away; though we were only allowed to see and speak to him through a double grating, with a warder standing by, who could hear all we said.

(To be Continued.)

THE TEN VIRGINS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for April 22. Matt. 25: 1-13. Golden Text, Matt. 25: 10.

Why the Second Advent is to be Longed for—The Utilitarian Conception of Religion—Who will Go Forth to Meet the Bridegroom—What They Leave—Their Vocation—The Slumber of the Church—The Recent Awakening—The Division Among the Virgins—The Long-Expected Cry—The Five Exhausted Lamps—The Essential Oil—Varieties of Lamps—No One Possessing Surplus Oil—A Lesson for Sinners and Unsanctified Believers—Fatal Procrastination.

"THEN." This word connects this parable of the ten virgins with the preceding chapter. "Then," when the signs of the Lord's coming begin to appear, "shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." Some will say, If His word is true, Lo, I am with you alway;" if He dwells in our hearts by faith and is never a moment absent from us—why should we think so much about His second coming? The same objection might have been urged about the first coming of Christ. Souls were saved and sins forgiven before He came, but O how dark were the gleams of light which then visited man, compared to the very presence, the very words and deeds of Jesus, as He walked in person upon earth! The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, and represented in every sacrifice, was not understood as was Jesus, "who His own self bore our sins in His own body on the tree" (1 Pet. 2: 24)—the God-man victim. And though our hearts rejoice to rest in the glorious fact that He dwells with us and in us, yet how transcendently glorious will be the moment when we shall see Him as He is in all His glory, King of kings and Lord of lords, manifested to the eyes of all!

The general idea of religion is A Kind of Utilitarianism.

Apart from God, men cannot be saved, and so they make use of Jesus to save their souls from everlasting destruction, and there they stop, many of them, and go no further. There are others who, being saved, ask God to make use of them. This is a step higher, and this is an instinct to every one who is really saved, really "a new creature" in Christ Jesus, with whom "old things are passed away; behold all things are become new." (II Cor. 5: 17). But this also savors of Utilitarianism. But there are some who, while quite as ready to serve as any, are far more taken up with God than with His service; the thought of their own devotedness is abhorrent to them; they hold Jesus in such esteem that to do anything for Him is only too great a privilege, and it brings its own reward with it. It is these who shall go "forth to meet the Bridegroom"—not only go forth from sin, but forth from self, from worldly conventionalities, from everything else, to Jesus. Their hearts are not set on the reward they shall obtain, nor the honors they shall have when Jesus comes. They say with Mephibosbeth, "Yea, let [others] take all, for as much as my Lord the king is come again in peace unto His own house" (II Sam. 19: 30). Yet even of these which go forth—virgin souls, set apart for the bridegroom—five are "wise," and five are "foolish." Every virgin went forth with a lamp, those who are most absorbed with God, and are in communion with Him, are more noticeable for the light of Christ which they shed upon the world than for any remarkable talents or wonderful works which they do. They shine, they are "the light of the world," men take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus; when hypocrisy, false doctrine, heresy, and indifference rend the Church of Christ, the light shines on unhindered. To shine is

Their Vocation!

They go forth, the Bridegroom before them, and all else behind them. In the early Church, the going forth to meet the coming Bridegroom was such that Paul had to write to the Thessalonians, "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together with Him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. . . For that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition" (II Thes. 2: 1-3). Thus the Bridegroom has tarried, and all the virgins have "slumbered and slept." The earnest expectation of the early Church that Christ was coming faded away, and few, even of the most devoted of God's children spoke of His coming during the Middle Ages. But for more than half a century, God has been waking up His children, and through literature and Bible readings, a large number have been aroused to believe in the coming of the Bridegroom, if not to go forth and meet him. Perhaps only one of these witnesses has given his life to warn the unconverted of the fearful judgments which accompany the revelation of "the man of sin," and "the coming of the Lord." God bless his testimony!

The virgins are not all alike, although they appear so. There were wise and foolish amongst them. All of them had lamps, which were easily lit, and all, for the moment, gave light. "At midnight there was a cry made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him." It was the long-expected sound, the culmination of all their hearts' desires. No more sleep, no more slumber. He was at the doors. With beating hearts and trembling hands they trimmed their lamps, and one by one the little lights began to shine. But now came the testing time—some of the lamps, which had flickered for a moment, until the heat had attracted a supply of oil into the wick, began to burn with a steady and increasing brilliancy. Others which burned with a brillant light for a moment, suddenly collapsed, smoldered for a moment, and went out.

What Was The Matter?

The lamps were all right, but they had taken no oil; there was nothing to feed the light. It was the last moment, the procession was starting: in despair, they cried to the virgins who held their burning lamps aloft, "Give us of your oil, for our lamps are going out" (margin). But the wise answered, saying: "Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves." How many there are who attempt to keep up the light and the life of God without the Holy Ghost. God has blest them in a meeting, and used them in winning souls; the fire has been kindled, but there is no fuel, and the fire dies out. They preach still, but the words fall powerless; they pray still, but the prayer of earthly manufacture is like a balloon without its gas; it will not rise. They testify, but the testimony is stale, these are cold, lifeless ashes instead of fire; there is no heat to warm, nor light to cheer. In order to have the light of God burning in our own souls, we need to give the Holy Ghost full access to all parts of our being. If the oil is there, the lamp will burn. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." There are many who are most particular about the kind of lamp they have. Some prefer an Episcopal Church lamp, some a Methodist lamp, some a Presbyterian lamp, some a Baptist lamp, some a Congregational lamp, some will only have a mission lamp. But with all is to get the oil supply—without it all is a failure. But the wise virgins have no surplus oil to bestow upon others. "Go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves." Alas, it was too late! They had slept unprepared. While the wise virgins had lamp and oil ready to their hands, the unwise had procrastinated, and, at the same time, had formed a most erroneous opinion of what was essential: they put the lamp first, the light last. O, how many are doing this! They put their denomination, or, may be, their talents or their efforts first, and strange to say, God the Holy Ghost last. They think that any moment they may run for the oil. But it was an unaccustomed journey for the foolish virgins; they had never been that way before. While they went in search of oil, "the Bridegroom came; and they who were ready went in with Him to the marriage, and the door was shut." Never, throughout an endless eternity, would the foolish virgins be called again to the marriage of the Lamb..

The Great Matter

Whether we have here a lesson to believers to live yielded up to the Holy Ghost continually after having once been filled with the Spirit, or to the sinner, who will find himself shut out from God for ever and ever, if he is not found ready, the lesson is equally solemn. There may be some true children of God who yet have not so received the Holy Ghost as to be burning and shining lights.

O, Why Delay?

Jesus says, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," (John 20: 22.) The coming of the Bridegroom will be a testing time; He sits as a Refiner and Purifier of silver; He tests the metal, searches the hearts, and tries the reins of the children of men. No unreality can live in His presence. His presence will show which are the manufactured and which are the Holy Ghost prayers. His presence will discover which messages come direct from God through the speaker, and which were made discourses. He will find out every unreal profession, every untrue sentiment, everything which savors of hypocrisy.

"The door was shut." The virgins who were too late to join their companions went to buy oil, and they obtained what they went for; their lamps were now as brilliant as the others, but it was too late, they had lost their chance. They were virgins, they had left all for the Bridegroom, but when they knocked at the door, He said to them, "I know you not." We can only know Jesus by the Holy Ghost. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost;" but has it ever dawned upon us that Jesus will not know us but by the Holy Ghost dwelling in us? that the point of contact between us and Jesus is the Holy Ghost indwelling? "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." It is said of the Queen of England that she never keeps anybody waiting. Many people make a habit of being late for every engagement. Do they consider that this habit of procrastination, if indulged in, may cost them their part at the marriage supper of the Lamb? Procrastination is a selfish habit, but it is a guilty one, too. We have no more right to steal a person's time than we have to steal his money. But, if we should sin against our own souls by this thing! Let us accept the "unction from the Holy One" (1 John 2: 20), and live yielded up to God moment by moment, that when the cry goes forth, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," there may be no rush for oil at the last, but we may have nothing else to do but to enter into the joy of our Lord.

O, How Awful,

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

THE GREAT REFINER.

"And He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver."—MAL. iii. 3.

'Tis sweet to feel that he who tries
The silver, takes his seat
Beside the fire that purifies,
Lest too intense a heat—
Raised to consume the base alloy,
The precious metals, too, destroy.

'Tis good to think how well He knows
The silver's power to bear
The ordeal to which it goes;
And that with skill and care
He'll take it from the fire, when fit,
With His own hand to polish it.

'Tis blessedness to know that He
The piece He has begun,
Will not forsake till He can see—
To prove the work well done—
An image by its brightness known,
The perfect likeness of His own.

But ah! how much of earthly mould,
Dark relics of the mine,
Lost from the ore, must He behold—
How long must He refine,
Ere in the silver He can trace
The first faint semblance of His face?

Thou great Refiner! sit Thou by Thy promise to fulfil;
Moved by Thy hand, beneath Thine eye,
And melted at Thy will,
O may Thy work forever shine
Reflecting beauty pure as Thine.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

In every community there are a number of men whose whole time is not occupied, such as teachers, ministers, farmers' sons, and others. To these classes especially we would say, if you wish to make several hundred dollars during the next few months, write at once to B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, Va., and they will show you how to do it.

Office of THE WORLD MANUFACTURING CO., Manufacturers of STANDARD HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES,
122 NASSAU ST., NEW YORK, March 30, 1888.

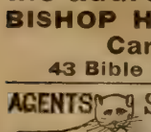
Mr. J. E. Jewett, Advertising Manager CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Dear Sir—We keep a daily record of all letters which mention the papers in which are advertisements are seen, and in looking over our record we are so well pleased with the results from the CHRISTIAN HERALD that we send you the following unsolicited testimonial: From our advertisement in your paper of Jan. 12 we we have already received 272 orders that mention the CHRISTIAN HERALD, and as not one-half the letters received mention any paper, we credit over 500 orders to the CHRISTIAN HERALD alone, which is more than double for the money invested than from any other medium in which we are advertising and more than five times from any Religious Paper we have used. You are at liberty to use the above in any way you see fit. We still want a few more Agents for the New American Roller Organ and send you electro herewith for insertion in next issue. Respectfully WORLD M'F'G CO.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.



AGENTS Send for E. B. TREAT'S new books, including MOTHER, HOME, and HEAVEN, prose and poetry; by 400 best authors 146,000 sold. Elegantly ill., $1.75. Send for outfit. Also 5000 Curiosities of the Bible. $2.00. By mail. E. B. TREAT, 757 Broadway, N. Y.

LIGHTS and SHADOWS

"Work in China" is the best Missionary Magazine on subjects connected with China, giving the discouraging as well as hopeful aspects of the work. Should be in every Christian family. Only One Dollar per annum. Address

REV. J. M. W. FARNHAM, Shanghai, China.

$100 to $300 A MONTH can be made working for us. Agents preferred who can furnish their own horses and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & Co., Publishers, 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

LACTATED FOOD

For Young Infants a perfect substitute for mother's milk, often saving life; for the Invalid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great value. Thousands who have used it say it is the

FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD.

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infants and Invalids sent on application.

Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, VT.

(33 Colors.) DIAMOND DYES

are the Purest, Cheapest, Strongest, and most Durable Dyes ever made. One 10c. package will color 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, Rags etc. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Fancy Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bronzing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instructions and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Druggists.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON, VT

A SPECIAL OFFER

To the Readers of the Christian Herald.

I have made a special arrangement with one of the best Life Insurance Societies of New York City by which I am enabled to offer to all the male readers of this paper, between the ages of 18 and 60 (in good health) and whose occupation is not hazardous

A Life Insurance Policy
Free of Charge,

provided that application is made to me within thirty days from this date. Circulars giving full particulars will be sent on application.

J. E. JEWETT,
APRIL 12, 1888. 77 Bible House, New York.

WEBSTER

3000 more Words and nearly 2000 more Illustrations than any other American Dictionary.

WEBSTER IS THE STANDARD

Authority in the Gov't Printing Office, and with the U. S. Supreme Court. It is recommended by the State Sup'ts of Schools in 36 States, and by leading College Pres'ts of U. S. and Canada.

It is an invaluable companion in every School and at every Fireside.

Sold by all Booksellers. Pamphlet free.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

D. L. Moody at Home.

HIS HOME AND HOME WORK. [illegible] description of the educational inst[illegible] at Northfield, Mass., together [illegible] of the various noted gatherings [illegible] at that place, and the most [illegible] lectures and the best the[illegible] adding, also, many hel[illegible] points.

"The public is una[illegible] enormous investments at Nort[illegible] him abundant interest long [illegible] heaven.—N. Y. Evangelist."

"There is not [illegible] of this remarkable man more [illegible] history of these establishmen[illegible] —N. Y. Independent.

Eight illu[illegible] 288 pages; 12 mo, fine cloth, $[illegible] paper cover edition 50cts.

*.*Sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

GALVANIZED WIRE NETTING.

BEST AND CHEAPEST FENCE IN THE MARKET FOR POULTRY, GARDEN OR LAWN.
IN BALES, 150 FEET LONG.

4 FEET HIGH, ONLY..... $4 50 PER BALE.
5 FEET HIGH, ONLY..... 5 63 PER BALE.
6 FEET HIGH, ONLY..... 6 75 PER BALE.

Address orders and correspondence to U. S. WIRE NETTING CO., 62 Reade St., New York.

The Gospel of Healing.

By Rev. A. B. Simpson.

NEW EDITION, GREATLY ENLARGED.

This little volume has passed through several editions and been widely circulated, both in Europe and America. It has been regarded for many years as one of the most compact, simple and satisfactory manuals on this important subject and God has put His seal upon it, and blessed it to thousands. The present edition is greatly enlarged, containing several new chapters by the author including his personal testimony not published before. Price unchanged. Paper 25 cents; cloth 50 cents. Address

WORD, WORK AND WORLD PUBLISHING CO.,
45th Street and Madison Ave., New York

The New American ROLLER ORGA is operated similar to the finest French Music Boxe PLAYS 260 TUNES, from a waltz to a hymn perfect tune and time. Gives better satisfactio A HUNDRED DOLLAR PARLOR OR and ten times more pleasure This Organ is the r tion of musical instruments and the grandest and marvellous instrument ever introduced to the public. It plays SACRED MUS MARCHES WALTZES, POLKAS, J Reels, Opera Selections, Popular Songs, Church, in well as any organ Nothing grander, or combining so features can be found in French or Swiss Music B [illegible] free. WE WANT A SPECIAL AGE EITHER SEX, IN EVERY LOCALITY. OFFER SUCH INDUCEMENTS THAT EA EST WORKERS CANNOT FAIL TO M $100 TO $300 PER MONTH. When you r sample Instrument Price Only Six Dol in BEAUTIFULLY CARVED CASES with t get Special Terms. If you want it sent C O D, send $2.50 when you orde

Send for one. It will fill you with astonishment and delight. If you want it sent C O D, send $2.50 when you order pay balance $3.50 when you get the organ. Send P.O. order Registered Letter or by Express. Address WORLD M'F'G CO. 122 Nassau Street, New Y

A New, Enlarged and Authorized Edition
OF
A Remarkable Work.

The Christian's Secret
OF
A Happy Life.

By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH.

BAPTIST COMMENDATION.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

METHODIST WORD OF PRAISE.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

PRESBYTERIAN ENDORSEMENT.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God,' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

CONGREGATIONAL COMMENT.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

UNITED BRETHREN'S APPROVAL.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

This enlarged edition which contains three additional chapters, is in a beautiful large 12mo. volume of 278 pages.

Cheap paper cover edition, - - - - - - 50
Price, in cloth, richly stamped, gilt side - - - 75
Presentation edition, gilt edges, - - - - 1 00

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address

G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

SILKS and VELVE

JAMES McCREERY & C

Invite attention to a Spe Showing they will make week of High Novelties Dress Silks. The most mod and approved Weaves shown in the Oriental and tique Classic Shadings that now so essential for fash able Costumes. Exclusive St in Rich Novelties where c bination costumes are desi

They will also offer 24, and 28-inch Black Dress vets at $1 50, $2, and $ per yard; the previous p has been $2, $3, and $4.

Orders by mail promptly cuted.

JAMES McCREERY & C

Broadway and 11th St.,

NEW YORK.

THE DINGEE & CONARD C LEADING SPECIALTIES.

ROSES

ALL VARIETIES, SIZES AND PR
FINE EVER-BLOOMING PERPETU
CLIMBING AND MOSS ROSES
NEW AND RARE FLOWER SEE
HARDY PLANTS, New Moon Flower, Clemat Bulbs, JAPAN LILIES, New Chrysanthemum Wonderful ORNAMENTAL VECETA
Everything sent safely by mail or express to We offer Choice NEW THINGS and STE NOVELTIES in all departments. Our NEW 100 pp., elegantly illustrated, describes over 1500 NE and CHOICEST Varieties of ROSES, S PLANTS and BULBS, and tells how to g Free. If you wish to plant anything, se 20 Years Established. Over 60 Large Gr
THE DINCEE & CONARD CO
ROSE GROWERS. WEST GROVE. Chester

UNIVERSITY ORGA They Lead the World.—$35 to Sold Direct to Families. No Mid Solid Walnut 5-Octaves-Double C Guaranteed for Six Years and sent with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOU OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTA 1859. MARCHAL & SMIT 115 East 21st Street, New

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 16. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE REV. WILLIAM G. SCHAUFFLER, D. D.

JEALOUSY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE KEY TO ALL THE PROPHECIES. By George H. Pember, M. A.

Gems from New Books: The Roman Punishment—The King's Thread—The Parson Converted—A Son Puzzled, etc.

THE RENT VEIL. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

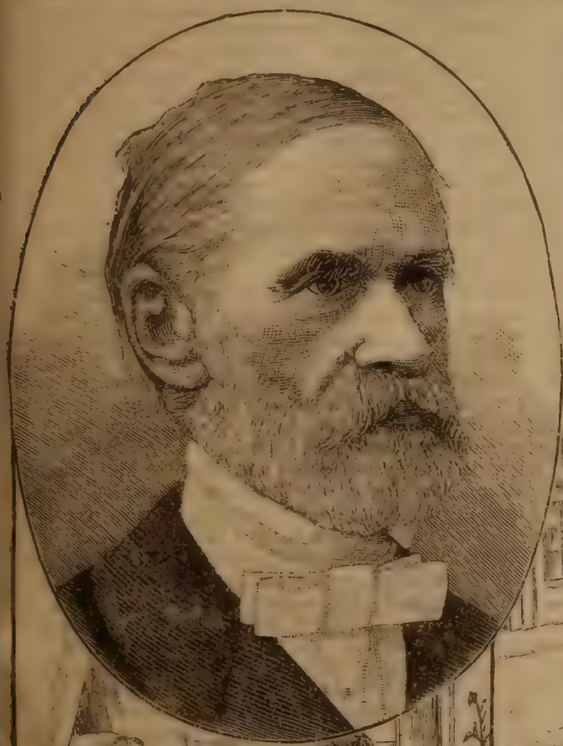
A Divorce Averted—Blood Poisoning Cured—An Anxious Night in Africa Real Estate in Palestine—A Wail in Babylon—A Midnight Interview on the Elevated Railroad.

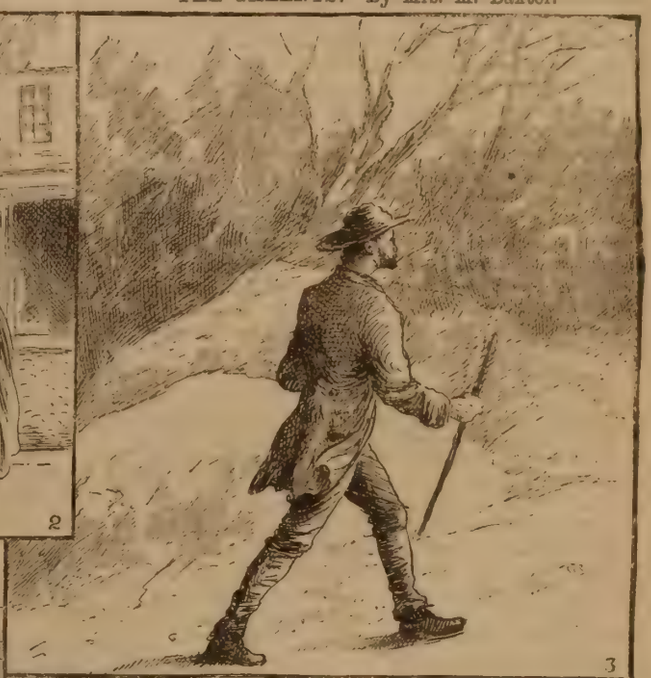
PICTURE OF THE WEDDING OF PRINCE OSCAR, OF SWEDEN, TO MISS MUNCK.

A STREET SCENE IN CAIRO, EGYPT. (With Illustration.)

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL. (Continued.)

THE TALENTS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.





The Late Rev. William G. Schauffler, D. D., Forty-nine Years a Missionary in the Orient—Scenes in his Life.

WILLIAM G. SCHAUFFLER, D. D.

Forty-nine Years a Missionary in the Orient.

Birth in Germany in 1798—Removal to Russia—A Critical Illness—A Blind Instructress—An Evangelical Roman Catholic Priest—Conversion Under his Preaching—A Journey of Relief—In Peril of Wolves and Robbers—Meeting With Dr. Wolff—Fog Lifted in Answer to Prayer—Journey to America—Welcome at Andover—Marvellous Linguistic Achievements—Ordination—Visit to Paris—Arrival in Constantinople—Marriage—A Remarkable Escape From Drowning—Translation of the Bible—A Rescue From a Harem—Return to America—Death in 1883.

A WORK of a deeply interesting character* has just been published, containing the record of well-nigh half a century of arduous and successful missionary labor in eastern Europe. It is a simple statement, in which there is not a trace of self-glorification, yet the reader is astonished, not only by the character and quantity of the work accomplished, but by the strong faith and complete self-devotion of the man who was enabled to perform it. As the study of such a life cannot fail to be both interesting and suggestive, we this week give, with his portrait, a brief sketch of Dr. Schauffler's work, compiled from his autobiography.

William G. Schauffler was born in Stuttgart, Germany, August 22, 1798, and died in New York on January 26, 1883, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. In 1804, his father removed to Odessa, in Russia, his trade as a wood-turner having a better prospect of success in that town. He had three children besides William, and the journey was a long and toilsome one. In Odessa the future missionary received his early education in a school, taught by his father's clerk, in the sheriff's office. Though his father and mother were not at that time pious, they were a model of morality, and very careful to show outward respect for religion. Prayers were read in the household every morning, and while there was no divine service in Odessa, a sermon was read on the Sunday; but of conversion to Christ no one in the family, or in the city, seemed to know anything.

A Serious Illness

came upon the boy when he was seven years old, and his nurse, a German neighbor, calmly told him that he would surely die. He was naturally startled (See illustration on first page, No. 1), but as at that time he had learned nothing of his condition as a sinner, but, only in general terms, of Christ being the Saviour of the world, he was not greatly concerned, as he thought he would go to heaven where he would be happier than in this world. He recovered, however, and the easy assurance which had comforted him in his sickness was soon disturbed. In mingling with the street boys, quarrelling with his playmates, and disobeying his parents, he recognized a degree of sinfulness, which rendered him uneasy about his eternal destiny.

A Blind Woman

appears to have been his first religious instructor. She belonged to a band of pilgrims who, under a mistaken interpretation of prophecy, quitted their homes and passed through Odessa on their way to the Caucasus. Her husband died on the way, and the pilgrims left her behind, in Odessa. The boy's mother formed the acquaintance of the blind woman, through the latter selling off her books and some small articles of property for her support. Mrs. Schauffler bought from her a copy of Bogatzky's "Golden Treasury," and that the boy read with interest. The blind woman was invited to visit the Schauffler home, and William, being the youngest of the family, used to be sent to fetch her, and guide her back to her home. (See Illustration No. 2.) During those walks she would talk earnestly to him about his soul, but without imparting any light that he could use.

An Evangelical Catholic Priest, named Lindl, was ultimately the agent used of God for the lad's conversion. He arrived in Odessa, from Bavaria, where his evangelical preaching had brought him into trouble with his ecclesiastical superiors, and with the Government. The Emperor of Russia having heard of him, and learned that he was imprisoned, used his influence to obtain his release, and invited him to Russia. Mr. Lindl rented a house in the same street as the Schauffler family, and William soon made his acquaintance, and went to hear him preach. "I remember," he says, "neither text nor subject; I only remember that it swept away, in the first part, all worthiness and claim of the sinner, and in the second part it opened wide the door of free grace in Christ." Mr. Lindl was soon called away from Odessa to Sarata, a village at some distance, but the good work was continued.

A Perilous Journey

was taken by the young man shortly after his conversion, which was a labor of love and gratitude. Mr. Lindl was as much hated by the Catholic priests and bishops of Russia as he had been by those of Bavaria. They were prevented molesting him by the knowledge that he enjoyed the esteem and friendship of the Czar, but they did all they could to prevent him receiving support from the people. On one occasion, being in sore straits for money, Mr. Lindl sent an appeal to St. Petersburg, which elicited a prompt response. A large sum of money, in gold, was sent for him to Odessa, but there were no means of sending it forward to its destination. The road was a long and dreary one. It was infested with wolves and robbers, and beyond the Dneister, which was the greater part of the journey, it degenerated into mere bog and morass, the only safe footing being on certain hillocks covering the bones of ancient Moldavian chiefs. The journey was one from which all shrank. Young Schauffler, however, volunteered to carry the money to his friend and teacher. Fastening the gold in a girdle around his waist, and commending himself to God, he set out briskly (See Illustration, No. 3) to meet the wolves, or robbers, or whatever other dangers might await him. "My arrival," he says, "was as an angel's visit to Mr. Lindl and his people, who were even then at prayer."

Desires for Christian Work

began to rise in the young man's mind immediately on his conversion. At one time he thought of hiring himself out as a shepherd, in order to reach the shepherds of Moldavia and Bessarabia, who were notorious for their ignorance; at another he contemplated becoming a servant among the Tartars; but in each case he was shown by Divine guidance that his way was not there. At length, in 1825, Joseph Wolff, the eminent missionary, visited Odessa, and young Schauffler went to hear him; and, making his acquaintance, became his guide around the neighborhood. Dr. Wolff learned the desires of his young companion, and set himself to the work of furthering them. By this time, owing doubtless to the influence of William Schauffler's consistent Christian life, a change had come in his home: one sister and his elder brother were converted, and his aged mother was prepared to give up her youngest boy to Christ's service. Dr. Wolff found little difficulty in the family in arranging for the departure. The plan was for the two to go together to Palestine, where Mr. Schauffler was to labor among Mohammedans, and Dr. Wolff among Jews.

On February 8, 1826, after an affectionate farewell to his family, he accompanied Wolff bound for Constantinople. The wind being favorable, the passage across the Black Sea was made in less than the usual time, but on approaching land the fog became dense. The captain became alarmed, and in conversation with Dr. Wolff and Mr. Schauffler, admitted that there was serious danger of running aground. "If, with this wind aft, we do not make the Bosphorous," he said, "we shall fare badly." "Come, captain," said Dr. Wolff, "let us ask Divine direction." The captain said he should be glad to have his passengers pray, but he must be on duty, looking out for the channel. It was about noon, and the two missionaries joined in prayer for guidance. In a short time they went on deck, and were told by the captain that just at twelve o'clock the fog lifted and showed them the mouth of the Bosphorous. "We are running right ahead for it," he said, "and now, gentlemen, if you will give thanks to God for this deliverance, I shall be happy to join you." No second suggestion was needed; the three knelt on the ship's deck and gave hearty thanks (See Illustration, No. 4).

On Board a Ship

Comes to America.

Dr. Wolff decided on spending some time in Constantinople, and, accordingly, arrangements were made for Mr. Schauffler commencing at once the study of Turkish. He was an adept in the art of learning languages, and had already acquired French, Italian, and English, before leaving Odessa, having exchanged lessons with travellers of those nationalities who had visited Odessa. German and Russian he knew of course, as the former was the language of his native land, and the other of his adopted country. He had also commenced the study of Latin and Greek, in which he afterward became proficient. Before attaining middle life, he could preach fluently in six languages, and could read and understand twenty-six. He studied earnestly while in the Turkish capital, and continued the work, when, owing to a change in Dr. Wolff's plans, they removed to Smyrna. There Dr. Wolff finally decided to abandon his Palestine project for that time and return to England. He advised Mr. Schauffler to go to America for the needful preparation for missionary work; and, giving him letters of introduction to Mr. Evarts, then secretary of the Board of Commissioners, and to other prominent persons, saw him safely on board a vessel bound for Boston, Mass. Mr. Schauffler says that when he landed at that port on September 7, 1826, after a voyage of four months, he had but one dollar in his pocket.

By the advice of Mr. Evarts the young traveller went to Andover, where he was kindly received by both professors and students. For some months Mr. Schauffler supported himself by turning bed-posts for a wood-turner in the village, that being the best work available; but at length a student in the senior class, who knew his worth, returning from a visit to Boston, brought him the welcome intelligence that the Ladies' Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews would defray his expenses for three months. He then gladly relinquished the production of bed-posts and gave his whole time to study, working regularly at his books sixteen hours a day, to the amazement of the professors and students, who did not know the capacity of his iron constitution. During his five years residence at Andover he acquired Arabic, Chaldee, Syriac, Samaritan, Persian, and Spanish, with a fair knowledge of Ethiopic and Coptic. At the conclusion of his Andover course Mr. Schauffler was ordained a in Turkey, in a solemn service at Park Street Church, Boston, on November 14, 1831. The Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions had invited him, without his application, to enter their service, and suggested to him that he should stay in Paris on his way to his field of labor, to attend lectures on Arabic and Turkish. As his knowledge of those languages was all self taught he gladly accepted the suggestion, and spent three months in the French capital under the best teachers in Europe. On April 9, 1832, he quitted the brilliant city to commence his life's labors, praying earnestly, as he recommends every Christian traveller to do, for the salvation of its Godless inhabitants. From Paris to Strasbourg he made the journey by diligence, thence crossing the Rhine to Kehl, and so to his native town of Stuttgart. He preached there, and thence, accompanied a part of the way by several missionary companions, he travelled on to Odessa, where he had the happiness of seeing his aged mother and brother and sisters. On the following Sabbath he preached in the Lutheran church to an overflowing congregation, people having come from all the villages around to hear their old friend. After a very brief stay among them he set out for Constantinople.

Missionary to the Jews

*The Autobiography of William G. Schauffler. Edited by his Sons. Pp. 258; Price $1.25. Published by Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., 38 West Twenty-third Street, New York.

Very arduous and discouraging was the work among the Jews of that city, but Mr. Schauffler labored earnestly, with his heart strong in faith. After some time, business of the Society required him to visit Smyrna, and there he met, earnestly and devotedly laboring in missionary work, Miss Mary Reynolds, the lady who afterward became his loving wife and valued fellow-worker. He returned to Constantinople, and after prayer and consideration wrote her an offer of marriage, which she accepted. Shortly afterward they were married, and together engaged in the work at Constantinople.

An Escape from Drowning

was an incident which occurred about a year and a half after the marriage. The providential rescue made a deep impression upon them, for so dire was the danger, that death to the whole party seemed inevitable. Mr. and Mrs. Schauffler had remained in Constantinople during the ravages of the Plague, ministering to the sick and continuing their mission work until rest and change became absolutely necessary. It was decided that they should go to Odessa for recuperation. Accordingly the missionary and his wife and child, with a nurse and a lady friend, went to the shore to go on board the Russian steamer, to which they were to be taken in a caique, or row-boat. The nurse, who stepped into the caique after the ladies, being unaware of the frail character of the boat, stepped aside and heavily. Instantly the boat tipped, throwing out all who were in it, and Mr. Schauffler, who had his foot on the edge, steadying it. They sank in twenty feet of water, but happily Mr. Schauffler was able to rescue his wife and her companion; and the nurse, bravely holding on to the babe, supported herself by clinging to one of the posts of the jetty, until he could go to her assistance. Thus in God's mercy, all were saved. (See Illustration No. 4.)

Arrived in Odessa, they found a great revival work commenced, in which they were delighted to assist. Health of body was recovered by both while engaging in this congenial work, which refreshed and invigorated their souls. Their friends begged them to remain through the winter, as there had been a fresh outbreak of the Plague at Constantinople, but this Mr. Schauffler and his wife regarded rather as a reason for their return; and though death in all human probability awaited them, they went back. The trying scenes through which they passed it is impossible to describe here. One after another of their household attendants was seized with the sickness and died. A dear friend and fellow-worker lay at the point of death, but still the brave missionary and his wife continued at their post, faithful and devoted in their labor and mercifully preserved from the scourge until the time of trial had passed.

The Triumph of His Life,

by which Dr. Schauffler became known the world over, was commenced shortly after his return from his Odessa visit. It was the translation of the Bible into Hebrew-Spanish. He labored unceasingly on this work, and at length was privileged to complete it. His success was so remarkable that the chief Rabbi, to whom a copy was presented, spoke of it in the highest praise, and it is still the standard work used by both English and American missionaries in Jewish work. It was printed in Vienna, Dr. Schauffler superintending the operation. While residing in that city he held evangelistic services, which brought him under the ban of the police. The services were summarily closed, but Dr. Schauffler escaped imprisonment, and before leaving he was admitted to an audience with the emperor, who graciously accepted a copy of the Bible, and expressed the hope that it would prove beneficial to the people. The fame of this work brought Dr. Schauffler prominently into the notice of the Bible Societies; and when the American Board decided to transfer the Jewish work he entered the employ of the American Bible Society and the British and Foreign Bible Society, and under their auspices translated the New Testament into Turkish.

It would be impossible even to summarize the work of the forty-nine years which Dr. Schauffler spent in labor for Christ in Constantinople, Vienna, Odessa, and other cities. Perils from the Plague, from fanatical priests and Mohammedans, from Jewish Rabbis, and in conflicts with the Turkish officials, would have worn out any ordinary man; but he was supported by an unwavering faith which carried him triumphantly through all.

A Rescue From a Harem,

which he undertook and effected, will show the indomitable character of the man, and how ready he was to engage in any good work, though it might lie outside his legitimate sphere. Word reached him in Constantinople that an attack had been made by Mohammedans, aided by Persian troops, on a village near the Russian frontier and that a German named Meyer, with his wife and child, had been carried into captivity. The man succeeded in making his escape in the night, carrying his child with him, but his wife was too closely guarded, and it was believed that she had been sold as a slave in Constantinople. Dr. Schauffler determined to find her. He earnestly prayed for direction, and then set out on a tour of the city, which must have seemed hopeless in such a place. In almost the first street he searched he heard of a man who had a German woman in his harem. He went to his house and demanded an interview with the woman. The Turk refused to let him see her, but allowed an interview to take place, a curtain being hung between Dr. Schauffler and the woman, while he jealously watched (See Illustration No. 5.) She was not the woman he sought, and she had no desire for deliverance, but she gave Dr. Schauffler a clue to where Mrs. Meyer might be found. He went there, and, aided by the Russian Minister, succeeded in liberating her and restoring her to her husband.

The simple, modest record of Dr. Schauffler's life contained in his autobiography is so full of thrilling incidents that it is difficult to realize their having been compressed into one life. To that volume we must refer our readers for the record of a grand career of noble self-sacrifice. He did not quit the scene of his labors until 1874, when he was seventy-six years of age. Then he, with his devoted wife, returned to America to spend the remainder of their lives with their sons. Dr. Schauffler continued to preach in the home churches and to stimulate the interest of the Christian public in the work to which he had given his life until 1883, when he peacefully fell asleep in Jesus.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Stone in the Courtyard.—A Worker relates that "A few years ago a servant of Christ went into a castle courtyard in the north of England, and saw there a large stone, upon which were engraved the words, 'Turn me over and I will tell you the truth.' He thought he would see what the stone had to tell. So he put out his strength to the utmost, and found on the other side was cut the sentence, 'Kindly actions never die,' and beneath this, 'Turn me over again.' So the man went on his way, feeling he had learned a lesson worth remembering. For Christ's sake go forth and do what you can; where you expect least, you may sometimes find the greatest blessing; and whether you see it or not, the kind action shall never die. The kindest action ever done was Christ dying to save man. 'Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.'"

A Publican's Conversion to God.—"Some years ago, I was conducting evangelistic services in Hartlepool. They were held in a theatre, and two of the most regular attendants of the meeting were the little daughters of a publican of that town. They were invariably accommodated with a seat beside the singers, and one night their hearts were touched with the love of Jesus, and they gave themselves to Him. Next morning, as they were sitting down to breakfast, one of them said to her father, 'Papa, why do you not ask a blessing from God?' The man did not answer, but afterwards he told a friend that the thought that his child had never seen him ask a blessing went deep into his heart. She had often heard him swear, but never thank God. She had often seen him stagger in drink, but never bend the knee to the Most High God; and there and then, he resolved that he would leave his old life, come to Christ, sell out from the whisky trade, and live for the God whom he had so long neglected, and he speedily did so. What a wonderful result through a single, simple question, of a little girl! Let us all speak for Christ, no matter how feebly, for we know not what a power it may become, under the influence of the Holy Spirit."

The Yellow Placard on the Wall.—"A Poor woman was standing at her window and saw on the opposite side of the street a great yellow placard, announcing a gospel meeting that was to be held that night in a certain hall. The woman considered for a moment, and then, happily for herself, determined to go. She went, and the speaker spoke of that great salvation that reaches down to the very worst of God's creatures. And that night, even as the morning light shines suddenly into a darkened room, lighting it up with the glorious rays of the sun, God gave that woman His great salvation. On the following night she got her mother to accompany her. The mother's heart was also filled with wonder and joy; and, turning to her daughter, she asked, 'Mary, will it last?' 'Aye, mother, it will last, for it is an everlasting salvation,' Mary replied."

A Widow Opportunely Supplied.—A Christian friend and worker writes: "I am a believer in special providences, as I have seen them illustrated in various instances. Here is one: I was going one day to call at the house of a poor widow and her daughter on some errand, and just as I was starting a strong impression came in my mind to take them some food, and as I had just been baking some bread, I thought I would take some to each one. I wrapped it up and started again, when something seemed to say to me, 'Go back and get some more.' I stopped, for I knew the Voice; but I did not want to go back, being in a hurry. But after a moment's thought I went back and got a good supply of food, and again started on my way. When I arrived at the place and gave them what I had brought, the daughter said, 'Oh, what a mercy! We had not anything in the house to eat to-day!' 'It is more blessed to give than to receive;' but how often we miss the blessing because we do not know and heed the Voice that speaks to us."

An Evangelist Rebuked by a Ferryman.—Mr. Graham says: "There was among our workers a young man who lived on the other side of the river. This was no great inconvenience, as there was a ferry near the mission by which he could cross. But what troubled him was the crossing the ferry on Sunday; he tried to persuade himself it was quite right, but there was always an uneasiness experienced about it. However, as it saved him a long walk to and from the mission he continued to use the ferry. One Sunday, as he was crossing with some tracts in his hand, he offered one to the ferryman. The man took it, and looking first at the tract, then at the distributer, said, with a sneer curling his lip, 'If it were not for the like of you I might get away on Sunday, and learn the gospel for myself. These words struck home to the young man's heart, and he resolved that that would be the last time he would use the ferry-boat on the Lord's Day. Since then he has bravely walked the long distance every Sunday. 'If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on My holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight. . . I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth'" (Isa. 58: 13, 14.)

JEALOUSY.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning April 15, 1888.

"Jealousy is the rage of a man." Prov. 6: 34.

A Combination of Vices—A Strong Infusion of Envy—Its Antediluvian Results—Its Long Record of Crime—Voltaire's Maniacal Rage—Napoleon's Disgraceful Bequest—The Root of European Perturbation—Its Influence in Politics—In the Occupations and Professions—Medical Jealousy—Dr. Mackenzie and the German Physicians—Garfield's Physicians—Jealousy in the Pulpit — The Ecclesiastical Barbecue — The Offence of Albert Barnes—No Expulsion Unaided—A Duke as a Target—Merlin Saved by a Hen—Persecution a Blessing.

Some subjects a religious teacher touches a thousand times, now coming on them from one direction, now from another. But here is a Bible theme that for some reason is left totally alone. This morning, asking your prayers, and in the strength of God, I want to grapple it.

There is an old sin, haggard, furious, monstrous, diabolical, that has for ages walked and crawled the earth. It combines all that is obnoxious in the races human, quadrupedal, ornithological, reptilian, and insectile, horned, tusked, hoofed, fanged, stinged; the eye of a basilisk, the tooth of an adder, the jaws of a crocodile, the crushing folds of an anaconda, the slyness of a scorpion, the tongue of a cobra, and the coil of the worm that never dies. It is in every church, in every legislative hall, in every monetary institution, in every drawing-room levee, in every literary and professional circle. It whispers, it hisses, it lies, it debauches, it blasphemes, it damns. My text names it when it says, "Jealousy is the rage of a man." It is grief at the superiority of others; their superiority in talent or wealth or beauty or elegance or virtue or social or professional or political recognition. It is the shadow of other people's success. It is the shiver in our pocket-book because it is not as fat as some one else's pocket-book. It is the twinge in our tongue because it is not as eloquent as some one else's tongue. It is the flutter in our robes because they are not as lustrous as some one else's robes. It is the earthquake under our house because it is not as many feet front and deep as our neighbor's house. It is the thunder of other people's popularity souring the milk of our kindness. It is the father and mother both of one-half of the discontent and outrages and detractions and bankruptcies, crimes and woes of the human race.

In Every Community,

It Was Antediluvian

as much as it is postdiluvian. It put a rough stick in the hands of the first boy that was ever born, and said to him: "Now, Cain, when Abel is looking the other way, crush in his skull; for his sacrifice has been accepted and yours rejected." And Cain picked up the stick as though just to walk with it, and while Abel was watching some bird in the tree-top, or gazing at some waterfall, down came the blow of the first assassination, which has had its echo in all the fratricides, matricides, uxoricides, homicides, infanticides, and regicides of all ages and all nations.

This passion of jealousy so disturbed Caligula at the prominence of some of the men of his time, that he cut a much-admired curl from the brow of Cincinnatus, and took the embroidered collar from the neck of Torquatus, and had Ptolomaeus killed because of his purple robe, which attracted too much attention. After Columbus had placed America as a gem in the Spanish crown, jealousy set on the Spanish courtiers to depreciate his achievement, and aroused animosities till the great discoverer had his heart broken. Urged on by this bad passion, Dionysius flayed Plato because he was wiser than himself, and Philoxenius because his music was too popular. Jealousy made Korah lie about Moses, and Succoth depreciate Gideon.

Jealousy made the trouble between Jacob and Esau, that hurled Joseph into the pit, that struck the twenty-three fatal wounds into Julius Cæsar, that banished Aristides, that fired Antony against Cicero. Tiberius exiled an architect because of the fame he got for a beautiful porch, and slew a poet for his fine tragedy. That set Saul in a rage against David. How graphically the Bible puts it when it says:

"Saul Eyed David."

It seems to take possession of both eyes and makes them flash and burn like two port-holes of hell. "Saul eyed David." That is he looked at him as much as to say: "You little upstart, how dare you attempt anything great? I will grind you under my heel. I will exterminate you; I will, you miserable homunculus. Crouch, crawl, slink into that rat-hole. I will teach those women to sing some other song, instead of 'Saul has slain his thousands but David his tens of thousands.'" When Voltaire heard that Frederick the Great was forgetting him, and putting his literary admiration on Bacaulard d'Arnaud, the old infidel leaped out of his bed and danced the floor in a manical rage, and ordered his swiftest horses hooked up to carry him to the Prussian palace.

That despicable passion of jealousy led Napoleon the First to leave in his will a bequest of five thousand francs to the ruffian who shot at Wellington when the victor of Waterloo was passing through Paris. That stationed the grouty elder brother at the back door of the homestead when the Prodigal Son returned, and threw a chill on the family renunion while that elder brother complained, saying: "Who ever heard of giving roast veal to such a profligate?" Aye, that passion rose up, and under the darkest cloud that ever shadowed the earth, and, amid the loudest thunder that ever shook the mountains, and amid the wildest flash of lightning that ever blinded or stunned the nations, hung up on two pieces of rough lumber back of Jerusalem the kindest, purest, lovingest nature that heaven could delegate, and stopped not until there was no power left in hammer or bramble or javelin to hurt the dead Son of God.

That passion of jealousy, livid, hungry, unbalked, rages on, and like a fiery diameter and encircles it like a fiery circumference. It wants both hemispheres. It wants the heavens. It would, if it could, capture the palace of God, and dethrone Jehovah, and chain the Almighty in eternal exile, and after the demolition of the universe would cry: "Satisfied at last, here I am! Alone! the undisputed and everlasting I, Me, Mine, Myself." That passion keeps all Europe perturbed. Nations jealous of Germany, of England, of Russia, and those jealous of each other, and all of them jealous of America.

It Pierces the Earth

In our land this passion of jealousy keeps all

The Political World A-boil.

There are at least five hundred people who are jealous of Governor Hill and would like to be his successor, about five thousand who are jealous of Grover Cleveland and would like to relieve him of the cares of office; and after the nominations of next summer have been made, a whole pandemonium of defamation, scurrility, hatred, revenge, falsehood, profanity, and misrepresentation will be turned upon this land. The tariff, about the raising or lowering or reformation of which many of them care nothing except as to its effect on votes, will be discussed from a thousand platforms; and the people of Louisiana will be told that the tariff must be arranged for the advantage of American sugar, the people of Virginia will be told that the tariff must be arranged for the advantage of American tobacco, and the people of Pennsylvania will be told that the tariff must be arranged for the advantage of American iron, and the people of Kentucky will be told that the tariff must be arranged for the advantage of American whisky, and the people of Ohio that the tariff must be arranged for the advantage of American wool, while Massachusetts and Connecticut will be promised protection for manufactures, and all the monetary interests, North, South, East and West, will be told in each neighborhood that the taxes and tariff will be fixed to suit them, irrespective of anybody else; and, the Presidential election over, all will settle down as it was before. If you think that all this discussion in public places is from any desire of the welfare of the dear people and not for political effect, you are grievously mistaken. Go into all and if you want to know how much jealousy is yet to be extirpated, ask master builders what they think of each others houses, and merchants what their opinion is of merchants in the same line of business in the same street, and ask doctors what they think of doctors, and lawyers what they think of lawyers, and ministers what they think of ministers, and artists what they think of artists. As long as men and women in any department keep down and have a hard struggle, they will be faintly praised, and the remark will be: "Oh, yes; he is a good, clever sort of a fellow." "She is rather, yes, somewhat, quite—well, I may say, tolerably nice kind of a woman." But let him or her get a little too high, and off goes the aspiring head by social or commercial decapitation.

Occupations and Professions,

Remember that envy dwells more on small deficits of character than on great forces: makes more of the fact that Domitian amused himself by transfixing flies with his penknife than of his great conquests; of the fact that Handel was a glutton than of the fact that he created imperishable oratorios; more of Coleridge's opium habit than of his writing "Christabel" and "The Ancient Mariner"; more of the fact that Addison drank too much than of the fact that he was the author of "The Spectator"; more of a man's peccadilloes than of his mighty energies, more of his defeats than of his victories.

Look at the sacred and heaven-descended science of healing, and then see Dr. Mackenzie, the English surgeon who prolonged the life of the Crown Prince of Germany until he became Emperor, and I hope may yet cure him, so that he may for many years govern that magnificent German nation, than which there is no grander. Yet so great are the that Dr. Mackensie dare not walk the streets of Berlin. He is under military guard. The medical students of Germany can hardly keep their hands off of him. The old doctors of Germany are writhing with indignation. The fact is that in saving Frederick's life Dr. Mackenzie saved the peace of Europe. There was not an intelligent man on either side the ocean that did not fear for the result if the throne passed from wise and good old Emperor William to his inexperienced grandson. But when, under the medical treatment of Dr. Mackenzie, the Crown Prince Frederick took the throne, a wave of satisfaction and confidence rolled over Christendom, what shall the world do with the doctor who saved his life? "Oh," cried out the medical jealousies of Europe, "destroy him; of course, destroy him!"

Medical Jealousies

What a brutal scene of jealousy we had in this country

When President Garfield Lay Dying!

There were faithful physicians that sacrificed their other practice and sacrificed their health for all time, in fidelity to that deathbed. Doctors Bliss and Hamilton and Agnew went through anxieties and toils and fatigues such as none but God could appreciate. Nothing pleased many of the medical profession. The doctors in charge did nothing right. We who did not see the case knew better than those who agonized over it in the sick-room for many weeks. I, who never had anything worse than a run-round on my thumb, which seemed to me at the time was worthy all the attention of the entire medical fraternity, had my own ideas as to how the President ought to be treated. And in proportion as physicians and laymen were ignorant of the case, they were sure the treatment practiced was a mistake. And when in post-mortem the bullet dropped out of a different part of the body from that in which it was supposed to have been lodged, about two hundred thousand people shouted: "I told you so!" "There, I knew it all the time!" There are some doctors in all cities who would rather have the patient die under the treatment of their own schools than have them get well under some other pathy. Yea; look at

The Clerical Profession.

I am sorry to say that in matters of jealousy it is no better than other professions. There are now in all denominations a great many young clergymen who have a faculty for superior usefulness. But they are kept down and kept back and crippled by older ministers, who look askance at these rising evangelists. They are snubbed. They are jostled. They are patronizingly advised. It is suggested to them that they had better know their place. If here and there one with more nerve and brain and consecration and divine force go past the seniors, who want to keep the chief places, the young are advised, in the words of Scripture: "Tarry at Jericho till their beards are grown." They are charged with sensationalism. They are compared to rockets that go up in a blaze and come down sticks, and the brevity of their career is jubilantly prophesied. If it be a denomination with bishops, a bishop is implored to sit down heavily on the man who will not be moulded; or if a denomination without bishops, some of the older men with nothing more than their own natural heaviness and theological avoirdupois are advised to flatten out the innovator.

In Conferences and Presbyteries and associations and conventions there is often seen the most damnable jealousy. Such ecclesiastical tyrants would not admit that jealously had any possession of them, and they take on a heavenly air, and talk sweet oil and sugar plums and balm of a thousand flowers, and roll up their eyes with an air of unctuous sanctity, when they simply mean destruction of those over whom they pray and snuffle. There are cases where ministers of religion are derelict and criminal, and they must be put out.

But in the majority of cases that I have witnessed in ecclesiastical trials, there is a jealous attempt to keep men from surpassing their theological fellows; and as at the Presidential elections in country places the people have which is a roasted ox round which the people dance with knives, cutting off a slice here, and pulling out a rib there, and sawing off a beefsteak yonder, and having a high time—so most of the denominations of Christians keep on hand a barbecue in which some minister is roasted, while the Church courts dance around with their sharp knives of attack, and one takes an ear, another a hand, another a foot, and it is hard to tell whether the ecclesiastical plaintiffs of this world or the demons of the nether world most enjoy it. Albert Barnes, than whom no man has accomplished more good in the last thousand years, was decreed to sit silent for a year in the pew of his own church while some one else occupied his pulpit; the pretended offence that he did not believe in a limited atonement, but the real offence the fact that all the men who tried him put together would not equal one Albert Barnes.

A Barbecue,

Yes: amid all professions and businesses and occupations and trades, and amid all circles, needs to be heard what God says in regard to envy and jealousy, which, though not exactly the same, are twins: "Envy is the rottenness of the bone;" "Where envy and strive is, there is confusion and every evil work;" "Jealousy is the rage of a man." My hearers, if this evil passion is in any of your souls, cry mightily unto God for Its Expulsion.

That which has downed kings and emperors and apostles and reformers, and ministers of religion and thousands of good men and women, is too mighty for you to contend against unaided. The evil has so many roots, of such infinite convolution, that nothing but the enginery of omnipotence can pull it out. Tradition says that when Moses lifted up his hand to pray, it was all encrusted with manna; and no sooner do you pray than you are helped. Away with the accursed, stenchful, blackening, damning crime of jealously! Allow it to stay, and it will eat up and carry off all the religion you can pack into your soul for the next half-century. It will do you more harm than it does any one it leads you to assail. It will delude you with the idea that you can build yourself up by pulling somebody else down. You will make more out of the success of others than out of their misfortunes. Speak well of everybody. Stab no man in the back. Be a honey bee rather than a spider; be a dove rathar than a buzzard.

Surely this world is large enough for you and all your rivals. God has given you a work to do. Go ahead and do it. Mind your own business. In all circles, in all businesses, in all professions, there is room for straightforward successes. Jealousy entertained will not only bedwarf your soul, but it will flatten your skull, bemean your eye, put pinchedness of look about your nostril, give a bad curl to the lip, and expel from your face the divine image in which you were created. When you hear a man or woman abused, drive in on the defendant's side.

Watch for Excellences

in others, rather than for defects, morning-glories instead of nightshade. If some one is more beautiful than you, thank God that you have not so many perils of vanity to contend with. If some one has more wealth than you, thank God that you have not so great stewardship to answer for. If some one is higher up in social position, thank God that those who are down need not fear a fall. If some one gets higher office in Church or State than you, thank God there are not so many to wish for the hastening of your obsequies.

The Duke of Dantzig in luxurious apartments was visited by a plain friend, and, to keep his friend from jealousy, the Duke said: "You can have all I have if you will stand twenty paces off and let me shoot at you a hundred times." "No, no," said his friend. "Well," said the Duke, "to gain all my honors, I faced on the battle-field more than a thousand gunshots fired not more than ten paces off."

A minister of small congregation complained to a minister of large congregation about the sparseness of his attendants. "Ah," said the one of large audience, "My son, you will find in the Day of Judgment that you had quite enough people for whom to be held accountable."

Substitute for jealousy an everlasting emulation. Seeing others good, let us try to be better. Seeing others industrious, let us work more hours. Seeing others benevolent, let us resolve on giving a larger percentage of our means for charity. May God put congratulations for others into our right hand, and cheers on our lips for those who do brave and useful things. Life is short at the longest; let it all be filled up with work and sympathy for each other's misfortunes, and our arms be full of white mantles to cover up the mistakes and failures of others. If an evil report about some one come to us, let us put on it most favorable construction, as the Rhone enters Lake Leman foul and comes out crystalline. Do not build so much on the transitory differences of this world, for soon it will make no difference to us whether we had ten million dollars or ten cents, and the ashes into which the tongue of Demosthenes dissolved are just like the ashes into which the tongue of the veriest stammerer went.

Helpfulness For Others,

If you are assailed by jealousy make no answer. Take it as a compliment, for people are never jealous of a failure. Until your work is done you are invulnerable. Remember under such exasperations. Did they not try to catch Him in His word? Did they not call Him the victim of intoxicants? Did they not misinterpret Him from the winter of the year 1 to the spring of the year 33; that is, from His first infantile cry to the last groan of His assassination? Yet He answered not a word! But so far from demolishing either His mission or His good name, after near nineteen centuries He outranks everything under the skies, and is second to none above them, and the archangel makes salaam at His footstool. Christ's bloody antagonists thought that they had finished Him when they wrote over the cross His accusation in three languages, Hebrew and Greek and Latin, not realizing that they were by that act introducing Him to all nations, since Hebrew is the holiest language, and Greek the wisest of tongues, and Latin the widest spoken.

How Our Lord Behaved

You are not the first man who had his faults looked at through a microscope, and his virtues through the wrong end of a telescope. Pharaoh had the chief butler and baker endungeoned, and tradition says that all the butler had done was to allow a fly in the King's cup, and all the baker had done was to leave a gravel in the King's bread. The world has the habit of making a great ado about what you do wrong and forgetting to say anything about what you do right, but the same God will take care of you who provided for Merlin, the Christian martyr, when hidden from his pursuers in a hay-mow in Paris, and a hen came and laid an egg close by him every morning, thus keeping him from starvation. Blessed are they that are persecuted, although persecution is a severe cataplasm. Ointment may smart the wound before healing it. What a soft pillow to die on if when we leave the world we can feel that, though a thousand people may have wronged us, we have wronged no one; or, having made envious and jealous attack on others, we have repented of the sin and as far as possible made reparation! The good resolution of Timothy Poland in his quaint but exquisite hymn, entitled "Most Any Day," we might well unanimously adopt;

We'll keep all right and good within,
Our work will then be free from sin;
Upright we'll walk through thick and thin
Straight on our way.
Deal just with all; the prize we'll win
Most any day.

When He who made all things just right
Shall call us hence to realms of light,
Be it morn or noon or e'en or night,
We will obey;
We'll be prepared to take our flight
Most any day.

Our lamps we'll fill brim full of oil
That's good and pure, that would not spoil,
And keep them burning all the while
To light our way;
Our work all done, we'll quit the soil
Most any day.

The Death of Benjamin Harris Brewster, who was Attorney-General of the United States during President Arthur's administration, occurred April 4, at his home in Philadelphia. He was 72 years of age having been born in Salem County, N. J., in 1819. He was a graduate of Princeton College. His national reputation dates from the time when he conducted the notorious Star Route trials, as public prosecutor. Though those trials resulted in a miscarriage of justice, it was through no fault of Mr. Brewster, who did his utmost, and displayed the highest ability in his efforts to get the evildoers convicted. Mr. Brewster was not only a good jurist, but learned on many subjects besides the law, especially on ecclesiastical history, on which he frequently lectured for the benefit of charities. Mr. Brewster's face was conspicuous wherever he went, on account of its being deeply scarred and drawn by burns received when a mere child, in the rescue of his baby sister from a fire. He was extremely sensitive to any reference to this disfigurement, and on one occasion administered a severe reproof to a lawyer who, during the trial of a case, had the bad taste to allude to it. Mr. Brewster, in dignified and simple language, told of a faithful nurse, wearied with untiring labors, who fell asleep while holding a little child; the tired arms relaxed the precious burden fell on the hearth—and when the little one was saved, the face of her rescuer "was burned as black as the heart of the man who could twit another of a personal deformity."

A DIVORCE AVERTED.

An incident reported from Japan is worthy of wide publication in this country. The rapidly increasing number of divorces here might be checked if husbands would follow the example of the Japanese gentleman concerned. It is stated that this gentleman, who is a dignitary of some kind, was much distressed by the exceeding bad temper of his wife; so he called together some of his friends and asked their advice in the matter. They decided that he ought to put her away, and find some one with a more agreeable disposition. But he said that he was much attached to her, and that, as she had only this one fault, he was not willing summarily to send her off. About this time one of his friends became a Christian, and as a result of this change, a great difference was observed in his temper. He was formerly accustomed to get angry, and abuse his family and others in a fearful manner. But this new religion had so changed his heart that he was gentle and kind to every one at all times. So the Japanese dignitary thought over the matter very seriously; and when he was about to leave home for three months, he gave directions that his wife should attend the Christian service every Sabbath. On his return, he found that a great change had taken place in her also, and he was highly delighted. She was so impressed with the power and truth of Christian teaching, that she became a believer in Jesus Christ at once. Her violent temper had disappeared, and she was now one of the most amiable and gentle of wives. Her husband is not a Christian, but he testifies most emphatically to the value and truth of the religion that has wrought such a blessed change in his home.

BLOOD POISONING CURED.

A letter published in *Thy Healer reports a remarkable case of recovery from blood-poisoning, which is one of the most obstinate maladies known to physicians. The sufferer, Miss E. A. Hopwood, of 61 Ashmead Road, London, says: "The Lord has just tenderly healed me of what seemed like a strained muscle in my arm, but which developed into serious blood poisoning, malignant pustules breaking out on my right arm and other parts of my body; my throat, too, was bad, and threatened to be malignant. When Dr. McKillian came to see my mother, I asked him to anoint me; he did so, and in less than two days, healing was manifest in the arm. A film over my eyes, and other serious symptoms, disappeared, and on the ninth and tenth days I almost watched delicate pink skin replacing the offensive pustules. How I praise our Father for His unspeakable Gift, Jesus, 'by whose stripes we are healed.' Neither medicine nor lotions did I use; He sent His Word and healed me. May He be glorified in my renewed powers!"

AN ANXIOUS NIGHT IN AFRICA.

In a letter from Cape Palmas, Africa, to a contemporary, a Methodist lady missionary there describes a painful experience in the course of a journey she and other missionaries tried to make up the River Cavalla. She says: "There is a tribe near the mouth of the river who are not friendly with the Liberians, and they said we should not go up the river. But they are great cowards themselves, so they hired the next tribe above to stop us. We had heard all this, but we were ready, and so we could only go and try. Well, when we got up to this tribe they came out in canoes, each man with gun and knife, and blowing the war-horns. Such a frightful noise! They surrounded us and took us ashore. They unloaded one of our boats on the bank, and then held what they call a 'palaver'—a talk as to what next to do. We were told that if we stayed all night, we could go up the river in the morning; so the head man, next to the king, took all us women to sleep in his house, a new one he was building and had not used. It had two small windows and a door in it, and a part of the boards were down for the floor. He laid the rest down, and we put two mattresses down, and three women and four children did the best they could to rest on that. Two more rested in shipboard chairs, and Mrs. Astley and myself sat up on camp-chairs. We had left two of our young men at Cape Palmas, sick with the fever, and now Annie Whitfield was taken shortly after she left the Cape. So I spent the most of the night down on the floor, bathing her head as best I could by pouring water out of a bottle on a cloth, and when the bottle was empty I went to the river and filled it. It was a long night. I never closed my eyes; and when the moon went down, and it was dark, I could only feel, for we had no light. How I looked up to God for help in our hour of need! Taken by a savage tribe, no light, and fever among us!"

The missionaries were not allowed to proceed in the morning, but after a day of suspense were informed that they must return to Cape Palmas, as they would on no account be allowed to go higher up the river.

REAL ESTATE IN PALESTINE.

A remarkable fact, the significance of which will be recognized by students of prophecy, is mentioned in the Watchword in an article by Professor Kellogg. He says: "Within the past twenty years, the price of building sites about Jerusalem has risen fifty per cent., and is still increasing; while in twenty years the population has doubled. A later writer from Jerusalem, in The Jewish Chronicle, says, that about the Jaffa gate the price of building sites has increased fourfold in the last five years. The population of Haifa has doubled in ten years, the value of exports and imports has largely increased, and land has increased threefold in value since 1878.

Almost every acre of the great plain of Esdraelon is in a high state of cultivation, and "presents one of the most striking pictures of luxuriant fertility which it is possible to conceive." In 1882, the cost of transporting the Sursock's share of the wheat crop of this fertile plain to the seaport was $50,000. The Bedouin raids which made the fruits so uncertain a few years ago throughout eastern Palestine, have become a thing of the past. Roads are being constructed in a land where, till lately, there were none. In Haifa, a few years ago, a cart had never been seen; but lately, an omnibus was running four or five times a day to Acre, and a good road had been finished to Nazareth. A road is also in progress from Jerusalem to Hebron. Similar accounts reach us from other points. On this, besides many others, we have again the valuable testimony of Mr. Oliphant, who says: "It is a remarkable fact, that while every province in Turkey has been steadily retrograding during the last few years, Palestine alone has been rapidly developing in agricultural and material prosperity." The modern world is at a loss what to do with the Jews, and the Jews are at a loss what to do with themselves. Slowly the idea of restoring the people to the land, and the land to the people, is taking shape and form in the minds of increasing numbers both of Jews and Christians.

A WAIL IN BABYLON.

In a recent lecture by Mr. Boscawen, he surprised his hearers by the news that, a few months ago, a discovery had been made of two hundred thousand Babylonish tablets, which formed an enormous library. Some of them were the clay tablets on which children had written their exercises five thousand years ago, and they could still be easily read by persons who had learned the cuneiform character. But the most interesting part of the library was the theological department, in which were found hymn-books containing wonderful religious hymns, in one of which there is an eloquent and touching aspiration after perfect purity. In the library of Kutha, which is buried beneath the mound of Tel Ibrahim, and out of which city the Samaritans originally came, there have been discovered tablets which prove that here was chiefly taught the religion of Babylon, and from them we learn something of its eschatologic doctrines. The tablet called the "Descent of Ishtar," which records her descent into the city of the dead, is of singular beauty and power, and many of its passages are strikingly similar to well-known passages in our own loved Bible. "I go down the death road; I go to that place whence there is no return, to that place wherein is no light, and where I shall ever sit in thick darkness." How sublime in its simplicity, how touching in its pathos, and how gloomy is the valley of the Shadow of Death when we walk therein unaccompanied by Him who is the Life from the dead and the Light that shineth unto the perfect day!

How essentially mathematically and analytically minded the Babylonians were, is proved by the exact manner in which they arranged and catalogued these enormous libraries; a system so thorough and so perfect that to this day the authorities of the British Museum can find no better, and they docket and tabulate these very Babylonian inscriptions exactly as they were docketed and tabulated 5,000 years ago.

A MIDNIGHT INTERVIEW AT A STATION.

The following incident, related in the New York Telegram, shows the value of a kind word spoken in season: "A Telegram reporter was on the platform of the Houston Street station, after midnight, one night this week, when two flashily-dressed young women, with bruised faces, and hair disheveled and flying in the damp air, came staggering up the narrow stairs of the station, followed soon afterward by a party of boisterous, half-drunken young men, who immediately began to bandy words with them.

"At that moment two elderly gentlemen entered the station and approached the women.

"'Go away,' said the younger, warningly, as her companion replied to one of the young men, with a loud oath, that she would not take another drink that night.

"'That's right, friend,' said one of the elderly gentlemen, encouragingly; 'but wouldn't it be better if you had God to help you?'

"Then opening their eyes wide, and for the first time distinguishing the two gentlemen from the crowd of well-dressed roughs about her, the older woman uttered a surprised exclamation, and both women, suddenly sobering up, conversed in low tones with their new-found friends until the arrival of the uptown train, boarding which, they were all soon lost to sight.

"At first the reporter did not take in the situation, and, turning to the ticket-seller, inquired who the gentlemen were.

"'Oh, everybody knows them around here,' was the reply; 'they were Mr. Crittenton and his friend, from the Florence Night Mission and Home, on Bleecker Street, off the Bowery. They'll go up now where the girls live, and pray with them awhile on the door-steps. Mr. Crittenton used to be a big druggist, on Fulton Street.'

"The Florence Mission, on Bleeker Street, which the reporter visited the next night, was packed to the very sidewalk with women and men, the occasion being of unusual attractiveness, because of the regular weekly 'sociable' that was to be held after the meeting that night.

On one side of the little chapel sat the Home-girls—those who have abandoned their lives of shame; and on the other the 'street girls,' whom the 'missionaries' had just brought in.

"A recently converted Bowery saloon-keeper was just giving a testimony as the reporter entered. Said he, 'I've gone into my back room and made a bottle of whisky while my bar-tender was selling some of you a drink. I made it as much out of poison as anything else, and yet

---

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a monthly magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to the Manager of Christian Herald, 63 Bible House, New York.

you couldn't tell the difference between it and eight-year-old liquor.'

"After the momentary commotion had subsided, an Irishman got on his feet ahead of somebody else who was rising, and told how he was reclaimed from drunkenness, and then a young woman, and after her a middle-aged woman got up, and told how they had been reclaimed from drunkenness and lives of shame.

"A fine-looking man, who bore traces of dissipation, then said that on the night before, crazed by drink and overcome with remorse at the thought of the wife and children he had left destitute in the South, he was on his way to the East River to drown himself, when he staggered into the Mission, attracted by the word 'Florence,' the name of one of his little daughters, over the door-way.

"Away in the corner, among the 'Home' girls, the reporter recognized the two young women whom he had seen in the Houston Street station the night before."

THE KEY TO ALL PROPHECY

By G. H. Pember.*

Daniel's Perplexity—Enlightened by an Angel—The Rule of Interpretation Imparted—Daniel's Difficulty Solved—The Key of Universal Application—The Seventy Weeks—Divided into Three Parts—Commencement of the First Seven—The Date Known—The End of the Sixty-Two Weeks also Known—The Interval Following—The Missing Week—The Sign of its Commencement Clearly Defined—The Close of the Week of Years.

THE great revelation granted in answer to Daniel's confession and prayer (Dan. 9 : 20-27) is a key to all Hebrew prophecies. Until he had received it he could not understand his own previous visions. After that of the Four Wild Beasts we find him saying: "As for me, Daniel, my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me." And at the end of the eighth chapter also, he remarks: "And I, Daniel, fainted and was sick certain days; afterward I rose up and did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." But of the Seventy Weeks, which was vouchsafed to give him skill and understanding, enabled him to comprehend the purposes of God; and, consequently, in His preface to the next revelation, he tells us that he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision. Surely that which enlightened Daniel is of the greatest importance to us also, upon whom the ends of the ages are come; nor should we forget those pregnant words: "And none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." (Dan. 12 : 10.)

The Disclosure

But what sign would mark the commencement of the four hundred and ninety years? And, when they had commenced, would their course be unbroken to the end of the period, or would it be interrupted. These questions the angel now proceeds to answer.

The Appointed Time

would begin at the going forth of a command to restore and build Jerusalem—not the temple, of which there is no mention, but the city, the street, and the wall. From this date until the appearance of an Anointed One, who should also be a Prince—that is, a Royal Priest—seven weeks and sixty and two weeks, that is, sixty-nine weeks, were to elapse; or in other words, there should be forty-nine and four hundred and thirty-four, or in all, four hundred and eighty-three years between the edict and the coming of the Messiah as a Prince. At this point it seems there is a gap separating the Four Hundred and Eighty-third Year from the last Seven. For God had given up the sinful nation which rejected His Son: His covenant was suspended, so that they were no longer His people: and, consequently, the course of the Four Hundred and Ninety Years had ceased to run on.

We have thus found from the prophecy of the Seventy Weeks that there has now been for more than eighteen hundred years an entire cessation of God's dealings with the Jews as a nation. A great gap extends—as we understand by the words of Daniel, Zechariah, and the Lord Himself—from Messiah the Prince to the false prince that shall come; from the good Shepherd, Whom the flock abhorred and rejected, to the idol shepherd, whom the majority of them will follow to their own destruction; from Him Who came in His Father's name to that other who shall come in His own name.

And during the interval between the true Messiah and the false, Hebrew prophecy is almost entirely in abeyance, and there remain in present operation only one or two fearful utterances which stretch, as it were, here and there across the whole Width of the Chasm.

Such is the cry of Hosea, which startled the prosperous and haughty times of Uzziah with the fateful words: "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim."

Such is the mournful burden of Micah that, because of the smiting of the Judge of Israel upon the cheek, God would give up His people, until the travailing woman should bring forth.

And such, especially, are the terrible fulminations in Leviticus and Deuteronomy, those words of fear: "And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone. And among those nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind: and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life."

With the exception of such passages as these, and the few predictions respecting the Gentiles, all Old Testament prophecy—which invariably refers to the literal Judah, Jerusalem and Israel—centres upon the events immediately connected with the two advents. For, as Peter tells us, the Spirit, through the prophets, "testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow"—that is, the first coming to suffer and die, and the consequent rejection of the Jews; and the second coming to rule with power, and the consequent restoration of all Israel.

The knowledge of this fact is indispensable to a right understanding of prophecy; for events connected with the two great but now widely separated eras, are often mentioned together, even in the same sentence. Nor is there any confusion in such an arrangement: for had the Jews received Christ at His first coming, John the Baptist would have been Elijah to them, the last Seven Years would have followed immediately, and then the kingdom would have been restored to Israel. But the unbelief of the Jews separated those things which might have been joined together, and, consequently, the marvellous events of the last Week have not yet begun to take place.

Lest, however, we should feel any perplexity in regard to the interpretation of Old Testament prophecy, the Lord Himself has given us

A Clue.

In the fourth chapter of Luke we may find an account of His visit to the synagogue at Nazareth, where He read a passage from Isaiah, and declared it was fulfilled on that day in the ears of His audience. The passage runs as follows: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me; because He hath anointed Me to preach the Gospel to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." When He had read so much, He closed the book; and if we turn to the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah, we shall see in what manner He extracted the passage. He ceased reading in the middle of a sentence, because its next clause leaps the wide chasm between the first and second advents, and speaks of "the day of vengeance of our God." Unless, therefore, He had closed the book when He did, He could not have said, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears."

Before, however, we deduce

A Canon of Interpretation

from our Lord's method of procedure, we should be careful to notice that prophecy must always, when it is possible, be taken literally. The Bible is not a riddle, but a revelation. Written to suit the mean capacities of our race while still in the flesh, it is easily intelligible to those who surrender themselves to the guidance of the Spirit. It presents but few difficulties, if we are willing to receive it just as it has been delivered to us, and do not wish to avoid that which is supernatural. And with a few avowed exceptions—such as when the mind that hath wisdom is challenged, or when he that hath ears to hear is bidden to hear—if it does speak figuratively, it employs plain and obvious figures, the purpose of which is to illustrate and make clear, and not to mystify.

There is no reason to doubt that the prophecies of the second advent will be fulfilled as literally as those of the first. From this consideration, and from the example given above of our Lord's way of dealing with Scripture, we would suggest the following method of interpretation:

In any prediction of the Old Testament, regard that which has been exactly fulfilled at the first advent as already past.

Apply all else to the times of the second advent, as literally as the case will allow.

By way of example we may cite the words of Isaiah: "For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon His shoulder." Now the Child was born, and the Son was given, at the first advent; but the Government did not then devolve upon Him, for He was cut off and there was nothing for Him. He left our world as a nobleman going into a far country to receive for Himself a kingdom and to return. At the second advent therefore, will the government be placed upon His shoulder. It is only after the Fourth Beast has been slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame, that the Son of man shall be brought to the Ancient of days, and invested with dominion and glory, and a Kingdom.

So in the thirteenth chapter of Zechariah, the seventh verse refers to the first advent, but the eighth and ninth to the second; for the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus resulted in the dispersion of the whole Jewish nation, not in the deliverance of one-third of them.

If, then, we apply this process, of which our Lord Himself gives us an example, the Bible becomes a plain revelation, and is no longer a tissue of enigmas. Its every page sparkles with glory, and it is found to be filled with disclosures and instructions which Paul might well compare to gold, silver, and precious stones.

---

*From the third edition of his excellent work. "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews, the Gentiles and the Church of God"—a book remarkable for the learning and wide research it displays, yet so simple in style and diction that any reader can understand it, and under its guidance perceive the meaning of the prophecies of the Bible. 458 pages. Price by mail, $1.50. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Antichrist, Babylon, and the Coming of the Kingdom, by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages; Price in cloth covers, 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes, by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

New Edition of Rev. M. Baxter's Pamphlets

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144.000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

Complaints of Irregularities in the Post Office are forwarded to headquarters as soon as they are received at this office, and the officials there assure us that a thorough investigation is made in each case. These irregularities have increased enormously during the past few months, and the proprietors of other journals besides this are inundated with complaints from their subscribers, who rashly conclude that because they do not receive their papers they have not been mailed to them. We shall be glad to hear promptly from any subscriber whose copy of this journal goes astray, and we will at once notify the Postal authorities.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Deadlock of Eight Days' Duration in the House of Representatives had brought public business in the lower branch of Congress to a perfect standstill, but the wheels of legislation, which had been clogged for over a week, were set in motion again on April 12. The cause of this deadlock was a measure known as the Direct Tax Bill. This bill provides to pay to the several States and Territories all the moneys collected under an act of Congress passed as a war measure in 1861, and levying a direct tax. The amount involved is $17,000,000. The bill to refund this tax was strenuously opposed by a determined minority, who asserted that the passage of such a bill would be tantamount to a legislative declaration that there is no limit or constitutional inhibition on Congress in the matter of appropriating public money. The minority resorted to every parliamentary device to prevent the consideration of the bill, and it was finally agreed to postpone it until December next.

The Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Emancipation of the colored people from slavery in this country is to be celebrated by an Exposition on a large scale, to be held at Atlanta, Ga., and to continue from November 12, 1888, to February 12, 1889. The Exposition is intended to illustrate the progress and achievements of the colored race, and to furnish information as to their educational and industrial status. Early in the present session of Congress, a delegation of prominent colored men submitted this Exposition project to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. They asked the Government to aid them in their enterprise, and to extend a loan to enable them to assure its success. As a result of this appeal the committee last week recommended the passage of a bill providing for a loan of $400,000, under restrictions similar to those contained in the acts in aid of the Centennial and New Orleans Expositions. The committee in its report says that the Exposition is to be conducted by a body corporate composed of representative colored men, known as the "Colored World's Fair Association of America," incorporated under the laws of the State of Georgia. The General Assemblies of Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee have, by joint resolution, cordially indorsed the proposed Exposition, as has the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce; and memorials and petitions from many representative men and associations in the Southern States have been sent to Congress in favor of it. The city of Atlanta has tendered 200 acres of land and suitable buildings, free of rental charges. The colored population of the United States, according to the report of the Senate committee, is now upwards of 7,000,000. It was 6,518,793 by the census of 1880.

The Dependent Pension Bill, Which, as Stated in these columns on March 15, has passed the Senate, is being essentially changed and modified by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions. The most important changes relate to the amount of pension to be paid and the degree of dependency required. For the uniform rate of $12 a month provided for in the Senate measure, the House has substituted the monthly rate of one cent per day for each day of service preformed by the beneficiary. This, in some cases, would yield more than the $12 a month provided in the original bill, while in many others it would produce much less. The House Committee also changes that provision of the Senate bill which made a dependence on manual labor for support a prerequisite to receiving the pension. The result of the proposed alteration in many cases would be to make total disability for manual labor sufficient to secure the pension, even where there is no dependence on manual labor at all. The bill is made to apply to soldiers of all wars and their widows. These changes so materially change the character of the bill that its final passage, if achieved at all, will be considerably delayed.

An Important Decision of the United States Supreme Court was handed down on April 9. Its significance consists in its concession of State rights. The question in dispute was as to the right of a State to prohibit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. This the Court definitely sustained by upholding the Pennsylvania anti-oleomargarine law. That statute makes it unlawful for any person to manufacture or sell any butter or cheese or other article designed to take the place of these products, made from any compound other than unadulterated milk or cream. The opponents of this law asserted that it was in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, and that oleomargarine was a new invention, not deleterious to the public health. The Supreme Court holds, however, that it is entirely within the police powers of the State to protect the public health, and that the questions whether the manufacture of oleomargarine is or may be conducted in such a way as to involve such danger to the public health as to require the suppression of the business rather than its regulation, are questions of fact and of public policy, which belong to the legislature of the State to determine.

The Arrest of a Prominent Spiritualistic medium, with her husband and two friends, took place in New York on April 11. Three weeks ago Luther R. Marsh, a well-known lawyer, who holds a responsible office in the city government, astonished the editors of the daily journals by inviting them to his house to see a number of paintings which he said were the work of Raphael, Rembrandt, and other eminent artists, who were induced to exercise their art in the spirit world by Madame Diss Debar, a medium residing with him. Reporters were sent to examine the paintings, and declared them to be miserable daubs, all evidently the work of one hand, and that not a skilful one. Mr Marsh, on being pressed, admitted that he had given Madame Diss Debar a deed of his house for the purpose of making it a "Temple of Spiritualism," and so strong was his belief in her powers, that he was evidently prepared to transfer other portions of his property to her. In order to save him from his own infatuation, several of his legal friends interfered, and having obtained evidence of the medium's previous operations of a similar kind, had her and her accomplices arrested for conspiracy.

Labor Troubles in the Brewing Trade Culminated last week in a strike in Chicago and a lock-out in New York. The principle involved is the same in both cases. In Chicago the employers have made a stand against recognition of the Unions. For more than a year the employers have been irritated against the Central Union, and a struggle was seen to be inevitable. One of the firms recently employed a non-Union man, and refused to dismiss him when called upon to do so. The Union men then quitted work, and as there was an evident intention on the part of other firms not to renew the annual agreement with the men, all the brewers' men in the city went on strike, involving the closing of the breweries and the idleness of two thousand men. In New York the dispute has arisen over the annual agreement hitherto made between the employers and the Unions. The Union wished a clause inserted pledging employers to use no kegs, malt, or coal but such as were produced by Union men. The employers not only refused to insert the clause, but to sign the same agreement as last year, and a lock-out was declared. It throws over three thousand men out of employment. This is one of the very few trade disputes which may benefit the public. If it restricts the production of beer it will be a blessing rather than a calamity.

An Important Letter from Emin Pasha, for whose rescue Mr. Henry M. Stanley is conducting an expedition, was received by the Anti-Slavery Society last week. It is dated August 16. In it he says: "I will certainly remain here when Stanley arrives. I could not desert my work just at the dawn of better times. Once provided with necessaries, I do not deem it difficult to open a direct road to the coast through Lango and Masai. It is only necessary to conquer the fierceness of the Lango people. Camels and donkeys form ample means of transportation. The death of Gordon was a great blow to civilization in Africa. Upon me, his last surviving officer in the Soudan, devolves the honor of developing his intentions." Still later information is published in an Italian journal, in two letters from an Italian traveller named Casati. They are dated respectively September 21 and 24, stating that he had been taken prisoner by King Traxiore, whom he finally persuaded to become friendly to Emin Bey. Eventually Traxiore charged him with a mission to negotiate an alliance with Emin Bey. The letters state that Stanley had not arrived at Wadelai up to the time of their despatch. These letters, though reassuring as to Emin, cause concern as to Stanley, who expected to arrive at Wadelai before the dates mentioned.

Disorders are Again Reported from Ireland. The determination of the Government to suppress the League and to disperse all its meetings seems to have revived the antipathy to English rule with increased violence. At a large League meeting at Kilrush on April 8, a riot became imminent, and a regiment of militia, with fixed bayonets, charged the crowd, and several persons were injured. At Ennis, on the same day a meeting had to be broken up by the police, and fifty persons were arrested. At Loughrea, where Mr. O'Brien was to speak, the crowd assumed a threatening attitude, and had to be dispersed by the police. At Miltown Malbay three thousand persons assembled, but dispersed quietly on the advice of their leaders when the police threatened to charge. A meeting at Ramsgrange was postponed for a week on account of the presence of a formidable police force.

A Significant Speech Dealing with the General European situation and the condition of Ireland was made by Lord Salisbury, the English Premier, at Carnarvon, Wales, on April 10. He expressed the conviction that all the rulers of Europe were struggling to prevent the calamity that might result from race conflicts, in which circumstances might arise that would involve their peoples. There was now reasonable hope that the life of Emperor Frederick would be continued.. His life would be a pledge for the advancement of mankind and the maintenance of peace. Referring to the fisheries treaty, Lord Salisbury said that he had sent Mr. Chamberlain to America unfettered with orders, beyond informing him of the broad views of the Government. The treaty was a monument, and would stamp a peaceful feeling upon both nations.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $15.05. They are from: Pingree, Ill., $2; Fairmount, Minn., $2; Byesville, O., $5; Sierra City, Cal., 25c; Baltimore, Md., 50c; Newark, N. J., $1; Leeds, Ala, $1; Chicago, Ill., 30c; Woodhaven, N. Y., $3. On behalf of the beneficiaries of this fund we sincerely thank our friends who are supporting it. Each dollar has a wide-reaching influence, as it affords, under the blessing of God, direct assistance to some preacher who sorely needs it, and through him all to whom he ministers. We should be sincerely glad if the fund grew to such an extent that every colored minister in the country could receive the journal every week, and have the benefit of reading the sermons and other religious articles it contains.

Mr. E. P. Telford, the English Methodist evangelist, commenced a thirteen days' mission in the Fifth Street Methodist church, Philadelphia, on April 8. He expects to conclude his work in this country on May 1, and sail for England on May 15. He has accepted an engagement to hold a series of services in London in the Great Assembly Hall built by Mr. F. N. Charrington, commencing June 1. Mr. Telford trusts that the many friends he has made on this side the Atlantic will pray for a blessing on these services, as the opportunity is a grand one, the hall having a capacity for 5,000 persons.

Wonderful Jubilee Services to Commemorate the reception of one thousand converts were held in the Jane Street Methodist Episcopal Church last week. During the revival meetings conducted there by the Rev. Thomas Harrison, scenes of unprecedented enthusiasm have been witnessed, and at last the number of persons making a profession of faith, as the result of God's blessing on the services, reached one thousand. An all-day meeting, commencing at six o'clock in the morning, for praise and rejoicing, was called for April 13, and immense crowds assembled to take part in the glad celebration. Among the prominent clergymen who spoke during the day were Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., Rev. J. M. Buckley, D. D., Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., LL. D., and Rev. Stephen Merritt, the pastor of the church. The services continued all night; and Mr. Harrison and Mr. Merritt, though physically exhausted by their protracted labors, continued their efforts with undiminished ardor.

A Midnight Search for a Physician in New York, was graphically described by a poor barber to a reporter last week. He said that late on the night of April 5 his wife complained of severe pain, which, toward twelve o'clock, became alarming. She was in agony, but could not tell what was the cause, though she felt sure that, unless soon relieved, she must die. Her husband was scared, and ran out to find a doctor. He lived in a rear tenement in Mulberry Street, and knew of no physician whom he could call. He, therefore, went to the nearest police station, where the officer gave him the address of several physicians, and sent a patrolman with him to guide him in his search. At the first address the house was empty—the doctor having changed his residence; at the second and third the doctors were not at home; and at the fourth and last the doctor was himself sick in bed with rheumatism, and unable to move. The policeman then accompanied the barber to his home, and finding the woman still alive, but in excruciating agony, he called an ambulance. It was nearly four o'clock when the ambulance arrived, and then the surgeon would not take the patient, as it was not a hospital case. The search for a physician was then renewed, and at last, after several calls, a doctor responded and administered remedies, which almost instantly gave relief. "I am glad my wife recovered," said the poor man, "but I never want to pass another night like that." If the man had lived in his own mansion on Fifth Avenue, he would, probably, have found less difficulty in his search; but he, and all who are poor, need have no dread of such an experience in their spiritual maladies. The ear of the Great Physician is ever open to them. (Isa. 41: 17.)

A Philadelphia Belle's Scarred Shoulders are the result of a ludicrous but painful accident reported in a local journal. It states that a beautiful and charming young lady, who is a great favorite in fashionable society, a few evenings ago undertook to perform her toilet without her maid's assistance. She thought it would enhance her charms if she could curl the short locks of golden hair growing on the nape of her neck. To do this nicely she used an ordinary slate pencil, heated in the gas jet to such a degree that it almost singed the tresses as she turned them around it. Part of the stray locks had been treated, and, the pencil having been heated again, she proceeded to curl the remainder, when, to her horror, the hot pencil slipped from her fingers and rolled over her shoulders underneath her garments and lodged on her back beyond her reach. Her pitiful screams as the pencil burned into her delicate flesh soon brought her mother to her assistance, but not until she had suffered acutely and blisters had been raised that will be long in healing. The heated slate pencil, it is said, is regularly used for the hair by thousands of young ladies. This accident will probably lead those of them who hear of it to take extra care in the operation. It is much to be wished that they would also heed another warning of still greater moment. "Branding instead of beauty" was one of the threatenings pronounced against the daughters of Zion "who were haughty and walked with stretched forth necks and wanton eyes." (Isa. 3: 16, 24.)

A Clergyman Preaching His Own Funeral sermon was the strange spectacle witnessed at a church in Clark County, Georgia, on April 8. A coffin was brought into the church the day before, and the pastor, who is eighty-four years old, tested it by placing himself in it. On Sunday morning, fully three thousand persons assembled to hear what the eccentric preacher would say. Taking as his text (Eph. 2: 9), "Not of works, lest any man should boast," he gave a brief history of his life, and a modest account of his labors, from which it appeared that he was born in North Carolina, and in the course of his ministry had occupied pulpits in eleven different States. He had heard many funeral sermons preached, and had grieved as he listened to the praising of bad men and the over-lauding of good men. "I know my own faults," he said, "and my own good points. I have determined not to have men talking over my dead body about things they do not know, so I made up my mind to preach my own funeral sermon to-day. When at last my eyes are closed in death I want my body to be put away quickly under the blessing which I pronounce over myself to-day." Whatever may be thought of the discretion of the venerable preacher, his sermon afforded his hearers the spectacle of a man not afraid to think of his own death, and set before them the way by which they might attain that assurance. (II Cor. 5: 5, 6.)

The Rejection of a Wife's Petition Led to Her attempted suicide in New York, on April 11. Three years ago she listened to the wiles of a wicked man, who induced her to leave her home, and her husband and child, and live with him in Boston, Mass. As is invariably the case, the man tired of her, and neglected her. Conscience, too, continually reproached her, and finally she returned to New York, and going to her husband, confessed her sin, expressed her contrition, and begged his forgiveness. She found him obdurate; he would not forgive her nor allow her to stay in his home. She went to live with her widowed mother, but after a few weeks they were unable to pay for their board, and were in want. The wife then made another appeal to the husband she had wronged, and he gave her money and clothing, but would not reinstate her nor forgive her. She returned to her mother's home in acute agony of mind, and on Wednesday, during her mother's absence, she procured poison and drank it. Providentially her mother returned soon afterward, and discovering what she had done, had her removed to the Hospital, where by skilful treatment her life was saved. She is so melancholy, however, that it is feared she will make another attempt to kill herself. It is probable that she is partially demented, or she would dread death instead of seeking it. Her life even without her husband's pardon would be bearable if she would seek the forgiveness of God which is freely offered to her through Christ. (Isa. 55: 7.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., has resigned the pastorate of the Bethany Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia.

The New York Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church pledged the members not to vote for a candidate for any office who was not a Prohibitionist.

The Baptist anniversary will be held in Washington, D. C., on May 16, immediately after the close of the Southern Baptist Convention in Richmond.

The Rev. Henry Y. Satterlee, rector of Calvary Episcopal Church, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-first Street, has declined the call to the assistant bishopric of Ohio.

The Rev. J. F. Campbell, who went into the Pine Mountains of Tennessee in 1886, says that he found there 700 square miles without a single church edifice or Sunday-school.

The United States Senate has passed a measure to establish a commission of five persons to investigate very fully, and from all sides, economical, political, and moral, the traffic in alcoholic liquors.

Urgent requests have come to Rev. F. E. Clark, President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, to present the subject of the Society to the English public at the annual May meetings in London.

A second National Conference of the Anti-saloon Republicans is to be held in New York May 2 and 3. Its purpose is to induce the Republican National Convention to put an anti-saloon plank in its platform.

The Treasury Department of the Presbyterian Foreign Board has a very favorable outlook. The total receipts for eleven months to April 1 are $675,287, which is $92,270 over receipts last year for the same time.

The new French chapel at Springfield, Mass., which will be ready for dedication in May, makes the fifth French Congregational church in Massachusetts, one at Springfield, Holyoke, Ware, Fall River, and Lowell.

Messrs. Pratt and Birdsall have been recalled, after six weeks' labor, to the churches in Taunton, Mass., Wakefield and Cambridge. So encouraging were the results of the meetings that there was a desire for more of them.

Mr. Elliot F. Shepard, who recently purchased the well-known evening journal, the New York Mail and Exprsss, publishes a text of Scripture at the head of its editorial columns every night, and says that he intends to do so as long as he shall control them.

At Mr. D. L. Moody's meetings in Denver, Col., over three hundred persons made a profession of faith. At Leadville and Colorado Springs the services were crowded beyond any religious service ever held in that locality. The inquiry meetings were thronged

Mr. C. H. Yatman has been holding meetings at Charleston, S. C. There was a very large attendance, and judging by the reports in the secular papers, which are of a flippant, sneering character, the results are very hopeful. When the world cries out that the conversions will not hold, we may be sure that it has been hurt.

The meetings conducted by Rev. B. Fay Mills in Indianapolis have been signally blessed. On Sunday, April 1, at the suggestion of Mr. Mills, instead of the regular Sabbath-school lesson being taught, each teacher had personal conversation with the members of his class, following it up with prayer and exhortation. A correspondent says it was a reaping time.

At a recent meeting in Pittsburgh, Pa., in St. Andrews Protestant Episcopal Church, eleven clergymen of different denominations sat in the chancel and took part in an evangelistic service. The secular journals are astounded by the fact that there was no clashing in the service. They all appeared to agree as to the main doctrine to be inculcated, and as to the way of salvation.

The eleventh Triennial Conference of the Young Men's Christian Associations of all lands is to be held in Stockholm, Sweden, August 15–19. Arrangements are being made for special rates to delegates and their friends. The party will sail via the City of Berlin, Inman Line, July 21. This will give an opportunity for a brief tour in Great Britain or on the Continent, as well as attendance upon the Conference.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

THE RENT VEIL.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost. And, behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom."—Matt. 27 : 50, 51.

"Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh."—Hebrews 10 : 19, 20.

Miracles a Fit Accompaniment of the Crucifixion—The Veil of the Temple Unteareable by Human Hands—The Way Open to the Holy of Holies I. What Has Been Done—The Separating Ordinance Abolished—Separating Sin Removed—Separation in Nature Bridged—A God-made Way of Access—II. What is Imparted—Boldness of Entrance—Right to Perform Priestly Functions—Shaking Hands With an Apostle—III. How to Exercise the Grace—Use the Way of the Atonement—Characteristics of the Way.

THE death of our Lord Jesus Christ was fitly surrounded by miracles; yet it is itself so much greater a wonder than all besides, that it as far exceeds them as the sun outshines the planets which surround it. It seems natural enough that the earth should quake, that tombs should be opened, and that the veil of the temple should be rent, when He who only hath immortality gives up the ghost. The more you think of the death of the Son of God, the more will you be amazed at it. As much as a miracle excels a common fact, so doth this wonder of wonders rise above all miracles of power. That the divine Lord, even though veiled in mortal flesh, should condescend to be subject to the power of death, so as to bow His head on the cross, and submit to be laid in the tomb, is among mysteries the greatest. The death of Jesus is the marvel of time and eternity, which, as Aaron's rod swallowed up all the rest, takes up into itself all lesser marvels.

Yet the rending of the veil of the temple is not a miracle to be lightly passed over. It was made of "fine twined linen, with cherubim of cunning work." This gives the idea of a piece of lasting tapestry, which would have endured the severest strain. No human hands could have torn that sacred covering; and it could not have been divided in the midst by any accidental cause; yet, strange to say, on the instant when the holy person of Jesus was rent by death, the great veil which concealed the holiest of all was "rent in twain from the top to the bottom." What did it mean? It meant much more than I can tell you now.

A Substantial Fabric,

According to the explanation given in our second text, the rending of the veil chiefly meant that the way into the holiest, which was not before made manifest, was now laid open to all believers. Once in the year the high priest solemnly lifted a corner of this veil, with fear and trembling, and with blood and holy incense he passed into the immediate presence of Jehovah; but the tearing of the veil laid open the secret place. The rent from top to bottom gives ample space for all to enter who are called, of God's grace, to approach the throne, and to commune with the Eternal One. Upon that subject I shall try to speak this morning, praying in my inmost soul that you and I, with all other believers, may have boldness actually to enter into that which is within the veil at this time of our assembling for worship.

I. First, think of What Has Been Done.

In actual historical fact the glorious veil of the temple has been rent in twain from the top to the bottom: as a matter of spiritual fact, which is far more important to us, the separating legal ordinance is abolished. There was under the law this ordinance—that no man should ever go into the holiest of all, with the one exception of the high priest, and he but once in the year, and not without blood. If any man had attempted to enter there, he must have died, as guilty of great presumption and of profane intrusion into the secret place of the Most High. Who could stand in the presence of Him who is a consuming fire? This ordinance of distance runs all through the law; for even the holy place, which was the vestibule of the Holy of Holies, was for the priests alone. The place of the people was one of distance. All this is ended. The precept to keep back is abrogated, and the invitation is, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden." "Let us draw near" is now the filial spirit of the gospel. How thankful I am for this! what a joy it is to my soul!

Some of God's people have not yet realized this gracious fact, for still they worship afar off. Very much of prayer is to be highly commended for its reverence; but it has in it a lack of childlike confidence. I can admire the solemn and stately language of worship which recognizes the greatness of God; but it will not warm my heart nor express my soul until it has also blended therewith the joyful nearness of that perfect love which casteth out fear, and ventures to speak with our Father in heaven as a child speaketh with its father on earth. My brother, no veil remains. Why dost thou stand afar off, and tremble like a slave? Draw near, with full assurance of faith. The veil is rent: access is free. Come boldly to the throne of grace.

This rending of the veil signified, also, the removal of the separating sin. Sin is, after all, between God and man. That veil of blue and purple and fine twined linen could not really separate man from God: for He is, as to His omnipresence, not far from any one of us. Sin is a far more effectual wall of separation: it opens an abyss between the sinner and his Judge. Sin shuts out prayer, and praise, and every form of religious exercise. Sin makes God walk contrary to us, because we walk contrary to Him. Sin, by separating the soul from God, causes spiritual death, which is both the effect and the penalty of transgression. Our Lord Jesus Christ put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. He taketh away the sin of the world, and so the veil is rent. By the shedding of His most precious blood we are cleansed from all sin, and that most gracious promise of the new covenant is fulfilled: "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." When sin is gone, the barrier is broken down, the unfathomable gulf is filled.

The Great Divider

Separating Nature.

Next, be it remembered that the separating sinfulness is also taken away through our Lord Jesus. It is not only what we have done, but what we are, that keeps us apart from God. We have sin engrained in us: even those who have grace dwelling in them have to complain, "When I would do good, evil is present with me." Difference of nature hangs up a veil, but the new birth, and the sanctification which follows upon it, through the precious death of Jesus, remove that veil. He that hates sin, strives after holiness, and labors to perfect it in the fear of God, is in fellowship with God. It is a blessed thing when we love what God loves, when we seek what God seeks, when we are in sympathy with divine aims, and are obedient to divine commands: for with such persons will the Lord dwell. When grace makes us partakers of the divine nature, then are we at one with the Lord, and the veil is taken away.

"Yes," saith one, "I see now how the veil is taken away in three different fashions; but still God is God, and we are but poor puny men; between God and man there must of necessity be a separating veil, caused by the great disparity between the Creator and the creature. How can the finite and the infinite commune? Although this is a much thinner veil than those I have already mentioned, yet it is a veil; and it is hard for man to be at home with God. But the Lord Jesus bridges

The Separating Distance.

The gulf is completely filled by the fact that Jesus has gone through with us even to the bitter end, to death, even to the death of the cross. He has followed out the career of manhood even to the tomb: and thus we see that the veil, which hung between the nature of God and the nature of man, is rent in the person of our Lord Jesus Christ. We enter into the holiest of all through his flesh, which links manhood to Godhead.

Now, you see what it is to have the veil taken away. Solemnly note that this avails only for believers: those who refuse Jesus refuse the only way of access to God. God is not approachable, except through the rending of the veil by the death of Jesus. Come this way, and you may come freely. Refuse to come this way, and there hangs between you and God an impassable veil. Without Christ you are without God, and without hope. Jesus himself assures you, "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." God grant that this may not happen to any of you!

The rent is not in one corner, but in the midst, as Luke tells us. It is through which we may see a little, but it is rent from the top to the bottom. There is an entrance made for the greatest sinners. If there had only been a small hole cut through it, the lesser offenders might have crept through; but what an act of abounding mercy is this, that the veil is rent in the midst, and rent from top to bottom, so that the chief of sinners may find ample passage! This also shows that for believers there is no hindrance to the fullest and freest access to God. Oh, for much boldness, this morning, to come where God has not only set open the door, but has lifted the door from its hinges, and removed it, post and bar.

Not a Slight Rent,

I want you to notice that this veil, when it was rent, was rent by God, not by man. It was not the act of an irreverent mob; it was not the midnight outrage of a set of profane priests; it was the act of God alone. Nobody stood within the veil; and on the outer side of it stood the priests, only fulfilling their ordinary vocation of offering sacrifice. It must have astounded them when they saw that holy place laid bare in a moment. How they fled, as they saw that massive veil divided without human hand in a second of time! Who rent it? Who but God Himself? God Himself has set the ladder between earth and heaven. Come to him now, ye humble ones. Behold, he sets before you an open door!

II. And now I ask you to follow me, dear friends, in the second place, to an experimental realization of my subject. We now notice

What We Have:

"Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest." Observe the threefold "having" in the paragraph now before us, and be not content without the whole three. We have "boldness to enter in." There are degrees in boldness; but this is one of the highest. When the veil was rent, it required some boldness to look within. If any did look into the holiest when the veil was rent, they were among the boldest of men; for others must have feared lest the fate of the men of Bethshemesh would be theirs. (1 Sam. 6 : 19.) Beloved, the Holy Spirit invites you to look into the holy place, and view it all with reverent eye; for it is full of teaching to you. Look, look boldly through Jesus Christ, but do not content yourself with looking! Hear what the text says: "Having boldness to enter in."

Let us follow the example of the high priest and, having entered, let us perform the functions of one who enters in. "Boldness to enter in" suggests that we act as men who are in their proper places. To stand within the veil filled the servant of God with an overpowering sense of the divine presence. If ever in his life he was near to God, he was certainly near to God then when, quite alone, shut in, and excluded from all the world, he had no one with him except the glorious Jehovah. O my beloved, may we this morning enter into the holiest in this sense! Jesus hath made us nigh by His precious blood. Try day by day to live in as great nearness to God, as the high priest felt when he stood for a while within the secret of Jehovah's tabernacle. The high priest had a sense of communion with God; he was not only near, but he spake with God. Beloved, do you know what it is to commune with God? Words are poor vehicles for this fellowship; but what a blessed thing it is! Fellowship with the Most High is elevating, purifying, strengthening. Enter into it boldly. Enter into his revealed thoughts, even as he graciously enters into yours; rise to his plans, as he condescends to yours; ask to be uplifted to him, even as he deigns to dwell with you.

This is what the rent of the veil brings us when we have boldness to enter in; but, mark you, the rent veil brings us nothing until we have boldness to enter in.

Why Stand We Without?

Jesus brings us near, and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. Let us not be slow to take up our freedom, and come boldly to the throne.

But the high priest, if you recollect, after he had communed and prayed with God, came out and blessed the people. That is what you will do if you have the boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus: you will bless the people that surround you. The Lord has blessed you, and He will make you a blessing. Your ordinary conduct and conversation will be a blessed example; the words you speak for Jesus will be like a dew from the Lord: the sick will be comforted by your words; the despondent will be encouraged by your faith; the lukwarm will be recovered by your love. May we each one have boldness to enter in, that we may come forth laden with benedictions!

Why is it that we have boldness? Is it not because of our relationship to Christ which makes us "brethren"? "Having therefore, brethren, boldness." The feeblest believer has as much right to enter into the holy place as Paul had; because he is one of the brotherhood. I remember a ryhme by John Ryland, in which he says of heaven:

"They all shall be there, the great and the small; Poor I shall shake hands with the blessed St. Paul."

I have no doubt that we shall have such a position, and such fellowship. Meanwhile, we do shake hands with him this morning as he calls us brethren. We are brethren to one another, because we are brethren to Jesus. Where we see the Apostle go, we will go; yea, rather, where we see the Great Apostle and High Priest of our profession enter, we will follow. "Having, therefore, boldness."

Our boldness arises from the perfection of His sacrifice. Read the fourteenth verse: "He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." We rely upon the sacrifice of Christ, believing that He was such a perfect substitute for us, that it is not possible for us to die after our substitute has died; and we must be accepted, because He is accepted. Moreover, we have this for certain, that as a priest had a right to dwell near to God, we have that privilege; for Jesus hath made us kings and priests unto God, and all the privileges of the office come to us with the office itself. We have a mission within the holy place; we are there upon holy business, and so we have no fear of being intruders. A burglar may enter a house, but he does not enter with boldness; he is always afraid lest he should be surprised. You might enter a stranger's house without an invitation, but you would feel no boldness there. We do not enter the holiest as house-breakers, nor as strangers; we come in obedience to a call, to fulfil our office.

Called To Enter

I cannot leave this point until I have reminded you that we may have this boldness of entering in at all times, because the veil is always rent, and is never restored to its old place. The Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all times into the holy place within the veil before the mercy-seat, which is upon the ark; that he die not;" but the Lord saith not so to us. Dear child of God, you may at all times have "boldness to enter in." The veil is rent both day and night. Yea, let me say it, even when thine eye of faith is dim, still enter in; when evidences are dark, still have "boldness to enter in"; and even if thou hast unhappily sinned, remember that access is open to thy penitent prayer. Come still through the rent veil, sinner as thou art. What though thou hast backslidden, what though thou art grieved with the sense of thy wanderings, come even now! "To-day, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts," but enter at once; for the veil is not there to exclude thee, though doubt and unbelief may make you think it is so. The veil cannot be there, for it was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.

III. My time has fled, and I shall not have space to speak as I meant to do upon the last point—how we exercise this grace. Let me give you the notes of what I would have said.

Let us at this hour enter into the holiest.

Behold The Way!

We come by the way of atonement: "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus." I have been made to feel really ill through the fierce and blasphemous words that have been used of late by gentlemen of the modern school concerning the precious blood. I will not defile my lips by a repetition of the thrice-accursed things which they have dared to utter while trampling on the blood of Jesus. Everywhere throughout this divine Book you meet with the precious blood. How can he call himself a Christian who speaks in flippant and profane language of the blood of atonement? My brothers, there is no way into the holiest, even though the veil be rent, without blood. We have always to plead the atonement. As without shedding of blood there is no remission of sin, so without that blood there is no access to God.

Next, the way by which we come is an unfailing way. Please notice that word—"by a new way"; this means by a way which is always fresh. Then the apostle adds, it is a "living way." A wonderful word! The way by which the high priest went into the holy place, was of course a material way, and so a dead way. We come by suitable to our spirits. It is a dedicated way: "which He hath consecrated for us." When a new road is opened, it is set apart and dedicated for the public use. Sometimes a public building is opened by a king or a prince, and so is dedicated to its purpose. Beloved, the way to God through Jesus Christ is dedicated by Christ, and ordained by Christ for the use of poor, believing sinners, such as we are. Lastly, it is a Christly way; for when we come to God, we still come through His flesh. There is no coming to Jehovah except by the incarnate God. God in human flesh is our way to God; the substitutionary death of the Word made flesh is also the way to the Father.

A Spiritual Way,

Beloved, I have done when I have just remarked upon the next two verses, which are necessary to complete the sense, but which I was obliged to omit this morning, since there would be no time to handle them. The apostle tells us that we may not only come with boldness, because our high priest leads the way, but because we ourselves are prepared for entrance. Two things the high priest had to do before he might enter: one was, to be sprinkled with blood, and this we have; for "our hearts are sprinkled from an evil conscience."

The other requisite for the priests was to have their "bodies washed with pure water." This we have received in symbol in our baptism, and in reality in the spiritual cleansing of regeneration. To us has been fulfilled the prayer:

"Let the water and the blood,
From Thy riven side which flowed,
Be of sin the double cure,
Cleanse me from its guilt and power."

We have known the washing of water by the Word, and we have been sanctified by the spirit of His grace; therefore, let us enter into the holiest. Why should we stay away? Why not begin to-day that sweet enjoyment of perfect reconciliation and delight in God, which shall go on increasing in intensity until you behold the Lord in open vision, and go no more out? Heaven will bring a great change in condition, but not in our standing, if even now we stand within the veil. It will be only such a change as there is between the perfect day and the day-break; for we have the same sun, and the same light from the sun, and the same privilege of walking in the light. "Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, turn, my beloved, and be thou like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of Division." Amen, and Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE ROMAN PUNISHMENT.*

It is observable that the Roman magistrates, when they gave sentence upon any one to be scourged, a bundle of rods tied hard with many knots was laid before them. The reason was this: that whilst the beadle, or flagellifer, was untying the knots, which he was to do in a certain order and not in any other hasty or sudden way, the magistrate might see the carriage and deportment of the delinquent, whether he were sorry for his fault, and showed any hope of amendment, that then he might recall his sentence, or mitigate the punishment; otherwise he was corrected the more severely. Thus God in the punishment of sinners, how patient He is; how loath to strike; how slow to anger if there be but any hopes of recovery! How many knots doth He untie? How many rubs doth He make in His way to justice? He doth not try us by martial law, but pleads the case with us, "Why will ye die, O House of Israel?" And all this to see whether the poor sinner will throw himself down at His feet, whether he will come in, and make his peace and be saved.

The King's Thread.

It is reported of the old kings of Peru, that they were wont to use a tassel or fringe made of red wool, which they wore upon their heads, and when they sent any governor to rule as viceroy in any part of their country, they delivered to him one of the threads of their tassel, and for one of those simple threads he was as much obeyed as if he had been the king himself—yea, it hath so happened that a king hath sent a governor only with this thread to slay men and women of a whole province, without any further commission. For of such power and authority was the king's tassel with them, that they willingly submitted thereunto, even at the sight of one thread of it. Now, it is to be hoped that if one thread shall be so forcible to draw heathen obedience, there will be no need of cart-ropes to haul on that which is Christian.

The Parson Converted.

Mr. Haslam, telling the story of his conversion, says, "I do not remember all I said, but I felt a wonderful light and joy coming into my soul. Whether it was something in my words, or my manner, or my look, I know not; but all of a sudden a local preacher, who happened to be in the congregation, stood up, and putting up his arms, shouted out in Cornish manner, "The parson is converted! The parson is converted! Hallelujah!" and in another moment his voice was lost in the shouts and praises of three or four hundred of the congregation. Instead of rebuking his extraordinary "brawling," as I should have done in a former time, I joined in the outburst of praise; and to make it more orderly I gave out the doxology—"Praise God from whom all blessings flow"—which the people sung with heart and voice, over and over again.

A Son Puzzled.

An ungodly youth accompanied his parents to hear a certain minister. The subject of the discourse was the heavenly state. On returning home, the young man expressed his admiration of the preacher's talents. "But," said he, turning to his mother, "I was surprised that you and my father were in tears." "Ah, my son!" replied the anxious mother, "I did weep, not because I feared my own personal interest in the subject, or that of your father; but I worried for fear that you, my beloved child, would be forever banished from the blessedness of heaven." "I supposed," said the father turning to his wife, "that those were your reflections; the same concern for our dear son made me weep also." These tender remarks found their way to the young man's heart, and led him to repentance.

* From Spurgeon's Sermon Notes: Volume IV., Romans to Revelation. The outlines of sermons which this volume contains are useful to preachers, Sunday-school teachers, and all Bible students: being a commentary of a most practical character, with anecdotes and quotations illustrative of the texts. Pp. 408; Price $1; Published by Robert Carter & Brothers, 530 Broadway, New York.

The Marriage of Prince Oscar of Sweden to Miss Ebba Munck.

A Hindoo Mother.

Away over in India a poor native woman—like Naomi—"was left of her two sons." She did not, perhaps, know enough to think about God at all in her grief; but she would take no comfort. To everything that could be said, she had but one answer: "I had but two, and they are both gone."

Day after day she pined and fretted, going listlessly about, her life "empty" of all but a blank despair. One morning, as she wandered here and there among the people of the mission, one of them again remonstrated. But the poor thing gave her old reply: "I had but two, and they are both gone." "Look!" said the worker, turning, and pointing towards a group near by, where a white lady of the mission stood directing some dusky natives; "Do you see her?" The woman looked and saw a sweet, pale face; patient, gentle, glad, as clear as a sky washed blue with storms, but wearing that unmistakable look which tells that storms have been. "Yes," she said, "I see her." "Well," said the other, "she has lost her sons too!"

The poor native mother gazed for a minute, spellbound, then she sprang towards her. "Oh, lady," she cried, "Did you have two sons? Are they both gone?"

And now the white mother on her part turned and looked. "Yes," she said, "I had two."

"Are they both gone?"

"Both."

"But they were all I had," cried the other, "and they are both gone!"

"And mine are both gone," said the white lady, clasping the hands of her poor sister in sorrow. "But Jesus took them; and they are with Jesus, and Jesus is with me. And by and by I shall have them again."

And from that hour the native woman sat at her white sister's feet, followed her about, and from her would take comfort—"the comfort wherein she herself was comforted of God."

THE ROYAL SWEDISH WEDDING.

(See Illustration.)

THE marriage of Prince Oscar of Sweden and Norway and Mlle. Ebba Munck, whose portraits appeared in this journal on March 8, took place at St. Stephen's Church, Bournemouth, England, on March 15. It was a day of brilliant sunshine, and the air was fragrant with the aroma of the surrounding pine forests. The church was decorated with flowers, and filled with a fashionable assemblage. The chancel-steps were draped with ruby velvet. The first of the wedding party to arrive were the Crown Princess of Denmark and the Duchess of Albany, the former attired in a costume of old gold velvet, the latter wearing a dress of gray-striped silk. The Queen of Sweden was dressed in ruby velvet, with white bonnet and feather-plume. The bride entered with her cousin, Colonel Munck. The bridegroom wore the gold and blue uniform of a naval commander. The bride wore a dress of ivory satin trimmed with lace and feathers, and had on her head a coronet of myrtle and orange-blossoms surrounded by a veil. Bridesmaids there were none.

The service, which was according to the rites of the Swedish Lutheran Church, was conducted by Pastor Gustaf Reskow, one of the Swedish court chaplains. It began with the singing in English of the Psalm commencing, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." The singing over, the pastor delivered an address in Swedish to the pair, who now stood before him. Dwelling on the words, "If we walk in the light," he spoke of the eternal light that could illumine this world of darkness. The address was brief, and then came the questions according to the Lutheran ritual, "Wilt thou, Oscar Charles Augustus, have this woman to be thy wife, to love her always, in good days and in evil days?" The Prince made answer, "Yes," as also did the bride to the reciprocal question. Then t bridegroom placed the ring on the open bo in the pastor's hands, and, turning to the bri said in Swedish, "I take you to be my law wife, for good times and bad times, and in tok I give you as a symbol this ring." Both h the golden circle, and the bride repeated t same formula, substituting the words, "and token I accept this ring." After Psalm had been sung in Swedish, the blessing v pronounced over the married pair, who kn together on a gold-embroidered cushion. T hymn, "Jesus is my best friend," followed, t service terminating with two verses of t English marriage hymn. "How welcome v the call, and sweet the festal day."

During the singing Prince Oscar led bride to his Royal mother, who kissed a embraced her several timer with much tend ness. Then the bridegroom himself was warr embraced by her, and from the Queen th passed on to the Crown Princess of Denma who kissed both, and so on to the Duchess Albany and Prince Oscar's two brothers. T service occupied twenty-five minutes. Sub quently Prince and Princess Bernadotte, name by which the newly married couple w be known, left for the Isle of Wight, where th were to spent the honeymoon.

A STREET IN CAIRO.

(See Illustration on page 253.)

A RECENT traveller in Egypt has called "the land of contrasts." The name is app priate, for two civilizations are there side by si The ruins of magnificent temples, built of sto quarried under the lash of the Pharaohs, w derful statuary and the remains of edifices unequaled grandeur, stand there in sharp c trast with the mean, almost squalid, erections a race as incapable of appreciating the bea of the ancient edifices as they are of constru ing them. The traveller finds it difficult realize, as he looks upon the people and cities sunk in lazy indifference to all but wants of the hour, that Egypt was once mig among the ruling nations of the world. pecially in Cairo, the capital of Egypt, is contrast conspicuous. There the impos randeur of the achievements of ygone generations in close prox-mity to the tawdry work of mod-rn times, renders the latter still ıore contemptible.

The city of Cairo covers about hree square miles and is sur-ounded by a wall. Ismail Pasha, he former Khedive, spent enor-ıous sums in beautifying the city ccording to his notions. New treets were opened, gorgeous uildings erected, and a system of as mains laid down. Yet even hese modern improvements ould not make Cairo a modern ity. The antipathies of race and eligion existing among its peo-le, rendered it unsafe to open ıe city to free intercourse. The uarters inhabited respectively by hristians, Jews, Turks, &c., are ill separated by huge gates, at hich a guard of soldiers is placed very night. The street repre-ented in the illustration is in the ıost ancient part of the city, and orms a connecting link between ıe remote past and the present. he majority of the recent build-ıgs of the poor are of mud only. To get an idea of the city and rrounding country, as a whole, is only necessary to ascend to ıe summit of the citadel, and it then spread out before the ectator like a map. The fol-wing is a graphic description of ıe scene as described by Dr. ames Ludlow: That silver gleam inding down at our left is the ile, whose source has been the eographical enigma of all cen-ries, whose annual overflow deems from the desert a nar-w ribbon of fertility, which has ourished the mightiest empires, ıd whose combined mysteries ıd beneficence drew men to orship it in one of the earliest ıd most influential religions of ankind.

A Street in Cairo, Egypt.

Beyond the river, beneath the sands of the ibyan desert, lie the buried ruins of ancient emphis, where the prostrate colossal statue of ameses II., like some giant guard asleep at his ost, has been on duty for three thousand years. little to the north, and within an easy car-ıge drive of a morning, rise the great Pyramids, e largest and oldest works of man. So vast ere they, that though they have been frequent-used as quarries for palaces, fortifications, and osques, they are not from this distance visibly minished. Around them are tombs and tem-es in which are buried the secrets of remotest tiquity, over which the Sphinx watches with s motionless lips.

On this side of the river lies the suburb known Old Cairo, by many believed to be the Baby-n mentioned in the first Epistle of Peter, d certainly that Babylon to which Strabo re-rs, and whose old Roman fort is still visible ove the débris of two thousand years.

Directly before us as we look north from the tadel lies Cairo proper. The city was founded the Fatemite princes in 969 A. D. The planet ars, or Kaher, being then ascendant, they med the city El-Kaherah, from which the esent pronunciation, Cairo, is derived. The rest of minarets and domes, houses and tombs, rks every generation since.

A natural division of the city would be into o sections, the one of the dead, the other of e living; for large districts of it are given up tombs. Many of these are really memorial osques, in which lie the bodies of the Caliphs d Mameluke princes. Here and there is a k man's tomb, at the window of which is a ıning stream of water and a cup, that the thirsty may drink and bless the memory of the departed. Most of the tombs are unsightly slabs or plastered mounds, hardly distinguishable in color from the deep dust which, unlike our green grass, glares around them. These cemeteries are perfect Tophets of filth, the lair of mangy dogs and lazared men. The city of the living is majestic from a distance, with its homes of nearly 400,000 people, and its 400 mosques. But when we descend into it we will find it compact with as much squalor and misery as can be found elsewhere within the same limits on the globe.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 239.)

Philip's Friend.

I THOUGHT in the prison Rebecca would say nothing, and the fifteen minutes given to us would pass in silence. She stood, holding fast by the iron bars, and looking at Robin with fixed eyes; all her face quivering, and her lips twitching; while he stared back at her, sullen and miserable, with his felt mask pushed up over his forehead, ready to be pulled down again so as to hide his face, when he went back among his fellow-convicts. How many minutes had gone I could not tell, but I felt as though we had been there a long, long while, gazing at one another, before Rebecca found voice to speak to him.

"Robin," she said, "forgive me."

"No," he answered, gruffly.

"Harken to me, Robin," she went on, "I've made up my mind what I'll do. I'll come out to Australia, and I'll get a place as servant near where you are; and if ever I can see you, I'll go through fire and water to get a sight of you; and whenever yo're let out, I'll be there ready to take hold of your hand the moment you come through the jail-door. Ay! I will, if there's a breath of life in my body."

I saw a gleam come over Robin's miserable face, and into his sullen eyes; and he stretched out his hand through the bars, as if he could take hold of hers there and then. But he could not reach her, nor her hand touch his.

"You'll forgive me, if I'll do what I say!" asked Rebecca earnestly; "it's many a year to bide, but I'll do it, if the Lord keeps me alive. I'll be at thy prison door ready for thee to come out; and we'll begin a new life, my dear, thee and me. You had a good mother, Robin."

"Ay!" he said with a sob, and the tears rolled down his face.

"Oh! if I'd only been a good woman like her!" cried Rebecca, "but God's forgave me, Robin, and He'll forgive you too. Only think of your mother, and ask God to forgive you, and help us to be good till we meet again. I must go away now, and may never see you for a long while; maybe not till your time's over; but I'll be there, in Australia; and you say to yourself till then, 'She's true to me at last.' Tell me if you forgive me before I go."

"Ay! I forgie' thee fully and freely," he answered. "God bless thee, lass! I'll look out for thee to be watin' for me out yonder."

"Time's up!" said the warder, throwing down his newspaper, and coming close to us.

"Good-bye, Robin! Good-bye, my dear!" cried Rebecca; "I'll be there!"

"Good-bye!" he said; but there was no time for another word from either of them.

So Rebecca and I went our way, leaving Robin within those dreary walls, with but a spark of hope shining in the far-off years. We told Philip Champion of the pledge she had given to him; and his face glowed, and his eyes sparkled with joy, as he said it was a true thing, and a noble thing to do. And he called Rebecca his friend and sister, and promised to use all the influence he had at home or abroad on behalf of Robin Cherrick, though it was little anybody could do for him; for the sentence was passed, and he must bear it as the due punishment for his crime. But Philip made every arrangement for Rebecca, so that she could go out to Australia with ease and comfort; and, though it did not come to my knowledge until I heard from her months afterwards, he settled upon her the thousand pounds which had been promised to her by his uncle. So she was a rich woman in that distant country; and being clever and quick, she opened a small business, and began to make a home for herself and Robin when his time was up.

I went to Liverpool with Rebecca to start her on her long voyage. The ship lay in the middle of the river, with a flag floating from the mast-head. There was a crowd of emigrants waiting on the pier, for the pilot-boat to put them on board of her; and one little child in the throng, who looked up into Rebecca's face saw something there that took her fancy, and would cling to her, till Rebecca took her up in her strong arms, and held her there, kissing her fondly from time to time. Then I knew she would not be lonely or dull on board ship, through the long, idle months. I went across in the boat with them, and saw the berth where she was to sleep. But I was dazed by the bustle about me, and hardly knew what I said or did, till there came the clang of a bell, and a shout of "All friends ashore!" and Rebecca clasped me about the neck, and burst out crying. They hurried me along, and down into the boat again; and when my eyes were clear from tears I saw the ship lying behind us, with its masts against the light of the setting sun; and the blue flag was being lowered from the mast-head.

And I said to myself, "There isn't a truer heart than hers on board yon ship. God grant she and Robin may win through to a good old age yet, like Transome and me."

* * * * * * *

It is I, Milicent Carr, who have written down the foregoing narrative, from the lips of Mrs. Transome herself, scarcely venturing to alter a word in them: yet now and again retouching them, as fondly and carefully as one brushes away a speck from a portrait that we love.

And now that the time is come when the whole is complete, and the past has "orbed into the perfect star, we saw not when we dwelt therein;" and I can look back at it, with eyes still dimmed with tears, and see it shining with a brightness that grows more and more unto the perfect day—now I am ready to tell you myself all that is lacking to finish the history Alice Transome began.

First of all, then, you must be told how empty and dreary my own existence had become, even before I had fairly passed through my girlhood. My brother, George Carr, was suffering from a spinal complaint, which would make him for life a prisoner in his own room. My father and mother had made every arrangement for the future with a view to his comfort solely; and I was left in charge of him, in solemn charge, by both of them. His illness kept us in so utter a seclusion that I had no friends, no acquaintances even, besides the busy physician, who spent a few minutes with us occasionally, not in the hope of effecting a cure for George, but to render to him any alleviation of his pain which was possible. Two old servants, a middle-aged man and his wife, who had no wish to change their condition, formed our household.

Our house was a detached dwelling; one of those places in Brompton presenting a blank side to the road, and surrounded by high walls over which no passer-by can catch a glimpse of the interior. It had been bought by my father purposely for George, who could be carried out upon the lawn, when the summer was hottest, and lie there under the rustling leaves of the poplars, or the thick branches of the elms, where the birds chirped drowsily from their hiding-places amidst the foliage. But after some years even this change became too trying for him; and all he could bear was to have the windows flung wide open, and lie with his pale face watching the summer clouds floating across the little field of blue which could be seen from his sofa. Sometimes for hours together he could not suffer the sound of my voice, nor the turning of a leaf in my book; and all I could do for him was to sit in perfect stillness, where, if his languid eyelids opened for an instant, he could see my face, and feel that he was not forsaken.

But all this wore out my girlhood. The long seclusion made me shy and formal; and it had become difficult, if not impossible, for me to form any friendship, should the chance come across me. I did not know how to respond if any stranger spoke to me, except on mere matters of business. By the time I was five-and-twenty I felt as old as many women are at fifty. All the possibilities of my life seemed exhausted; and only a vast barren wilderness stretched before me, which made me shudder as I looked forward, and saw nothing between me and the far horizon except a level flat, threatening a perpetual monotony and weariness.

"Milly," said George to me, one day when he was unusually well, "you and I need more interest in our lives. What do you say to adopting a child?"

"Adopting what?" I cried, feeling sure I had not understood him aright.

"A child!" he repeated: "a boy, I think; for if he were too noisy and boisterous, we might send him out of the way when I could not bear with him."

"If you had a child to think of," he went on, "you would feel younger again; and perhaps I should as well. I fancy I should like to watch a boy playing in the garden, or hear him whistling about our quiet house, or coming in from school every evening."

"But there are your bad days," I objected.

"Well! I really think I give way to my bad days," he said: "but when I cannot bear a noise, he must stay out of hearing somewhere, or learn to be quiet for a while. At any rate, we could try it for three months; we should know by the end of that time."

We talked it over for a day or two; and the plan took deeper hold of us both, until at last I wrote out an advertisement, similar to some I had seen in the Times, and sent it to that paper. I had often been struck by the number of benevolent persons who offered to adopt children; so I followed their example, and waited with great anxiety for the answers.

Nearly all the children offered to us were babies. I had to reply, stating more particularly what we were looking for. After that I had several very extraordinary persons coming to the house, with boys of different ages, who did not at all answer my expectations. I began to think that our plan must fall to the ground.

But one morning a letter in a child's writing, a large, round hand, with very shaky upstrokes and downstrokes, slanted all ways, came to me by post. I opened it with some curiosity, and read it aloud to George.

"My father is Captain John Champion, and he's gon to see a long wile ago, and never came back. i am living with Mrs. brown in castle street, Burn Ston, lankysheir, and go to School, were i lerne to rite and read. I will try to be good, for i no Jesus loves me, and wants me to be good. Pleas let me cum for 3 months, and see how you like me, and if i am a good boy. i was eight years old last berthday, and father's been away 3 yeres, a long wile. he told me be good and tell the truth, till i come back, and i am goin to do it. i want to lern a grate deal before he comes back again. i havent any mother, or brother, or sister, only father; and mrs. brown ses she must send me to the yuneon if father dosant come home soon. i am very sorrie and fritened."

Poor little letter! and poor little writer! We laughed; but we did not care to meet each other's eyes, for fear of seeing tears in them. It happened that my brother's doctor came that very day; and it turned out that he had some friend in Burnstone, to whom he offered to write about the boy. This gentleman saw Mrs. Brown and Philip Champion, learned the boy's story, and gave us so favorable an account of him, that I forwarded money and directions to the woman to send him up at once to me in London.

I remember that the day Philip came was one of George's worst days. From early in the morning he had been lying in a stupor, if it could be called a stupor which was miserably sensitive to every sound; and I had been sitting with him, at his feet, facing him, so that he could see me without stirring. Both of us heard Thomas leave the house, about the time when the train which brought the child was due in London; and both of us heard him come in again about an hour afterwards. But neither of us spoke or moved. George lay like one dying, and I sat still with a sinking heart, as I dreaded to hear the shrill voice of a child breaking through the profound silence. I began to fear that neither of us had counted the cost as we should have done.

But the silence was not broken. The twilight came on, and George slept a little while. When he woke up again, he spoke in quite a blithe and cheerful tone.

"It's past, Milly," he said; "one more day is gone for ever, thank God! Now run and look at your boy, and send my tea."

I was glad to move, for I was stiff and cramped with my long watch. Very weary and bowed-down I felt; and my heart was heavy with the thoughts that had passed through my brain during the day. How many days there were in every year! and how many years in a lifetime! My spirit seemed cramped as well as my body, and I could not force it out of its attitude of dull melancholy and foreboding. How long were we to bear the burden of such lives as ours?

I could not even wish to see the child I had sent for. I went into my own room, and had tea there alone, shrinking from the charge I had undertaken. I felt a desire to send him away again without seeing him. It seemed to me, perhaps because I was brought into personal contact with so few people, that to see any of our fellow-creatures involved us in a new and stronger relationship toward them. When we awake from our dream of death, and our open eyes look upon Him who has loved us, and in whom we have believed though we saw Him not, what new tenderness and discipleship, strengthened a thousand-fold, will spring up in our hearts for Him!

But I could not send the boy away unseen. Martha waited upon me very slowly, and coughed a short, irritated cough now and then, as if about to speak, but I would not give her the opportunity. After I had finished my tea I put off going down-stairs as long as I could; and then I went reluctantly, looking forward with dismay to the three months' trial we had partly promised to the boy.

I opened the door of the dining-room so gently, from long habit, that the child did not hear me. A blazing fire filled the grate, but there was no other light. He was sitting in my father's large old armchair, drawn in front of the fire; and his curly little head was resting on his hand, as he gazed dreamily at the glowing embers. There was a wistful, subdued quiet about his face and posture that went straight to my heart. He was waiting patiently, that was evident, for something unknown to come to him. I did not think, as Mrs. Transome did, of the one Blessed Child, who has made all children's lives sacred; but his face called to my mind those angel faces to be seen in the pictures of the old religious painters.

As I paused on the threshold the boy became conscious of my presence, and slipped down from his high seat, crossing the room on tip-toe, and speaking in a whisper almost too low for me to hear.

"Is he better now?" he asked; "I have not made any noise."

The earnest, uplifted face was so winning that I bent down, and pressed my lips to the soft cheek as fondly as if it were no new face to me. Nor did it seem new. That odd trick of the brain, which makes us feel as if we could dimly remember the present in the long-forgotten past, brought to me the sensation of having looked upon it, and caressed it in some former life.

"Yes; he is better now," I said, sitting down in the chair he had left, and taking him on my knee, "and you've been as quiet as a little mouse."

"I knew he'd be better soon," he answered with a beaming glance at once shy and merry, "because as soon as that man told me he was ill, I asked God to make him better. I knew God would do it."

"Are you sure of it?" I asked; for it had been plain to me long ago that our prayers were too feeble to reach the ear of God.

"Sure!" said the child, "why! isn't he better? My mother told me God is everywhere, and I must ask Him for what I want, just as I asked her. I was a very little boy then; but I've never forgotten it."

"You must never forget it, Philip," I said. But had not I forgotten it? Was there not within me the lurking unbelief that God was so near as to catch every whisper; nay, even to see my thoughts afar off? I leaned back in the chair, with my arm about the child, who knelt o little of me, yet trusted me so simply, that lready his face was bright with a smile as he ooked up to me. Was it possible that I might o lean upon God, of whom I knew so little, and ook up into His unseen face with a trust as ull? Was His arm really about me, as mine vas about Philip?

"If you love me," he said, "and let me live ere till father comes home, I'll try to be very uiet and good. Mrs. Transome said you'd be ure to love me if you hadn't a heart of stone. 'ou haven't a heart of stone, have you?"

"I hope not," I answered, stroking his wist- ul face.

(To be Continued.)

THE TALENTS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

. S. Lesson for April 29, Matt. 25: 14-30. Golden Text, Rev. 2: 10.

he Owner of the Talents Entrusted for Use—The Money in the Stewards' Hands—A Law of the Kingdom—The Trust Unequally Distributed —The Rule of Distribution Excuses Inadmissible—A Selfish Life Inexcusable—The Typical Man of One Talent—The Coming Reckoning Time—The Servants Becoming Rulers—Misconceptions of the Character of God.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give hee a crown of life." (Rev. 2: 10.) In the parble of the virgins, the Church, at the time of Christ's coming, is likened to virgin bride-souls vaiting for the bridegroom. But the children f God must not only shine and look for their ord. This is indeed the highest kind of serice, and few are they who answer to this decription of the wise virgins. But there are also ervants (literally slaves) who wait for their Lord vith consciences quickened by the Holy Ghost, nd with a high sense of the responsibility vhich devolves upon them. Christ is repreented "as a man travelling into a far country, vho called his own servants and delivered unto iem his goods." Let us not forget that whatver power or talent we possess is not our own, ut God's. St. Paul asks: "Who maketh thee o differ from another? and what hast thou iat thou didst not receive? Now, if thou didst eceive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst ot received it?" (1 Cor. 4: 7.) St. Peter says, As every man hath received the gift, even so inister the same one to another, as f the manifold grace of God." (1 Pet. 4: 10.) tewards act for another, and are responsible, at l times and for all things, to their master. As ewards, we cannot look upon our time as ours o be planned out and used as we like. It is od's time, and if He chooses to break up our ans and disorganize them, or if He permits iat we shall be interrupted, He has a perfect ght to do so; the time is His. If we have oney, we have it but as stewards for Him; we ave no right to make investments, or to buy tates on our own account. Nor have we any ght to give to a pertinacious beggar, on the me principle as the unjust judge avenged the oor widow: "Because the woman troubleth me, will avenge her, lest by her continual coming. e weary me." (Luke 18: 5.) It is the Lord's oney, and He never gives because He is worn into it; neither can we, as His stewards. e avengeth speedily, and "giveth to all men berally, and upbraideth not." (James 1: 5.) If od has given us a good voice, it is not in order at we may gain glory for our singing, or readg, or speaking; it is God's voice, and we are it stewards to use it as He directs. If we have osition, it is not that we should make use of at position to assume superiority over others, id thus gratify our pride and despise others. o; the position is God's, to be held for Him; it does not serve to the increase of His kingm, it is misappropriated.

Good Stewards

In the laws of His kingdom, the great ones e the readiest to serve, and their dignity is own in their likeness to their Master, who me, "not to be ministered unto, but to minisr, and to give His life a ransom for many." e often see in people who have risen from poverty to riches, a vulgar assumption of superiority; they think they would lose caste if they were to ride third-class, or wash the tea things, or make a bed, or carry a parcel; whereas those who are of gentle birth always, by instinct, do what they can to help others. It is so in the spiritual life. Many who are put in some position of authority over others, in churches or missions, set themselves up as being something superior, and lord it over those who are placed under them; but the bark of the wolf betrays them beneath the sheep's clothing. If we have a house, the house is God's property, to be used for Him, to receive His messengers, and to serve for the purposes of His Kingdom. Again, whatever knowledge of God we possess is not given to us only for ourselves, it is God's property, of which we are but stewards. Paul so felt his responsibility that he said, "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of; for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." (1 Cor. 9: 16.) If we are true stewards, it will be so with us, and our hearts will say, "Woe is unto me, if I do not win souls for Jesus."

The man who went into a far country did not make an equal distribution of his goods among his servants; "Unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man

According to His Several Ability."

God is severely criticised by His own children regarding the distribution of His talents. How often we hear it said: "If only I had your energy, how much I could do for God!" "If only I had your zeal, how much I could do!" "If I had the wealth of so and so, how much I would give to missionary work!" O how men dishonor God in this way, saying by such words, "God has made it possible for others to serve Him, but impossible for me," while He says, "It is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not"! (II Cor. 8: 12.) We do not read of Peter and John saying to Paul, "Paul, if we had your education, how much we might do for God!" No, they placed themselves, unlearned and ignorant as they were, at the disposal of the Holy Ghost, and He used them mightily. It is dishonest and sinful when children of God excuse themselves from any kind of usefulness, because God has not made their talents and opportunities just the same as those of some others. No child of God has a right to

A Selfish, Useless Life.

Those of us whose family claims or necessary work keeps us at home or in the shop, can make that home or shop our mission hall, and pray for all who go out and come in. The milkman, the dustman, all have souls to be saved. The woman who comes for a dozen of matches, or a reel of cotton, or a penny's worth of blacking has a soul to be saved. If we have not the five talents which make us useful among the heathen or in a mission hall at home, let us make use of all which God does trust us with in the family; that our houses may be consecrated by all which God does in them through us.

One of the servants received but one talent; his Lord could trust him with no more, but, like many men with small brains, he was very conceited, and, taking offence because more had not been committed to him, he "went, and digged in the earth, and hid

His Lord's Money."

O how many are like this man! They want to do some great thing, something which would be spoken of, and get into the papers; and because their talents do not reach out so far, they despise the day of small things, and think, "What is the use of coming out from the world at all if you don't get any credit for it?" And so they drag the world into the Church, and have concerts, bazaars, etc., and do as the world does. They hold their membership, and somewhere, buried away in the past, they have some remembrance of a time when God forgave them their sins, but no such thing has power over their life in the present; their Lord's money is hidden.

"After a long time, the lord of those servants cometh and reckoneth with them."

The Reckoning Time is Coming:

let us live and walk and speak in the light of our coming Lord. The servant who had received the five talents came with bold step and head erect: he knew that his lord would be glad when he brought forth the double of that which was entrusted to him. And he which had received the two, had traded with the same and increased them in equal proportion. To each of these the lord said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things' No more a slave, but a ruler; no longer occupied with little things, but with great! "Enter thou into the joy of thy lord." All that which is really stewarded yields increase: it is only that which we hold as our own which yields hay, straw, stubble, which the first fire of trial or temptation burns to ashes. But how trade with our talents? "Yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God." (Rom. 6: 13.) Let God have the use of you, yield to God every moment in every detail of life, and accept Him for that moment, and He will see to it that this commerce will yield its increase in your own soul, in the church, and in the world. What God wants, is men in whom and through whom He finds room to manifest Himself, and these shall enter into the joy of their Lord; "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified with Him." (Rom. 8: 17. R. V.) What have we won for Jesus? What has been the result of our lives up to the present time? If we take stock, how much is there in souls won? How much in Christ-like influence? How much in the love of enemies? How much in self laid down? How much in intercession? Is our life just such that when Jesus comes we may give account with joy and not with grief?

Last of all came the servant who had buried his one talent in the earth. He came and said, "Lord, I knew thee, that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed, and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth; lo, there thou hast that is thine." It is an awful thing when men judge God by themselves. "Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself." (Ps. 50: 21.) When men, especially converted men, know nothing of God but hardness and exaction, it is a clear proof how little acquaintance they have made with Him, whose very name is love; all they have known of Him was when their perverse will crossed His. But this is wilful ignorance, and God gives it no quarter. The servant had as full an opportunity as the two others, and he had lost it. Therefore the decree went forth, "Take, therefore, the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For to every one that hath shall be given." All that we have in Jesus is grace for grace; all that we hold in Jesus is a pledge for more. "But cast ye the unprofitable servant (servant though he be) into outer darkness; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for April:

Scenes at Christ's Second Advent. By Rev. Nathaniel Starkey.

The Prophets and the Apocalyse. By Rev. N. West, D. D.

The Imminent Advent of Christ. By the Late Earl Cadogan.

The Doctrine of the 1,000 Years Millennium. By Rev. S. R. Maitland, D. D.

Summary of Events of the Final Dozen Years—1889 to 1901. By Rev. M. Baxter.

Views of Antichrist in the Twelfth Century. By Roger de Hoveden.

Death of the Emperor William of Germany.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes, containing the monthly numbers for 1884, and 1883 may be had; price $1.]

ABBA FATHER.

STRENGTH for to-day, Father, strength for to-day.
Strength to be holy, to walk in Thy way;
Strength for the keeping my robes undefiled,
Strength to be humble, as seemeth Thy child.

Strength in temptation to turn from the snare,
Strength to be constant and earnest in prayer;
Patient in well doing, faithful in heart,
Never, O Lord, from Thy truth to depart.

Strength for the crosses Thou giv'st me to bear,
Resting my heart on Thy Fatherly care,
Trusting, although I may not understand;
Knowing that Thou all my goings has planned.

Strength to shun evil, to cleave to the right,
Strength that my rushlight burn clearly and bright;
Strength that I bring no reproach on Thy name;
"Looking to Jesus," Thy promise I claim.

Still be Thou near me, whatever betide,
Let me not wander away from Thy side;
In life or in death be Thou with me alway.
Strength for to-day, Father, strength for to-day. —Mrs. M. P. Handy.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

A SERMON BY Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

"Let him appoint officers over the land, and take up the fifth part of the land of Egypt in the seven plenteous years."—Gen. xli. 34.

These were the words of Joseph, the president of the first life insurance company that the world ever saw. Pharaoh had a dream that distracted him. He thought he stood on the banks of the river Nile, and saw coming up out of the river seven fat, sleek, glossy cows, and they began to browse in the thick grass. Nothing frightful about that. But after them, coming up out of the same river, he saw seven cows that were gaunt and starved, and the worst looking cows that had ever been seen in the land, and in the ferocity of their hunger they devoured their seven fat predecessors. Pharaoh, the King, sent for Joseph to decipher these midnight hieroglyphics. Joseph made short work of it, and intimated that the seven fat cows that came out of the river were seven years with plenty to eat; the seven emaciated cows that followed them were seven years with nothing to eat. "Now," said Joseph, "let us take one-fifth of the corn crop of the seven prosperous years, and keep it as provision for the seven years in which there shall be no corn crop."

The King took the counsel, and appointed Joseph, because of his integrity and public spiritedness, as the president of the undertaking. The farmers contributed each one-fifth of their income. In all the towns and cities of the land there were branch houses. This great Egyptian life insurance company had millions of dollars as assets. After awhile the dark days came, and the whole nation would have starved if it had not been for the provision they had made for the future. But now these suffering families have nothing to do but go up and collect the amount of their life certificates. The Bible puts it in one short phrase: "In all the land of Egypt there was bread." I say this was the First Life Insurance Company.

It was divinely organized. It had in it all the advantages of the "whole life plan," of the "endowment plan," and all the other good plans. We are told that Rev. Dr. Inhate of Lincolnshire, England, originated the first life insurance company in 1638. No, it is as old as the corn cribs of Egypt, and God himself was the author and originator. If that were not so, I would not take your time and mine in a Sabbath discussion of this subject. I feel that it is a theme vital, religious, and of infinite import—the morals of life and fire insurance. It seems to me that it is time for the pulpit to speak out. But

What does the Bible say in regard to this subject?

If the Bible favors the institution I will favor it; if the Bible denounces it I will denounce it. In addition to the forecast of Joseph in the text, I call to your attention Paul's comparison. Here is one man who, through neglect, fails to support his family while he lives, or after he dies. Here is another man who abhors the Scriptures, and rejects God. Which of these men is the worst? Well, you say the latter. Paul says the former. Paul says that a man who neglects to care for his household, is more obnoxious than a man who rejects the Scriptures. "He that provideth not for his own, and especially those of his own household, is worse than an infidel."

Life Insurance Companies help most of us to provide for our families after we are gone.

But if we have the money to pay for insurance and do not have it, we have no right to expect mercy at the hands of God in the judgment. We are worse than Tom Paine, worse than Voltaire, and worse than Shaftesbury. The Bible declares it: we are worse than an infidel. After the certificate of death has been made out, and the thirty or sixty days have passed, and the officer of a life insurance company comes into a bereft household and pays down the hard cash on an insurance certificate, that officer of the company is performing a positively religious rite, according to the Apostle James, who says: "True religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, is this: to visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction," and so on.

* * * * * *

When men think of their death, they are apt to think of it only in connection with their spiritual welfare, and not of devastation in the household, which will come because of their emigration from it. It is meanly selfish for you to be so absorbed in the heaven to which you are going that you forget what is to become of your wife and children after you go. You can go out of this world not leaving them a dollar, and yet die happy if you could not provide for them. You can trust them in the hands of the God who owns all the harvests and the herds and the flocks; but if you could pay the cost of a life certificate and neglect to do so,

It is a mean thing for you to go up to Heaven while they go to the Poorhouse.

You, at death, move into a mansion, river front, and they move into two rooms on the fourth story of a tenement house in a back street. When they are out at the elbows and knees, the thought of your splendid white robe in heaven will not keep them warm. The minister may preach a splendid sermon over your remains, and the quartette may sing like four angels in the organ loft, but your Death will be a Swindle.

You had the means to provide for the comfort of your household when you left it, and you wickedly neglected it.

"O," says some one, "I have more faith than you: I believe when I go out of this world the Lord will take care of my family." Yes, He will provide for them. Go to Blackwell's Island, go through all the poorhouses in the country, and I will show you how often God provides for the neglected children of neglectful parents. That is, He provides for them through public charity. As for myself, I would rather have the Lord provide for my family at a private home, and through my own industry and parental and conjugal faithfulness. "But," says some man, "I mean in the next ten or twenty years to and so I shall leave my family, when I go out of this world, very comfortable." How do you know that you are going to live ten or twenty years? If we could look up the walk of the future we would see it crossed by pneumonias, and pleurisies, and consumptions, and colliding rail trains, and runaway horses, and breaking bridges, and funeral processions. Are you so certain you are going to live ten or twenty years that you can warrant your household any comfort after you go away from them? Besides that, the vast majority of men die poor.

Make a Great Fortune,

Two only out of One Hundred Succeed in Business.

Are you very certain that you are going to be one of the two? There are men who die solvent who are insolvent before they are under the ground, or the estate is settled. How soon an auctioneer's mallet can knock the life out of an estate! A man thinks the property worth $15,000, under a forced sale it brings $7,000. The business man takes advantage of the crisis, and compels the widow of his deceased partner to sell out to him at a ruinous price or lose all. * * Or the administrator is ordered by the Surrogate Court to wind up the whole affair. The estate is supposed to be worth $20,000, but after the indebtedness has been met, and the bills of the doctor and the undertaker and tombstone cutter have been paid,

There is Nothing Left.

That means that the children are to come home from school and go to work. That means the complete hardship of the wife, turned out with nothing but a needle to fight the great battle of the world. Tear down the lambrequins, close the piano, rip up the Axminster, sell out the wardrobe, and let the mother take a child in each hand and trudge out into the desert of the world. A life insurance would have hindered all that.

"But," says some one—

"I am a man of small means, and I can't afford to pay the premium."

That is sometimes an awful and genuine excuse, but rarely. The answer to it is this: If you are too poor to support your family and pay for a policy on your life you are too poor to take the chance of dying and leaving them deprived of the support you contain and hands supply them. In nine cases out of ten, when a man says that, he spends up in cigars, and drinks down in wine, expends in luxuries enough money to have paid the premium on a life insurance policy which would have kept his family from poverty when he is dead. A man ought to deny himself down on the strictest economy until he can meet this Christian necessity. You have no right to the luxuries of life until you have made such provision. I admire what was said by the Rev. Dr. Guthrie, the great Scottish preacher. A few years before his death he stood in a public meeting and declared: "When I came to Edinburgh the people sometimes laughed at my blue stockings and at my cotton umbrella, and they said I looked like a common ploughman, and they derided me because I lived in a house for which I paid thirty-five pounds rent a year, and oftimes I walked when I would have been very glad to have had a cab; but, gentlemen, I did all that because I wanted to pay the premium on a life insurance that would keep my family comfortable if I should die." That I take to be the right expression of an honest, intelligent, Christian man.

The Utter Indifference of Many People on this Important Subject accounts for Much of the Crime and Pauperism of the Day.

Who are these children sweeping the crossings with broken brooms, and begging of you a penny as you go by? Who are these lost souls gliding under the gaslight in thin shawls? Ah! they are victims of want, and in many of the cases the forecast of parents and grandparents might have prevented it. God only knows how they have tried to do right. They prayed until the tears froze on their cheeks, they sewed on the sacks until the breaking of the day, but they couldn't get enough money to pay the rent; they could not get money enough to decently clothe themselves, and one day in that wretched home the angel of purity and the angel of crime fought a great fight between the empty breadtray and the fireless hearth, and the black-winged angel shrieked "Aha! I have won the day."

Say some men: "I believe what you say;

It is Right and Christian, and I mean some time to attend to this matter." My friend, you are going to lose the comfort of your household in the same way the sinner loses heaven—by procrastination. I see all around me the destitute and suffering families of parents who meant some day to attend to this Christian duty. During the process of adjournment the man gets his feet wet, then come chills and a delirium, and the doleful shake of the doctor's head, and the obsequies. If there be anything more pitiable than a woman delicately brought up, and on her marriage day, by an indulgent father given to a man to whom she is the chief joy and pride of life until the moment of his death, and then that same woman going out with helpless children at her back to struggle for bread in the world where brawny muscle and rugged soul are necessary—I say if there be anything more pitiable than that, I don't know what it is; and and there are those positively hostile, as though a life insurance subjected that man to some fatality. There is in this city to-day a poor woman keeping a small candy-shop, who vehemently opposed the insurance of her husband's life, and when application had been made for a certificate of $10,000, she frustrated it. She would never have a document in the house that implied it was possible for her husband ever to die. One day in the quick revolution of machinery his life was instantly dashed out.

Yet there are Good Women who are Indifferent in Regard to their Husbands' Duty in this Respect.

What is the Sequel?

She is with annoying tug making the half of a miserable living. Her two children have been taken away from her in order that they may be clothed and schooled, and her life is to be a prolonged hardship. O man, before forty-eight hours have passed away, appear at the desk of some of our great life insurance companies, have the stethoscope of the physician put to your heart and lungs, and by the seal of some honest company decree that your children shall not be subject to the humiliation of financial struggle in the dark days of your demise.

A SPECIAL OFFER
To the Readers of the Christian Herald.

I have made a special arrangement with one of the best Life Insurance Societies of New York City by which I am enabled to offer to all the male readers of this paper, between the ages of 18 and 60 (in good health) and whose occupation is not hazardous

A Life Insurance Policy

Free of Charge,

provided that application is made to me within thirty days from this date. Circulars giving full particulars will be sent on application.

J. E. JEWETT,
APRIL 19, 1888. 77 Bible House, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

UNIVERSITY-PIANOS FROM $180 TO $1500.
FINEST PIANOS IN THE WORLD. SOLD DIRECT TO FAMILIES, saving the enormous expenses of agents. Sent with beautiful cover, stool and book, for trial in your own home before you buy. Guaranteed six years. Send for catalogue to Marchal & Smith Piano Co., 235 E. 21st St., N. Y.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

LACTATED FOOD

For Young Infants a perfect substitute fo mother's milk, often saving life; for the in valid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great valu Thousands who have used it say it is the

FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infan and Invalids sent on application.
Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, V

(33 Colors.) DIAMOND DY

are the Purest, Che eat, Strongest, and Durable Dyes ever n One 10c. package will 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, I sto. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bi ing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instruc and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Drug WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON,

SILKS and VELVE

JAMES McCREERY & C

Invite attention to a Spe Showing they will make week of High Novelties Dress Silks. The most mod and approved Weaves shown in the Oriental and tique Classic Shadings that now so essential for fash able Costumes. Exclusive St in Rich Novelties where bination costumes are desi

They will also offer 24, and 28-inch Black Dress vets at $1 50, $2, and $ per yard; the previous has been $2, $3, and $4.

Orders by mail promptly cuted.

JAMES McCREERY & C

Broadway and 11th St.,

NEW YORK.

OUR YOUTH

J. H. VINCENT, Weekly. Illustr Till Dec. 1, on tri SIXTY CEN Mention thi Phillips & Hunt, 805 Broadway,

GALVANIZED WIRE NETTI
BEST AND CHEAPEST FENCE IN THE M FOR POULTRY, GARDEN OR LAW IN BALES, 150 FEET LONG
4 FEET HIGH, ONLY ..... $4.50 PER
5 FEET HIGH, ONLY ..... 5.63 PER
6 FEET HIGH, ONLY ..... 6.75 PER
Address orders and correspondence to U. S. WIRE NETTING CO., 62 Reade St., Ne

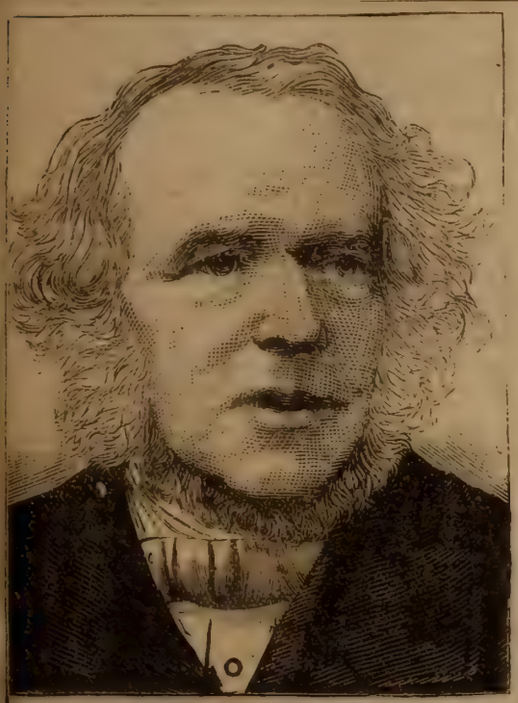
WANTED FOR CASH! OL federate to 1865 POSTAGE STAMPS stamps will bring fine prices. IF LEFT THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in condition. Some stamps bring as much as each. Send stamp for circulars describing wanted. Best references furnished if desired.
G. M. EASTABLE, Cadett

TEAS LADIES Send at on our new t THE GREAT AMERICAN T 31 and 33 Vesey St., New Yo

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 17. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.



REV. DR. ANDREW A. BONAR.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF DRS. HORATIUS AND ANDREW BONAR.

BRILLIANT BITTERNESS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE STORM CLOUDS GATHERING. A Prophetic Article.

Perils Among Indians—A Bible in a Blanket—An Execution Prevented—Called by the Great Spirit—High Caste Learners—A Thankful Congregation—Mr. Re Qua's Work in the Indian Territory.

JESUS AFFIRMED TO BE ALIVE. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: A German Captain's Order—A Meal of Carrion.

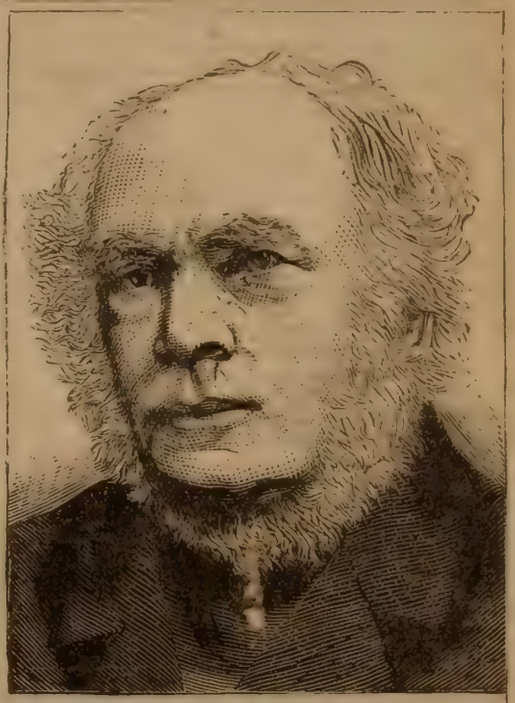
PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE AMOS BRONSON ALCOTT.

MRS. PINFOLD'S ILLUMINATION. (Illustrated.)

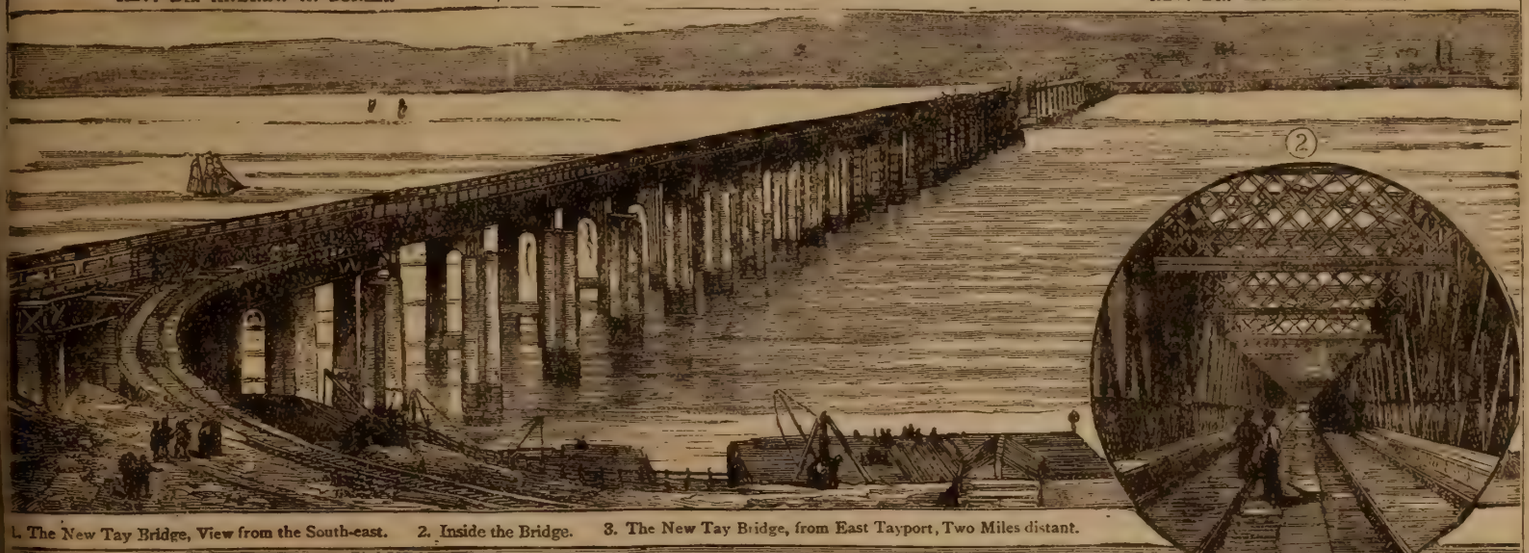
PICTURE OF THE VILLA PALMIERI, FLORENCE, Queen Victoria's Italian Retreat.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL. A Serial Story. (Continued.)

THE JUDGMENT. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



REV. DR. HORATIUS BONAR.



1. The New Tay Bridge, View from the South-east. 2. Inside the Bridge. 3. The New Tay Bridge, from East Tayport, Two Miles distant.

DRS. ANDREW AND HORATIUS BONAR, the famous Scotch Preachers and Authors—New Tay Bridge.

REV. DR. ANDREW A. BONAR.

His Early Years from 1810 to 1839—Journey to Palestine—Revival in Dundee—Secedes with the Free Church—Writes M'Cheyne's Memoirs—Elected Moderator of the Assembly in 1878.

One of the best-known and most highly esteemed pastors in the Free Church of Scotland is the Rev. Andrew Bonar, whose portrait appears on the preceding page in company with his distinguished brother, Dr. Horatius Bonar. He was born in Edinburgh in 1810, so that he is now seventy-eight years of age. His father was a man of high Christian character and extensive knowledge. Andrew was favored in his youth with the best educational advantages, and he availed himself of them to good purpose. The fruit of his application soon became apparent; he won the proud position of Dux of Edinburgh High School. The same success attended his academic career at the University, where he received the approbation of his professors, and the esteem of his class-mates.

He had already, when quite a boy, accepted Christ as his Saviour, and as a consequence he resolved, with his brother, Horatius, to consecrate his life to the ministry of the gospel. This resolution once made, he subordinated all his reading and thinking, and all that he did, to qualifying himself for this work. He was by the Presbytery of Jedburgh, in 1835, when he was twenty-five years old. Dr. Candlish, of Edinburgh, then in the zenith of his fame, having had his attention directed to the promising licentiate, invited him to assist him as parish missionary. Mr. Bonar consented, and consequently was brought under an influence which must have helped to mould his methods of pulpit preparation, as well as to implant in him a lofty conception of the work he had undertaken. In 1838, he was ordained as colleague in the pastoral charge of Collace, in Perthshire.

Licensed to Preach

In 1839 he was one of a Mission of Inquiry to the Jews, chosen partly on account of his familiarity with the Hebrew Scriptures, and partly also on account of his affectionate intimacy with M'Cheyne. On his return home he was joyfully welcomed by his flock, and at once assisted with unreserved enthusiam in which had originated in Dundee, and was spreading like a wave of blessing in all the district round about. The revival was destined to effect great changes in the religious life of Scotland. Ministers were stirred up to a sense of their responsibilities, and the influence they could wield as ambassadors for Christ. The people, feeling the need of gospel preaching, saw that they could not be sure of having it so long as the choice of their ministers was vested in the hands of men often indifferent to the best interests of the congregations. They thought they had the right to choose their own teachers in spiritual things, and demanded it; for they believed that the appointment of pastors by careless patrons was the source of the deadness and blight of the Scottish Church. So the conflict began which ended in of 1843. Mr. Bonar, on the day of final decision, threw in his lot with the Free Church party, and left the church in which he had hitherto ministered. The majority of his parishioners followed him. A new place of worship was erected, and the work of grace went on; sinners were pricked to the heart, and believers were instructed in the things of God.

The Revival

The Disruption

In 1856 Mr. Bonar felt it to be his duty to accept a call to Finnieston, Glasgow. It was simply a mission station. Ten persons constituted his first congregation; but Finnieston Free Church grew under his preaching and influence, until now the members number more than 1,000. In 1874 Edinburgh University conferred upon him the degree of D. D., in recognition of his scholarship and his many valuable contributions to theological literature. In 1878 he was elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Free Church. When Messrs. Moody and Sankey visited Scotland he gave them his warmest sympathy and co-operation. In 1881 he was a welcome and honored guest and speaker at Mr. Moody's Conference at Northfield, and he returned home with all the glow and fervor of "youth renewed"; and even now, though advancing in life, his activity and enthusiam are unimpaired, and as in the days of his youth, he is able to do the duties of a strong man.

The Memoirs of M'Cheyne is the book by which Dr. A. Bonar will be best remembered. It is a model biography, and has had a circulation of nearly 140,000 in Great Britain, besides being widely read in the United States. His work entitled "Christ and His Church in the Psalms" proves how profound is his Hebrew scholarship, and is marked throughout by rare spiritual insight which no linguistic acquisitions can supply; while his "Commentary on Leviticus," brings to light in a very wonderful manner the New Testament verities which lie enshrined in Old Testament rites. He has also written a large number of tracts and little gospel books, which have done excellent service and been blessed to many in both hemispheres. Like his brother Horatius, he believes in the pre-millennial advent of the Saviour, and looks for it as an event likely soon to occur.

REV. DR. HORATIUS BONAR.

Born in 1808—Becomes Presbyterian Minister at Kelso in 1839—The Dundee Revival—Publishes His Kelso Tracts and Popular Hymns and Other Books—Joins the Free Church—Becomes Minister of the Grange Church, Edinburgh—Moderator in 1882—Pre-millennial Doctrines.

The noble octogenarian preacher, whose portrait appears on the first page, in company with that of his younger brother, has recently received a substantial mark of the esteem of his fellow-countrymen, who have presented him with a purse containing five thousand dollars. At the presentation, attention was called to the fact that the family has long held an honored place among the churches of Scotland. Two centuries ago, one of its representatives was a distinguished minister, preaching the truth at the risk of martyrdom.

Horatius Bonar was born at Edinburgh, in 1808, so that he has attained the ripe age of eighty years. His father was Solicitor to the Government in all business relating to Excise, an office which is now abolished. The lad received his early education at the Edinburgh High School and the Edinburgh University, and while he was pursuing his studies he formed with the saintly Robert Murray M'Cheyne, whose "Life and Remains" have been given to the world by his brother the Rev. A. Bonar. In early life he resolved to enter the Christian ministry. Among his instructors was the famous Dr. Chalmers, whose influence upon him was of the most beneficial and abiding character, and to this day he speaks of him in terms of enthusiastic and grateful admiration. Before he had finished his academical course he had published a little volume entitled "Christian Essays" which obtained a fair measure of publicity, and gave promise of the literary distinction which the author has since attained.

A Memorable Friendship

In 1839, at the age of thirty-one, the student became a minister, and the interesting old town of Kelso was

His First Field of Labor.

It is picturesquely situated on the banks of the silvery Tweed, and surrounded by a country justly famous, both in song and story. Nearly every stone and tree in the locality was associated in the minds of the residents with some memorable personage or deed which still lives in history. Here, in the full vigor of his early manhood, he gave himself to his work of winning souls with prayerful and unflagging assiduity. His sermons were full of fire and unction; and his pastoral visitation, especially in the homes of poverty or the abodes of suffering, was highly prized for his marked tenderness and sagacity in giving comfort or guidance.

Dr. Bonar has from the very outset of his career been an ardent believer in the power of the Press in the world-wide distribution of the truths of salvation. In spite of the many and varied calls upon his time, he managed while he was at Kelso to devote some portion of the week to edit the Presbyterian, a magazine which did magnificent service in contending for "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints." About the year 1839, when the revival occurred in Dundee, under the preaching of his friend M'Cheyne, none rejoiced more intensely or thanked God more than he did. He entered into the movement with heart and soul and did his best to spread it, and wherever he went many conversions were effected. But even then "What more can be done?" was his earnest inquiry by day and night. He thought that his pen might possibly reach those who were beyond his voice, so he wrote

"The Kelso Tracts."

His threefold object was to arouse the careless, to make plain the way of salvation, and to strengthen and instruct and gladden the children of God everywhere. These messengers of life were scattered far and wide, they gained entrance into thousands of Scottish homes, and everywhere they were cordially welcomed and eagerly read. In Scotland and England the number circulated was said to be very large, while in America they became popular and highly appreciated. And their work of mercy is not ended yet, for to this day they continue to receive the blessing of God.

Dr. Bonar had, in the earlier days of his ministry, and still in his eightieth year retains, a most benignant influence over children and young people. His winning manner and gentle tones arrested and enchained their attention, and his weighty words savingly impressed their hearts. His Sabbath-school services in Kelso are still remembered by many of the old scholars with undiminished delight.

His Hymns,

one of which he wrote for each service, were sung by the boys and girls. These hymns are now to be heard in many Sunday-schools with which Christian zeal and consecration have girdled the globe. Among some of the special favorites may be mentioned: "I Lay my Sins on Jesus," "A Few More Years shall Roll," "I was a Wandering Sheep," and "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say." After the singing, the pastor would give an address, in which "the story of Jesus and His love" was told, and which even the youngest child present could understand.

When the "disruption" of 1843 occurred, there were many stirring changes. Many of the families of the Presbyterian Church were sorely perplexed by the difficulties which surrounded them, but the pastor of Kelso was not. For conscience sake, and to show his practical sympathy with his brethren in distress, he at once cast in his lot with the Free Church. He had not, like most of those who left the Established Kirk, to leave his church on leaving the denomination. It was secured to him and his congregation by some special clauses in the title deeds, and so, as the years rolled on, it became increasingly a centre of light and usefulness.

As an Author,

Dr. Bonar has attained world-wide fame. He has written much and well. He had read much, and had a retentive memory; his heart was on fire with love to Christ and souls; and, as a natural consequence, his were winged words and his books have enjoyed merited popularity. His "Night of Weeping" has been as balm to many bereaved and lonely hearts, comforting them in the presence of the newly opened grave; while his "Morning of Joy" has in many instances lifted the thoughts of the sorrowful to that radiant land where suffering and death are unknown. "God's Way of Peace" has still a friendly hand for those who are seeking increased light. "The Land of Promise," "The Desert of Sinai," "Light of Truth," are among the best known of his other books, which go on teaching lessons in Christian experience, and unfolding the truths of the kingdom of the Redeemer. In all he wrote, as in all he said, Dr. Bonar was swayed by his life purpose—God's glory and the profit of souls. He did not seek earthly honor, but it came to him. His name has become a household word, and his writings have won a high place in the devotional literature of our century.

In 1856, the strain of long labors having so impaired his energy that rest was imperatively needed, he went on a tour through the Desert of Sinai and the Holy Land. He returned with health and energy renewed, and continued his labors of voice and pen. The year 1865 brought a change in his life though not in his work. It was the year of his Removal to Edinburgh.

As the reputation of Dr. Bonar grew, many efforts had been made to induce him to leave his beloved Kelso for a larger sphere of ministry, and at length, after twenty-seven years of earnest and successful labor, he yielded. A new church was built in the suburb of Edinburgh, called The Grange, and he was asked to fill its pulpit. He consented. Like-minded men and women flocked around him, and he became as dear to them as he had been to his church at Kelso; while to many visitors from different parts of the world who wished to see and listen to the sweet singer, a Sabbath spent at The Grange remains a treasured and inspiring memory. In 1882 he was honored in being elected Moderator of the Assembly.

In 1886, through age and feebleness, Dr. Bonar having become unequal to the heavy duties of the pastorate, was furnished with a colleague. He is now quietly awaiting his Master's call to the mansions and rest of which he has so often and so melodiously sung; but while the natural force of the venerable servant of God may be abated, his mental vigor and power to discern the signs of the times are still in fullest exercise. A striking proof of that fact is furnished in a letter which he wrote to Mr. J. E. Mathieson on the occasion of the Mildmay Conference on the Second Advent, in March, 1886. He said:

"The Poison of the Last Days

has penetrated everywhere: unbelief, error, strong delusion, self-will, ambition, pride, hatred of God and of His Christ—these are the deadly forces that are operating all over earth and disintergrating society, making all human rule impossible, and demonstrating the necessity for the arrival of Him who is to end all these overturnings, and to introduce the reign of peace, the kingdom of everlasting order.

"Antichrist is rising rapidly and gaining strength. Multitudes are enlisting unconsciously under his banner, and adopting his watchword—Liberality, reckoning it illiberal to believe in judgment to come, or in hell, or in the wrath of God, or in the sinner's eternal doom. To meet all this we look for the arrival of the Christ of God; and as the confusion increases, and the rebellion waxes stronger and stronger, we raise more and more loudly the Church's cry, 'How long, O Lord, how long?'"

Dr. Bonar has been a well-known advocate of pre-millennarian views for many years. He embodied his opinions in "Prophetic Landmarks," a very valuable hand-book for those who are beginning the study of prophecy. He holds that the Personal Advent of Christ is not far distant, and that although Popery and Mohammedanism are Antichrists for 1,260 years, yet the Great Personal Antichrist of the last days will persecute the Christian Church finally for 1,260 days. His advocacy of these beliefs has also been eloquently promoted in the Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, which he conducted with singular skill for some years. His "Hymns of Faith and Hope" are the fruit of thirty years' thought and feeling. Their title is very appropriate, for they sing of faith triumphant in difficulties, and of hope that never grows old. In them will be found a music to silence earth's discords, and a loving trust to throw a rainbow of hope over the sorrows of life.

THE NEW TAY BRIDGE.

THE new bridge, a picture of which appears on the first page, is the structure erected to supply the place of the one which is identified with sorrow and bereavement in many a home. The terrible disaster on the night of Sunday, December 28, 1879, when the iron railway bridge over the Tay estuary, at Dundee, suddenly collapsed while a passenger train was crossing, amidst a violent hurricane of wind, falling into the raging waters below, with its burden of upwards of ninety lives, cannot yet have been forgotten. The old bridge, which had taken six years to construct, cost $1,750,000, and was opened for traffic in May, 1878. The new bridge, which was opened in July, 1887, was constructed by Messrs. W. Arrol & Co., of Glasgow. The length of it is 10,780 feet, or 3,593 yards—rather more than two miles; the width of the river Tay just where it crosses being 9,580 feet. The quantity of wrought iron used is 19,000 tons, of steel 3,500 tons, and of cast-iron 2,500 tons; with 3,000,000 rivets, averaging five inches in length; 10,000,000 bricks, weighing 37,500 tons; and 70,000 tons of concrete, used in the foundations. It has cost somewhat more than five million. The new structure was first used for ordinary passenger traffic on the Queen's Jubilee Day, in 1887. The public advantage gained by the railway for which the bridge is built is that of shortening the journey from Dundee to Edinburgh by one hour, and from Aberdeen to Edinburgh by two hours. Its advantages are well appreciated, for since its opening the traffic between Dundee and the East of Fifeshire is doubled. It is the property of the North British Railway.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Ex-Policeman's Trophy for Christ.—Mr. William Clyde, a Scotch evangelist, said: "We had among the members of our Mizpah Band a Highland-man who had formerly been a policeman, and now that he was converted, his heart was warm towards those who used to be his companions, and he took every opportunity to set before them the Gospel of Christ. Coming home from his work, daily, he crossed Glasgow Green, and made it a point to speak to the policeman on duty there. He resolved to win that man for Christ. Repeatedly he invited him to come to the gospel meeting in the evening, when he was off duty, and at last he did come, and was brought to Christ. In testifying afterwards, the new convert said, 'Before I came to this meeting I was half converted by the quiet and gentle, yet zealous bearing, of my friend, who induced me to come here, and I was quite prepared to go the other half.' Personal dealing is much honored by God. It is one of the Christian's highest privileges to lead men and women to the Saviour."

Forty Faithful Soldiers Frozen.—"There was a Roman emperor who had among his soldiers forty Christian men. Being informed of the fact, he flew into a passion, and said, 'I will have no Christians among my men! Go, tell them that if they will not turn from serving their God they will be stripped and sent forth upon a frozen lake to perish there.' But the forty soldiers were faithful to Christ, and nothing would induce them to forsake Him. So they were taken down to the side of a frozen lake and there stripped of their garments. Not far from the lake was a hut, in which was a large blazing fire, robes, large sums of money, and also a sumptuous feast spread, all placed there by order of the emperor to tempt the men to forsake Christ. They were told that even yet if they would but forsake their God they would be taken to this hut, and all that was in it would at once belong to them. All stood firm, and they were sent forth upon the lake. They gathered together, and the whole forty raised their hands to heaven and prayed: Dear Lord, grant that we may be found faithful to Thee.' But one of the number proved unfaithful, he forsook the lake, fled to the hut, where he obtained all that was promised. The centurion of the band was so struck with the noble action of these nine and thirty men that he resolved to join them. He, too, was stripped by his own men, and went forth to join the brave soldiers in the middle of the lake. Again forty hands were raised to heaven, while they prayed, 'Oh, Lord, grant that we may be found faithful to Thee.' Their prayer was answered, for forty frozen bodies were found next morning."

Found Dead in Bed.—Mr. Robert Service observes: "I arrived at a gospel meeting one evening rather late. As I entered, a woman who had been taken slightly ill was coming out. Another lady accompanied her to a side room, and there spoke to her about her soul, urging her to accept Christ at once. She resented being spoken to in so direct and personal a manner. Ill as she was, she scowled angrily upon her kind friend. Presently, however, she listened respectfully, and as well as she was able, to the message of Christ's love to her. I do not know if she did close with the offer of salvation, but I trust she did, for on the second night after her illness she was found dead in bed." A similar sudden end overtook two wealthy gentlemen lately, who were both found dead in their bedrooms, without any previous illness, namely, Mr. Charles Hengler, the owner of some circuses, and Lord Wolverton, who died worth fifteen million dollars, and whose previous day had been spent at races and a theatre."

The Elder and the Blacksmith.—A Scotch evangelist related: "There was in one of our churches an elder who was very anxious about the salvation of a certain blacksmith in the neighborhood. One day, while visiting his minister, he felt that man's salvation laid more heavily on his heart than ever. The minister and he both prayed about the man, and as the good elder left the manse it was snowing heavily, just one of those nights in which everyone who has a home would wish to be there; but disregarding the fury of the elements, he mounted his horse and rode to the blacksmith. As he came up he could hear him working. Tying his horse to a ring at the door, he entered, and walking straight up to the smith, said, as he grasped his horny hand, 'Oh, my friend, I am very anxious about your salvation, about your soul.' That was all he said, and going out he rode home. Half-an-hour later the smith came to him and said, 'Sir, I am very anxious about my own soul.' And soon, by the Holy Spirit, he was led to accept Christ, and found salvation."

A Young Lady Paralyzed after Dancing.—Mr. Thompson said: "I heard of a young lady in London, who was engaged to be married to an officer in the British army. By the grace of God he became converted, and immediately wrote to the young lady telling her of the great change that had taken place, and offering to her the cup of salvation from which he himself had drunk, that they might together travel Zionwards. She wrote back saying, 'The winter season is just beginning, and I have many engagements; besides, we have a dance on Thursday to which I must go, but if you call on Friday, I will tell you.' She had a whole winter's engagements, and she could not make up her mind to give them up even to secure eternal life. She was at the ball on the Thursday, and returning home tired and worn out, she seated herself by the open window, for she was very warm. Next morning her maid went to wake her as usual, but as she got no response to her repeated knocks at the door, she entered, and there the young lady lay over the side of her bed, paralyzed. A doctor, who was summoned, pronounced her to be dying, and with only one or two hours to live. Word was at once sent to the officer to whom she was engaged. He hastened to her home, thinking there might still be time for her to be saved through a penitent faith in Christ. There was time, but whether she was able to make her peace with God or not must remain unknown. The tongue that would have spoken, or the hand that might have written the answer, were both stricken with paralysis."

BRILLIANT BITTERNESS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached last Sunday Morning, April 22, 1888.

"There fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood." Rev. 8: 10, 11.

An Extraordinary King of the Fifth Century—Legend of a Heaven-sent Sword — The Three Divisions of his Captives—His Three Coffins—Embittered Lives — Their Baleful Influence—Morning and Evening Stars in Society—Wormwood in Parental Thrones—Stars of Wit—The Humorist a Public Benefactor—Stars of Worldly Prosperity — Often Overbearing — The Bitter Water Sweetened—The Only Means—Star Nations of the Past—The Star of the Free Nation—Magnificent Possibilities and Awful Perils.

PATRICK and Lowth, Thomas Scott, Matthew Henry, Albert Barnes, and some other commentators say that the star Wormwood of my text was a type of Attila, King of the Huns. He was so called because he was brilliant as a star, and, like wormwood, he embittered everything he touched. We have studied the Star of Bethlehem, and the Morning Star of the Revelation, and the Star of Peace, but my subject this hour calls us to gaze at the star Wormwood.

A more extraordinary character history does not furnish than this man, Attila, the King of the Huns.

One day a wounded heifer came limping along through the fields, and a herdsman followed its bloody track on the grass to see where the heifer was wounded, and went on back, further and further, until he came to a sword fast in the earth, the point downward as though it had dropped from the heavens, and against the edges of this sword the heifer had been cut. The herdsman pulled up that sword and presented it to Attila. Attila said that sword must have dropped from the heavens from the grasp of the god Mars, and its being given to him meant that Attila should conquer and govern the whole earth. Other mighty men have been delighted at being called liberators, or the Merciful, or the Good, but Attila called himself, and demanded that others call him,

The Scourge of God.

At the head of seven hundred thousand troops, mounted on Cappadocian horses, he swept everything, from the Adriatic to the Black Sea. He put his iron heel on Macedonia and Greece and Thrace. He made Milan and Pavia and Padua and Verona beg for mercy, which he bestowed not. The Byzantine castles, to meet his ruinous levy, put up at auction massive silver tables and vases of solid gold. A city captured by him, the inhabitants were brought out and put into three classes: The first class, those who could bear arms, who must immediately enlist under Attila or be butchered; the second class, the beautiful women, who were made captives to the Huns; the third class, the aged men and women, who were robbed of everything and let go back to the city to pay heavy tax.

It was a common saying that the grass never grew where the hoof of Attila's horse had trod.

His Armies

reddened the waters of the Seine and the Moselle and the Rhine with carnage, and fought on the Catalonian plains the fiercest battle since the world stood. On and on until all those who could not oppose him with arms lay prostrate on their faces in prayer, and, a cloud of dust seen in the distance, a bishop cried: "It is the aid of God; and all the people took up the cry: "It is the aid of God;" As the cloud of dust was blown aside, the banners of reinforcing armies marched in to help against Attila, the Scourge of God. The most unimportant occurrences he used as a supernatural resource, and after three months of failure to capture the city of Aquileia, and when his army had given up the siege, the flight of a stork and her young from the tower of the city was taken by him as a sign that he was to capture the city; and his army, inspired with the same occurrence, resumed the siege and took the walls at a point from which the stork had emerged.

Slain on the evening of his marriage by his bride Ildico, who was hired for the assassination, his followers bewailed him, not with tears but with blood, cutting themselves with knives and lances. He was put into three coffins, the first of iron, the second of silver, and the third of gold. He was buried by night, and into were poured the most valuable coin and precious stones, amounting to the wealth of a kingdom. The grave-diggers and all those who assisted at the burial were massacred, so that it would never be known where so much wealth was entombed. The Roman empire conquered the world, but Attila conquered the Roman empire. He was right in calling himself a scourge, but instead of being the Scourge of God, he was the scourge of hell. Because of his brilliancy and bitterness, the commentators were right in believing him to be the star Wormwood of the text. As the regions he devastated were parts most opulent with fountains and streams and rivers, you see how graphic my text is: "There fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood."

His Grave

Have you ever thought how many

Embittered Lives

there are all about us, misanthropic, morbid, acrid, saturnine? The European plant from which wormwood is extracted, Artemisia Absinthium, is a perennial plant, and all the year round it is ready to exude its oil. And in many human lives there is a perennial distillation of acrid experiences. Yea, there are some whose whole work is to shed a baleful influence on others. There are Attilas of the home, or Attilas of the social circle, or Attilas of the church, or Attilas of the State, and one-third of the waters of all the world, if not two-thirds the waters, are poisoned by the falling of the star Wormwood. It is not complimentary to human nature that most men, as soon as they get great power, become overbearing. The more power men have the better, if their power be used for good. The less power men have the better, if they use it for evil.

Birds circle round and round and round before they swoop upon that which they are aiming for. And if my discourse so far has been swinging round and round, this moment it drops straight on your heart and asks the question:

Is Your Life a Benediction to others, or an embitterment, a blessing or a curse, a balsam or a wormwood?

Some of you, I know, are morning stars, and you are making the dawning life of your children bright with gracious influences, and you are beaming upon all the opening enterprises of philanthropic and Christian endeavor, and you are heralds of that day of gospelization which will yet flood all the mountains and valleys of our sin-cursed earth. Hail, morning star! Keep on shining with encouragement and Christian hope!

Some of you are evening stars, and you are cheering the last days of old people; and though a cloud sometimes comes over you through the querulousness or unreasonableness of your old father and mother, it is only for a moment, and the star soon comes out clear again and is seen from all the balconies of the neighborhood. The old people will forgive your occasional shortcomings, for they themselves several times lost their patience with you when you were young, and slapped you when you did not deserve it. Hail, evening star! Hang on the darkening sky your diamond coronet.

But are any of you the star Wormwood?

Do You Scold and Growl

from the thrones paternal or maternal? Are your children everlastingly pecked at? Are you always crying "Hush!" to the merry voices and swift feet, and their laughter, which occasionally trickles through at wrong times, and is suppressed by them until they can hold it no longer, and all the barriers burst into unlimited guffaw and cachinnation, as in high weather the water has trickled through a slight opening in the mill-dam, but afterward makes wider and wider breach until it carries all before it with irresistible freshet. Do not be too much offended at the noise your children now make. It will be still enough when one of them is dead. Then you would give your right hand to hear one shout from their silent voices, or one step from the still foot. You will not any of you have to wait very long before your house is stiller than you want it. Alas that there are so many homes not known to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, where children are put on the limits, and whacked and cuffed and ear-pulled, and senselessly called to order, and answered sharp and suppressed, until it is a wonder that under such processes they do not all turn out Modocs and Nana Sahibs!

What is your influence upon the neighborhood, the town, or the city of your residence? I will suppose that you are

A Star of Wit.

What kind of rays do you shoot forth? Do you use that splendid faculty to irradiate the world or to rankle it? I bless all the apostolic college of humorists. The man that makes me laugh is my benefactor. I do not thank anybody to make me cry. I can do that without any assistance. We all cry enough, and have enough to cry about. God bless all skilful punsters, all reparteeists, all propounders of ingenious conundrums, all those who mirthfully surprise us with unusual juxtaposition of words. Thomas Hood and Charles Lamb and Sidney Smith had a divine mission, and so have their successors in these times. They stir into the acid beverage of life the saccharine. They make the cup of earthly existence, which is sometimes stale, effervesce and bubble. They placate animosities. They foster longevity. They slay follies and absurdities which all the sermons of all the pulpits cannot reach.

They have for examples Elijah, who made fun of the Baalites when they called down fire and it did not come, suggesting that their heathen god had gone hunting, or was off on a journey, or was asleep, and nothing but vociferation could wake him, saying: "Cry aloud for he is a god; either he is talking or pursuing, or peradventure he sleepeth and must be awaked." They have an example in Christ, who with healthful sarcasm showed up the lying, hypocritical Pharisees by suggesting that such perfect people like themselves needed no improvements, saying: "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."

But what use are you making of your wit? Is it besmirched with profanity and uncleanness? Do you employ it in amusement at physical defects for which the victims are not responsible? Are your powers of mimicry used to put religion in contempt? Is it a bunch of nettlesome invective? Is it a bolt of unjust scorn? Is it fun at others' misfortune? Is it glee at their disappointment and defeat? Is it bitterness put drop by drop into a cup? Is it like the squeezing of Artemisia Absinthium into a draught already distastefully pungent? Then you are the star Wormwood. Yours is the fun of a rattlesnake trying how well it can sting. It is the fun of a hawk trying how quick it can strike out the eye of a dove.

But I will change this, and suppose you are

A Star of Worldly Prosperity.

Then you have large opportunity. You can encourage that artist by buying his picture. You can improve the fields, the stables, the highways by introducing higher style of fowl and horse and cow and sheep. You can bless the world with pomological achievement in the orchard. You can advance arboriculture and arrest the deathful iconoclasm of the American forest. You can put a piece of sculpture into the niche of that public academy. You can endow a college. You can stocking a thousand bare feet from the winter frost. You can build a church. You can put a missionary of Christ on the foreign shore. You can help ransom a world. A rich man with his heart right—can you te me how much good a James Lenox or a George Peabody or a Peter Cooper or a William E. Dodge did while living, or is doing now that he is dead? There is not a city, town, or neighborhood that has not glorious specimens of consecrated wealth.

But suppose you grind the face of the poor. Suppose when a man's wages are due you make him wait for them because he cannot help himself. Suppose that, because his family is sick and he has had extra expenses, he should politely ask you to raise his wages for this year, and you roughly tell him if he wants a better place to go and get it. Suppose by your manner you act as though he were nothing and you were everything. Suppose you are selfish and Overbearing and Arrogant.

Your first name ought to be Attila and your last name Attila, because you are the star Wormwood, and you have embittered one-third, if not three-thirds, of the waters that roll past your employees and operatives and dependents and associates; and the long line of carriages which the undertaker orders for your funeral, in order to make the occasion respectable, will be filled with twice as many dry, tearless eyes as there are persons occupying them.

There is an erroneous idea abroad that there are only a few geniuses. There are millions of them; that is, men and women who have especial adaptation and quickness for some one thing. It may be great, it may be small. The circle may be like the circumference of the earth or no larger than a thimble. There are thousands of geniuses here this morning, and in some one thing you are a star.

What Kind of a Star are You?

You will be in this world but a few minutes. As compared with eternity the stay of the longest life on earth is not more than a minute. What are we doing with that minute? Are we embittering the domestic or social or political fountains, or are we like Moses, who, when the Israelites in the Wilderness complained that the waters of Lake Marah were bitter and they could not drink them, their leader cut off the branch of a certain tree and threw that branch into the water, and it became sweet and slaked the thirst of the suffering host? Are we with a branch of the Tree of Life sweetening all the brackish fountains that we can touch?

Dear Lord, send us all out on Thy mission. All around us embittered lives—embittered by persecution, embittered by hypercriticism, embittered by poverty, embittered by pain, embittered by injustice, embittered by sin. Why not go forth and sweeten them by smile, by inspiring words, by benefactions, by hearty counsel, by prayer, by gospelized behavior! Let us remember that if we are wormwood to others we are wormwood to ourselves, and our life will be bitter and our eternity bitterer. The gospel of Jesus Christ is that is sufficient. It sweetens the disposition. It sweetens the manners. It sweetens life. It sweetens mysterious Providences. It sweetens afflictions. It sweetens death. It sweetens everything. I have heard people asked in social company: "If you could have three wishes gratified, what would your three wishes be?" If I could have three wishes met this morning I tell you what they would be. First: More of the grace of God. Second: More of the grace of God. Third: More of the grace of God. In the door-yard of my brother John, missionary in Amoy, China, there is a tree called the two characteristics of which are that it always grows higher than its surroundings, and its leaves take the form of a crown. If this emperor-tree be planted by a rose-bush it grows a little higher than the bush, and spreads out above it a crown. If it be planted by the side of another tree, it grows a little higher than that tree and spreads above it a crown. Would God that this religion of Christ, a more wonderful emperor-tree, might overshadow all your lives! are you lowly in ambition or circumstance, putting over you its crown; are you high in talent and position, putting over you its crown. Oh, for more of the saccharine in our lives and less of the wormwood!

The Only Sweetening Power

The Emperor-Tree,

What is true of individuals is true of nations. God sets them up to revolve as stars, but they may fall wormwood.

Star Nations.

Tyre—the atmosphere of the desert fragrant with spices coming in caravans to her fairs: all seas cleft into foam by the keels of her laden merchantmen: her markets rich with horses and camels from Togarmah, her bazaars filled with upholstery from Dedan, with emeralds and coral and agate from Syria, with wines from Helbon, with embroidered work from Ashur and Chilmad. Where now the gleam of her towers, where the roar of her chariots, where the masts of her ships? Let the fishermen who dry their nets where once she stood, let the sea that rushes upon the barreness where once she challenged the admiration of all nations, let the barbarians who set their rude tents where once her palaces glittered, answer the question. She was a star, but by her own sin turned to wormwood and has fallen.

Hundred-gated Thebes—for all time to be the study of antiquarian and hieroglyphist; her stupendous ruins spread over twenty-seven miles; her sculptures presenting in figures of warrior and chariot the victories with which the now forgotten kings of Egypt shook the nations; her obelisks and columns; Carnac and Luxor, the stupendous temples of her pride. Who can imagine the greatness of Thebes in those days when the hippodrome rang with her sports, and foreign royalty bowed at her shrines, and her avenues roared with the wheels of processions in the wake of returning conquerors? What dashed down the vision of chariots and temples and thrones? What hands pulled upon the columns of her glory? What ruthlessness defaced her sculptured wall and broke obelisks and left her indescribable temples

Great Skeletons of Granite?

What spirit of destruction spread the lair of wild beasts in her royal sepulchres, and taught the miserable cottagers of to-day to build huts in the courts of her temples, and sent desolation and ruin skulking behind the obelisks and dodging among the sarcophagi and leaning against the columns and stooping under the arches and weeping in the waters, which go mournfully by as though they were carrying the tears of all ages? Let the mummies break their long silence and come up to shiver in the desolation, and point to fallen gates and shattered statues and defaced sculpture, responding: "Thebes built not one temple to God. Thebes hated righteousness and loved sin. Thebes was a star, but she turned to wormwood and has fallen."

Babylon—with her two hundred and fifty towers and her brazen gates and her embattled walls, the splendor of the earth gathered within her palaces, her hanging gardens built by Nebuchadnezzar to please his bride Amyittis, who had been brought up in a mountainous country and could not endure the flat country round Babylon—these hanging gardens built, terrace above terrace, till at the height of four hundred feet there were woods waving and fountains playing, the verdure, the foliage, the glory, looking as if a mountain were on the wing. On the tip-top a king walking with his queen, among statues snowy white, looking up at birds brought from distant lands, and drinking out of tankards of solid gold, or looking off over rivers and lakes upon nations subdued and tributary, crying: "Is not this which I have built?" What battering-ram smote the walls? What ploughshare upturned the gardens? What army shattered the brazen gates? What long, fierce blast of storm put out this light which illumined the world? What crash of discord drove down the music that poured from palace window and garden grove, and called the banqueters to their revel and the dancers to their feet? I walk upon the scene of desolation to find an answer, and pick up pieces of bitumen and brick and broken pottery, the remains of Babylon, and as in the silence of the night I hear the surging of that billow of desolation which rolls over the scene, I hear the wild waves saying: "Babylon was proud. Babylon was impure. Babylon was a star, but by sin she turned to wormwood and has fallen."

Great Babylon

The Star of the West.

From the persecutions of the Pilgrim Fathers and the Huguenots in other lands, God set upon these shores a nation. The council-fires of the aborigines went out in the greater light of a free government. The sound of the war-whoop was exchanged for the thousand wheels of enterprise and progress. The mild winters, the fruitful summers, the healthful skies charmed from other lands a race of hardy men, who loved God and wanted to be free. Before the woodman's axe forests fell, and rose again into ships' masts and churches' pillars. Cities on the bank of lakes begin to rival cities by the sea. The land quakes with the rush of the rail-car, and the waters are churned white with the steamer's wheel. Fabulous bushels of Western wheat meet on the way fabulous tons of Eastern coal. Furs from the North pass on the rivers fruits from the South. And trading in the same market is Maine lumberman, and South Carolina rice merchant, and Ohio farmer, and Alaska fur-dealer. And churches and schools and asylums scatter light and love and mercy and salvation upon sixty millions of people.

I pray that our nation may not copy the crimes of the nations that have perished, and our cup of blessing turn to wormwood, and, like them, we go down. I am by nature and by grace an optimist, and I expect that this country will continue to advance until the world shall put on millennial era, and that when Christ comes again He will set His throne somewhere between the Alleghanies and the Sierra Nevadas. But be not deceived!

Our Only Safety

is in righteousness toward God and justice toward man. If we forget the goodness of the Lord to this land, and break His Sabbaths, and improve not by the dire disasters that have again and again come to us as a people, and we learn saving lesson neither from civil war nor raging epidemic, nor drouth, nor mildew, nor scourge of locust and grasshopper; if the political corruption which has poisoned the fountains of public virtue, and beslimed the high places of authority, making free government at times a hissing and a byword in all the earth; if the drunkenness and licentiousness that stagger and blaspheme in the streets of our great cities, as though they were reaching after the fame of a Corinth and a Sodom, are not repented of, we will yet see the smoke of the pillars of our National and State capitols will fall more disastrously than when Samson pulled down Dagon; and future historians will record, upon the page bedewed with generous tears, the story that the free nation of the West arose in splendor which made the world stare. It had magnificent possibilities. It forgot God. It hated justice. It hugged its crime. It halted on its high march. It reeled under the blow of calamity. It fell. And as it was going down, all the despotisms of earth, from the top of bloody thrones, began to shout, "Aha, so would we have it!" while struggling and oppressed peoples looked out from dungeon bars, with tears and groans, and cries of untold agony, the scorn of those and the woe of these uniting in the exclamation, "Look yonder! There fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood!"

Our Nation's Ruin;

Volume X. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1887, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1883, 1884, and 1885 are also for sale. We have none prior to 1883.

THE STORM CLOUDS GATHERING.

Two Momentous Cablegrams—The Struggle Predicted by the Inspired Writers — Its Result Outlined—The Map of Europe Rearranged—The Materials of the Conflagration—The Pacific Situation Suddenly Disturbed Boulanger Come to the Front—Journalistic Portraits of Him—His Rumored Napoleonic Descent—The Fighting Kaiser—A Woman's Description of Him—The Rising Waiting his Call.

THE cable last week, brought almost simultaneously two startling communications, the significance of which every student of prophecy cannot fail to appreciate. They were (1) the sudden crisis unexpectedly developed in the physical condition of the Emperor of Germany, which was of so serious a nature, that a decree was hastily issued, making the Crown Prince regent or virtually Emperor, and (2) the triumphant election of General Boulanger in France, as a deputy of the Legislature, by the Department of the North. The momentous meaning of these two events, which in one week have come upon Europe like a thunder clap, is realized when we remember the warnings which prophetic expositors have uttered in this and past times, which were based upon the conclusions derived from their study of the prophecies.

The Warnings

were to the effect that a gigantic upheaval of European nationalities was imminent, and that it would probably be opened by a fierce struggle between Germany and France. The Rev. M. Baxter explained fully in these columns last year, and with greater detail in his pamphlets,* the reason which had led him and many eminent expositors, notably "the prince of commentators," Matthew Henry, to believe that this struggle could not be delayed much, if at all, beyond next year. The chief of these reasons was, that the twenty-three kingdoms which now occupy the area of Cæsar's Roman Empire are, by annexation, conquest, or diplomatic re-arrangement, to be transformed into ten kingdoms in fulfilment of the type which Nebuchadnezzar saw in the image with ten toes (Daniel 2: 41, 42) and which Daniel, by Divine illumination, explained as a kingdom divided into ten. In a later vision granted to Daniel himself, the same type was seen (Daniel 7: 23, 24) in the fourth beast with ten horns, which, as the angel informed him, represented a kingdom out of which ten kings should arise. As this fourth kingdom is clearly which in the zenith of its greatness girdled the Mediterranean Sea, and included England, too, it is evident that when the prophecy is fulfilled it will become a decem-regal power, cohering by iron-bound treaties, and eventually controlled and directed by one diabolically possessed monster, the Napoleonic Antichrist, who, either in his own person or dynastically, would present to the world the unique spectacle of a being miraculously raised to life after being slain by the sword. The result of this impending gigantic international struggle is thus revealed, but not the process. It is not, however, difficult for any reader of history to arrive at the conclusion that it will be by war; and the precision with which Daniel fixes the dates as revealed to him, renders it clear that the time for the commencement of those wars is now at hand.

The Roman Empire,

The student of prophecy, therefore, being sure that God saw all things from the beginning, and revealed the future to His servant for the enlightenment and preparation of His people, looks around for signs of its fulfilment. A few weeks ago few of those signs were recognizable. France had just peaceably elected a President of pacific disposition, who took pains to assure the nations in general, and Germany in particular, of his amity and cordiality. His assurances were accepted in good faith, and the statesmen of Germany congratulated themselves on his elevation to the Presidential chair. Boulanger, the firebrand, the one centre about which the warlike elements of France clung, was in disgrace in a remote province, the subject of the gibes and sneers of the party in power.

A similar peaceful aspect was seen in Germany. The warlike Emperor, the man who, guided by Bismarck, had with the sword in hand won glory and increased territory for the Empire, was dead, and in his place stood his son, a man of peace, notoriously disinclined to be guided by Bismarck, and opposed to the policy known as that of blood and iron. To-day both aspects are changed, and the change has come with astounding suddenness. The Emperor is reported to be dying—may even be dead before these lines are read—his son and successor, a young hot-headed aspirant to the fame of his ancestor, Frederick II., who deluged Europe with blood, is appointed regent; and in France the whilom despised Boulanger has returned to Paris with the confidence of an enormous section of the French people, publicly and emphatically declared in him. The gravity of the situation is realized when we examine the respective characters and aims of of the rival nations. Boulanger who was dismissed from his military command by the Government, and was then triumphantly elected to the French Parliament by the Department of the North, in a contest in which he received 172,272 votes, being nearly 100,000 more than those polled for his chief antagonist, is now the most prominent figure in France. Of his elevation a French journal, the Evenement says: "The success of Boulanger is very great. What will the member-elect of the Nord do now? He has declared that he would go on to the end. The end is the dictatorship of a soldier raised up by a coalition of the enemies of the Republic.

The Champions

M. Blowitz, the French correspondent of the London Times, who has achieved a world-wide reputation as a sagacious observer of current events, says, in reference to the address by which General Boulanger endeavored to allay the suspicions prevalent respecting him: "Louis Napoleon talked exactly in this strain from 1848 to 1851. He, too, wished only to be President of the Republic; but when President, he made himself Emperor; and, as President, Boulanger might become Emperor. The causes of this success defy analysis. It cannot be explained nor combated. Universal suffrage has its freaks, and to try to stem it is hopeless. General Boulanger and his satellites have invented nothing—they simply imitate precedents, and universal suffrage asks nothing else. They demand, like Louis Napoleon, revision and dissolution; they are ready, like him and his abettors, to risk everything. There is still an alliance of anarchists and absolutists, and just as Louis Napoleon said that the Empire was peace, so General Boulanger says he desires the peaceful regeneration of the country."

According to M. Joffrin, the socialist municipal Councillor, who went down to oppose General Boulanger, "the peasants are led to believe that he is a natural son of Napoleon, by a Russian princess. Prophetical almanacs are distributed which fix the 7th of May, 1890, for his defeat of the Germans." When we add to all this the rumor that he is a close friend of Prince Jerome Napoleon, though, for prudential reasons, the friendship is a secret one, and that one of Prince Jerome's sons disbursed money and canvassed for him in his election, General Boulanger's popularity and probable return to power become increasingly significant.

The German Champion,

the son of the Emperor, is a young man of twenty-nine, who has openly espoused the cause of Prince Bismarck in antagonism to his father. He has had no training as a statesman, but has become familiar with all military details, and has already displayed a remarkable genius in the manœuvering of large bodies of troops. The Berlin correspondent of the New York Times, in describing him, says: "Prince William is, in truth, as purely North German by heredity, as wholly a product of Wend and Saxon and Goth and Borussian intermixture, as can be found. One may call him, indeed, a culmination of the Hohenzollern type of soldier-statesman, reached, curiously enough, by the same crossing of blood which produced Frederick the Great. The mother of that wonderful warrior was also a Guelph—Sophie Dorothea—the sister of George I. It is passing strange that when, a century and a half later, a Hohenzollern Crown Prince next again takes a wife from the Brunswick House, the eldest son should again be marked by nature for a world fighter. Why this result should follow is not clear. Whatever else the Guelphs may be, they distinctly are not a military family. Yet when a Sophie Dorothea or a Victoria Adelaide is wedded by a Frederick William of Hohenzollern, lo! the issue is

A Born Captain of Men.

I think I have related before in these columns a remark which I heard made here in Berlin two years ago, during the Congo Conference. It was at a state function, and I stood beside an elderly lady who had been in Berlin for many years, and who had been in a position to know the younger members of the imperial family as well and closely as she could have known her own nephews and nieces. In the course of talk I asked her: "What kind of a man is the young Prince William?" "I don't call him a man at all," she replied quickly and with emphasis. "He is a brute." I can fancy an elderly woman of a couple of generations back, who was attached to the suite of the Empress Josephine, speaking in precisely the same words of the first Napoleon.

Apparently all the women who have had to do with the bringing up of Prince William hold him in horror and detestation. I have had numerous proofs of this, although I have never been able to fasten upon any specifice reasons for it. Their dislike for him is based on a general conception of his character. This view is that he is utterly cold, entirely selfish, wantonly cruel, a young man without conscience or compassion, or any softening virtues whatever. That he has great abilities they all admit; but they stop there. Heart he has none, upon their reckoning. And I am bound to say that if you look into his face with this preconceived notion of the young man's character, you can find plenty of signs which seem to substantiate it.

Nobody with eyes in his head could have passed the week just ended in Berlin without recognizing that if a firebrand comes to the throne, the materials are close-crowded for

A Terrible Conflagration.

The army here in Germany will utterly swamp what organized pacific instincts there are in the empire the moment a young fighting Kaiser draws his sword and cries out: "Who will follow me?" The fact of the existence of Bismarck's colossal army will magnify itself in the popular mind; the spirit in which he built it up, the peaceful intent, the patriotic aim—will all vanish like steam on a lamp chimney.

"The military class is all-powerful in the upper, middle, and higher grades of German society. Very little of provocation, or popular appeals to national feeling, would make it master of nine-tenths of the German people. Kaiser William II. in the glamor of his youthful distinction of face and figure, of his deep Teutonic prejudices, of his all-controlling belief in himself and his race and his destiny—could hurl a practically united Germany in warfare east, west, or south a month after he had ascended the Hohenzollern throne. The whole German nation from Basil to Königsberg would rise to his enthusiastic support. This is not a pleasant or humane conclusion, but it is a necessary one.'

The materials of confederation are thus vividly portrayed as existing in the rival nations,

* The three pamphlets—1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc. 2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors. 3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-3; as shown by Daniel's Dates; sold altogether, in one colored cover at 20 cents, 144 pages, at Christian Herald Office, 63 Bible House, New York.

and it is not only students of prophecy, but secular journalists, who foresee the impending storm. The New York Herald asks: "Is history to repeat itself with Boulanger as Napoleon the Fourth?

Is France to pass under a new military despotism? As a general proposition, the political adventures of Boulanger, or of any French commander, would concern us little. But the relations of Continental Europe are so unfortunate, that imminent war hangs over the nations like one of those impending avalanches which the cry of a chamois hunter might dislodge and send raging down the mountain. A breath, a murmur, may bring war—and with war misfortune to mankind. Since Sedan, eighteen years ago, public opinion has been dreading lest that word came from France. General Boulanger may say what he will—his election in this Department of the Nord can only mean a moral declaration of war. We may see the Napoleon experiment repeated."

IN PERIL AMONG INDIANS.

Among the thrilling incidents related in the Minnesota Missionary, by that devoted laborer for Christ among the Indians, Bishop Whipple, is the following, which occurred during the awful Sioux outbreak of 1862: "The Sioux attacked the trading-posts and killed the employees. When they came to Major Forbes's place, the clerk in charge, Mr. George Spencer, was wounded and fled up-stairs. The store was filled with goods, so they would not burn it. Wakeautawa, 'His Thunder,' a friend of Spencer's, passed through the Indians, and went up-stairs, and taking Spencer in his arms carried him to his lodge. He then sat by his side with a double-barrelled gun, and as the Indians came to kill him said, 'Kill him, if you dare; two of you shall die for one! He is my codah (friend). I said I would save his life, and I will.' For days and weeks that faithful man guarded his friend until rescued. Wakeautawa was afterward a scout under General Sibley, and was killed; and to the credit of Mr. Spencer, he showed his gratitude by caring for the wife and children of his Indian friend.

A Bible in a Blanket.

"Lorenzo Lawrence rescued Mrs. Sweet and her children. Other Day saved good Dr. Williamson, the missionary families and employees of Yellow Medicine. Wakashaw, Good Thunder, Taopi, and others planned the deliverance of all the captives. Simon Angmani and others performed deeds of heroism in defence of prisoners. Wahchaucamaza, at the risk of life, carried a message through the hostile camp, creeping through the grass until he could deliver it to Robertson, who carried it to Fort Ripley. Good Thunder's present wife, Sarah Farnum, took the Bible from the mission chapel, and wrapped it in a blanket, and when she could, sent me word, 'The words of the Great Spirit are safe. I send you the good news to make your heart glad.'

An Execution Prevented.

"Time would fail me to recall all the incidents which showed the fidelity of our friends. They were surrounded by savage foes, mad with hate, and drunk with blood. In some cases these Christian Indians were threatened with death. It did not move them. 'Kill me, if you wish; but you cannot keep me from doing what is right. I am not afraid to die.' Taopi and about 100 friendly Indians came to Faribault. The people were indignant, and some foolish threats were made to kill Taopi. He came one day to see me with Alexander Faribault. He handed me a paper and said, 'Read this.' It was a certificate of General Sibley's. 'The bearer, Taopi, or "Wounded Man," is a civilized chief of the Sioux, who is entitled to the gratitude of the nation for having, with others, rescued over 200 white women and children during the Sioux war. H. H. Sibley, Colonel commanding.' Said Taopi, 'I saved your people from death. If you Christians have the same law as the Sioux, that when one man dies another shall die in his place, and for this your people would kill me, tell them not to shoot me like a dog, but to send for me to come down into the square, and I will show them how a man can die.' This interview was printed in the village paper, and we heard no more of killing Taopi.

Called by the Great Spirit.

"Brave, noble Taopi; he would have suffered had I not been able, through the kindness of friends, to care for him. One day I received a letter. 'Come quick, I can't see plain; the Great Spirit has called me for the last journey. I am not afraid to go, for His Son, Jesus, is going with me, and I shall not be lonesome on the road. Come, for I want to see you, and hear you once more.' I cannot forget that death-bed, where the very peace of God rested on the dying Christian. He sleeps in Maplelawn Cemetery, with his faithful wife Nancy, and I have placed a white tombstone over the grave of one of the truest men I ever knew.

"A few of these Indians still live at Faribault. Most of these women were removed to the mission a few years later. We bade them good-by at the Lord's Table. After the service these women came one by one and took my wife's hand, and with tears kissed it, and said, 'In Heaven to meet you I hope.' Blessed words for us all, that after a little more work, a little more sickness, a little more sorrow, there will come 'the rest for the weary' in the home where all partings are over."

IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

A merciful preservation, in a time of peril, is reported in a letter received last week from Rev. W. F. Re Qua, who, as our readers are aware, is laboring among the Choctaws, in the Indian Territory, relying solely on God for his support. On Sunday, April 1, he held a meeting at a considerable distance from his home, having travelled thither in a lumber-wagon which the "head-man" kindly drove over to convey Mr. and Mrs. Re Qua, their little daughter and their niece. After the night service they were returning by the same conveyance, when, the night being very dark, the "head-man" mistook the way, drove up on the side of a bad crossing and came in contact with a huge branch, which threw the whole party out of the wagon. The terrified team started off at a mad gallop, but providentially missing the prostrate missionary and his family. They were all severely shaken, though all escaped without serious injury, except Mr. Re Qua, who was badly lamed. This is the second accident of the kind which the missionary has met with in the course of his perilous work, but, as he thankfully acknowledges, he has been wonderfully kept from many other dangers.

Mr. Re Qua desires us to thank the friends who are contributing toward the purchase of the tent and organ for the summer work. Thirty-eight dollars toward the hundred and fifty have already been sent to him, and he is full of faith and confidence that the balance will come in time for the campaign which he has planned. It has been suggested to him that if another edition of Mrs. Re Qua's poems, "Stones for the Temple," were issued and sold at one dollar, and seven cents for postage, the profit on it might help them considerably in their work. The book is heartily commended by Mr. Ira D. Sankey, Miss Frances E. Willard, Mrs. Ella Wilcox, and other well-known authors.

A THANKFUL CONGREGATION.

In a communication to the Spirit of Missions from Bishop Ferguson of Cape Palmas, Africa, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on March 18, 1886, he thus describes his visit to a village of Congoes near the settlement of Gardnerville: "After a rather tedious journey on foot of two and a quarter hours, we reached the village, and proceeded at once to an unfinished thatched building, intended for a place of worship. From that spot not a house was to be seen; but a messenger was despatched to announce our arrival, and very soon several men and women made their appearance from among the bushes in different directions. The assembly was composed of Methodists, Baptists, and members of our Church. [Protestant Episcopal.] On introducing ourselves, stating that we had come to see the religious state of things, three of the men stood up and addressed us by turns; one of whom, a Baptist brother, spoke in a most pathetic strain. He said they were glad that we had come to see their sad condition; they were living like heathen: no church, no school, no training for their children, who were growing up in wild ignorance; that some of them had undertaken to build the house under whose roof we were assembled; that it was not intended for any particular denomination, only that they might have a place to meet in on Sundays.

A Bargain.

"Our hearts were deeply moved by this address. Appeal for help was never more urgent anywhere. It was no fancied picture; for there the facts stood before our eyes in all their startling realities. I could not avoid promising that if they would complete the house and have the land on which it stood deeded to the mission, I would give them a school-teacher and arrange for regular services. Could our Church people in America have witnessed the scene which immediately followed this announcement, the women raising their hands to heaven and exclaiming, 'Thank God, our prayers are heard! Our poor children will go to school now instead of spending all day fishing in the mangrove swamp! Praise the Lord!' I am sure they would make it possible for me to fulfill this promise!"

Contributions to the funds of the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church should be sent to the Mission Rooms, 22 Bible House, New York. Cheques being made payable to R. Fulton Cutting.

HIGH CASTE LEARNERS.

An unprecedented work in India is described in a letter from Miss Lyman, of Bombay, to the Missionary Herald. She says: "Nearly a year ago a high-caste Hindu woman living in Parell, three miles from here, came to request Mrs. Hume to open a Sabbath-school in her house. This Mrs. Hume did, having as many as fifty-four scholars, with an average attendance of thirty women and girls each Sabbath. The boys also were so eager to hear the gospel stories that Mr. Abbott and a native helper opened a class for them on the veranda, where as many as seventy-five men and boys gather to listen to them. After a while this woman came again to beg Mrs. Hume to open a day-school in her house, and the week after our arrival it was started. Yesterday the school was closed for a week's vacation. I wish that some of our friends in America could have been there to hear those girls, after six weeks' instruction, read so well, and repeat Scripture verses and tell Bible stories which Mrs. Hume had taught them in the Sabbath-school. Some of the native Christians were present, and one of them said afterwards that hitherto he had not had sufficient confidence in the work to pray for it; but when he saw it he had to pray to God then and there, for it was so wonderful. Now, the women in Parell beg for a teacher for themselves, and thus two teachers and an assistant are needed for the work there.

"This is a wonderful opening—an unheard-of thing in the past, for a Hindu house of a very high caste to be opened to Christians.

"The work going on here has been a constant source of surprise to me. I came from a Christian church in a Christian country, but I have been forced to own to myself that it is not doing more than half the work for the Master that this little church of one hundred and ten members is doing, and here they are all poor, many of them living in only one room."

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes, by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

New Edition of Rev. M. Baxter's Pamphlets.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Adverse Report on the Fisheries Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, the features of which were explained in our issues of February 23 and March 1, has been decided on by the Republican majority of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. This action did not cause any great surprise, as it was evident, even before the provisions of the treaty were published, that opposition to its ratification would be organized. Concern for the Irish vote in the Presidential election, party jealousy, and the natural inferences to be drawn from Mr. Chamberlain's silly boasting on his return, all operate against the treaty. The committee's decision was reached on a strict party vote. Messrs. Sherman, Edmunds, Frye, Evarts, and Dolph, Republicans, voting against a favorable report, and Messrs. Morgan, Brown, Saulsbury, and Payne, Democrats, supporting the treaty. The committee has also reported adversely the resolution providing for the discussion of the treaty in open session. This action as to secret sessions was also supported by the Democratic Senators, though only by a small majority. In connection with this matter, Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, a Republican Senator, introduced a resolution on the 19th inst., providing that one of the official reporters of debates should be present when the treaty was taken up, and make a full report of the proceedings, and that such portions should be made public as a majority of the Senate should order.

The Bond Purchasing Bill which, as stated in these columns on April 12, the Senate returned to the House, with a scheme to substitute silver for surrendered national bank circulation tacked to it, will, in all probability, remain undisturbed in the pigeon-holes of the Ways and Means Committee room. There is no longer any necessity of acting upon it, the House having disposed of the question in another and more simple way last week. It passed a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the House that the Secretary of the Treasury has the authority, under the act of 1881, to purchase bonds with the surplus. Immediately following this Congressional action the Secretary of the Treasury issued a circular inviting proposals for the sale of United States bonds to the Government. Being asked in regard to it, he said he had not made up his mind as to the amount of bonds he would purchase, though the fact that proposals will be received daily, without limit as to time, might imply that he wanted to buy a large amount. The amount to be purchased, however, he said, depended almost entirely upon the amount offered and the prices asked. The surplus, as estimated at the Treasury Department, is now $105,000,000.

The Great Tariff Debate, Which Has Been awaited with so much interest, and which will engage the attention of Congress and of the country for at least several weeks, was begun in the House of Representatives on April 17. The special measure under consideration is the Mills Tariff Reduction Bill, a synopsis of which was given in these columns on March 8. Mr. Mills, of Texas, who, in his capacity as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, led the debate, as he had reported this bill, and also the bill for the reduction of Internal Revenue taxes, consolidated with it. The burden of his speech was the declaration that it was the cheaper cost of raw materials in England that enabled that country to compete with the United States. It was, he contended, the high tariff on the raw materials that made the cost of our manufactures high, and kept us from being the best manufacturing people in the world, as we were the best agricultural people. It was a suicidal policy that closed to us the markets of the world. Venerable Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, the champion of the protectionists, replied to Mr. Mills's argument. He spoke strongly in support of the policy of protection, and asserted that the enactment of the pending bill would paralyze the industry and enterprise of the American people and overthrow their manufacturing supremacy.

The Bill to Divide the Territory of Dakota, and to admit the southern portion as a State, passed the Senate on April 19, by the votes of 26 Republicans, who were opposed by 23 Democrats. The latter were in favor of admitting Dakota as one State, but all were opposed to dividing the Territory. The bill as passed declares the State of South Dakota a State of the United States of America, and ratifies the constitution which the people of South Dakota have formed by themselves. It fixes the boundaries of the State, and give the State concurrent jurisdiction of the Missouri River, and every other river bordering on the State. It provides that until the next census and apportionment South Dakota is to have two representatives in the House of Representatives, and, as a matter of course, like any other full-fledged State, two representatives in the United States Senate. That portion of the former Territory not within the State of South Dakota is to continue as a Territory under the name of North Dakota, with Bismarck as its capital.

The Death of Ex-Senator Roscoe Conkling, which occurred on April 18, has elicited expressions of profound regret—from his adversaries as well as from his friends. Since his resignation of the Senatorship in 1881, he has devoted himself exclusively to his legal practice, and declared himself out of politics, but to the last he exercised a power which was felt in the councils of his party, and at the polls. His masterly abilities, his polished eloquence, and above all, his unimpeachable integrity, won for him the ardent admiration of the masses. Though wielding immense power during the two terms of President Grant, and controlling the patronage of the Empire State until his resignation, he was known to have kept his hands clean; and that fact, standing out in marked contrast to the character of the men who antagonized him, was not overlooked by the people, even when his course did not have their approval. The deceased statesman was under sixty years of age, having been born in Albany, N. Y., October 30, 1828. He was in splendid physical health, and his mental powers were in full vigor, until within a month of his death. The collapse was caused by his being caught in the fatal blizzard of March 12, when he walked from Wall Street to Union Square. He caught a severe cold in the head, which developed an abscess at the base of the brain, causing him acute suffering. After a critical operation, he appeared to rally, but after a brave struggle finally succumbed.

Anarchy in Cuba, with Horrible Atrocities, is reported in despatches, which were preceded by sinister rumors last week. It is stated that the administration of Captain-General Marin is equivalent to a reign of terror; murders, kidnapping, robberies, and plunder by high Government officials, are said to be the fruits of General Marin's despotic reign. A Havana correspondent of the New York Sun indignantly writes: "Death stalks, grim and unopposed, through a once flourishing island, and, handcuffed and outraged by her cruel masters, Cuba is fast sinking into a condition of utter lawlessness, despair, and ruin." The Madrid Government has declared the provinces of Pinar, Del Rio, Villa Clara, and Havana under martial law. It is reported that in consequence of this action an emeute has broken out. Great disturbances are supposed to exist, but as the cable is under the censor's control, no reliable news can be obtained. It is stated that three Havana newspapers have been suppressed, and also that the Madrid Government would remove General Marin at once.

Lord Hartington Was Honored last Week by being presented with the freedom of the city of London. After the presentation a banquet was given at the Mansion House. Lord Hartington, recounting the arguments against the Gladstone policy, said he was unable to predict the result of the Irish struggle, but he was confident that the problem would not be solved by the compromise of 1886. Ireland could not be dealt with as a colony. The decision rested with the democracy. If they were weak and weary of the struggle, Ireland might obtain independence. If they were strong and had the spirit of their kinsmen across the Atlantic, they would not permit Ireland to be separated. In order that the struggle might be carried to a successful issue the Unionists must not flinch, as there was still much work to do. The Government had wisely shown that they did not fear the widest extension of local government.

Emperor Frederick of Germany is Rapidly sinking, and his death may be momentarily expected. A very alarming crisis has set in, and the gravest fears are entertained of a speedy fatal ending of the unhappy monarch's disease. He said to Court Chaplain Koegel: "You pray for my preservation; rather pray for my release." The anxiety and display of personal interest on the part of the population of Berlin, and in fact of the whole of Germany, are much greater than they were in the case of old Emperor William. An eminent Berlin throat physican has expressed the opinion that the Emperor is suffering from soft cancer, and the development has arrived at a point where no operation can avail to postpone death beyond a few days.

A Peasant Revolt has broken out in Roumania. The houses of land-owners and farmers have been sacked and wrecked, granaries pillaged, and the local officials barbarously treated, a number of them having been killed. The territorial troops joined in the pillage and fired upon the troops of the line. Since instructions were sent to the troops to adopt severe measures for the suppresion of the revolt, a host of the insurgents have been killed and wounded or taken prisoners. The prisons are crowded. Fugitives continue to pour into Bucharest. It is believed that stringent measures adopted by the Government will speedily suppress the uprising. One of the Bucharest papers says that if the Government desires to effectually quell the revolt it should demand the immediate recall of M. Hitrovo, the Russian Minister, whom it accuses of originating the rising.

The Sudden Death of Matthew Arnold, the accomplished English critic, poet, and essayist, occurred on Sunday, April 15, in Liverpool. Mr. Arnold was a son of the famous Dr. Arnold of Rugby, and was sixty-six years of age. Probably no Englishman of his day exercised so strong an influence as he on the literary life and work of the country. Scholarly and refined in manner, his society was eagerly sought, and highly appreciated. His works were extensively read, but it was chiefly by the upper classes and university men that their excellences were most valued. His aim was to convince men of position, and especially young men, that gross pleasures and sensual delights were degrading, and that in purity, truth, and benevolence there were greater joy and happiness than the gratification of the senses could ever afford. Such teaching was sorely needed, and was productive of good, though it is greatly to be regretted that it did not reach a still higher plane. Mr. Arnold twice visited America, and on the second occasion came to attend the marriage of his daughter to a citizen of New York.

A Question of Great Interest to the American Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has been satisfactorily settled by Mr. Oscar Straus, the United States Minister at Constantinople. The Board has fifteen schools in Syria, which the Turkish authorities summarily closed in 1886. Of these Mr. Straus secured the reopening of ten during his stay at Beyrout a fortnight ago, and secured a pledge that the remaining five would be opened as soon as the new Governor-General of Syria arrives. Mr. Straus was last week at Jaffa, on his way to Jerusalem. His energy and zeal in the cause of Christian missions are all the more noteworthy from the fact that he is a Jew.

A Prayer-Meeting in a Broadway Hotel was described by Rev. Thomas Harrison at the recent jubilee at the Jane Street Church, New York. He said: "Last night the proprietor of a prominent hotel in Broadway broke an engagement to a card party to come to this meeting. He had been here before. He was converted. His wife had been here before. She was converted. They found God here last night. They went home, and there at midnight they two began a prayer-meeting in one of the rooms of the hotel alone by themselves. Two guests dropped in to see what they were about, and were converted. Then an actress came in to find out what they were shouting for, and she was converted. Here are the cards of all, here in my hand. They sent them round to me to-day. And they—they are probably in this house praising God."

A Fatal Pride has been Displayed by a Family of sisters in New Jersey. For some years past a house at Mount Holy, N. J., has been occupied by three ladies, daughters of a Baptist clergyman, who, at his death, left that and another small property to them. They lived a secluded life, and their neighbors knew nothing of their circumstances or their means of support. It was surmised, however, from the rigid economy they evidently practiced, that they were poor. A discovery made recently proved that their poverty was far more abject than was imagined. It was learned that one of the sisters was dead, and an investigation revealed the fact that she had died of starvation. Kindly neighbors who then went to the house, ascertained that there was neither food nor fuel there, nor had there been any for some time. The ladies had been too proud to make their destitution known, and their reserve had cost one life and placed the other two in peril before it was broken. The case excites much sympathy. It is stated, however, that relief might have been easily obtained had the sisters asked for it; and the survivors are, therefore, blamed for not doing so, and so averting their sister's death, and their own suffering. To many churches and individual Christians in spiritual destitution the same reproach applies. The Giver of all grace is ready to respond to all who ask in faith. (Mal. 3: 10.)

The Lace Cuffs of the Late Attorney-General Brewster were frequently the subject of ridicule, and the favorite jest of his rivals, who tried to represent the great lawyer as effeminate and foppish in his tastes. No explanation was ever publicly vouchsafed by Mr. Brewster, on the matter, but he continued to wear the cuffs in spite of all the raillery which they cost him. Since his death, however, the reason for his indulging in a habit apparently so inconsistent with his vigorous character has been given to the press by a personal friend. It appears that when he first went to the bar, he had to undergo a bitter struggle with poverty. His learning and splendid talents were long in receiving recognition, and the young lawyer was often in sore straits for money to maintain a respectable appearance. His mother, whom he loved with fond devotion, knew of his hardships, and presented him with a set of shirts of her own handiwork. The old lady, intent on her son's having the best she could produce, had made the shirts in the pattern in vogue in her youth, and had ornamented the cuffs with a delicate ruffle, on which she had expended infinite pains. The gift touched the tenderest susceptibilities of Mr. Brewster's nature, and though he must have shrunk from appearing with his wrists so garnished, he would rather have cut his hands off than have refrained from wearing the ruffles, which were a proof of his dear mother's love. Later, when death had robbed him of that venerated parent, he continued to wear the ruffles in touching regard for her memory. It is much to be wished that a similar spirit was more generally to be found among Christians. Too often, the reproach of Christ has been found too heavy a cross, and ridicule has driven them to conceal their love. (Luke 6: 22.)

A Mechanical Device for the Prevention of railroad collisions was exhibited in New York last week. It consists of an arrangement of levers on the locomotive, which, in connection with a rod in the centre of the track, enables the engine-driver to set the signals himself. On approaching a signal-post the engineer by pressing a treadle with his foot lowers the bar under the engine, and this, striking the rod on the track sets in motion a compress apparatus which moves the signal and keeps it in place for a definite time, which may be regulated beforehand. By an extension of the system a starting train gives automatically a signal one mile to the front, and, arriving at that point, gives a similar signal another mile to the front and one mile to the rear, stopping any following train at the first block signal until the first train is clear of the second block signal. The working of the signals being thus confided to the man who, as engineer, occupies the place of greatest danger, it is supposed that the duty would never be neglected. Experience, however, proves that men are sometimes careless, even when they are aware that their carelessness puts their own lives in peril. Multitudes in every Christian land are well acquainted with the means God has provided for their eternal safety, yet neglect to avail themselves of them, though they know the awful consequences of dying in their sins. (Prov. 18: 10.)

A Valuable Series of Photographs is Being prepared by Professor Davidson, of the coast Survey. Some time ago he made a number of pencil drawings, from the deck of a cruiser, of some of the prominent headlands along the Pacific coast. They were necessarily imperfect, as they were taken while the cruiser was in motion, and the outlines were therefore constantly changing. Every sketch had to be taken in five minutes and under unfavorable circumstances, yet they were found to be of more use to navigators than the most elaborate descriptions in the old charts. He has therefore been commissioned, at his own desire, to take a series of photographs of the coast of California, Oregon, and Washington. They are to be taken at two distances, one at twenty miles from the coast and the other at ten miles. In addition to these two series, there would be a set of three views of every headland, as seen when approaching it from the southward, when abreast of it, and when approaching it from the northward. The value of these views can only be understood by persons who have seen the wild and rocky mass of dangers to the navigator which the Pacific coast presents. A captain to whom the coast was unknown, would find these pictures of inestimable service. But if he had them on board and did not study them he would be deemed foolish and reckless. Yet it is precisely this course that men take who sail on into the unknown, future leaving unstudied the revelation God has given in His Word. (Rev. 1: 1-3.)

Twenty-five Criminals Arrested by a Dog is a record on the books of a police precinct of New York. A reporter who saw the record recently, asked who was "Jack," to whom twenty-five arrests were credited. He was informed that Jack was a dog, who had voluntarily attached himself to the station, and had made himself useful. He presented himself there one cold night about five years ago. The dog was hungry, and the policeman on duty fed him. After that night the dog made the police station his home, and he was named "Policeman Jack." Jack is about the station in the day, but at night he patrols the precinct, rain or shine. Many of the patrolmen have found him a ready helper in running down escaping thieves or ruffians, and for such services the dog is credited on the books of the precinct. Not long ago a policeman saw thieves attempting to rob a drunken man, and started to arrest them. They fled, and he pursued. Suddenly Jack rushed past him, sprang upon the back of one of the thieves, and fastening his teeth in the man's collar, forced him to the ground. The other thief surrendered, and both prisoners were marched to the police station. Many other remarkable anecdotes are related of his intelligence and prowess. His example may be commended to many who are lacking in gratitude for benefits received. It is not uncommon to see men profess faith in Christ and receive a welcome into His Church, who never make any effort to serve Him by bringing in sinners from the world. (Matt. 4: 19.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Old Testament in Japanese, recently completed, has had a large sale. One thousand six hundred copies were called for within a month of its publication.

It is proposed to observe the week preceding June 9, as a week of special prayer all over the world for the blessing of God on the World's Missionary Conference which meets in London from June 9 to 19.

The Ohio Senate, on April 13, passed a bill to close saloons on Sunday. The vote stood twenty-five to two, and the spectators cheered loudly as the result was announced.

The annual report of the Young Men's Christian Union of Boston, shows that it counts on its roll a total of 5,148 members. During the past year, among its philanthropic work was the provision of 2,000 "rides for invalids."

A successor to Dr. Meredith, now of Brooklyn, N. Y., in the pastorate of the Union Congregational Church, Boston, Mass., has been found in Rev. M. R. Boynton, of Haverhill—a young man of remarkable preaching ability. His salary will be $5,000.

An example of practical philanthropy has been set by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, who has established, in London, work-shops equipped with sewing-machines, where poor seamstresses can go and use them at a low charge.

The need of a more stringent extradition treaty with Canada is becoming apparent to all but the men who profit by the present absurd system. Within the last two years Canada has lost $3,000,000 through embezzlers, who have escaped to the United States with the money. During the same time American embezzlers have taken more than $20,000,000 into Canada.

A generous member of Grace Episcopal Church, New York City, has promised to build a beautiful church on Blackwell's Island. It will be located on a commanding site near the almshouse, and will be under the charge of the Rev. William G. French, who has given more than fifteen years of faithful and devoted service to religious work on the island.

The programme for Chautauqua has been issued. The grounds will open for the season on July 3d. The School of the English Bible, the College of Liberal Arts, and the Teachers' Retreat immediately follow. The popular Sunday-school Assembly is to open on the 7th of August, Phillip Brooks, Joseph Cook, Drs. E. E. Hale, L. I. Townsend, W. R. Harper, and other eminent men have promised to take part.

A missionary in South Africa sends a very interesting account of a Society of Christian Endeavor among the Zulus. The organization is modified, necessarily, to meet the needs of the natives, but the main features are the same as in America. The Zulu young people take much delight in their Society, are instructed by the missionaries in Bible truth, and learn to pray and work by actual experience, as do their young brethren on the other side of the globe.

The fifth annual meeting of the International Missionary Union will be held at Bridgeton, New Jersey, July 5–12, 1888, inclusive. Ministers and others interested in foreign missionary work are invited to be present. All foreign missionaries of either sex, temporarily or permanently in this country, are eligible to membership in the Union, and will receive free entertainment during the meeting. For information address the President of the Union, the Rev. J. T. Gracey, D. D., 202 Eagle Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Sunday-school Superintendents and Teachers desirous of distributing copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in their schools and classes, may have assorted parcels of back numbers by applying, stating number required, to the manager, 63 Bible House.

JESUS AFFIRMED TO BE ALIVE.

A New Sermon, by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Against whom, when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed: but had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive."—Acts 25: 18, 19.

The Roman Governor Puzzled—The Charge Referring to Questions and Speculations—The Prisoner's Bold Affirmation—I. Real Gospel Preaching Full of Jesus—Unknown to the Multitude—Despised by the Many—His Death Admitted—Unpopularity Assured—The Please-Everybody Gospel—II. Affirms the Resurrection—Infers the General Resurrection—A Doctrine of Sweet Inferences—III. Affirms that Jesus is Still Alive—Paul Had Seen and Spoken to Him—He is Preparing Heaven for the Redeemed.

Festus is giving to King Agrippa a brief account of the matter between Paul and the Jews. It may not be a very accurate account; for Festus did not profess to understand the business. He was a Roman governor newly come to Judæa; he had no acquaintance whatever with Jewish Scriptures nor with Jewish laws; he is, therefore, merely giving to King Agrippa a rough outline of the affair as it struck him.

He Was Puzzled

how he should represent the matter to Cæsar, to whom Paul had appealed. Festus is represented by our translators as calling the Jewish religion a "superstition." I hardly think he would have used so harsh a term before Agrippa, who professed to be of the Jewish faith. But yet, as he probably knew that Agrippa's religion did not lie very deep, and was the mere appendage of a man of fashion, Festus was not very particular about the word which he used; and he lighted upon one which may mean "superstition" as the Authorized Version has it, or "religion" as the Revised Version has it. "Well, well," he seems to say to Agrippa, "I do not know much about it. I supposed when the Jews brought this man before me, that he would be charged with a breach of the Roman law, and I was prepared, of course, to deal with the prisoner; but when I listened to their accusation, and found that there was nothing in it but some disputes about their religion, I hardly knew what to say. Their controversy is important to them, I dare say; but it can be of no consequence either to you or to me, for it turned very much upon a person of the name of Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive."

I want you to notice that, rough-and-ready as this description is, and neither full nor deep, yet on the surface we see that in the controversy we have the same condition of things as we usually see in such conflicts. On the one side Paul's opponents fought with the weapons of "certain questions," and on the other hand he defended himself with a bold affirmation. This is the old story of Speculation Against Dogmatism.

It is always the way: the adversaries of the cross of Christ assert nothing, but they question everything. They will not lay down a basis, nor define their opinions. If they would do this, we might soon demolish their fabrics of falsehood; but all that they propound is "certain questions." On the other hand, those who are witnesses for the Lord Jesus have little care about questions, speculations, and the boasted outcome of cultured thought; but they affirm certain definite facts: they affirm these to be a revelation from God, and there they stand.

I. To begin with:

True Gospel Preaching

is full of Jesus. Jesus is the most notable figure in Christian testimony. The apostle Paul, whom we may regard as a model in preaching, exercised a ministry which was always full of our Lord Jesus Christ. Following the historical connection of the verse before us, we note that he preached "Jesus to multitudes unknown." Festus evidently knew not Jesus, for he speaks of Him as "one Jesus." He mentions the name as belonging to some obscure individual of whom he knew nothing, and cared less. The great ones of the earth know nothing of the King of kings. Beloved, to this day this is the wonder of wonders, that the incarnate God is not known. His birth is the starting-point of the age; and yet it was almost unanimously ignored by those who wielded the recording pen of history. His was the most extraordinary life that ever passed before mortal eyes; and yet how little notice was taken of it! Beyond Palestine it seems not even to have awakened curiosity. He died, and then to the people most concerned in Him He became "one Jesus, which was dead." The new Roman procurator, and myriads like him, well informed upon other matters, hardly knew His name, and only mentioned half of it when they spoke of "one Jesus, which was dead."

Jesus Little Known.

Brethren, this is why we must keep on preaching Jesus Christ, because He is still so little known. The masses of this city are as ignorant of Jesus as Festus was. You can never have a congregation in any of our places of worship and feel sure that they all know Jesus. If you gather in the outsiders from the street, you may be sure that the story of Jesus will be news to them. We call this a Christian country; but it would be very difficult to prove that it is so. If we took certain lines of observation as to the moral and religious conduct of our fellow-men, we should logically arrive at the conclusion that we live in a heathen rather than in a Christian city. Still the world knoweth Him not.

Paul preached Jesus, who was despised by many. The language of Festus is not only that of ignorance, but in a measure that of contempt. He speaks of "one Jesus, which was dead." Jesus is evidently nothing to Festus, and Festus does not imagine that Jesus is very much to King Agrippa. Probably he was quite right: Jesus was nobody among the of the period. Behold the unlearned of the day, if you speak to them of the great Sacrifice, and the wondrous atonement made by blood, they scarcely hearken to you, for such high things are not for them: they are so hardly pressed with daily labor and slender pay that they cannot think of sin and sacrifice and salvation; but they ask, "What has the poor workingman to do with religion?" Alas, that this folly should be so prevalent!

Rank and Fashion and Culture

Then you turn to the learned, and hope that here, at any rate, due attention will be given to the great marvel of reconciling love. Alas! it is not so. To these more educated ones the doctrine of the cross is foolishness. They ask for something new; something more philosophical. Substitution and sacrifice—they will have none of them. Ths story of the league of justice with grace, the reconcilement of holiness with mercy, is beneath their notice. They are too cultured to believe the common faith, too wise to accept that which God hath revealed unto babes. Beloved brethren, it should never cause us doubt when we see many despising our Lord, for this is nothing new, and nothing unexpected. Did He tell us that if we preached in His name all men would receive us? Nay, He warned us that the contrary would follow.

Gospel preaching is also full of Jesus Christ in this respect, that we do not conceal His death. Festus notes that the conflict was concerning "one Jesus, which was dead." The Jews said He was dead, and Paul also confessed that He was dead: there was no disagreement between them over that matter. Hear, then,

The Debate.

"What! did your Leader die?" "Yes, He was crucified." "Did you not say He was divine?" "Yes." "Yet is He dead?" "It is even so." "Yet you spoke of His leading you on to victory?" "So we did." "Yet He is dead?" "Yes, He died at Calvary." "How, then, can your boasting stand?" "We believe that by His death He has gained the victory and accomplished His great purpose." "But how did He die?" "He died the death of a felon upon a gibbet. His enemies nailed Him to a cross, and put Him to a death which was reserved for slaves. We confess this; yea, and glory in it!" We glory that our Lord Jesus was put to death as bearing the sin of many. This we hold and teach; not defending it, nor apologizing for it: but affirming it with all boldness, with the desire that we may be understood. If any cavil at this teaching, we do not therefore conceal it; we expected that it would be cavilled at. We desire more and more to obtrude this truth of substitution whenever we preach, and to make it the head and front of our gospel. Even people who are not saved by it should yet be made to know that we preach Christ crucified. In such a case, we have done our work successfully, even if souls are not saved; for we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, as well in them that perish as in them that are saved, if we have exalted the Lord Jesus, and borne witness to His power to save.

Beloved, I would have you further note that true gospel preaching will be full of Jesus as He is revealed in the Old Testament. Our apostle, when he spake before King Agrippa, went on to declare that he had said "none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: that Christ should suffer, and that He should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should shew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles." Paul's teaching paid as much deference to the ancient Scriptures as did that of the Jewish rabbis who were opposed to Him; nay, in very truth He paid a far more real homage to the Bible than they did. As for us, by us as much as the New. We do not preach Jesus as a fresh arrival, the inventor of a new religion, the founder of a novel way of salvation. No; we preach the Messiah of the Old Testament, whose gospel is set forth in the types and in the teachings of Moses and the prophets: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." Every gospel sermon should set forth Jesus scripturally; for it is not the Christ of fancy, but the Christ of fact that saves the souls of men, Let me add that where the Gospel is faithfully preached the reproach of Christ will not be shunned by the preacher. Read in the fifth verse of the twenty-fourth of Acts how Paul won this reproach. His adversaries said: "We have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." This was the reputation of Paul. Well did Mr. Whitefield say, "There is no going to heaven as a minister except in a fool's cap and a fool's coat." There is no hope of preaching Christ faithfully without being called by disrespectful titles, regarded as a fool, and reckoned among the vulgar and ignorant. Some kind of ugly name will always be appended to the gospeller. Brethren, expect it, and accept it! Bid farewell to a quiet life, if you resolve to be true to Jesus. I know a minister of whom one said, "He is a truly good man and nobody ever says a word against him." Upon inquiry, I heard a judicious person say "He preaches no error, but he avoids the obnoxious side of truth. What he preaches is true enough, no doubt, but it is not easy to say what it is. Nine out of ten of his hearers could not say what his precise opinion may be, but he has a fine flow of words. Those who do know what he is preaching about usually say that, take it for all in all, there is nothing in it." Of course nobody opposes an indistinct, colorless,

The Old Testament is Prized

Please-Everybody Gospel:

it is not worth while. But speak clearly and distinctly the doctrine of the great Sacrifice, and you will bring upon your head a shower of opposition: you will be "a pestilent fellow" and "a ring-leader of the sect of the Nazarenes." Gospel preaching does not cry, "Peace, peace," when there is no peace; but it is the sword which the Lord Jesus came to send upon the earth. Now, beloved, as I resolve, God helping me, in my preaching to preach to you nothing else save Jesus Christ, so I beseech you, in your schools, in your families, in your public ministries of an and every kind, begin and end with Jesus, who was dead and is alive. Declare His blessed name, and proclaim the glory of His cross! God forbid that you should place anything in front of your testimony save Jesus crucified! Your gospel is a golden frame, let Jesus be the portrait which is hung up in it.

II. Secondly: gospel preaching

Affirms The Resurrection.

Please notice, that Paul did not argue the resurrection, but affirmed it. He did not prove it philosophically, but he affirmed that Jesus rose from the dead, because such and such persons saw him alive after he had risen. He did not merely say that it was probable, that it was possible, that it was reasonable, but that it was so, for witnesses proved it. Two saw him, eleven saw him, four hundred saw him. He dealt with the resurrection as common-sense persons deal with any other fact of history; he quoted his authorities, and affirmed that it was so. His witnesses were honest and true men, who dared to go to prison, and even to die, on account of their statements. They had nothing whatever to gain, and everything to lose by their testimonies. They stated that Jesus, whom they knew to have been dead, had risen again, and had given clear proofs that he was alive. This corner-stone of our faith is sure, and upon the certainty of it we build our faith.

Moreover, Paul—and he, I say, is a model among gospel preachers—teaches us to preach in our gospel all the which flow from the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Here they are. He rose from the dead, and therefore His sacrifice has been accepted. God has brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, by the blood of the everlasting covenant. The work He has done has pleased the Father, and therefore he has brought him back from among the dead. His acceptance is ours: we are "accepted in the Beloved." Now, also, we live unto God. Our Lord Jesus died unto sin once; but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God: so is it with us. This is our joy: His work is accepted, His bearing of our curse is finished, life in us is made manifest.

Sweet Inferences

I must repeat what I have said already, that from the resurrection of our Lord we draw the comfortable inference of the resurrection unto eternal life of all who are in Christ. We said farewell, a little while ago, to him whom we loved so well, but we shall see the honored one again. We laid our sister in the grave with many tears. Oh, how we miss her! But we shall meet her again when the trumpet shall sound. We preserve a long list of departed ones, of which we scarcely dare to think, for tears drown our eyes; yet will we refrain from weeping, for as the dew of herbs causes them to spring up again, so the rising again of our Lord restores to us the beloved ones who have fallen asleep. The broken circle of our fellowship shall be renewed, for Jesus, its centre, has risen again.

III. But now, alas for me! I have scant time for the point which I wanted most fully to discuss—gospel preaching affirms that Jesus is alive. We do not preach to you a dead Christ, but one who is able to save to the uttermost, seeing He ever liveth. Jesus died, Jesus rose again, Jesus is now alive. Paul for He had spoken to him out of Heaven. Paul had both seen and heard the Lord Jesus, and thus he had been turned from a persecutor into an apostle. His entire being was transformed by what he saw and heard; assuredly he was no deceiver, and he was not the sort of person to have been deceived. Jesus Christ is then alive, for Paul saw him. Beloved, receiving the witness of our apostle, and remembering many other infallible proofs which we have not time to mention, we also believe that Jesus, who was dead, is alive. What follows from this? Why, first, He is alive to bestow the Holy Spirit. Many blessings come from our Lord's death, but the Holy Spirit was an early gift of His resurrection life: especially was it the outcome of his ascended life. The gift of the Holy Spirit is the ascension gift of our living Lord. The life and light and liberty of the Spirit are with us, because Jesus lives. Beloved, do you think the times are dark and dreary? Be not afraid: while Jesus lives the Holy Spirit is always obtainable, the Holy Spirit is always ready to work in and with us. What more do we want?

Knew that Jesus Lived,

Jesus is also in heaven making preparation for our coming. What has to be done to make heaven ready I am sure I do not know, though I have often tried to guess; but Jesus says, "I go to prepare a place for you." Heaven, when we get there, will prove to be the exact place for us. Jesus is living—living on purpose to keep heaven for us, and make it in all respects ready for us. Furthermore, lay hold of this thought, that Jesus is for us. I am most rich, beloved, when I have your prayers. If I might have a part in the prayers of all the saints on earth, I would not envy a Kaiser his dominions. Yet what are all the prayers of saints compared to the prayers of the King of saints? We trust not in a dumb, dead Christ, who could not speak for us, but we rest in an advocate whose eloquent pleadings before the throne of God can never be denied.

Alive to Intercede

O child of God, I would have you further remember that Jesus is still alive, to commune with you. You bend not over His corpse, but you sit at His feet. Carnal men would think me dreaming if I were to tell of our spiritual intercourse with our living Lord.

Still Doth He Speak

to our hearts. Pearls may not be cast before swine, nor the love secrets of our souls declared in the streets; but we have been conscious at times of influences other than those which are natural and common. Jesus has made Himself known to us: He has stood behind us, and His shadow has fallen over us. He has manifested Himself to us as He does not to the world. You know what I mean. Jesus does not forget us. He has not allowed a great gulf to open between us and Himself. He is still the loving, living, active Jesus to us and with us.

How I wish that every child of God here who is in trouble would go at once with that trouble to the living Christ! Oh that every sinner who is crushed beneath his load of sin would bow at once before the living Christ, whose voice speaks pardon! You cannot perceive Jesus, but He is present where His gospel is preached. Eye cannot see Him, nor hand touch Him, but He is visible and Tangible to Faith.

Bow before Him! I know you have often thought, "If, instead of seeing Mr. Spurgeon on the platform, I could see Jesus, I would confess my sin to Him, and ask His pardon." I pray you do so, even though you see Him not, for He sees you. Fain would I cease to be seen of you, that your hearts might see my Lord, for He is here. Bow before Him, confess to Him, and trust Him.

"Oh!" cries a loving one, "If Jesus were visibly here, I would take Him home with me and entertain Him." Do so, I pray you, though you do not see Him. Constrain Him to abide with you. Treat the Lord Jesus, not as a phantom, but as a real Christ. Paul affirmed that He was alive; believe Paul's affirmation, and speak to the living Jesus. I will give you a text: "Whom having not seen, ye love." You cannot love a dead person as a dead person. You may love the memory of the dead; but if you love them, you regard them as living. Love is for life; it cannot dwell with death. We have not seen Jesus, but we love Him, and this proves that to our hearts He lives.

Oh that our Lord would now appear! Oh that His silver trumpets would ring out while yet I speak to you! Oh that His feet would once more touch this earth! The second coming of our living Lord is the ultimatum of our faith. He is alive, and as surely as He lives, He will open wide the golden gate, and come again to take His people up to be with Him for ever. Has He not said, "I will come again, and receive you unto Myself"? They that have been faithful to him in this evil generation, through the dark as well as through the light, and have followed at His heel through mire and slough—these shall partake of His glory. "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth." Who is on the side of the living Christ at this hour? Let him come out and boldly say so. Hold not back, lest ye be found traitors. Confess your Lord, take up your cross, and be the living servants of the living Jesus. Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

How Conviction Came.*

Once a mother told her pastor that she was troubled about her daughter, who was going to join the church. "She has not conviction enough," was the complaint; "and yet I have talked to her about her sins over and over again, setting them all in order before her, till we were both of us in tears: Oh, what can I do more?" Then he gave her in her own hands a Bible, and he read aloud to her slowly, Isaiah 6: 1–5. She saw, without any word of his, that the prophet became intelligent as the sight of God flashed upon him, and grew penitent as the moment when the seraphim cried "Holy." Then he turned to Job 42: 5, 6. She saw in silence that the patriarch repented, not when his exasperating friends pelted him with accusations, but when his eyes were opened to see God. She went away quietly to talk, with a wondering and awe-struck heart, about the holiness of Jehovah; thus her child melted into contrition before the vision, and wept.

A German Captain's Order.

I heard some time ago of a German captain, who was drilling a company of volunteers. The parade-ground was a field by the seaside. The men were going through their exercises very nicely, but the captain thought he would give them an exercise in obeying orders. They were marching up and down in the line of the water, at some distance from it. He concluded to give them an order to march directly towards the water, and see how far they would go. The men are marching along. "Halt, company," says the captain. In a moment they halt. "Right face," is the next word, and instantly they wheel round. "Forward march," is then the order. At once they begin to march directly towards the water; on they go, nearer and nearer to it. Soon they reach the edge of the water. Then there is a sudden halt. "Vat for you stop? I no say halt," cried the captain. "Vhy, captain, here is the vater," said one of the men. "Vell, vot of it," cried he, greatly excited; "vater is nothing; fire is nothing; everything is nothing. Ven I say, forwart martch, then you must forwart martch." The captain was right; the first duty of a soldier is to learn to obey.

A Meal of Carrion.

A member of his congregation being in the habit of going to the theatre, Rowland Hill went to him and said, "This will never do—a member of my church in the habit of attending the theatre!" Mr. so-and-so replied that it surely must be a mistake, as he was not in the habit of going there, although it was true that he did go now and then for a treat. "Oh!" said Rowland Hill, "then you are a worse hypocrite than ever, sir. Suppose any one spread the report that I ate carrion, and I answered, 'Well, there is no wrong in that; I don't eat carrion every day in the week, but I have a dish now and then for a treat.' Why, you would say, 'What a nasty, foul, and filthy appetite Rowland Hill has, to have to go to carrion for a treat!' Religion is the Christian's truest treat, and Christ is his enjoyment."

*From Spurgeon's Sermon Notes: Volume IV., Romans to Revelation. Pp. 408: Price $1; Published by Robert Carter & Brothers, 530 Broadway, New York.

The Late Amos B. Alcott.

Mrs. Pinfold's Illumination.

THE LATE A. BRONSON ALCOTT.

(See Portrait.)

THE kindly, lovable old man who won the name of the American Socrates had no Plato to make him known to the world, and his own efforts as an author have had but little success in that direction. All who knew him personally, however, recognized in him a bright, ardent spirit, eagerly bent on discovering the great secret of human life in this world, and how it might be made a blessing to its possessor and to the race.

Amos Bronson Alcott was born in Wolcott, Conn., November 29, 1799, and he was therefore in his eighty-ninth year on March 4, last, when he died. Owing to the poverty of his parents, his school education was brief and irregular. School in the winter and farm labor in the summer was the rule in the Alcott as in so many New England homes of those days. He learned to write with a piece of chalk on his mother's kitchen floor, and as soon as he had mastered the art of reading he devoured such books as came in his way. "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress" was his favorite book in his boyhood, and to the last the venerable philosopher continued to love and admire that matchless volume. At the age of thirteen, he finally quitted the school at Spindle Hill, and being equipped with a small stock of wares he set out as a peddler in the South. He tramped through Virginia and North and South Carolina, but succeeded in selling only a few dollars' worth of goods.

Trade was evidently not his vocation, and on his return he entered on the work which occupied the largest portion of his life—that of an educator of the young. He had a profound belief in the purity and spiritual penetration of little children, and delighted to listen to their talk and lead them to think and reason. His method of education was fatherly, and always had the moral training and development as its primary object, as being far more important than intellectual acquirement. The idea of corporal punishment was abhorrent to him, and under his gentle, discriminating system he had no occasion to resort to it.

All his leisure time was devoted to hard study, chiefly of metaphysics, philosophy, and theology. He contributed extensively to the Dial, and became a recognized leader of the Transcendental School, if not its actual founder. In 1842 he was induced to visit England, to consult with the prominent thinkers in the ranks of social and educational reformers. He lectured extensively, and on his return he was accompanied by two English friends, who aided him in establishing his ideal community, at Frudlands, near the town of Harvard. The scheme was not a success, and was soon abandoned.

The famous "Conversations" commenced shortly afterward, and were continued for nearly forty years. By these Mr. Alcott was best known to the American public. Often they were simply lectures on Character, Love, Poetry, Nature, or some kindred subject, but Mr. Alcott was always at his best when his audiences accepted his invitation to take part in the proceedings by asking questions and expressing their opinions. Since 1857 he resided at Concord, Mass., and there a circle of warmly attached friends gathered around him. His days were spent in study and literary work, and his evenings in congenial society. The works by which he is best known are "Conversations with Children on the Gospels," "Table Talk," and "Concord Days."

MRS. PINFOLD'S ILLUMINATION.

(See Illustration.)

ANY person passing the cottage in which Mrs. Pinfold lived would have thought it a picture of peace and calm contentment, in complete harmony with the surrounding fields and the summer sunshine which flooded them and the cottage with glorious light. The door was set wide open, and the widow, as she passed it in the course of her household duties, could see the cattle lazily grazing in the fields, and, in the distance, the laborers toiling at their work, and though she could not make them out distinctly, she knew that her two boys were among them. The sweet peace and tranquility without, had not, however, its reflection on Mrs. Pinfold's countenance. She was in deep trouble, and red eyes and furrowed brow showed that tears had not long ceased flowing, and would soon flow again.

"I d' know 't I've any call t' worry," she had said some days before, when an earnest Christian visitor had tried to arouse her to a consciousness of her state before God; "I've done my duty all through. I guess there ain't anybody I've had dealings wi' 'ts ever complained o' me. Father and mother and husband are gone, but they all allowed I'd done what was right, and the boys wouldn't hear anything against their mother, I guess. No; I aint such a sinner as you'd make out. There's many 's be though, if you're looking for work."

Still, the visitor was convinced that the old woman had been moved, and, in spite of her assumption of security, was not so much at ease under his words as she wished him to think. He therefore deemed it wise to leave her to the work of the Spirit, that she might be enlightened as to the state of her own heart by His omnipotent power. He acted wisely. Mrs. Pinfold had plenty of time to think as she worked, and she would not have been herself if her thoughts had not been occupied with an accusation that she had failed in her duty. It was her cherished pride—she had nothing else to be proud of—that she had never failed in that. A good mother, a good wife, a good daughter; yes, so far her conscience, which was a rigid one, acquitted her. But as to her duty to God? The more Mrs. Pinfold thought, the more guilty she grew in her own eyes.

The next Sunday she went to church as usual, but with an object that was not usual with her. Formerly she had gone as a duty; now she went to learn what she could do. It was not punishment she dreaded, but she was oppressed with a terrible sense of guilt, of meanness, of base ingratitude. To her surprise the regular clergyman was absent, and in his place was the very man who had visited her, and disturbed her peace of mind by his talk. That was well; he might tell her what she wanted to know. The text was, "Justified freely by His grace" (Rom. 3: 24), and the preacher showed how the sinner, having broken the law, was without hope of acquittal, except in the righteousness of Christ, which was offered to him. The distressed woman listened, but could not realize it.

The next day her burden grew heavier, and she wept as she worked. She knew, in a general way, that Christ died to save sinners, but there were great sinners—drunkards, thieves, and the like—to whom she had always applied the fact, not to herself. Suddenly, as if by a flash, she saw herself in the same category, and therefore with the same glorious hope. The thought overcame her. She put down her work, and sitting down on the rough bench in the kitchen, clasped her hands, while the joy flowed through her whole being, like a river. It was bewildering, enrapturing joy, such as none know but those who have felt it—a joy the world can never give nor take away.

THE ROYAL RETREAT IN FLORENCE.

(See Illustration on Page 269.)

SEVERAL royal personages are just now ruralizing at Florence, recuperating after the arduous labors which are said to be incidental to the vocation of a monarch. The Queen of England was the first to take up her abode there, and she has now been joined by the King and Queen of Sweden and other minor royalties. The illustration here given represents the villa in which Queen Victoria is living. It is the property of the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres, who placed it at her disposal during her stay in the fair Italian city.

Florence, as is well known, is one of the most interesting cities of Italy, and scarcely inferior to Venice in historical renown, in the beauty of its architectural edifices, and of its collections of art, more especially of sculpture, while far superior in its associations with Italian literature. The Villa Palmieri is nearly two miles from the Porta San Gallo to the northeast of the city, on the road to Fiesole. The adjacent valley of the Mugello was always a favorite rural retreat of the rich Florentine citizens; and it was somewhere in this pleasant valley that Boccaccio, the author of the "Decameron; or, Ten Days' Tales" placed the fancied assembly of ladies and gentlemen, whom he supposed to have left their houses in the city on account of the plague, in the summer of 1347, and to have amused each other by telling the series of stories which he relates.

The Villa Palmieri, Florence, Queen Victoria's Present Residence.

Not far up the hill is the Villa Mozzi (now Villa Spence), which was the favorite residence of Lorenzo the Magnificent, and Careggi. The villa built by Cosmo dei Medici—in which Cosmo died, in 1464, and Lorenzo, in 1492, expired after his famous interview with the famous monk and preacher Savonarola—is among the hills on this side of Florence. The ancient Roman town of Fæsulæ, now Fiesole, from which Florence "descended," is a place of much antiquarian interest.

The villa constructed by the Palmieri family, at a spot called the Fonte dei Tre Visi, originally bore the name of Schifanoia, which meant "Avoid Disturbance." The Palmieri owned it for centuries; they built an arch or bridge over the public road, connecting the gardens with a terrace which commands a delightful view. An Italian, who had purchased the villa of the Palmieri, bequeathed it to the ex-grand Duchess of Tuscany, and her trustees sold it, some years ago, to the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres. A new road was then made round the hill, and an expenditure of about $50,000 was incurred in various improvements.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 255.)

A Light in a Dark Home.

In a short time Thomas came to say that my brother wished to see the boy. I waited a minute or two to tell Philip whom he was going to visit; and how many years he had been ill; and how he had been suffering that very day. His bonny face grew grave and serious; and he trod along the carpeted hall with a careful and silent step. I wondered what he would think of George's white, worn face and low voice. He entered the room with me, unconsciously clasping my hand more tightly; but the moment he saw George, he stole forward on tip-toe again, and put his hand down softly on his pillow.

"Are you very ill?" he asked, in a low tone.

"Very," answered George; "and so you are come to be our boy, are you?"

"If you love me, and let me stay," he answered. "Have you never asked God to make you quite well again?"

"Yes, thousands of times," said George, as gravely as the child had spoken.

"Then He knows it's best for you to be ill," said Philip, "but He loves you all the same, you know. Mrs. Transome says He wont give us just what we ask for; and we must learn to be content, because He knows best. I asked Him for a pony ever so long, and He did not give me one: but it isn't because He does not love me. He chooses for old Transome to have bad pains, and old Transome says he'll be faithful to God in spite of them, for God had been faithful to him. When God chooses, it's all for the best, Mrs. Transome says."

"Yes," said George, holding the boy's small brown hand in his thin white fingers, "and I must learn to be content too."

"It's like learning lessons." Philip went on, in his clear young tones. "Mrs. Transome told me so. It's just like learning our A B C. It took me a whole week to learn all the letters; that was a long while."

"Yes, it is a long while," said George; but I knew he was not thinking of the child's lesson in the alphabet. No, it was his own harder task he was looking at. I am afraid we had both forgotten our first faith in God's love: and now we were sent back to it by the simple teaching of Philip, so that we might begin again a childlike life in His kingdom.

"Milly," said George, after the boy had gone away under Martha's care, "God has sent us one of His own little ones."

Yes, of a truth Philip was one of God's own children. Do not misunderstand me. The boy showed at times self-will, and sudden passion, and a spark of vanity now and again. All these were in him, and his simple nature could not hide them; though it could and did conquer them in the long-run. But there was no swerving of his inmost heart from a true and loyal love to Christ, whose life on earth became the pattern for his own. When I studied Philip's character in its transparent simplicity, the words that came most often to my mind were those of our Lord's speaking: "If therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." There seemed to be no darkness, no dissimulation, in Philip at all. He loved the light, and always came to the light, even when he brought to it deeds to be reproved.

How life changed to George and me! The blankness and emptiness were gone. The future lay before us, with the promise of a beautiful life outside our own, that would link us again to the busy world. Year by year our interest in it grew deeper. There were masters to choose for Philip; a day-school to find for him, where he could have the wholesome companionship of other boys. We sent him to a large public school, where his brilliant gifts and insatiable thirst for knowledge would find full scope. George was himself a good classical scholar, and his old love for study revived, now there was a young brain, quick and eager, at work beside him. The hours that had been wont to drag so wearily along began to "glide with down upon their feet." Philip's studies, Philip's sports, Philip's friendships, absorbed us both.

Before he had completed his seventeenth year he won a scholarship. The head-master of his school, with whom he was a favorite, strongly urged him to remain another year under his tuition, and then to go to college. But the boy's mind was set upon studying as a medical student in one of the hospitals. The loyal spirit that was within him, longing to serve God diligently, and to tread closely in the footsteps of his Lord, could point out no better way than this.

"I can go among the very worst and poorest then," he said to us, earnestly, when we were trying to dissuade him. "You think I am too good for it? Why, if I were a hundred times better and more clever I should be hardly fit for such work! When I think of them down there, in their misery and ignorance and sin, I feel as if it would be treason for me to forsake them, just to grow rich or famous. I should choose to be a popular doctor at the East End, among the very worst, if I may have my choice."

My heart felt somewhat heavy with disappointment, for I had built many a castle in the air for my boy; and it had never entered my thoughts that he should bury himself and his great gifts among the very low and ignorant. As for George, his face was lit up with a smile that was almost heavenly.

"We shall have very little to leave you, Philip," I said.

"Are you going to die soon, Aunt Milly?" he asked laughing; "when I'm an old man of fifty, you'll not be seventy years of age; think of that! It's scarcely worth while for me to consider what you can leave to me. No, no; I shall be sure of more than Jesus Christ ever had. If I'm only clever enough to make a good doctor, and it comes true of me, 'He went about doing good,' that's enough for me."

His expression softened into a grave tenderness, and his voice grew low as he spoke. He did not often talk in this way to us; and I can see again his boyish, handsome face, half turned away from our eyes. It was a summer's evening, and we had the window open, that the fitful western wind might come in, rustling the papers on my brother's table, and breathing softly across his feverish face. George had taken Philip's hand into his, and was holding it fast as he looked at him with his strange smile. Just then we heard the distant tinkle of the house-door bell, a sound that had become frequent since Philip had gone to school, where he had formed many friendships. We knew our quiet talk was over; and so it proved. In a few minutes Thomas came in with a message.

"There's a shabby sort of a woman," he said, in a disparaging tone, "asking if Master Philip Champion is living here still. She won't tell me her business, but she says it's very particular; for she's come all the way from Liverpool a-purpose to see him."

"What's her name, Thomas?" asked my brother.

"Mrs. Brown, sir," he replied.

"That is the woman your father left you with, Philip," I said, with a quick throb of my heart. I could not hear the name without an undefined dread that it foreboded some change: and any change now would be an evil and a sorrow. The boy's face flushed crimson, and a glow spread over it, full of eager hope and gladness.

"My father's come back!" he cried.

He had not spoken of his father for years, and I had hoped that he had slowly reconciled himself to the idea that he had been lost at sea. But the eager, excited face before me contradicted the hope. The childish faith and expectation had never died; and now they sprang up in full vigor and life at the mere mention of this woman's name. "My father's come home!" he cried again, in a tone that brought tears into my eyes, and my brother's.

"Philip," said George, in his low, patient, measured voice, "remember! it is over twelve years since your father went away."

"I shall look for him to come back," he exclaimed, vehemently, "as long as it is possible for him to be alive, unless I find out for certain that he is dead."

"Twelve years!" repeated George, as though his thoughts were dwelling upon all that Captain John Champion must have suffered, if he were still alive; "twelve years, my dear boy!"

"Sailors have been lost longer than that," said Philip, moving toward the door, where Thomas was still standing. It was not a minute since he had uttered the woman's name; but it seemed to me already as if our hold upon Philip were slackened, and our close relationship with him were lost. He was not our boy after all, but belonged to some other—a stranger. Yes; I own to it; a strong and bitter feeling of jealous disappointment seized upon me.

"Let me come with you, Philip," I cried, as he was passing out of my sight.

Was there any tone in my voice that betrayed me? I cannot tell; only I know that my boy turned back again quickly, and stooped down to kiss me, and George held out his worn, hollow hand, as if to draw me nearer to him. I believe both of them felt a quick, instinctive sympathy for me, as deep as men can ever feel for a woman and whose hand is forced to loose its grasp of her chief treasure. But neither of them knew what that moment was to me.

I had time, while Philip and I went to the dining-room, and Thomas fetched the woman in from the hall, to consider how very improbable it was that she should bring any intelligence about Captain John Champion, after so many years. This somewhat reassured me, though the glimpse I had had into Philip's heart could never be forgotten. Through all these years there had been a deep want, a profound, passionate longing, which no love or care of ours could satisfy. George and I could not be to him what his own father and mother would have been; so different, in the hidden root of things, must adopted relationships be from real ones.

Mrs. Brown came in; and Philip placed a chair for her. He was trembling with agitation, and could not command his voice to speak. She gazed critically at him, as if on her oath as to his identity.

"You're fairly like your father," she said, after this survey, "but you're more like your poor mother. It's a hard world, this is, for poor folks like me, and I've had a heap of trouble, but I've not forgot him or her. You've forgot him, I'll be bound!"

"No, never!" cried Philip. But he could say no more. He leaned his hand on my shoulder, and I felt how his strong young frame trembled, while his color came and went as fitfully as a delicate girl's.

"I've brought some news of Captain John Champion," continued the woman, in cold, hard tones. "May be you'll not think it worth much, but it's the last we've heard.

"It's a long story," she went on, with no change either in voice or face. "I've been knocked about a good deal ever since Master Philip left me, nine years ago now, as you'll recollect, ma'am, and never stayed more than a year, or eighteen months at the longest, in one place; so it were no wonder folks lost sight of me, and couldn't find me out, let them want ever so much. It might have been Captain John Champion hisself seeking after me, he'd have found it just as hard work; for I gave him up entirely after being away more than three years. But it wasn't Captain John Champion hisself, poor fellow! However, it were a seafaring man, as had gone out with him in his ship, and been wrecked with him, and saved with him, and brought home news of him, if he could only have lit upon me."

"How long ago?" cried Philip.

"It's four years pretty nigh since he came back," said Mrs. Brown, "and he did his best to find me out; but he couldn't, and he gave up at last, and went another voyage, and another, and another, searching for me whenever he was ashore, but never hearing a word of me till three months ago, when one of his old mates came lodging at my house in Liverpool, and heard me tell how I'd once had a captain's son to take care of, and how some grand folks in London had taken to him. 'What was the little chap's name?' he said. 'Philip Champion,' I said. 'That's Dan Sterne's old captain,' he said; 'him as was shipwrecked off the Ivory Coast somewhere.' So he went looking for him next day, and found Dan Sterne at death's door in the hospital, for he was quite worn out with following the sea, and was fallen into a waste, with no more than a few days' life in him. He sent for me as soon as ever he'd heard his shipmate's story, and I went there not much too soon to hear what he'd got to say."

Philip had sunk down on his knees at my side, with his eyes fastened upon the woman's face, as if he could look through hers into the brain beyond, and read what was there more quickly than he could learn it from her slow utterance.

"I'm not sure I rightly recollect it all," she said, "but he told me how the ship was broken to pieces on the rocks, and all aboard her were drowned, save him and the captain, and they two got on shore, and lived for a few days watching for a sail on the sea, till some of the savages came down and carried them up the country, and made slaves of them. Ah! he said, they knew what sufferings were, but they bore up under them, and the negroes treated them better when they found how clever the captain was. Only they never let him out of their sight; never, night or day. Dan Sterne wasn't watched so close, and he managed to escape; and he made his way through forests and bogs and jungles, and wild beasts, and wild men, day after day, night after night, till he reached a place where there were civilized folks—Portuguese, he thought; and after he'd been there a few months a ship brought him home to Old England. That's nigh upon four years ago, and he did his utmost to find me out, as he promised the captain he'd be sure to do if he ever saw England again; but he couldn't find me; and I only found him dying in the hospital."

"Is he dead?" asked Philip; "is that all?"

"Ay! he's dead," she answered; "and that's all, save a little bit of a map he gave me, where the place is that they were cast ashore upon. He pricked the place with a pin as near as he could guess, and he said they went east from there. I was to be sure and say they journeyed east from there, neither north nor south, but due east. Captain John Champion, he said, was pretty middling in health, but he was a close prisoner among them, and could not get a chance of escape."

(To be continued.)

THE JUDGMENT.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for May 6. Matt. 25:31-46. Golden Text ver. 46.

Folly of Ignoring the Subject—A most Momentous Fact—Universal and Individual Application—The Christian in the Day of Judgment—Responsibility Measured by Privilege—Questions Left for Settlement at the Judgment-Seat—When it will Take Place—After the Millennium—The Sentences—Motives Taken into Account—Present Rewards to be Abjured—A Proverb Reversed—Eternal Destiny Self-Controlled—An Awful Temerity.

It has become an unfashionable and unusual thing in many congregations to speak of the Day of Judgment. Yet, surely, if it is true that we are hastening every moment to the "judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad," it is a most momentous fact, one which we should do well to face, and which it is the utmost folly and wickedness to ignore! "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." (Ecc. 12:14.) "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." (Matt. 12:36, 37.) If this is so how utterly mad and rash it is to live without regard to the fact that every word and every deed has a bearing on the endless eternity to which we are all hastening! Oh, how we need to pray in faith, with the Psalmist: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth: keep the door of my lips." (Ps. 141:3.) "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ."

No One can Escape.

Many a subterfuge may succeed in escaping an earthly court of law, but who can escape the just judgment of God? Some believe that for the Christian there is no judgment, but Paul says, "We," including himself, "must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ." True "there is, therefore, no condemnation (i. e., final condemnation to be lost) to them which are in Christ Jesus," but we must all receive according to that we have done; we must all reap that which we have sown. If we, who are God's children, lived more in the light of coming judgment, the poor lost souls around us would more readily credit that there is a judgment for them.

Many of God's children think that because they are saved, and believe in Jesus, they will come off lightly at the time of judgment, while they are quite willing to admit that lost sinners deserve eternal damnation. But it was Moses the man of all others, who knew God best in his time, who might not enter the promised land; it was not some poor reprobate Israelite who knew not God. "That servant," that one who is in the service of God, "which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to His will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required; and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more." (Luke 12:48.)

It is not without purpose that our loving Lord, before speaking of the final judgment, when He shall separate the sheep from the goats, speaks first of the ten virgins, and then of the servants who are entrusted with the talents. Much as God's Word teaches us of faith, it also teaches much of responsibility, and we break the harmony of His Word, and lose its balance, when, in learning to trust God, we ignore our responsibility; or when, under the presence of responsibility, we trust ourselves rather than God. The right thought of coming judgment is that of all others which is calculated to lead us into a life of trust, since we cannot keep ourselves or guide ourselves aright, but He has promised to be our Keeper, and to guide us with His eye. We are responsible to trust Him as Moses did in the desert, and Paul did in his journeys, and are responsible to do whatsoever He tells us. But if we, who are God's children, take upon ourselves to judge and choose what we shall do, how will it appear at the judgment-seat? "Well, I don't see that there is any harm in reading novels," says a luxurious young Christian lady. Well, sister, are you willing to let that question be and then receive of your just Judge what He considers due for such an employment of His time and strength? "Well, I don't see that there is any harm in telling out how so-and-so has treated me," says a deeply injured child of God. "I think I ought to expose him." Well, brother, shall we leave it to the searching light of the judgment-seat, although the Word of God says, "I say unto you, That ye resist not evil." (Matt. 5:39.) "Why do ye not rather take wrong. (1 Cor. 6:7.) "It is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing than for evil doing." (1 Pet. 3:17.) Oh how small, how infinitesimal, will all wrongs received from man appear when we stand before the judgment-seat of Christ! Let us lay up for ouselves treasures in heaven by making all our calculations in view of that great day of account. Some may say, "But if we serve God, and walk so as to please Him now, is not this the best preparation possible for the judgment-seat?" Certainly it is so, but as the consciences of some are very lax about that which does or does not please God, He has also given us the coming judgment as an incentive to live to His glory.

Settled at the Judgment-seat,

After the marriage of the Lamb, after the distribution of rewards to His servants, after the millennium (or thousand years of Christ's reign. Rev. 20:6), comes the final Judgment Day. "When the Son of Man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory: and before Him shall be gathered all nations; and He shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." No other hand but the hand of Jesus can be trusted to do this work of separation. "I am the good Shepherd, and know My sheep, and am known of Mine, as the Father knoweth Me, and I know the Father." (John 12:15, Gr.) "He shall set the sheep on His right hand, but the goats on the left." While the saved of this dispensation are reigning with Him in glory for a thousand years on earth (Rev. 20:4), the wicked shall still be left awaiting the judgment, and they, and those who have lived during the time of the Millennium, will be judged together. First, He will say to them on His right hand, "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world, for I was an hungered and ye gave Me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave Me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took Me in; naked, and ye clothed Me; sick and in prison, and ye visited Me." This announcement will come with a burst of surprise upon the righteous. The virgins expected to enter into the marriage feast, the servants expected a reward for their service, but the sheep

Expected Nothing.

"Lord, when saw we Thee an hungered, and fed Thee? or thirsty, and gave Thee drink? When saw we Thee a stranger, and took Thee in? or naked, and clothed Thee? Or when saw we Thee sick or in prison, and came unto Thee?" And the King shall answer and say unto them, "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily, I say unto you, he shall in nowise lose his reward." (Matt. 10:42.) It is not so much the things we do, in themselves, which shall tell in the great account, but the motive from which we do them; whether in our own name, for the sake of our own reputation, or in the name of Jesus, to increase His glory. "Whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus," i. e., in the character of the Lord Jesus, acting for Him, by His authority, as His representatives. Now, if we seek credit from man for any kindness which we may have the privilege of doing, and desire to be considered benevolent, we are doing it in our own name, and not in Christ's; we have our reward on earth, and we miss it at the great day of account. It is a law of the kingdom of heaven that we are not to seek our recompense in this world. "Take heed, that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven. Therefore, when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily, I say unto you, they have their reward." (Matt. 6:1, 2.) They have it now. Poor, miserable reward is glory of men! Again, Christ warns us not to seek for glory among men when we pray and when we fast, lest in reaping the miserable reward of glory among men, we should miss the reward of our Father which is in heaven, who "shall reward thee openly." (Matt. 6:6.) Again, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren; neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors, lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee."

Flee Present Rewards,

"be afraid of quick returns," in the work of God. "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." (Luke 14:12-14.) There is a well-known proverb, "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," and for men of the world who count God out in their lives, and in all their prospects, there is wisdom in it. But with the child of God it is the exact reverse. A recompense in hand is the worst investment possible. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth" (Matt. 6:19)—gold, position, reputation, honor—where all things change, "where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth." (Col. 3:3.) God is our portion on earth—heirship of God and joint heirship with Christ, our treasure in heaven. Just as we have to avoid a bargaining spirit, so, also, a greedy, grasping spirit. And then in the great time of account we may be surprised that God accounts some little thing done for one of His children, something long forgotten—something which we never counted, as having been done unto Him.

Rewards or punishment are according to the value which Jesus, the King of Glory, has had in our eyes. Oh, now we see, that having been saved by Jesus and redeemed by His precious blood, all that we do and say must be more or less connected with Him. "To me to live is Christ," said Paul. (Phil. 1:21.) "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." (Rom. 14:7.) Men may not like to retain God in their knowledge (Rom. 1:28), and may seek to ignore the Lord that died for them, but, by doing so, they do not shut out Jesus from their lives—there he figures as a Saviour rejected and despised: ignoring Christ does not make Him cease to be; ignoring the judgment will not prevent it! Oh, how demented are men who, in their childish and wicked folly, say with the fool, "No God," while the very unrest of soul which comes out in such a declaration fulfils the very words of the God whom they reject, "The wicked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." (Isa. 57:20.) Oh, how precious is it for the child of God to know that the kingdom to which he is welcomed has been prepared for him from the foundation of the world. It was destined for man before Adam fell; man was created for it, and adapted for it! God never created men for hell; never adapted them for companionship with demons. No; hell was prepared for the devil and his angels, and all men who, through rejecting Jesus, force themselves thither, must not wonder if they find themselves out of joint with their surroundings, for an endless eternity. Oh, it is an awful fact that every living man holds his eternal destiny in his own hands!

"Thus shall He say, also, unto them on His left hand, Depart from Me, ye accursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels; for I was an hungered, and ye gave Me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave Me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took Me not in; naked, and ye clothed Me not; sick and in prison, and ye visited Me not." Many of those who shall be lost eternally will have done many benevolent actions, but there was no Christ in them: they did them in their own name, and for their own sake, and they were not done unto Him. Their life has told against Jesus instead of for Him. A life without Christ is a lost life; philanthrophy without Christ is but among the works of the law by which no flesh shall be justified before God—righteousness which is but filthy rags after all. The wicked will be taken by surprise. It is astonishing how little men believe that the wrath of God abideth on them, if they do not believe. (John 3:36.) God tells them that he that believeth not shall be damned, and they coolly set down God's declaration as though it were a mere matter of human opinion! Daringly they go on in their

Unsaved and Unsafe Condition,

and take the fearful risk of leading their lives according to their own perverted judgment, ignoring the just claims of God! They fail to submit themselves unto His righteousness, and at the last, when the Judge of all the earth shall judge them according to the Word which He has spoken, they will be taken aback, and say, "Lord, when saw we Thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto Thee?" They did not see Him where He was to be seen, in the least of His earthly brethren. They had despised the people of God, failed to honor, failed to help, failed to recognize the people of God, and the Master makes the cause of His people to be His own. "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me." God expects His people to be such as can be recognized: "A peculiar people, zealous of good works." (Tit. 2:14); He looks that men shall take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus. And then He expects that the unsaved shall see Him in them, and treat them as the brethren and kinsmen of the Son of God. There is no appeal from the sentence of the King. It is final. Everlasting fire, "prepared for the devil and his angels." God never exaggerates. Fire means fire, and everlasting means everlasting. Men try to explain away the Word of God, and make it mean more or less than God intended. If this word "everlasting" does mean "age upon age," it does not fix any limit to that punishment; that everlasting punishment which awaits the lost. "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for April:

Scenes at Christ's Second Advent. By Rev. Nathaniel Starkey.

The Prophets and the Apocalyse. By Rev. N. West, D. D.

The Imminent Advent of Christ. By Earl Cavan.

The Doctrine of the 1,000 Years Millennium. By Rev. S. R. Maitland, D. D.

Summary of Events of the Final Dozen Years—1889 to 1901. By Rev. M. Baxter.

Views of Antichrist in the Twelfth Century. By Roger de Hoveden.

Death of the Emperor William of Germany.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes, containing the monthly numbers for 1884, and 1883 may be had; price $1.]

NO ROOM FOR JESUS.

O pleading life, crowded so full
Of earthly toil and care!
The body's daily need receives
The first and last concern, and leaves
No room for Jesus there.

O busy brain! by night and day
Working with patience rare,
Problems of worldly loss or gain,
Thinking, till thought becomes a pain;
No room for Jesus there.

O throbbing heart! so quick to feel
In others' woes a share,
Yet human loves each power inthrall,
And sordid treasures fill it all;
No room for Jesus there.

O sinful soul! thus to debase
The being God doth spare!
Blood-bought, thou art no more thine own,
Heart, brain, life, all are His alone;
Make room for Jesus there—

Lest soon the bitter day shall come
When vain shall be thy prayer,
To find in Jesus' heart a place;
Forever closed the door of grace.
Thou'lt gain no entrance there.

—Selected.

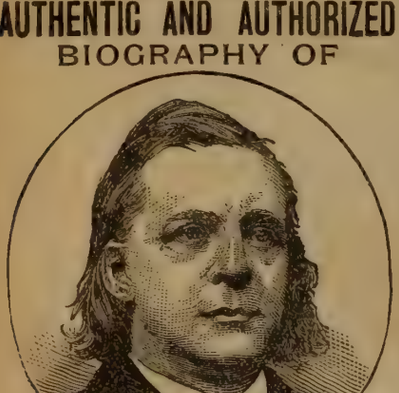
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

"CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE;" Test questions and answers pertaining to Persons, Places and Things, including Bible Readings and Studies, Prayer Meeting Outlines, Concert Exercises, Chalk Talks and Seed Thoughts illustrated. The Detroit Christian Advocate says:—"This unique publication is already in the hands of many pastor's, students and Sunday-school teachers It is a veritable cyclopædia—full to the very brim of good things. The volume will prove a real treasure in any Christian home." 606 pages Illustrated. Price $2. Teachers and Agents wanted to introduce it. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, 771 Broadway, New York.

"I want to thank you," writes a young man to B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., "for placing me in a position by which I am enabled to make money faster than I ever did before." This is but a sample extract of the many hundred of similar letters received by the above firm. See their advertisement in another column.

AUTHENTIC AND AUTHORIZED BIOGRAPHY OF



Henry Ward Beecher

Largely an Autobiography.

THE FULL ACCOUNT OF THE GREAT TRIAL and the greater part of the work from 1860 up to date is Written by Mr. Beecher Himself.

And it is completed by his son, Wm. C. Beecher, his son-in-law, Rev. Saml. Scoville, assisted by Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher.

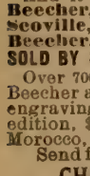
SOLD BY SUBSCRIPTION. AGENTS WANTED.

Over 700 pages. An elegant steel of Mr. Beecher and many fine wood cuts and photo-engravings. Fine Cloth, $3.00. Sheep, library edition, $3.75. Half Seal Russia, $4.00. Half Morocco, $5.00. Full Morocco, $7.00.

Send for Specimen Pages and Catalogue.

CHAS. L. WEBSTER & CO.,
3 East 14th Street, New York City.



UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, $35 with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. MARCHAL & SMITH, 235 East 21st Street, New York.

LACTATED FOOD

For Young Infants a perfect substitute for mother's milk, often saving life; for the Invalid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great value. Thousands who have used it say it is the

FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD.

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infants and Invalids sent on application.

Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, VT.

(33 Colors.) DIAMOND DYES

are the Purest, Cheapest, Strongest, and most Durable Dyes ever made. One 10c. package will color 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, Rags etc. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Fancy Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bronzing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instructions and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Druggists

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON, VT

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

A SPECIAL OFFER

To the Readers of the Christian Herald.

I have made a special arrangement with one of the best Life Insurance Societies of New York City by which I am enabled to offer to all the male readers of this paper, between the ages of 18 and 60 (in good health) and whose occupation is not hazardous

A Life Insurance Policy

Free of Charge,

provided that application is made to me within thirty days from this date. Circulars giving full particulars will be sent on application.

J. E. JEWETT,

APRIL 19, 1888. 77 Bible House, New York.

CALIFORNIA LANDS!

Fruit & Diversified Farming!

For gratuitous information send full P.O. address to LANSING THURBER, P. O. Box 1581, Los Angeles, Cal.

QUEENS NURSERY, ESTABLISHED 18..

Special Offers.

FLOWERS. OFFER 4. BY MAIL. | One ... (Storm King Fuchia, and 5 packets choice flower seeds for $1.

OFFER 5. By Express | 8 named varieties ... our imported double Fringed Petunias, the most satisfactory new plants ... out this year: 1 Storm King Fuchia, and 5 packets choice flower seeds for $1.

OFFER 6. By Express | 8 of the ... new Chrysanthemums grown, including Mrs. Cleveland, J. Thorp Jr. and Calingford, and 5 packets of choice flower seeds for $1.00.

Extras will be added on these express offers as will assure further dealings. SEEDS.

WAYTE & CO., Queens, L. I., N. Y.

GALVANIZED WIRE NETTING.

BEST AND CHEAPEST FENCE IN THE MARKET FOR POULTRY, GARDEN OR LAWN.

IN BALES, 150 FEET LONG

4 FEET HIGH, ONLY ..... $4.50 PER BALE.
5 FEET HIGH, ONLY ..... 5 63 PER BALE.
6 FEET HIGH, ONLY ..... 6 75 PER BALE.

Address orders and correspondence to U. S. WIRE NETTING CO., 62 Reade St., New York.

A GRAND SUCCESS,

And as deserved as it is successful. A Remarkable Collection.

THE NEW BOOK OF GOSPEL HYMNS.

HYMNS NEW AND OLD,

Compiled by D. B. TOWNER,

With Contributions from all the Best Known Writers of the Country.

Used by leading Evangelists and in numerous Churches, Sabbath-Schools and Young Men's Christian Associations.

Commended in Highest Terms Everywhere.

Rev. B. Fay Mills has just ordered 2,000 copies for his meetings in Indianapolis. During his very successful work in Providence, R. I., over 3,000 copies were needed to supply the demand.

From "Cooper Union," Mr. Chas. Herald, who so successfully conducts these popular evangelistic services, writes:

"I have used it now for several months in my work at the Cooper Union, New York City, where an audience of 1,500 come together every Sunday evening, and I must say I have never used any book which prompted such hearty and enthusiastic congregational singing as HYMNS NEW AND OLD."

Mr. S. E. Wishard, International Y.M.C.A. College Sec'y, says:

"The book is simply immense. The enthusiasm among our delegates at the conventions proved their appreciation. They could not get enough books.

Have You examined HYMNS NEW AND OLD? If not, don't fail to send for sample.

Prices: Music Edition, boards, $30 per 100; 35c. each by mail. Word edition, paper, $5 per 100; boards, $10 per 100; by mail 1c. per copy extra.

Fleming H. Revell, Publisher,

CHICAGO: 148-150 Madison St. | NEW YORK: 12 Bible House.

Yankee Girls in Zululand.

BY

LOUISE VESCELIUS-SHELDON.

WITH

100 Photogravure Illustrations by G. E. GRAVES, From Original Sketches by J. AUSTEN.

1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, gilt top, $2.25.

Worthington Co., 747 B'way, N.Y.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free. FOR OIL.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

BOOKS HELPFUL IN CHRISTIAN WORK.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM, by Lucy J. Rider and Nellie M. Carman, with contributions of plans, methods and outline talks to children by nearly forty others, including the best-known and most successful workers among children in this country. 208 pages, fine cloth, $1.00.

THE PRAYER MEETING AND ITS IMPROVEMENT, by Rev. L. O. Thompson. 12mo. 256 pages, cloth, $1.25.

"This is so good a book that we wish we could give a copy to every young minister."—C. H. Spurgeon.

"A very suggestive book."—Sunday-School Times.

THUS SAITH THE LORD, by Major D. W. Whittle. A handbook for Christian workers. 134 pages, flexible cloth, 50 cts.

"A manual of Scripture texts arranged to present the leading subjects met with in dealing with enquirers.

SECRET POWER; or, the Secret of Success in Christian Life and Work, by D. L. Moody. 116 pages, 12mo, cloth, 60 cts.; paper, 30 cts.

"Every page is full of stimulating thought."—Christian Commonwealth.

* Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.*

J. E. JEWETT,
77 Bible House, - - New York.

WOMAN:

HER POWER AND PRIVILEGES.

A series of Sermons by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage. Just published. 12mo. 200 pages, paper cover. Sold by all dealers for 25 cents; or sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address

J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
P.O. Box 2767. 57 Rose Street, New York

$100 to $300 A MONTH can be made working for us. Agents preferred who can furnish their own horses and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., Publishers, 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N.Y.

ORDERS BY MAIL.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.

Invite correspondence in regard to Samples and prices of their varied lines of Silks, Woolen, and Cotton Dress Materials. Black Silks, Colored Satins Printed Pongees, Mixed and Check Cheviots for Summer Wear, Sateens, Ginghams, and all Wash Fabrics are kept in select variety. Orders by letter are filled by our most experienced salesmen, and with assured satisfaction to the customers.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.,

Broadway and 11th St.,

NEW YORK.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO'S LEADING SPECIALTIES.

ROSES

ALL VARIETIES, SIZES AND PRICE

FINE EVER-BLOOMING PERPETUAL, CLIMBING AND MOSS ROSES.

NEW AND RARE FLOWER SEEDS.

HARDY PLANTS, New Moon Flower, Clematis, Spi... Bulbs, JAPAN LILIES, New Chrysanthemums, and Wonderful ORNAMENTAL VEGETABLE Everything sent safely by mail or express ... We offer Choice NEW THINGS and STERLI... NOVELTIES in all departments. Our NEW GUID... 100 pp., elegantly illustrated, describes over 1500 NEWE... and CHOICEST Varieties of ROSES, SEED... PLANTS and BULBS, and tells how to grow t... Free. ☞ If you wish to plant anything, send to... 20 Years Established. Over 60 Large Greenhou...

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO.,
ROSE GROWERS, WEST GROVE, Chester Co...

Now Is The Time to Paint

EVERYBODY'S PAINT BOOK

A new work on INDOOR and OUTDOOR painting which is designed to teach people how to DO THEIR OWN PAINTING and save the expense of a professional painter. The most practical and valuable work of the kind ever issued. Full and plain directions are given for mixing paints for ALL PURPOSES. Tells all about PAPER HANGING, KALSOMINING, STAINING, VARNISHING, POLISHING, as well as how to RENOVATE FURNITURE, so that it will look as good as new. Tells all about HOUSE-CLEANING.

Full directions are given for mixing and applying Kalsomine to ceilings and walls. It tells how to make and use stencils for ornamenting ceilings. Gives detailed directions for PAPER HANGING so that every one can paper a room successfully. Tells how to make DAMASK WALLS, etc. Tells how to paint a kitchen or chamber FLOOR varnish OIL-CLOTHS, varnish RUSTIC WORK, restore CHROMOS and oil paintings renovate PICTURE FRAMES, CLEAN MARBLE, etc. Many useful recipes and RUSTIC WORK for HOME DECORATION are given. Full directions are given for making the beautiful SPATTER-WORK pictures in which the ladies are so much interested. Tells how to paint OUTBUILDINGS, ROOFS, FARM WAGONS FARM IMPLEMENTS, and CARRIAGES as well as how to polish a PIANO ORGAN—how to fruit-te GROUND GLASS make paint for BLACK BOARDS—GRAINING in oak and black walnut, painting in imitation of EBONY—MAHOGANY and OSTWOOD stain, GILDING, BRONZING and SILVERING. Elegantly printed, handsomely bound in extra cloth, with ink and gold, contains a large number of illustrations; will save its cost in a short time. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price $1.00. Five books for $4.00. Get four friends to send with you and thus get your book free. Address,

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

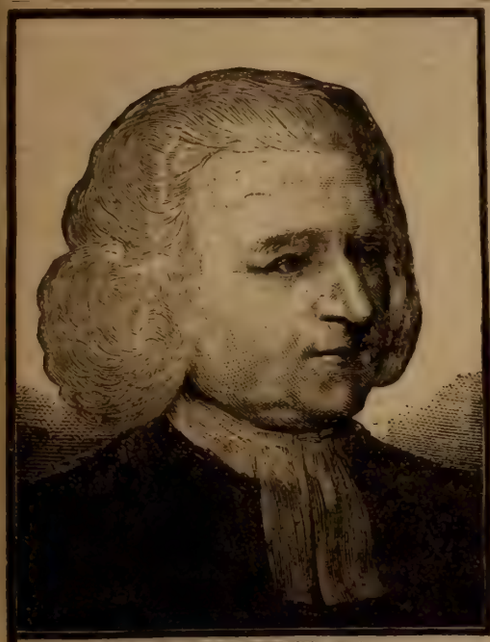
WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices. IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kind wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured Dr. J. E. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 18. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, MAY 3, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.



REV. CHARLES WESLEY, M.A.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF CHARLES WESLEY AND HIS MOTHER.

MODERN SPIRITUALISM. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE THREE PROPHETIC PERIODS. By G. H. Pember, M. A.

A Fisherman's Monday Catch.—Congo Boys in a London Fog—Jewish Inquirers in Palestine—Emin Pasha and the Missionaries—A Disgusted Immigrant.

CURRENT EVENTS: Congressional Notes—Queen Victoria in Berlin, etc.

DAVID'S SPOIL. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: A Pioneer Missionary.

PICTURE OF THE SUPPOSED SARCOPHAGUS OF ALEXANDER THE GREAT.

THE BLACKSMITH'S ARGUMENT. (With Illustration.)

PICTURE OF A SCOTTISH CROFT.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL. A Serial Story. (Continued.)

THE LORD'S SUPPER. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

MRS. SUSANNAH WESLEY: HIS MOTHER.

THE "HOLY CLUB," OXFORD: THE ORIGIN OF METHODISM.

THE "FOUNDERY": FIRST HEAD-QUARTERS OF METHODISM.

MR. WESLEY WITNESSES THE CALMNESS OF THE MORAVIANS IN A STORM.

A PERSECUTOR CONVERTED WHILE HIDING IN A SACK.

REV. CHARLES WESLEY, M. A., the Poet of Methodism—MRS. SUSANNAH WESLEY, his Mother.

THE REV. CHARLES WESLEY, M. A.

The Quadrennial General Conference—Birth at Epworth—His Mother's Piety—Life at Westminster School and at Oxford—The "Holy Club" and the Name "Methodist"—Embarkation for Georgia—The Moravians in a Storm—Return to England—Work among the Convicts in Newgate—Opposition and Persecution—Opening the "Foundry"—Two Visits to Ireland—A Persecutor in a Sack—Last Days and Death—His Hymns.

THE General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which is this week holding its sessions in New York, attracts the attention of the religious world, not only by the importance of the business to be transacted, but by the eminence and fame of the men who are assembled. The bishops, missionaries, editors, and able preachers who are to take part in its proceedings, are men convoked from widely scattered spheres of labor to give their counsel and aid in conducting the business of a Church which has no equal in the army of Christendom for energy and earnestness. Many prayers are being offered that the record of the achievements of the past four years which have elapsed since the last General Conference assembled, may stimulate all who hear to still more consecration and self-sacrificing labor, and that God will guide the deliberations to the increasing usefulness of this branch of His church.

It is appropriate at a time when Methodism occupies so large a share of the thoughts of religious people that the portrait of one of the fathers of Methodism, with that of his sainted mother, should occupy the place of honor in this journal. It is given to one the value of whose services to the cause is apparent in every Methodist church the world over, as its walls echo with the tuneful words which his pen inscribed.

The Poet of Methodism was born December 18, 1708, in the old parsonage at Epworth, Lincolnshire, England, where his father, Rev. Samuel Wesley, was rector. He was about five years younger than his famous brother John, and sixteen years younger than Samuel, his eldest brother. The parsonage was the scene during the early years of the boys of a continual struggle with poverty, the father's income being small, and his family large. Sometimes even suitable food and clothing were lacking in the home, and there was always need of the most rigid economy.

Charles Wesley received the rudiments of his education under the tuition of his mother, whose portrait accompanies that of her son on the first page. She was a woman of sincere piety and of a cultured mind. She died in London on July 23, 1742. When, as she was dying, her sons and daughters stood around her bed, she said, "Children, as soon as I am released, sing a psalm of praise to God." Her interment took place in Bunhill Fields, and many thousands of mourners stood around her grave, for she was a woman greatly beloved, and her memory is blessed. Charles was sent in 1716, when he was about eight years old, to Westminster School. He was placed under the care of his brother Samuel, who was then one of the ushers in the establishment, and for a time generously bore the cost of his little brother's maintenance, whom he succeeded in making an excellent classical scholar. At Westminster, Charles was sprightly and active; his aptitude, however, was conspicuous in fighting, and it procured for him the admiration of the boys, and the title of

Captain of the School.

At the end of about five years he was elected one of the King's scholars, and his expenses were defrayed out of the endowment of the school. In 1726 he was entered a student at Christ Church College, Oxford. His brother John had lately left the same college, having obtained a fellowship in Lincoln college, Oxford, and had just resolved by the grace of God to be a Christian in heart and soul, unlike so many in that classical institution, who were going forth to preach merely for a livelihood. At this time, however, Charles would not listen to anything that was said to him on the subject of religion, but three years later, in 1729, he became much concerned about his state before God as a sinner, and began to seek the way of salvation. About this period, and while John was absent from Oxford, was first given to Charles Wesley and his thoughtful companions. In November, 1729, John Wesley, who for three years had been serving his father in the curacy of Wroote, attached to Epworth, returned to Oxford, that he might undertake the education of some young gentlemen, in whose welfare Dr. Morley, the Master of the University, was interested. Charles and his pious companions were rejoiced at his arrival, and immediately formed themselves into a "society" under his superintendence, "that they might promote each other's intellectual, moral, and spiritual improvement." Their entire number at first only amounted to four. Charles Wesley had just completed his twenty-first year, taken his B. A. degree, and become a Tutor.

The Name of "Methodist"

The number of Methodists in the University soon began to increase, but not rapidly. They were objects of ridicule and censure, and were known and spoken of as the Reforming Club, the Godly Club, the Holy Club, Bible Moths, and so on; so that some of them found it difficult to maintain their ground amidst the raillery and invective with which they were treated. (See Illustration.) On April 25, 1735, the venerable rector of Epworth died, and the Wesley family was deprived of its head. John and Charles were both present, and the dying sayings of their beloved parent made a permanent impression upon their hearts. The following year they embarked as Missionaries for Georgia.

The Colony of Georgia was formed under the sanction of a royal charter, which was granted in 1732. It was to be an outlet to the redundant population, especially of London, and to be an asylum for such foreign Protestants as were harassed by Popish persecution. Mr. John Wesley was prevailed on to undertake a mission among the Indians in the neighborhood of the colony. His brother Charles accompanied him as Secretary to Governor Oglethorpe. Up to this time Charles Wesley had declined entering the ministry; but he was now ordained, that he might be able to officiate as a clergyman in the colony, where the spiritual interest of the people had been neglected. They set sail from the Thames on October 14, 1735.

The ship in which the Wesleys embarked, the Simmonds, contained 124 persons—men, women and children—among whom was the Governor himself, and twenty-six Germans, members of the Moravian Church, with David Nitschman, their Bishop. Throughout their voyage, they occupied every hour with some useful work connected with the object to which their lives were unreservedly devoted. They were detained in the Downs by contrary winds, during which time Mr. Charles Wesley complied with the request of the clergyman at Cowes, and preached three or four times in his church.

The conduct of the Moravian Brethren, when on their voyage to Georgia, showed how thoroughly their hearts were filled with faith and love. It made a deep impression upon the susceptible and observant minds of the two Wesleys.

A Storm

came upon the emigrants when they were within about ten days' sail of the American continent. The waves of the sea were mighty; the winds roared fearfully; and the ship not only rocked to and fro with violence, but threatened every minute to be engulphed, or to break in pieces. "In this state of things," says John Wesley, "I went to the Germans. Of their humility they had given a continual proof, by performing those servile offices for the other passengers which none of the English would undertake; for which they desired and would receive no pay; saying it was good for their proud hearts; and their loving Saviour had done more for them. There was now an opportunity of trying whether they were delivered from the spirit of fear, as well as from that of anger, pride, and revenge. In the midst of the psalm wherewith their service began, the sea swept clean over the deck, split the mainsail in pieces, covered the ship, and poured in between the decks, as if the great deep had already swallowed us up. A terrible screaming began among the English. The Germans calmly sang on. I asked one of them afterwards, 'Were you not afraid?' 'I thank God, no,' was his reply. 'But,' I asked, 'were not your women and children afraid?' 'No,' he answered mildly, his face bright, 'our women and children are not afraid to die.'" (See Illustration.)

On landing upon the American shore, on February 5, 1736, one hundred and fourteen days after their voyage began, the people united in praise and thanksgiving to their Almighty Preserver. For five weeks the two brothers remained together; but early in March Charles in the island of St. Simon, where he was to have spiritual charge of the people, and where the Governor, to whom he was secretary, had fixed his residence. Charles's mission, like that of his brother, was an utter failure; conspiracies were formed to discredit him with the Governor, and attempts were even made to get rid of him by assassination. It was not due, however, to the cause which afterward brought the two brothers into persecution, as they had not then begun to preach the distinctive doctrines of Methodism. On the 15th of May some duties connected with his secretaryship called Charles to Savannah, and from thence, much to his glad surprise, he was sent with despatches to England, and he never again visited Frederica. "I was overjoyed," he says, "at my deliverance out of this furnace, and not a little ashamed of myself for being so."

Removed to Frederica,

In 1737 and 1738 the Wesleys (for John had also returned to England as well as his brother) had frequent interviews with the good Count Zinzendorf and Peter Böhler, and through the efforts and teachings of Böhler, they were led to see the depths of peace and joy into which the Christian is privileged to enter through faith in the finished atoning work of Christ.

For several weeks after his conversion, Charles Wesley was very ill, but his heart burned with love to Christ his Saviour, and with zeal for the advancement of His work and glory. Scarcely a day passed but one or more persons were by means of his labors convinced of the truth, and believed to the saving of their souls. Not only was this the case in different parts of London among the poor and uninstructed, but also among some of the clergy. Mr. Stonehouse, the Vicar of Islington, received the truth through him, and at once began to preach it. Mr. Charles Wesley became Mr. Stonehouse's curate, and after reading prayers nearly every day in the church, he would go forth to hold private meetings in various directions. In behalf of no class were his sympathies more deep than of condemned culprits. He was A Frequent Visitor at Newgate Prison.

In those times the criminal law of England was horribly sanguinary. Thefts and highway robberies were generally punished with hanging. In this state of the law, the execution of eight, or ten, or even more men on one day was no uncommon occurrence. Many a poor condemned convict did Charles Wesley teach the way of salvation through faith in Christ and commend in prayer to the pity of the Saviour. Among the churches which were opened to him for preaching his favorite doctrine was Westminster Abbey, in which he was once permitted to hold forth the lamp of salvation.

Meanwhile John Wesley had visited the Moravian church at Herrnhut, in Germany, and on his return home in September, 1738, felt convinced that similar societies might be raised up in Great Britain. From this time the brothers began to co-operate with each other for the advancement of true religion; John adopting Charles's mode of procedure, preaching in such churches as were open to him, and holding meetings for conversation, mutual exhortation, and scriptural exposition. On October 28, this same year, Charles Wesley first delivered an entire sermon without notes in the church of St. Antholin, London. Eventually he became one of the most fluent and impressive extempore preachers of the last century.

Opposition Soon Arose.

The doctrine of salvation by faith was objectionable to the majority of those who attended the churches; and so great were the crowds which attended the ministry of the Wesleys that regular seat-holders were subjected to much inconvenience; they could not bear so much heat and crowding! Charles was dismissed from his curacy at Islington, and sought other fields for the exercise of that ministry which he felt he had received of the Lord. Then commenced that long itinerant career, as a preacher in the open air, and in all sorts of buildings wherever they could be obtained, in the course of which the gospel was proclaimed in all its fullness and power throughout the length and breadth of England, and by means of which multitudes were led into the kingdom of God, and united in the fellowship of a brotherhood which has its representatives and agencies to-day in all parts of the world. The subsequent history of Charles Wesley is interwoven with the spread of Methodism, and into this, interesting as it undoubtedly is, we have no space to enter.

In November, 1739, the brothers Wesley opened their first separate place of worship in London. This "preaching-house," was in Moorfields. It was a large and shapeless brick building, formerly belonging to the Government, and used for the casting of cannon for the army. An explosion having occurred, in which some lives were lost, the establishment was removed to the neighborhood of Woolwich. The Foundery was the birth-place of "The United Society." (See Illustration.) The lease of this property expired about the year 1777, when the commodious chapel in the City Road was built, and the congregation removed thither. In this house of worship, now commonly referred to as "The Cathedral of Methodism," Charles Wesley generally preached in the morning and afternoon of nearly every Sunday until his ministry closed.

The Foundery,

In September, 1747, Mr. Charles Wesley paid his first visit to Ireland. He spent six months in Dublin, preaching twice a day, and strengthening a newly formed "Society" there. In the summer of 1748 he again crossed the Channel, and for nearly three months labored with apostolic zeal and marvellous blessing at Dublin, Cork, Kinsale, Bandon, and many other places. His meetings excited a strong opposition, especially among the Roman Catholics, and often his opponents resorted to violence. The incident of which has been often related, occurred during one of these visits. Some Romanists discovered that there was a little company of Methodists meeting in secrecy and caution in a barn near Wexford. One of the persecutors agreed to conceal himself before the service began, and then suddenly open the door for his accomplices to enter. He found nothing to hide in but an old sack, in which he lay quiet and unnoticed. The hymn went so well that he waited to hear it all before disturbing them; and the prayer which followed sent the arrow of conviction into his heart, so that he groaned and wept. The terror of the simple worshippers, when such unexpected sounds were heard from the sack, may be easily imagined. They took courage, however, helped the man out, prayed with him, led him to Christ, and soon welcomed him into the "Society." (See Illustration.)

The Man in the Sack,

Mr. Charles Wesley survived most of his early religious companions. He had seen such saintly men as Hervey Grimshaw, Whitefield, and Perronet, "the Archbishop of the Methodists," pass away, together with Fletcher, the devoted Vicar of Madeley, and the time was rapidly approaching when he perceived that he also must die. His treasure and his heart were already in heaven. As the months rolled away he became weaker and weaker, until on March 29, 1788, one hundred years ago this year, he yielded up his spirit into the hands of his Saviour, after fifty years of laborious and effective ministry, and at the age of seventy-nine years.

As a Sacred Hymn-Writer

the name of Charles Wesley is enshrined in the hearts of many, both on earth and in heaven. A universal favorite with all evangelical denominations is his hymn commencing "Jesu, lover of my soul." So also are "He dies! the Friend of sinners dies!" and "Hark, the herald angels sing" and "Lo, on a narrow neck of land," which last was composed on the promontory of the Land's End, in Cornwall. Some of the most valued of the Wesleyan hymns are translations from the German. Of these, the finest of them all is from a hymn of Count Zinzendorf, the Moravian:

"Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are, my glorious dress."

Of the hymns in the Wesleyan hymn-book and supplement, 769 in number, about 600 are ascribed to Charles Wesley, and thirty to forty to John Wesley. Of the remainder, sixty-six are taken from Dr. Watts, ten from Dr. Doddridge, and the rest from eighteen different hymn-writers.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Miserable Excuses for Refusing Christ.—Mr. Thompson said: "I met two young men lately whose excuses for not accepting Christ were characterized by much frivolity. One of them refused because he was engaged to go to a ball with a young lady, and to disappoint her might give unpardonable offence; while his companion also declined the gospel invitation because he had been put upon a dance committee, and it might cause confusion and disappointment if he withdrew. Miserable excuses these for declining the invitation to the marriage supper of the Lamb! Yet it is for similar trifles that sinners fritter away their opportunity of securing eternal life, and consign themselves to a lost eternity. 'How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?'"

A Surprised Preacher.—Mr. Richard Weaver relates: "Not long ago my son was speaking on a platform about the Jews demanding that Barabbas should be released to them and Christ crucified. Standing up, he cried, 'Christ or Barabbas! Christ or Barabbas! Choose ye this day whom ye will have.' He did not expect an immediate answer, but, much to his surprise, a young man in the centre of the hall jumped up and enthusiastically cried out, 'Christ, Christ for me!' That was settling the question of salvation and eternity at once. He saw by the light and teaching of the Holy Spirit that there was no time for procrastination. Are there not many unsaved sinners around us with whom it would be well were they also to answer with all the earnestness that this young man did, 'Christ for me!'"

A Blaspheming Scoffer Struck Dead.—Mr Thompson said: "I was preaching in a certain place in the North not very long ago, where I heard a terrible story of three young fellows. It was a communion Sunday, and they were out taking a walk. They went into a liquor saloon for some refreshments, and while there one of them said, 'Let us have a communion of our own!' He knelt, and taking a glass in his hand, said in mock solemnity, 'This is the cup of my blood, shed for the remission of sins,' and handed it to his companion, who drank, and handed it back again to him. The words were repeated, and the glass handed to the other young man, who also drank. For the third time he repeated these holy words with blasphemous tongue, and was about to raise the liquor to his own lips, but God, who will not be mocked, arrested the action, and the scoffer fell dead upon the spot. Fear and horror fell upon his companions. They ran out and told the bartender what had happened, but he was afraid to enter the room. In haste they went to a chapel close by, and got some Christians to come. There they found the dead man, with the glass in his hand. I said to the friend who told me this, 'Can you vouch for the truth of this story?' 'Yes,' he replied, and he told me the address of the man from whom he had heard it, and who was the first man from the chapel to enter the room. God's judgment often seems deferred, but it sometimes descends upon the mocking sinner, and he is hurled into eternity with the mockeries still upon his lips."

Converted at the Sewing Machine.—"There was a woman sitting at her sewing machine in her kitchen. Her hands held the cloth. As she worked she was singing that hymn, 'Take me as I am.' When she came to the verse,

'Behold me, Saviour, at Thy feet,
Deal with me as Thou see'st meet;
Thy work begin, Thy work complete,
And take me as I am,'

she stopped her machine, and looking up to God with a weary, longing heart, she prayed, 'Yes, Lord Jesus, take me as I am; I do come to Thee.' I saw her at the meeting afterwards, and noticing her joyful face I spoke to her. It was then she told me the story of her conversion, and thanked God that He did take her. That Saviour is ready to be your Saviour, too."

A Lady's Singular Dream.—"The Wife of an Episcopalian minister in Plymouth, who has written many books, saw that there was a fullness of blessing that she had not yet obtained, and she set her heart upon attaining it. She searched diligently, but it seemed as if she were to be baffled. One night she learned in a dream what was wanting. She dreamt that she saw her heart, in the middle of which was a great tumor, and while that was there she could not have close communion with God. But she heard that the blood of Christ could remove the tumor. She went to Christ, and had her heart washed in His blood. When she awoke she knew what it meant. The tumor was the figure of sin. Sin, no matter how secret, or how small, must be washed away in the blood of Christ before she could have communion with Him. She gave herself into Christ's hands to be kept clean, and soon afterwards the Lord put the completeness of her surrender to the test. Two of her children were brought to the valley of the shadow of death, but yet she was able to say, 'Thy will be done.' She could not have done that before, but now she could give to God what she loved better than herself."

Money in Answer to Prayer.—Dr. W. Wood Smyth observes: "A Christian, who had long been employed as a trusted servant by a well-known American firm, thought of setting up in business for himself in a rising town in the West. He told his employers of his intention, and where he purposed going. They replied, 'Go, and we will never oppose you.' He went, but had scarcely started, when his old firm, instead of keeping their promise, actually opened a branch in the same town, close to his place, where they tried by every means in their power to occasion his downfall. He took the matter to the Lord, and laid all the circumstances before Him, and pleaded His promise of help in the day of trouble. One day he found himself with $500 to pay, and an empty safe. 'That is not much,' he thought; 'it may come in before the bank closing time.' But the time crept on, and there was no money; he began to be anxious, and went out to see if he could procure a loan of that amount, but failed. He returned to his office, and knelt in prayer. As he prayed, the name of a person whom he had forgotten came into his mind. Up he arose, and almost ran to that man's office, and asked the loan of the sum needed. He got it at once, and hurrying to the bank paid it in, but only just in time. He trusted in the Lord, and the Lord did not fail him. 'Cast all your care upon Him, for He careth for you.'"

MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached last Sunday Morning, April 29, 1888.

"Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at En-dor. And Saul disguised himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night: and he said, I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up, whom I shall name." I. Sam. 28: 7, 8.

The Nocturnal Visit to the Medium—The Awful Apparition—The Warning to the King—I. Spiritualism an Old Religion—Its Introduction to America—The Hydesville Spirits—Ancient Varieties of Witchcraft—God's Curse on them All—II. How Men Fall into the Snare—Its Victims Among the Troubled—An Ill-Spelled Letter Through a Medium—III. Affairs of Darkness—A Dream of a College President—IV. Brings Doom and Death—V. A Social and Marital Curse—VI. A Cause of Insanity—The Fatal False Revelation About the "Atlantic"—VII. It Ruins the Soul—A Christian Seance.

I HAVE recently become a spiritualist. At least so some of the journals of that belief declare. This, together with the fact that "mediums" are now being tried in the criminal courts, setting millions of people to make inquiry in regard to communication between this world and the next, leads me to preach this sermon.

Trouble to the right of him, and trouble to the left of him, Saul knew not what to do. As a last resort, he concluded to seek out a spiritual medium, or a witch, or anything that you please to call her—a woman, who had

Communication with the Spirits

of the eternal world. It was a very difficult thing to do, for Saul had either slain all the witches, or compelled them to stop business. A servant one day said to King Saul, "I know of a spiritual medium down at the village of En-dor." "Do you?" said the king. Night falls. Saul, putting off his kingly robes, and putting on the dress of a plain citizen, with two servants, goes out to hunt up this medium.

Saul and his servants after awhile reached the village, and they say, "I wonder if this is the house"; and they look in, and they see the haggard, weird, and shrivelled-up spiritual medium sitting by the light, and on the table sculptured images, and divining-rods, and poisonous herbs, and bottles, and vases. They say, "Yes, this must be the place." One loud rap brings the woman to the door; and as she stands there, holding the candle or lamp above her head, and peering out into the darkness, she says, "Who is here?" The tall king informs her that he has come

To Have His Fortune Told.

When she hears that, she trembles, and almost drops the light, for she knows there is no chance for a fortune-teller or spiritual medium in all the land. But Saul having sworn that no harm shall come to her, she says, "Well, who shall I bring up from the dead?" Saul says, "Bring up Samuel." That was the prophet who had died a little while before. I see her waving a wand, or stirring up some poisonous herbs in a cauldron, or hear her muttering over some incantations, or stamping with her foot, as she cries out to the realm of the dead, "Samuel! Samuel!" Lo, the freezing horror! The floor of the tenement opens, and the gray hairs float up, and the forehead, the eyes, the lips, the shoulders, the arms, the feet, the entire body of the dead Samuel, wrapped in sepulchral robe, appearing to the astonished group, who stagger back, and hold fast, and catch their breath, and shiver with terror.

The Dead Prophet,

white and awful from the tomb, begins to move his ashen lips, and he glares upon King Saul, and cries out, "What did you bring me up for? What do you mean, King Saul?" Saul, trying to compose and control himself, makes this stammering and affrighted utterance, as he says to the dead prophet, "The Lord is against me, and I have come to you for help. What shall I do?" The dead prophet stretched forth his finger to King Saul and said, "Die to-morrow! Come with me into the sepulchre. I am going now. Come, come with me!" And lo! the floor again opens, and the feet of the dead prophet disappear, and the arms, and the shoulders, and the forehead. The floor closes. O, that was an awful séance!

I. I learn from this subject that Spiritualism is A very Old Religion.

Spiritualism in America was born in the year 1847, in Hydesville, Wayne County, New York, when one night there was a loud rap heard against the door of Michael Weekman; a rap a second time, a rap a third time; and all three times, when the door was opened, there was nothing found there, the knocking having been made seemingly by invisible knuckles. In that same house there was a young woman who had a cold hand passed over her face, and there being seemingly no arm attached to it, ghostly suspicions wtre excited.

The excitement spread. There was a universal rumpus. The Hon. Judge Edmunds declared, in a book, that he had actually seen a bell start from the top shelf of a closet, heard it ring over the people that were standing in the closet; then, swung by invisible hands, it rang over the people in the back parlor; and floated through the folding doors to the front parlor, rung over the people there, and then dropped on the floor. N. P. Talmage, Senator of the United States, afterwards Governor of Wisconsin, had his head quite turned with spiritualistic demonstrations. The tables tipped and the stools tilted, and the bedsteads raised, and the chairs upset, and it seemed as if the spirits everywhere had gone into the furniture business! Well, the people said: "We have got something new in this country; it is a new religion!" Oh no, my friend, thousands of years ago we find in our text a Spiritualistic séance.

Nothing in the spiritualistic circles of our day has been more strange, mysterious, and wonderful, than things which have been of the world. In all the ages there have been necromancers, those who consult with the spirits of the departed; charmers, those who put their subjects in a mesmeric state; sorcerers, those who by taking poisonous drugs see everything, and hear everything, and tell everything; dreamers, people who in their sleeping moments can see the future world and hold consultation with spirits, Yes, before the time of Christ the Brahmins went through all the table-moving, all the furniture excitement, which the spirits have exploited in our day; precisely the same thing over and over again, under the manipulations of the Brahmins. Now do you say that spiritualism is different from these? I answer, all these delusions I have mentioned belong to the same family. They are exhumations from the unseen world.

Seen in Past Centuries

What does God think of all these delusions? He thinks so severely of them that He never speaks of them but with livid thunders of indignation. He says: "I will be a swift witness against the sorcerer." He says: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." And lest you might make some important distinction between spiritualism and witchcraft, God says, in so many words: "There shall not be among you a consulter of familiar spirits, or wizard, or necromancer; for they that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord." The Lord God Almighty, in a score of passages, which I have not now time to quote, utters His indignation against all this great family of delusions. After that be a Spiritualist if you dare!

II. Still further: we learn from this text how it is that people come to fall into Spiritualism. Saul had enough trouble to kill ten men. He did not know where to go for relief. After awhile he resolved to go and see the witch of En-dor. He expected that somehow she would afford him relief. It was his Trouble Drove Him There.

And I have to tell you now that Spiritualism finds its victims in the troubled, the bankrupt, the sick, the bereft. You lose your watch, and you go to the fortune-teller to find where it is. You lose a friend; you want the spiritual world opened, so that you may have communication with him. In a highly wrought, nervous, and diseased state of mind, you go and put yourself in that communication. That is Why I Hate Spiritualism.

It takes advantage of one in a moment of weakness, which may come upon us at any time. We lose a friend. The trial is keen, sharp, suffocating, almost maddening. If we could marshal a host, and storm the eternal world, and recapture our loved one, the host would soon be marshalled. The house is so lonely. The world is so dark. The separation is so insufferable. But Spiritualism says: "We will open the future world, and your loved one can come back and talk to you." Though we may not hear his voice, we may hear the rap of his hand. So, clear the table. Sit down. Put your hands on the table. Be very quiet. Five minutes gone. Ten minutes. No motion of the table. No response from the future world. Twenty minutes. Thirty minutes. Nervous excitement all the time increasing. Forty minutes. The table shivers. Two raps from the future world. The letters of the alphabet are called over. The departed friend's name is John. At the pronunciation of the letter "J," two raps. At the pronunciation of the letter "O," two raps. At the pronunciation of the letter "H," two raps. At the pronunciation of the letter "N," two raps. There you have the whole name spelled out. J-o-h-n, John. Now, the spirit being present, you say: "John, are you happy?" Two raps give an affirmative answer.

Pretty soon the hand of the medium begins to twitch and toss, and begins to write out, after paper and ink are furnished, a message from the eternal world. What is remarkable, the departed spirit, although it has been amid the illuminations of the heaven, cannot spell as well as it used to. It has lost all grammatical accuracy and cannot write as distinctly. I received once. I sent it back. I said: "Just please to tell those ghosts they had better go to school and get improved in their orthography." Now, just think of spirits, that the Bible represents as enthroned in glory, coming down to crawl under the table, and break crockery, and ring tea-bells before supper is ready, and rap the window-shutter on a gusty night! Is there any consolation in such poor, miserable work compared with the thought that our departed Christia friends, got rid of pain and languishing, are the radiant society of heaven, and that we sh join them there, not in a stifled and mysterious half-utterance, which makes the hair stand on end and the cold chills creep the back, but in an unhindered and illimitable delight?

A Letter through a Medium

"And none shall murmur or misdoubt,
When God's great sunrise finds us out."

III. I learn, still farther, from this subject that Spiritualism and necromancy are Affairs of Darkness.

Why did not Saul go in the day? He was ashamed to go. Besides that, he knew that this spiritual medium, like all her successors, performed her exploits in the night. The Davenports, the Fowlers, the Foxes, the spiritua mediums of all ages, have chosen the night or a darkened room. Why? The majority of thei wonders have been swindles; and deceptio prospers best in the night.

Some of the performances of spiritual mediums are not to be ascribed to fraud, but to some occult law that after awhile may be demonstrated. But I believe that now nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand achievement on the part of spiritual mediums are arrant an Unmitigated Humbug.

The mysterious red letters that used to com out on the medium's arm were found to hav been made by an iron pencil that went heavil over the flesh, not tearing it, but so disturbin the blood, that it came up in great round letter The witnesses of the séances have locked th door, put the key in their pocket, arrested th operator, and found out, by searching the room that hidden levers moved the tables. The sealed letters that were mysteriously read without opening, have been found to have been cut at the side, and then afterwards slyly put together with gum arabic; and the medium who, with a heavy blanket over his head, could read a book, has been found to have had a bottle of phosphoric oil, by the light of which anybody can read a book; and ventriloquism, and legerdemain, and sleight of hand, and optical delusion account for nearly everything. Deception being the main staple of Spiritualism, no wonder it chooses the darkness!

You have all seen strange and unaccountable things in the night. Almost every man has at some time had a touch of hallucination. Some time ago, after I had been over-tempted to eat something indigestible before retiring at night, after retiring I saw the president of one of the prominent colleges astride the foot of the bed, while he demanded of me a loan of five cents! When I awakened I had no idea it was anything supernatural. And I have to advise you, if you hear and see strange things at night, to stop eating hot mince pie, and take a dose of bilious medicine. It is an outraged physical organism, enough to deceive the very elect after sundown, and does nearly all its work in the night. The witch of En-dor held her séances at night; so do they all. Away with this religion of spooks!

IV. Still further: I learn from my text that Spiritualism is doom and death to its disciples. King Saul thought that he would get help from the "medium"; but the first thing that he sees makes him swoon away, and no sooner is he resuscitated than he is told he must die. Spiritualism is doom and death to everyone that yields to it.

It Ruins the Body.

Look in upon an audience of spiritualists. Cadaverous. Weak. Nervous. Exhausted. Hands clammy and cold. Voices sepulchral and ominous. Bewildered with raps. I never knew a confirmed Spiritualist who had a healthy nervous system. It is incipient epilepsy and catalepsy. Destroy your nervous system and you might as well be dead. I have noticed that people who are hearing raps from the future world have but little strength left to bear the hard raps of this world. A man can live with only one lung or with no eyes, and be happy, as men have been under such afflictions; but woe be to the man whose nerves are shattered. Spiritualism smites first of all, and mightily, against the nervous system, and so makes life miserable

I indict Spiritualism, also, because it is

A Social and Marital Curse.

The worst deeds of licentiousness and the worst orgies of obscenity have been enacted under its patronage. The story is too vile for me to tell. I will not pollute my tongue nor your ears with the recital. Sometimes the civil law has been evoked to stop the outrage. Families innumerable have been broken up by it. It has pushed off hundreds of young women into a life of profligacy. It talks about "elective affinities," and "affinital relations," and "spiritual matches," and adopts the whole vocabulary of free-lovism. In one of its public journals it declares "marriage is the monster curse of civilization." "It is a source of debauchery and intemperance." If Spiritualism could have its full swing, it would turn this world into a pandemonium of carnality. It is an unclean, adulterous, damnable religion, and the sooner it drops into the hell from which it rose, the better both for earth and heaven. For the sake of man's honor and woman's purity, I say let the last vestige of it perish for ever. I wish I could gather up all the raps it has ever heard from spirits blest or damned, and gather them all on its own head in thundering raps of annihilation!

I further indict Spiritualism for that it is

A Cause of Insanity.

There is not an asylum between Bangor and San Francisco which has not the torn and bleeding victims of this delusion. Go into any asylum, I care not where it is, and the presiding doctor, after you have asked him, "What is the matter with that man?" will say: "Spiritualism demented him"; or, "What is the matter with that woman?" he will say, "Spiritualism demented her." It has taken down some of the brightest intellects. It swept off into mental midnight judges, senators, governors, ministers of the gospel, and one time came near capturing one of the Presidents of the United States. At Flushing, near this city, a man became absorbed with it, forsook his family, took his only fifteen thousand dollars, surrendered them to a spiritual medium in New York, attempted three times to put an end to his own life, and then was incarcerated in the State Lunatic Asylum, where he is to-day.

A Fatal Falsehood

Many years ago the steamer Atlantic started from Europe for the United States. Getting mid-ocean, the machinery broke, and she floundered around day after day, and week after week; and for a whole month after she was due people wondered, and finally gave her up. There was great anguish in the cities, for there were many who had friends aboard that vessel. Some of the women, in their distress, went to the spiritual medium, and inquired as to the fate of that vessel. The medium called up the spirits, and the rappings on the table indicated the steamship lost, with all on board. Women went raving mad, and were carried to the lunatic asylum. After awhile one day a gun was heard off Quarantine. The flags went up on the shipping, and the bells of the churches were rung. The boys ran through the streets, crying: "Extra! The Atlantic is safe!" There was the embracing as from the dead, when friends came again to friends; but some of those passengers went up to find their wives in the lunatic asylum, where this cheat of infernal Spiritualism had put them.

A man in Bellevue Hospital, dying from wounds made by his own hand, was asked why he tried to commit suicide, and he said: "The spirits told me to." Parents have strangled their children, and when asked why they did it, replied: "Spiritualism demanded it." It is the patronizer and forager for the madhouse. Judge Edmonds, in Broadway Tabernacle, New York, delivering a lecture in behalf of Spiritualism, admitted, in so many words: "There is a fascination about consultation with the spirits of the dead that has a tendency to lead people off from their right judgment, and to instill into them a fanaticism that is revolting to the natural mind."

It not only ruins its disciples, but it ruins the mediums also, only give it time. The Gadarean swine, on the banks of the Lake of Galilee, no sooner became spiritual mediums than down they went, in an avalanche of pork, to the consternation of all the herdsmen. The office of a medium is bad for a man, bad for a woman, bad for a beast.

VII. I bring against this delusion a more fearful indictment:

It Ruins the Soul

immortal. First it makes a man a quarter of an infidel; then it makes him half an infidel; then it makes him a whole infidel. The whole system, as I conceive it, is founded on the insufficiency of the Word of God as a revelation. God says the Bible is enough for you to know about the future world. You say it is not enough, and there is where you and the Lord differ. And although the Scriptures say: "Add thou not unto His words, lest He reprove thee, and thou be found a liar," you risk it, and say, "Come back, spirit of my departed father; come back, spirit of my departed mother; of my companions; of my little child—and tell me some things I don't know about you, and about the unseen world." If God is ever slapped square in the face, it is when a spiritual medium puts down her hand on the table, invoking spirits departed to make a revelation. God has told you all you ought to know, and how dare you be prying into that which is none of your business? You cannot keep the Bible in one hand and Spiritualism in the other. One or the other will slip out of your grasp, depend upon it. Spiritualism is in the fact that it has in these last days called from the future world Christian men to testify against Christianity. Its mediums call back Lorenzo Dow, the celebrated evangelist, and Lorenzo Dow testifies that Christians are idolaters. Spiritualism calls back Tom Payne, and he testifies that he is stopping in the same house in heaven with John Bunyan. They call back John Wesley, and he testifies against the Christian religion, which he all his life gloriously preached. Andrew Jackson Davis, the greatest of all the Spiritualists, comes to the front, and declares that the New Testament is but "the dismal echo of a barbaric age," and the Bible only "one of the pen-and-ink relics of Christianity."

Adverse to the Bible

"But," says some one, "wouldn't it be of advantage to hear from the future world? Don't you think it would strengthen Christians? There are a great many Materialists who do not believe there are souls; but if spirits from the future world should knock and talk over to us, they would be persuaded." To that I answer, in the ringing words of the Son of God: "If they believe not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

I believe these are the days of which the Apostle spake when he said: "In some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits." I think my audience, as well as other audiences in this day, need to have reiterated in their hearing the passages I quoted some minutes ago: "There shall not be among you a consulter of familiar spirits, or wizard, or necromancer, for they that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord"; and, "The soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, I will set Myself against them, and they shall be cut off from their people."

The Latter Times

But I invite you this morning to a noonday séance. This congregation is only one great family Here is the church table. Come around the church table; take your seats for this great Christian séance; put your Bible on the table put your hands on top of the Bible, and then listen, and hear if there are any voices coming from the eternal world. I think there are. Listen! "Secret things belong unto the Lord, our God, but things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children." Surely, that is a voice from the spirit world! But before you rise from this Christian séance, I want you to promise me you will be satisfied with the Divine revelation until the light of the eternal throne breaks upon your vision. Do not go after the witch of En-dor. Do not sit down at table-rappings, either in sport or in earnest.

A Christian Seance,

Teach your children there are no ghosts to be seen or heard in this world, save those which walk on two feet or four—human or bestial. Remember that Spiritualism, at the best, is a useless thing; for if it tells what the Bible reveals, it is a superfluity: and if it tells what the Bible does not reveal, it is a lie. Instead of going out to get other people to tell your fortune, tell your own fortune by putting your trust in God and doing the best you can. I will tell your fortune: "All things work together for good to them that love God." Insult not your departed friends by asking them to come down and scrabble under an extension-table. Remember that there is only one Spirit whose dictation you have a right to invoke, and that is the holy, blessed, and omnipotent Spirit of God. Hark! He is rapping now, not on a table, or the floor, but rapping on the door of your heart, and every rap is an invitation to Christ and a warning of judgment to come. Oh, grieve Him not away! Quench Him not. He has been all around you this morning. He was all around you last night. He has been around you all your lives. Hark! There comes a voice with tender overmastering intonation, saying: "My Spirit shall not always strive."

THE THREE PROPHETIC PERIODS.

By G. H. Pember.*

The Entire Course from the Beginning of the Seventy Weeks to the Second Advent—The Angel's Separation—The first Period of 483 Years—The Second Indefinite—The Third of Seven Years——The Four Key Verses—The Work of the First Period—The Destruction to Follow—The Missing Week—Its First and Second Half—The final Consummation.

THERE is a fact, the knowledge of which is indispensable to those who would comprehend Divine revelations of the future. Prophetic time, from the commencement of the Seventy Weeks to the Second Advent, is divided into three grand periods, which are plainly marked out in the book of Daniel, and as plainly recognized in the Apocalypse.

In glancing through the book of Daniel we observe that the prophet could not understand his earlier visions in the seventh and eighth chapters; that in the ninth chapter an angel is sent, in answer to his earnest prayer, to give him "skill and understanding"; and that, after receiving this communication, he readily comprehended the final vision, which is narrated in the tenth and following chapters. It is clear, then, that the four verses (Daniel, 9: 24-27) which contain the angel's words are the key to the whole book.

Now the purport of these verses is, that God had divided what was then future time into three periods.

I. The first, a definite time of four hundred and eighty-three years, beginning with the issue of a mandate for the rebuilding of the city and walls of Jerusalem, and ending with the presentation of Messiah as her King to the daughter of Zion, four days before His death.

II. The second, an indefinite period, beginning immediately upon the close of the first, and ending with the resurrection of the dead in Christ and their translation, together with all waiting believers who are then upon earth, to meet the Lord in the air. This is the present age, the time of the Church, during which all Jewish Prophecies are Suspended.

III. The third, a brief period of but seven years, beginning on the day when Antichrist shall make a seven years' covenant with the majority of the Jewish nation, and ending with the glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus to set up His Kingdom. This is a time of judgment, God's strange and short work, during which He will resume His dealings with the Jews by casting them into the refining furnace, carry on His controversy with the Gentiles, and permit the fulfilment of the prophecies concerning Antichrist and the Great Tribulation.

Now with these three distinctly marked times before us, let us remind ourselves of two facts.

First: the Scriptures cannot be broken or disagree. We may, therefore, justly expect to find in the Apocalypse a recognition of the periods disclosed to Daniel.

And, secondly, John wrote many years after Christ's entry into Jerusalem. Therefore, the first of Daniel's periods had then passed away, and the apostle was living in the second or Church period.

Turning now to the Apocalypse, we shall find that its contents are given to us by the Lord Himself in the nineteenth verse of the first chapter, where He says: "Write, therefore, the things which thou sawest, and the things which are, and the things which shall be after these things."

We have, then, the following harmony with the scheme of the Seventy Weeks:

I. Daniel's first period had passed by.

II. What John had already seen is written in the first chapter, which describes his vision of the sanctuary arranged for the present dispensation. Then, occupying the second and third chapters, come "the things that are," or prophecies of the age in which John was living, which is still going on, and which answers to Daniel's second and indefinite period.

III. Lastly, stretching from the fourth to the nineteenth chapter, come "the things that shall be after these things," that is, in Daniel's third period, the seven years of judgment.

A careful application of this Divinely revealed scheme will dispel confusion, and enable us to range the predictions of the two great prophets, as well as those of all others, in their proper order.

We must now examine these verses [Daniel 9: 24-27] minutely. Seventy Weeks. Literally, Seventy Sevens.

The word "week" is retained, because we have no exact equivalent for the Hebrew original,* which signifies a period of seven, but does not decide whether the seven are hours, days, months, years, or any other measure of time. That point must always be determined by the context; and in the present passage periods of seven years each are doubtless intended, because Daniel's mind is dwelling on the Seventy Years of Jeremiah.† The meaning of the angel seems to be: The Seventy Years of probation will not suffice; nay, after them must come seven times seventy other years. We should remember that the Sabbatical years and the Jubilee made the idea of a week of years very familiar to Israelites.

Have been severed off. That is, from the times of the Gentiles, from the age during which their four World-empires should hold sway. Upon thy people and upon thy holy city. This prophecy, then, is concerned with Israelites, and not with Christians. Seven times seventy, or four hundred and ninety years, are to be taken out of the times of the Gentiles for the special dealings of God with the Jews and Jerusalem; that is, of course, with the Jews at Jerusalem: for the people must during the time be dwelling in their own country.

To shut up the transgression. That is, to arrest and restrain it so that it can no longer work and spread. The article probably indicates the whole course of Israel's transgression or breaking away from God.

To seal up sins. The figure of sealing is connected with that of shutting up in prison or restraining. So Darius seals the stone which is put at the mouth of the lions' den, with his own signet and that of his lords.

The Sealing Up

of sins consequently signifies their restraint under safe custody. There is a good illustration of both figures, and probably a clue to the interpretation of the passage in the twentieth chapter of the Revelation, where an angel, after binding Satan and casting him into the abyss, shuts him up and sets a seal upon him, that he may deceive the nations no more.

To cover iniquity. That is, according to the well-known Scriptural figure, to make atonement for it. To bring in everlasting righteousness. When the transgression is shut up and the sins are sealed, then everlasting righteousness shall be brought in. This will be done by the introduction of the New Covenant, in accordance with which God will no longer write upon tables of stone, but put His law in the inward parts of His people and write it in their hearts.

To seal up vision and prophet. When sins are sealed up, vision and prophet shall also be laid aside as being no longer needed. For it was only after sin had come into the world that prophecy was introduced as a great instrument of God in the war against it; and so when sin is put away prophecies also shall fail. To anoint a Holy of Holies. Lastly, in the place of the Tabernacle and former temples in which the covering or atonement was wont to be typified, a new Holy of Holies shall be anointed.

The prophecy then speaks of vengeance which should follow for the cutting off of Messiah: the city and the Sanctuary, Jerusalem and the Temple, should be destroyed. This was fulfilled by the Romans under Titus, about forty years after the death of Christ: but still there is no mention of the missing Seven Years.

Lastly; we are told that, after the destruction of the city and Sanctuary, there should be wars and desolations until the end, during a period fixed by God. Terribly has this been verified; and so frequent have been the captures of Jerusalem by Roman, Persian, Saracen, and Turk, that the city of our Lord's time has become deeply buried beneath successive and débris, and is now found from fifty to eighty feet below the level of the soil. All these destructions are included in the words, "And until the end there shall be war, that which is determined for desolations;" and yet there is no mention of the final Seven Years.

Layers of Ruin

Thus, from the appearing of Messiah, the Prince, there occurs an undefined interval, a great interruption in the progress of the Seventy Weeks, which is not unnoticed in other parts of Scripture.

But, to retrace our steps for a moment, the city and Sanctuary were to be destroyed by the people of a prince that should afterwards come; and since it is added that this prince will meet his doom in the last great outpouring of God's wrath, it is manifest that he cannot have appeared in past time. Now the Romans destroyed the city and Sanctuary: so far, therefore, we gather that the prince will be a head of the Fourth Empire; but the time of his end shows us further that he will be the last head—that is, the Antichrist.

In the final verse of the prophecy we are told that he will confirm a covenant with the majority of the Jewish people for One Week. And so at length we find the Seventieth Week. Now the Jews must by this time have settled again in their own land, because the prophecy is expressly connected with the people and the city. Possibly the prince may himself have restored them: but, at any rate, he will find them in some trouble, or terrified by some impending danger, and will undertake their protection in Palestine for seven years. The compact may, perhaps, be similar to that by which Napoleon III. promised to maintain Maximilian as emperor of Mexico for a fixed time. But whatever the covenant may be, it will only be accepted by a majority of the people, and not by the whole nation: God will again leave Himself a remnant which shall not bow the knee to Baal.

The Missing Seven Years,

Thus restored and settled in their own land, the Jews will rebuild their Temple and renew the sacrifices and services; but, probably, in a proud and atheistical spirit, and certainly in a way very displeasing to God. The last chapter of Isaiah represents them as engaged in these works not long before the appearing in glory of the Lord Jesus, a description of which begins with the fifteenth verse.

But the Jews will go their own ways during

The First Half of the Seven Years, and then there will be a change. In the middle of the Week—that is, at the end of Three Years and a Half—Antichrist will cause the sacrifices to cease, and transfer the worship of Jehovah to himself, exalting "himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the Temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

In such a mockery of Godhead the prince will

---

* From the third edition of his excellent work, "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God"—a book remarkable for the learning and wide research it displays, yet so simple in style and diction that any reader can understands it, and under its guidance perceive the meaning of the prophecies of the Bible. 458 pages. Price by mail, $1.50. For sail at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

* Some commentators use "heptad," or "hebdomad"; either of which words would do, if it could be considered English.

† If Christians be suspected of bias in interpreting "the sevens" as weeks of years, because the end of the sixty-ninth seven is thus made to synchronize with the time of Christ's death, it is impossible to bring such a charge against Jews. And yet, until the Middle Ages were far advanced, the Jews invariably adopted the same explanation, although by so doing they convicted themselves of rejecting the Messiah, and placed a formidable weapon in the hands of their Christian opponents.

continue, until the hour allotted to the powers of darkness has come to its full end. Then that which has been decreed will have been poured upon the desolate city of Jerusalem, and the time of the consummation will have arrived. Down from heaven will the flood of God's indignation be poured: the blasphemous pretender will be confounded by a brightness—far above that of the sun—which, lighting up the whole globe with the speed of the storm flash, will proclaim the advent of the King of kings.

A FISHERMAN'S MONDAY CATCH.

IN a letter to the Missionary Herald from Tillipally, in Ceylon, Mr. S. W. Howland, thus refers to the public interest in a native Christian fisherman who abstains from his occupation on the Lord's Day: "Next Sabbath is to be communion at Chavagacherry, and two are to be received, one the wife of a Christian, the other a cousin of a Christian in a fisher village. His cousin is part owner of a fishing-net, or seine, costing about twenty-five dollars, and this man, with others, uses it. They pray every morning before setting out, and they think that their catch is on the whole greater than that of the nets used seven days in a week. On several occasions their heathen neighbors, seeing their large catch on a Monday, have declared their intentions of keeping the Sabbath, and several of them seem really interested.

"We were recently invited to hold a meeting in a school held just in front of a large temple. I am told that a meeting has never been held there before. We never had better attention, and they asked us to come again. A short time before, we were invited to a meeting in the rest-house attached to a temple. We preferred to hold it in the open air under a large tree. The temple musician played a pipe quite skilfully, and quickly joined in the tunes of our lyrics, most of which are adapted from temple music. The hand-drum and the cymbals also added their noise to the music of the baby-organ, and we sang tune after tune in a style quite pleasing to the large crowd that gathered, who listened attentively to the earnest address that followed. We would not have such instruments in a Christian place of worship, but they did not seem out of place there."

CONGO BOYS IN A LONDON FOG.

Two boys from the Congo were recently brought to London by a missionary, and one morning to their amazement they could see neither sun nor sky; nothing was visible from the window of their room but brown murky fog. It was what is known as "a London particular." The missionary says: "It was really a terrible fog. Day by day, and night after night, without break or lifting, or any intermission, it hung like a yellow pall, solid and stifling, over the great metropolis. Each morning we awoke with a gleam of hope that the longed-for change had come; each morning we found, on straining our eyes through the darkness, that our view was still yesterday's view, and the view of the day before—a dense, grimy, yellow wall of fog, massed up against the window, beyond which no object could be seen, and through which daylight had scarcely strength to penetrate.

"To our Congo boys, who had just arrived in England, this was a new and very strange experience. Sitting by the fire hour after hour, and glancing up every now and then at the grimy prospect without, M'Teva and Bompole were quite at a loss to comprehend, or in any wise account for, the unwonted aspect of things, which bore to them the appearance of a new phenomenon. At last M'Teva said, in a very grave voice, 'What time this chimney will finish?' 'What chimney?' I asked, looking up surprised from my desk to see if the chimney was on fire. 'What time this chimney will finish?' he repeated, pointing out of the window with a decisive brown finger that left no doubt as to the meaning of his words. To which I answered smiling, that of course we could not tell, but that we hoped it would finish soon! Next morning, there being no alteration in the aspect of affairs, the boys came to us once more with: 'When will sun shine again?'"

Ah, M'Teva, with your simple Central African ideas, it is not in the outer world alone that such "chimneys" are apt to hide the sun! How often are heart and soul befogged with the heavy clouded atmosphere of earth's great metropolis, How often every-day work and weariness, trifling and pleasure and sin, physical weakness! love of ease, and temptation yielded to, combine to shut out from the soul the light of the Sun of Righteousness! And we look up, but cannot see Him shine. We catch no ray of His splendor and reflect none to the world.

EMIN PASHA AND THE MISSIONARIES.

THE brave lieutenant of Gen. Gordon whose situation in the heart of Africa has so long been the cause of anxiety in civilized lands, and for whose relief or rescue Mr. H. M. Stanley started out with a large expedition early last year, has written a cheerful letter to his friends in England. He says: "I cannot speak too highly of the untiring exertions and valuable assistance afforded me by Mr. Mackay, the missionary in Uganda. At great personal inconvenience, he has not only provided for the despatch of our posts from and to Zanzibar, and done his utmost to facilitate our transactions in Uganda, but he has actually deprived himself of many valuable things to assist myself and give me comfort. He has done splendid work in Uganda; but lately his labors have been somewhat interfered with by the Arabs trying to have him turned out of Uganda. In the interest of the Uganda Mission, I am very glad that Mr. Stanley chose the Congo road for his expedition. He will there encounter numberless difficulties, arising mostly out of the soil to go across, yet he will without doubt succeed in vanquishing them; while, coming by Uganda, he would never have obtained permission to come here, except by sheer force, besides imperilling the life and work of the missionaries.

"As to myself, if ever I wanted an encouragement to pursue my work, the acknowledgment of what, by God's permission, I was allowed to do until now will spur me to go on and to do my duty cheerfully. I am sorry to disappoint your kind wish that your letter may find me safely arrived at Zanzibar; and I may as well tell you that I have been greatly amused by the doubts expressed in some papers if I would stay or leave when Mr. Stanley arrives. I think there can be no doubt that I shall stay, and I wonder how anyone could suppose the contrary. I need not dwell on the reasons for my decision. Would you desert your own work just at the dawn of better times? Since my last letter to you I have been able to resume the regular turn of affairs, relaxed somewhat by the events you know. I have inspected our stations and erected two new ones. I have put order everywhere, and our native chiefs have been consulted."

A DISGUSTED IMMIGRANT.

THE number of immigrants arriving in this country this year is greater than it has been for several years past, and is just now averaging a thousand a day. The majority of them—especially those that come from England and Norway and Sweden—are strong and healthy people, with a little capital, and are, therefore, the kind of immigrants likely to prosper, and help in the development of the country. The clerks at Castle Garden say that a large proportion start immediately for the West. As a rule, the best do so; the loafers and undesirables prefer to remain in New York. They say that the immigrants are generally in excellent spirits, pleased with the attention they receive, and full of hope for the future. One remarkable exception, however, is mentioned. It is that of an Englishman, with gray hair and whiskers, about fifty years old, who came by the Inman steamship City of Montreal. His face wore a gloomy expression when he first caught sight of America. When quarantine was reached, he sniffed the air with a look of disgust, and when the Montreal reached her dock, the old man announced that he thought America was a disgusting country. "What's wrong about it?" he was asked. "Oh, the air don't agree with me. It's not what I looked for. I'm going straight back to the old country." The old man was duly inspected by representatives of the Commissioners of Emigration, and was obliged to go to Castle Garden. But he stubbornly refused to penetrate the country any further. He went to the clerk and stated that he was anxious to return home by the City of Montreal, and gave him money for a return passage ticket. The old man decided to live in the Garden during his stay in America, and during the time he waited for the steamer to return, he would not venture outside the Castle walls. It is strange that, having taken so long a voyage, the man should have returned without further investigation. Some men, however, habitually act on first impulses. It is so with some who are brought to revival meetings and evangelical services. The air of heaven does not agree with them if they are still in love with sin. But to those who are ready to sever their connection with the world, and are prepared by the Holy Spirit for the heavenly life, the idea of return is never entertained. (Heb. 11 : 15, 16.)

JEWISH INQUIRERS IN PALESTINE.

A MISSIONARY laboring in the Holy Land, chiefly among Jewish residents and visitors, states that recently he met a Jew from Hamadan, whom he noticed listening intently while he spoke of man's sinfulness, and man's great need of atonement. Tracing the sacrificial system under the old covenant, and showing that the appointed way of approaching God has always been by a sacrifice, since without the shedding of blood there could be no remission, he showed that since the destruction of the second Temple up to the present time Judaism lacked this principal thing, while Christianity had in Jesus of Nazareth a Temple, a Priest, and a Victim. Seeing him attentively listening, the Jew was asked whether he had ever read the book called the "Old Paths." "No, but I should like to do so;" and so he was given a Hebrew copy. After a few days he returned to the Dispensary with a friend, also a Jew of Hamadan, expressing his gratitude for the very interesting book, which he had read. He asked to take it to Hamadan. His friend having also read it with much interest, eagerly begged for a copy. He returned another day to receive it, and at the same time took tracts and portions of Scriptures, which were thankfully received, with the promise they should be read.

A Christian lady who has devoted her life to this work, is receiving much encouragement. She visits the Christian Hospital on Sunday and Thursday in each week, the Enquirers' Home Tuesdays and Fridays, and reads in the workroom each day but Wednesday, and holds a Mothers' Meeting. Friday is set apart for visiting converts, and Saturdays exclusively to going among the Jews in their houses. Being the Jewish Sabbath, both men and women are found at home, and a greater welcome given than on other days. Her Jewish acquaintance has now become so large that it is impossible to keep pace with the visiting. The Mothers' Meeting now numbers forty-five Jewesses, and has been divided, one half being taken in each alternate week, from the difficulty in finding work for them. The meetings last two hours, the second hour being devoted to reading the Old and New Testament, explanation and prayer. All the women display eager interest.

Rev. G. H. Pember's New Prophetic Work, entitled "Earth's Earliest Ages and Their Connection With Modern Spiritualism and Theosophy," is for sale at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Office. Price $1.50. This volume of 500 pages draws a parallel between our time and the age before the Deluge, showing how closely in spirit and moral tone they resemble each other, and how many of the distinguishing features of the earlier age have reappeared among us in modern dress. Thus proving that it fulfils the conditions which were to indicate the time of Christ's Secood Advent (Matt. 24 : 37-39).

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Experimental Trial of the Fisheries treaty is suggested. At a caucus of Democratic Senators, to consider the subject of the treaty, the impossibility of its ratification at the present time was admitted, the Republican majority in the Senate being opposed to it. It was therefore decided to ask the Republicans to let the treaty lie over until next winter. The request will be made on the ground that the American fishermen directly interested in the subject can give the provisions of the treaty a practical trial during the coming fishing season, under the terms arranged for the prevention of disputes pending the ratification of the treaty. It was pointed out in the caucus that by the provisions of this protocol, American fishermen can obtain substantially all the benefits of the treaty for the coming two years by the payment of a small license fee, and it was argued that such a test would be the best possible method for the fishermen to follow in deciding whether or not the treaty would be helpful or harmful to their interests.

International Copyright Occupied the Attention of both Senators and Representatives last week. In the Senate, the measure for securing it having been favorably reported, there was a vigorous debate on its merits. Senator Morrill, of Vermont, offered an amendment to insert a provision that publishers of American newspapers or other periodicals should be allowed to copy articles from any foreign paper or periodical, and for that purpose to import such publications. Mr. Vance, of North Carolina, promptly proposed to put in a clause withholding the right to copyright from foreign newspapers, magazines, and periodicals. No action was taken on these amendments. Two days previous to the Senate proceedings on the copyright bill, an identical measure was reported favorably in the House by the Judiciary committee, which, in its report, said that the passage of the bill will be "just to our authors, publishers, and artists—beneficial to our literature, and honorable to our civilization."

The Christian Principles of Civil Government were the subject of an interesting discussion at a conference of the National Reform Association held in Washington last week. Resolutions were adopted, declaring the strength and glory of the American system of education lay in the freedom with which it is thrown open to all children, and that to remove the Bible from the schools would be subversive of the ends for which they have been established and maintained.

The Outrage on the Frontier between Texas and Mexico mentioned in these columns on March 15, has been investigated by the Mexican Government and two of its officers concerned in it have been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. One of these officers, under orders from his superior, had crossed the Rio Grande with three men in pursuit of a deserter. The Mexicans became involved in a dispute with American officials, and in the conflict that ensued one of the Mexicans was killed and an American deputy sheriff severely wounded. The Mexican court-martial acquitted the private soldiers, as they were only obeying orders, but made the officers suffer for having failed to preserve the inviolability of the frontier. In a similar case some time previous to this occurrence, the Mexican offenders were sentenced to death.

The Indians are to be Benefited by a Measure proposed to Congress by the Indian Rights Association, and their rights under the laws of the several States and Territories are to be secured by it. The bill defines the legal standing of the reservation and other Indians, and creates special courts for the trial of cases in which Indians are concerned. An officer, to be known as the Next Friend, is to be appointed by the court of each district; he is charged with the duty of instituting suits on behalf of the Indians, or to defend them in prosecutions begun against them. The broad principle is laid down in the proposed new law that the Indians are entitled to the full protection secured by the Constitution to persons other than citizens. The bill also provides for the appointment of a committee to recommend to Congress a general plan for a common-school system on the Indian reservations. It is thought that the passage of this bill will bring the Indian problem much nearer a satisfactory solution.

The Two Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary of the founding of an American city is an event of rare occurrence. Such an anniversary was, however, celebrated in New Haven, Conn., on April 25. On that day it was 250 years since John Davenport and a small band of faithful followers landed at what is now the corner of College and George streets, and there, under a wide-spreading elm-tree, they founded New Haven, known throughout the country as the "City of Elms." In honor of the anniversary, New Haven was bright with decorations, and had a great parade in the morning, and commemorative services at Centre Church in the afternoon. The committee in charge of the celebration placed a tablet on the building which now stands on the spot where John Davenport and his followers landed, bearing the following inscription: "The founders of this town landing near this spot, assembled for the worship of God on the first Sunday, April 25, 1638."

Horrible Atrocities Have Been Committed in Brazil, according to a report published in the London Times. A Rio de Janeiro correspondent of that usually reliable journal, under date of March 21, writes that a wealthy Brazilian poisoned 3,000 Indians in one of the western provinces of Brazil, and 800 in another, because they occupied land which could be much better employed by the whites. It is said that the massacre was accomplished by poisoning all the wells with strychnine and chlorate of mercury. The story rests on the authority of an important Rio journal.

A Papal Condemnation of Irish Methods has been promulgated. The Roman correspondent of the London Chronicle states that the Pope has signed a document in reference to the Nationalists' plan of campaign and boycotting in Ireland, both of which the head of the Roman Church condemns as illegal. He says he is convinced that the land courts will reduce all unfair rents, and condemns boycotting as a practice contrary to justice and charity. The Irish members of Parliament are somewhat agitated over the Pope's decree, and are eagerly conferring as to what steps are necessary, in view of its appearance. The Dublin Freeman's Journal urges the people to exercise calmness and patience, and to receive the Papal decree with profound respect and loyalty to Rome. It declares that boycotting is rare.

A Sensation in the British House of Commons was produced on April 25, during a debate on Irish affairs, by an attack of Lord Randolph Churchill on the Government. He charged his former colleagues with being unfaithful to pledges distinctly made to the Irish, and was the more indignant because, as he alleged, he had been made the mouthpiece of the Cabinet in giving those pledges when in office. He said that the Government in 1886 pledged themselves to extend to Ireland the same amount of local liberty as was enjoyed by other parts of the British Isles. If the Government relied merely upon their executive powers and if they were going to preach that the Irish must be looked upon as inferior, they might for a time hold that position, but only for a very short time. There was not sufficient interpretation of the Government policy. If Ireland had to wait in the hands of the executive, the Conservatives must take care that they did not expose themselves to a well-directed indictment of reaction. When the division was taken, Lord Randolph Churchill and several Conservatives and Unionists left the House in order to avoid voting. The bill, however, was lost by a vote of 282 to 195. It proposed to extend to Ireland the same system of local government which the Government proposes to give to England. Mr. Balfour, the Irish Secretary, said he would gladly vote for such a bill when the present social conflict ceased, but the time had not come.

Queen Victoria has Left the Villa Palmieri near the Italian city of Florence, a picture of which appeared in our previous issue, and returned to England, after remaining three days at Berlin. On her way to the German capital she was met at the Tyrolese city of Innsbruck by Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria. The meeting between the two sovereigns was very cordial. At Munich she was greeted at the railway station by Prince Regent Luitpold, Queen Marie, and other members of the royal family of Bavaria. The reception at Berlin was cordial, without being specially enthusiastic, the population of the capital city of Prussia being known to harbor a feeling akin to antipathy to the august mother of their present Empress. Queen Victoria spent some time in prayer at the tomb of Emperor William, and placed a wreath on his coffin. The meeting with Emperor Frederick, her sorely afflicted son-in-law, is described as having been very affectionate. A pleasant feature of her visit was her friendly conversation with Prince Bismarck, who shook hands heartily with her. The Queen, accompanied by her daughter, the Empress, reviewed the flower of the German army, the White Life Guard Cuirassiers, on an immense plateau about a mile from the imperial palace. The Queen has been made chief of this renowned regiment, which is considered one of the highest honors in the gift of the German Emperor.

The Welcome Intelligence of an Improvement in the condition of Emperor Frederick of Germany was received last week. His marvellous constitution has again rallied from what appeared to be a fatal crisis in his disease. His temperature is again almost normal, and his sense of taste, which he lost during the critical period, has returned. This is regarded as an exceptionally favorable sign, and the physicians are of the opinion that the dangerous crisis has passed. He has again begun to hear State reports. One of his recent official acts was the appointment of Count Herbert Bismarck, the oldest son of the Chancellor, to the position of a Prussian Minister of State, and to place him at the head of the Prussian—not German—Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

General Boulanger Received a Marvellous ovation on April 19, in going through the streets of Paris to take his seat in the Legislature, to which the Department of the North has elected him by a majority of nearly 100,000 votes. The press correspondents cable that no such demonstration has been witnessed in the French capital since the fall of the empire. The mob in their enthusiasm made an effort to unharness the horses and drag the carriage in which Boulanger was seated; he dissuaded, however, his admirers from doing this. In the Chamber of Deputies Boulanger took his seat at the extreme left. The excitement in France over the spread of the Boulanger movement is intense.

Sunday-school Superintendents and Teachers desirous of distributing copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in their schools and classes, may have assorted parcels of back numbers by applying, stating number required, to the manager, 63 Bible House.

Pastor C. H. Spurgeon's Return to the Baptist Union was announced in a brief telegram to the New York Tribune from its London correspondent. Mr. Smalley says that on April 23, the Union met in Dr. Parker's Tabernacle and passed a report which satisfied Mr. Spurgeon, as certain clauses were omitted from it. Mr. Spurgeon's brother, who was understood to act for him, seconded the adoption of the report and intimated that his brother would resume his membership. The announcement is vague, but is probably substantially correct, and the mail will doubtless bring more complete details.

A Secession From the Church of Rome, as important in its bearing and its influence as was years ago the bold stand taken by Père Hyacinthe, the renowned French ecclesiastic, has just occurred. This time, too, the seceder is a French priest—the Right Rev. Leon Bouland. He has renounced his allegiance to the Roman hierarchy, and applied for admission to the Protestant Episcopal Church. Mgr. Bouland, who is now forty years of age, studied for the priesthood under the personal direction of Cardinal Lanigérie, Archbishop of Algiers and Primate of Africa. In 1881 he received the honorary appointment of Canon of St. Michael the Archangel, Rome, and in 1882 that of President-General of the Society of the Avocats de St. Pierre, in North America. In the same year he was made a member of the "Académie des Arcade," in Rome; Canon of the Metropolitan Church of Rheims; Commander of the Order of the Holy Sepulchere; and Private Chamberlain to Pope Leo XIII. In June, 1886, Mgr. Bouland was also appointed by the Pope, General Director of the organization in North America of the Society of Peter's Pence. It is stated that he will be received into the Protestant Episcopal Church by Bishop Potter, in New York, in a few days.

A Temporary Advance in the Line of Court Precedence, which was contemplated by the Queen of England, is said to have caused some perturbation in royal circles. An English journal states that her Majesty was extremely desirous of having her favorite son-in-law, Prince Henry, of Battenberg, attend the funeral of the late Emperor of Germany. He has, however, no rank in Germany at all equivalent to that he has in his adopted country. He would, therefore, have been placed in a very humble position in the procession, and have been required to give place to the crowd of royalties, serenities, highnesses, and other dignitaries who would have been entitled in Berlin to a better place than he. The Queen, however, decided to save him this humiliation by making him her special representative at the obsequies, which would thus have invested him with a dignity that would have secured him one of the first places. She was eventually induced to abandon her project by the information that such an act would be very distasteful to the German court and nation, but had she persisted, the temporary and reflected dignity of the Prince would have been recognized. It is thus that the humble follower of Christ will be glorified in the universe, not for himself but for Christ's sake. (John 17: 21, 22.)

A Desperate Fight in a Burning Building took place in St. Louis on April 19. There were about seventy lodgers sleeping on the fourth and fifth floors of a "home" in that city, when the night watchman discovered a fire under the stairway of the second floor. He at once sent a call over the wires for engines, and then ran through the building awaking the sleepers. They found, however, that their escape by the stairs was cut off, and they rushed to the windows. Soon the cry was raised that a rope had been found, and there was a general rush to the window from which it hung. One after another descended safely, but time pressed, for the crowd in the street below could see the figures of the men around the window grow more distinct every minute as the fire reached the room where they were, and formed an awful background to the group. To add to the horror of the spectacle, the men were seen to be fighting for their turn with the rope, and the struggle grew fiercer as the flames rose. The last man to come down on the rope had his clothes on fire. He was the watchman who first discovered the fire, and he bore in his arms a cripple, who was unable to descend alone. Several men were burned in the building, having fallen in the struggle to get to the rope. There being but one way of escape, it was not surprising that every man tried to avail himself of it with that horrible death by burning as the alternative. There was no apathy or procrastination there, as there is with sinners who are in far worse danger, and who know that for them also there is but one way of escape, (Hos. 13: 4.)

An Electrical Homicide Occurred in New York on April 26. A young man who was employed in a clothing store in the Bowery, having closed the store for the night, stood talking to a friend under the electric light suspended in front of the door. As he started home he casually reached up, according to a habit he is said to have had of touching the lamp when he passed near it. His hand must have rested upon the lightly insulated wire connected with the upper carbon, or the carbon itself, which projects slightly above the top rim of the globe. He will never tell exactly what he did touch, as he was killed instantly. He fell with a gasp into the arms of a passer-by, and with a shudder which convulsed his body from head to foot breathed his last. It appears that he generally jumped when he touched the lamp, but on Thursday it is supposed that he must have reached it by placing his foot on the iron casing in front of the store, thus completing the electric circuit with the earth and making a conductor of his body. Whether he had ever been warned of the danger of his habit, is not stated, but it is possible that if he had been he would not have heeded it, as he had touched the lamp so many times with impunity. That is how men act in regard to sin, seeing that "sentence upon an evil work is not" always "executed speedily." (Eccles. 8: 11.)

A Lady's Struggle with a Mad Dog is Described in a press despatch from Nashville, Tenn. It states that on April 23, the children in a school at Cyprus Creek were busy at their lessons when a shaggy dog, his eyes flaming, and foaming at the mouth, snapping and biting, dashed in at the door and made toward the pupils. Miss Mollie Green, a young lady of eighteen years, who teaches the school, thought only of the children in her care, and sprang between them and the intruder. She kicked at it, her skirts protecting her, and by the aid of a heavy ruler, kept the dog at bay until all the children had fled. The infuriated animal repeatedly sprang at her throat, but she was agile and warded him off. When all the little ones were gone, she desperately fought off the dog until she reached the door, which she pulled to after her, and fell fainting outside. The children in the mean time ran to the nearest house, an eighth of a mile distant, and gave the alarm. Two men soon came and killed the dog. Miss Green's clothes were torn to ribbons during the encounter. What pain and misery might have been caused in the homes of the village had the young teacher been less self-forgetful and brave, it is dreadful to imagine. Her heroism elicits the most enthusiastic admiration even from those who listen unmoved, when they are told of One, who, to save them from becoming the prey of the great enemy of man, interposed on their behalf, and died to save them. (Heb. 2: 10-15).

Four Days Trying to Get Married Have wearied a young couple in West Virginia. They started out on April 23, from their respective homes in Williamstown to find a clergyman to unite them in wedlock. They made several applications, but not being able to offer evidence of their parents' consent, they were refused in each case. The next day they crossed the Ohio, and took the cars for Wheeling, where they applied in regular course for a marriage license. The civil official looked them over, and guessing their ages, declined to issue a license. Nothing daunted, they sought the necessary aids to matrimony in Pennsylvania, but were twice refused—once by the clerk of the court, and once by the justice, who, having given them some fatherly advice about premature matrimonial ventures, bid them return to their parental roof. One more effort was made in Ohio, but it was also futile. Weary and disconsolate the boy took his companion to the home of a relative. He then telegraphed his father for permission to marry, but did not receive it. On the other hand, a brother of the lady started after them, intending to fetch his sister home. He succeeded in inducing them both to return. Their disappointment is just now doubtless hard to bear, but they may derive consolation from the fact that the experience of others has proved that very early unions scarcely ever produce anything but trouble and regret. It is the reverse of this, however, in the case of union with with Christ, of which marriage is a type. That cannot be premature, and those have most happiness who enter into that union early in life. (Prov. 3: 1-4.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. H. Varley has arrived at Melbourne, where he will remain some weeks with his sons.

Mr. Richard Weaver, the famous English evangelist, has been sick, but is now restored, and engaged in work.

The Rev. T. Spurgeon, son of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and President elect of the New Zealand Baptist Union, has just been married to Miss Rutherford, of Auckland.

The Episcopalians of Los Angeles, Cal., have opened a church-room in that city, where visitors may find religious papers, directories, and a list of desirable boarding and lodging houses.

The receipts of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions up to March 23, amounted to $589,970, leaving a large sum to be raised before the close of the financial year.

Stephen Green, a rich Philadelphia printer, has cancelled the debt against the Methodist Episcopal Church of Wenonah, N. J., and also presented it with a new parsonage, valued at $9,000.

During last year Dr. Dowkontt was enabled to carry on seven missionary dispensaries in New York City, in which forty-seven students were trained for medical missionaries in heathen lands. A house for lady students has now been opened.

It is proposed to raise $100,000 for an American church building in Berlin. A number of $1,000 subscriptions have already been secured, and pews are to be offered to American colleges and other institutions at $1,000 each for the free use of their graduates.

The Secretary of Foreign Missions Committee of the Southern Church stated, in an address before Maryland Presbytery, April 19, that nine missionaries have been sent out during the past ecclesiastical year; that foreign mission work is free from the burden of debt; and that there is a balance of $7,000 in the treasury.

Rev. E. E. Davidson, the evangelist, closed his labors in Rockville, Ill., on April 19. More than twelve hundred people were present at the concluding service. A list of over four hundred names of seekers after Christ is now in the hands of the pastors of the four churches specially interested.

A General Christian Conference, similar to the Congress of Churches held in Washington last year, is to be held in Montreal in October next. The list of subjects to be considered includes the following: "Current Unbelief," "Capital and Labor," "National Perils," "Co-operation in Christian Work," etc.

The negotiations for the union of Congregationalists, Congregational Methodists, and Free Methodist Protestant churches in Georgia have been successfully concluded. The result is called the United Congregational Conference of Georgia. The Conference embraces about fifty churches, with a membership of 3,500.

A pilgrimage to Rome by 135 Mexican Roman Catholics has been commenced. The pilgrims sailed from New York on the Bolivia, taking with them presents for the Pope valued at more than $200,000. One article, a cross of gold set with diamonds and opals, is valued at $60,000.

Rev. George C. Needham, the evangelist, has been holding a series of meetings in the Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, Mass., of which the Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., is pastor. The meetings are held under the joint auspices of the Committee of the church and the Evangelistic Association. Mr. Needham has also given Bible readings every noon, for ministers and Sunday-school teachers, in the Park Street Congregational Church, which were well attended.

DAVID'S SPOIL.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"This is David's spoil." 1 Sam. 30: 20.

David's Disaster Retrieved—The Additional Spoil—His Portion—A Type of Christ—I. Jesus a Channel of All Good—Recovers the Spoils from Satan—Victory for His Sake—Through His Leadership—II. The Recovery Greater than the Loss—The Surplusage—Sonship and Heirship Redemption—Resurrection—Refined Materialism—III. The Spoil of Consecrated Offerings—The Heart—The Special Talent—Property—A Millionaire's Contribution.

WE have aforetime gathered spoil for ourselves out of David's behavior in the hour of his sorrow at Ziklag, and we will now turn to the other side of this leaf in his history, and receive instruction from the time of his victory. But we must not do this till we have refreshed our memories with the story of his conduct under distress. When he came to the city he found it burned with fire, the property of himself and his comrades carried away, and, what was worse, all their wives, and their sons, and their daughters gone into captivity. In the madness of their grief the people turned upon their leader, as if he had led them into this calamity. He was the only calm person among them, for he "encouraged himself in the Lord his God." With due deliberation he waited upon the Lord, and consulted the oracle through the appointed priest, and then, under divine guidance, he pursued the banditti, took them at unawares, recovered all his people's goods, and captured which the Amalekites had collected elsewhere. David's men, in the moment of their despair, had spoken of stoning him; but now, in the morning of their victory, with general acclamations they determine that David shall have, as his portion of the spoil, all the cattle which belong to the Amalekites themselves; and so, driving these in front, as they return to Ziklag, they say, "This is David's spoil." I think I hear them, as they drive the bullocks and the sheep before them, shouting right lustily, "This is David's spoil!"

A Large Booty

Now, using David as the type of Christ, I want, if I can, to set all David's men—all Christ's men—shouting with all their hearts, "This is Jesus' spoil!" He it is of whom Jehovah saith, "I will divide Him a portion with the great, and He shall divide the spoil with the strong." He has a grand reward as the result of the great battle of His life and death. We will even now award to him the spoil, and cry, "This is David's spoil"; feeling, all the while, as the Psalmist did, when he said, "Thou art more glorious and excellent than mountains of prey."

I. We begin with the first observation that, practically, all the spoil of that day was David's spoil, and in truth, all the good that we enjoy comes to us through our Lord Jesus. He has been given as a Leader and a Commander to the people, and every victory they win is and to Him alone. Without Him we can do nothing, and without Him we can obtain nothing. All that we once possessed by nature, and under the law, the spoiler has taken away. By our own efforts we can never regain what we have lost; only through our great Leader can we be restored and made happy. We ascribe unto Jesus all our gains, even as David's men honored their captain.

Due to Him,

For, first, David's men defeated the Amalekites, and took their spoil, but it was for David's sake that God gave success to the band. God's eye rested upon his chosen servant, the Lord's anointed, and it was not for the warriors' own sakes, but for David's sake, that God guided them to the hosts of Amalek, and gave them like driven stubble to their sword. How much more true it is to us that every blessing, every pardoning mercy, every delivering mercy, is given to us through Him who is our shield and God's anointed! It is for the sake of Jesus that we are pardoned, justified, accepted, preserved, sanctified. Only through this channel does the mercy of God come to us. On this blessing, and on that favor, yea, on them all, we see the mark of the cross. These are all fruits of our Redeemer's passion, the purchase of His blood. again we say, "This is David's spoil."

Moreover, David's men gained the victory over Amalek because of David's leadership. If he had not been there to lead them to the fight, in the moment of their despair they would have lost all heart, and would have remained amidst the burning walls of Ziklag, a discomfited company. But David encouraged himself in the Lord, and so encouraged all his desponding followers. Drawing his sword, and marching in front, he put spirit into them: they all followed with eager step because their gallant leader so courageously led the way. This is exactly our case, beloved, only we are even more indebted to our Lord Jesus than these men were to David.

Following at his feet we, too, fight with sin. Treading in His footsteps we, too, overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil. Have you never heard Him say, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world"? And you, dear brothers and sisters, whatever victories you win, whatever spoils you divide, will own that it is through Jesus that you have conquered. They said of Waterloo that it was a soldiers' battle, and the victory was due to the men; but ours is and every victory won by us is due to the great Captain of our salvation. Let the crown be set upon His head, even on the battle-field, and let us say of every sin that we have overcome, every evil habit that we have destroyed, "This is David's spoil." We had never won this victory if Jesus had not led us: we have it for His sake. We have it under His leadership. Without exception, all the saints on earth and in heaven confess this to be true.

Our Commander's Battle,

Yes, and our Lord Jesus has recovered for us the future as well as the past. Our outlook was grim and dark indeed till Jesus came; but oh, how bright it is now that He has completed His glorious work! Death is no more the dreaded grave of all our hopes. Hell exists no longer for believers. Heaven, whose gates were closed, is now set wide open to every soul that believeth. We have recovered life and immortal bliss. We are snatched like brands from the burning, and made to shine like lamps of the palace of the great King. We are set up to be for ever trophies of the conquering power of Jesus, our glorious David. Look at all the saints in heaven in their serried ranks, and say of them all, "This is David's spoil."

II. But the most interesting part of our subject is this: all the booty was practically David's spoil, but there was a part of it which was not recovered, but was

A Clear Gain.

They recovered all they had lost, and over and above there was a surplus of spoil from the defeated foe. Now, in the great battle of Christ on our behalf, He has not only given us back what we lost, but He has given us what Adam in his perfection never had. And I want you to dwell upon that, because this part of it is peculiarly our Lord's spoil. Those good things which we now possess, over and above what we lost by sin, come to us by the Lord Jesus. Now that the Son of God has come into the field, He is not content with restoration, He turns the loss into a gain, the fall into a greater rising.

And first, dear friends, think: In Christ Jesus human nature is lifted up where it never could have been before. Man was made in his innocence to occupy a very lofty place. "Thou madest him to have dominion over all the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet." Man would have enjoyed that dominion had he never fallen, but he never could have obtained what he has now gained, for "we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor." And we see in Jesus human nature joined in mysterious union with the Godhead. It is a wondrous honor this—that manhood should be taken into intimate connection, yea, absolute union with God! For listen: through Jesus Christ we are this day made the sons of God, which angels never were. The most glorious being next to God is man. A sinner most shameful once, but now in Christ a child accepted and honored! What can I say of this but "This is David's spoil"? This is what Jesus brought us. It came to us by no other way or method. Neither do we know in what way or method it could have been given to us, but by the will of God

Through our Lord

Jesus Christ. It is given to us through Jesus Christ, our elder Brother and our covenant Head, and unto Him let the glory of it be ascribed world without end.

Another blessing which was not ours before the fall, and therefore never was lost, but comes to us as a surplusage, is the fact that we are redeemed. You sang just now that verse,

> "Never did angels taste above > Redeeming grace and dying love."

It is clear that you could never have known free grace and dying love if Jesus had not come to redeem you. Unfallen intelligent spirits will say in eternity: "Do you see those beings bowing nearest to the eternal throne? Do you see those well-beloved creatures? Who are they?" Spirits that have lived in other worlds will come crowding up to the great metropolis, and will say one to another, "Who are those courtiers—those that dwell nearest to God? Who are they?" And one spirit will say to another: "They are beings whom God not only made as He made us, but whom the eternal Son of God redeemed by blood." And one shining one will say to his fellow: "What is that? Tell me

That Strange Story."

Then will his companions delight to say, "They were saved because the Son of God took their nature, and in that nature died." "Wonderful! Wonderful!" his friend will answer; "How could it be? Was there suffering for them, and pain for them, and bloody sweat for them, and death for them on the part of the ever-blessed Son of God?" The answer, "It was even so," will be news full of astonishment even to the best instructed celestial mind.

We shall be creatures who have known sin, and have been recovered from its pollution. There will be no fear of our being exalted with pride, or drawn away by ambition as the now-apostate angels were; for we shall constantly remember what sin did for us, and how grievous was our fault. We shall for ever remember the price at which we were redeemed; and we shall have ties upon us that will bind us to an undeviating loyalty to Him who exalted us to so glorious a condition. It seems to me wonderful beyond expression: the more I consider, the more I am astonished.

Again, to my mind it is a very blessed fact that you and I will partake of a privilege which would have been certainly and could not by Adam have been known, and that is, the privilege of resurrection. We shall die unless the Lord should suddenly appear. I would not have you, brothers and sisters, look upon the prospect of death with any sort of dread. I know that death is associated with pain, but nothing can be more absurd. There is no pain in death: pain belongs to life; death, even naturally, puts an end to pain. But death to the believer is undressing as his Lord undressed—putting off garments of which, I trow, we need not be so very fond, for they do fit us ill; and oftentimes, when our spirit is willing, it is hampered by these garments of clay, for the flesh is weak. "Where should the dying members rest but with their dying Head? "That grave of our blessed Lord, if he had not meant us to enter it, would have been left an empty tenement when He came away; but when He came out of it, He left it furnished for those that should come after Him. See there the grave-clothes folded up for us to use! The bed is prepared for our slumber.

Unnecessary to Adam,

The napkin is laid by itself, because it is not for the sleeper, but for those who have lost his company. Those who remain behind may dry their eyes with the napkin, but the grave-clothes are reserved for others who will occupy

The Royal Bed-Chamber.

When great men removed in the olden time, their servants took away the arras, or hangings of their chambers; but if those hangings remained, it was for the convenience of guests who were invited to occupy my lord's rooms. See, then, our Lord expects us to lie in his royal bed-chamber, for He has left the hangings behind Him! To the retiring-room of the tomb we shall go in due time. And why should we be grieved to go? For we shall come forth again: we shall rise from the dead. "Thy brother shall rise again," was Mary's consolation from the Master's lips. It is yours.

Children of the resurrection, dread not death! Your faces are turned to the sun. Press forward to the light eternal, and fear not to pass through the death shadow; it is no more than a shadow. If you cannot leap over the grave, you can pass through it. It shall be your joy to rise when the morning breaketh, and to be satisfied; for you shall wake up in His likeness. As for the resurrection, "This is David's spoil," this is Christ's gift and boon. The resurrection from the dead is the peculiar glory of Christianity. The immortality of the soul had been taught and known before, for it is a truth which even reason itself teaches; but the resurrection of the body comes in as the last and crowning comfort: and "this is David's spoil."

Let me not weary you. The topic might well interest us on several occasions; it is too large to be confined to one discourse. Our singular relation to God, and yet to materialism, is of Jesus. God intended, by the salvation of man, and the lifting up of man into union with Himself, to link together in one the lowest and the highest—his creation and Himself. Shall I make it very plain? These poor substances—earth, water, and the like—they seem far down in the scale, God makes a being that shall be, as an old Puritan used to say, half soul and half soil; even man, who is both spirit and dust of the earth. We find in him water, salts, acids, all sorts of substances combined, to make up a body, and married to this is a soul, which is brother to the angels, and akin to Deity. Materialism is somewhat exalted in being connected with spirit at all. When spirit becomes connected with God, and refined materialism becomes connected with a purified spirit, by the resurrection from the dead, then shall be brought to pass the uplifting of clay, and its junction with the celestial.

Another Rare Gift

Our manifestation of the full glory of God is another of the choice gifts which the pierced hands of Jesus alone bestow. Principalities and powers shall see in the mystical body of Christ more of God than in all the universe besides. They will study in the saints the eternal purposes of God, and see therein His love, His wisdom, His power, His justice, His mercy, blended in an amazing way. They will admire for ever those whom God loves and delights in, those whom He keeps as the apple of His eye, those whom He rejoices over, and of whom He hath said that He will rest in His love, and He will rejoice over them with singing. Truly it hath not entered into the heart of man to guess at the glory of God in the saints, the exceeding glory which shall be revealed in us through Jesus Christ our Lord. "This is David's spoil." Oh, come, let us sing unto the Lord, let us magnify the name of Jesus Christ!

III. I close with the practical part of my sermon:

That Which We Willingly Give

to Jesus may be called his spoil. There is a spoil for Christ which every true-hearted follower of His votes to Him enthusiastically. We have already seen that all things which we have are of Christ, and that there are certain special gifts which are peculiarly of Christ; and now, what shall be David's spoil from you and me?

First, our hearts are His alone for ever. Of every believing heart it may be said, "This is David's spoil." You and I must give ourselves to-morrow to earning our daily bread, and our thoughts must go, to a large extent, after earthly things in the common pursuits of every-day life. But our hearts, our hearts, are as fountains sealed for our Well-beloved. O mammon, thou shalt not have them! O pleasure, thou shalt not have them! These are David's spoil. Let it be so that our whole heart is the sole possession of Jesus! We will neither rend it nor cast lots whose it shall be, for "this is David's spoil."

Now there is another property I should like King Jesus to have, and that is, our special gifts. I know one who, before his conversion, was wont to sing, and he often charmed the ears of men with the sweet music which he poured forth; but when he was converted, he said, "Henceforth my tongue shall sing nothing but the praises of God." He devoted himself to proclaiming the gospel by his song, for he said, "This is David's spoil." Have you not some gift or other, dear friend, of which you could say, "Henceforth this shall be sacred to my bleeding Lord"? Some peculiar faculty? Some choice piece of acquirement not generally possessed? Something in which you excel? I would that you had at least some little garden of flowers or herbs which you could so reserve that only Jesus should pluck the fruits. Say of the best gift you possess, "This is David's spoil."

Lastly, have you not something of your own proper substance that shall be David's spoil just now? That was a blessed act when the woman broke the most precious thing she had—her box of alabaster, and let the perfumed nard stream down the Saviour, anointing Him for His burial. She felt that the precious perfume was David's spoil.

There Was No Waste:

in fact, no other gift ever went so completely to its purpose without being taxed on the road, for Jesus had it all. Kindly did He observe the loving honor which she paid Him. What if the ointment were sold, and given to the poor? Yet it could never be so economically used as when it was all devoted to Him. I do think it so pleasant sometimes to give Jesus Christ distinctly a gift from yourself of somewhat that you will miss. It is good to give to the poor, but it has a daintier sweetness in it to do somewhat distinctly for Him, for the spread of His own glory, and the making known of His own fame. "The poor ye have always with you": abound towards them in your charity whenever you will; but to your Lord at special seasons dedicate a gift, and say, "This is David's spoil."

There was a poor woman once, whose little fortune could be carried between her finger and her thumb—her fortune I said, for it was all that she had. Two mites, I am told, was all it came to. She took it, it was her all, and she put it in the treasury; for this was "David's spoil." It belonged to the Lord her God, and she gave it cheerfully. I do not know whether since the days of the apostles anybody has ever given so much as that woman. I have not. Have you? She gave all her living. Not all her savings, but all her living. She had nothing left when she gave her farthing; she loved so much that she consecrated all her living. There was a man who, in the providence of God, had been enabled to lay by many thousands. He was a very rich and respected man. I have heard it said that he owned at least half a million; and at one collection, when he felt specially grateful and generous, he found a well-worn sixpence for the plate, for that was David's spoil! That was David's spoil! Out of all that she possessed, that sixpence was David's spoil! This was the measure of his gratitude! Judge by this how much he owed, or at least how much he desired to pay. Are there not many persons who, on that despicable scale, reward the Saviour for the travail of his soul? I shall not upbraid them. I shall not urge them to do more, lest I spoil the voluntariness of the large gifts they mean to bring.

For us, who are deep in the Redeemer's debt, who have had much forgiven, who every day are bankrupt debtors to the measureless mercy of infinite love—for us, no paltriness will suffice. We must give something which, if it be not worthy of Him, shall, at least, express the truth and warmth of the gratitude we feel. God help us to be often setting aside this and that, and the other choice thing, and saying, "This is David's spoil, and it shall be a joy to my heart to give it!"

God bless you, dear friends. May we come to the table of communion, and meet with our glorious David there, and feel his praises making music in our hearts! Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A KING'S AWAKENED CONSCIENCE.*

On a March evening, in the year 1705, King Frederick IV. of Denmark sat in deep thought in his palace. As he looked over the papers on the table, his eye rested on the petition of a poor widow. Her husband and eldest son had been murdered in a native outbreak at Tranquebar, and she sought redress and help. The circumstance was slight, and might have made little impression on a mind preoccupied, but that the heathen population, added by adventure or conquest to Denmark, had already weighed upon the king. They could be found at many points of his dominions—in Greenland, India, and St. Thomas—and they had filled him with misgivings that he had not acted fairly by them, that, as a Christian Prince, he ought to have sent messengers to preach the gospel to them. He was engaged in war with Sweden, and perhaps the seriousness of his position at the time made his conscience sensitive; a sudden conviction smote through his mind, and, like a famous king before him, his countenance was changed and his thoughts troubled him. For ninety years there had been a Danish East India Company under charter and protection of the crown; for ninety years Danish ships had sailed to Tranquebar, Danish merchants had traded and grown rich in it, Danish soldiers had defended it, and Danish governors had ruled it; but no ship had ever carried a Danish missionary to preach the gospel. For these ninety years the Christian conscience of the land had been asleep, and it was now high time to awake. Penitent, perplexed, and restless, he summoned Dr. Lutkens, his chaplain, who found him poring over a map of the coast of Coromandel. Could the chaplain procure him men, he would send out Apostles to the Indies.

He had taken his decision with hasty energy, for while he was musing the fire had burned, and Lutkens, with a joy he did not hide, heaped fuel on the fire. Yet he could not answer the king's question. The Church of Denmark was no more alive to mission work than other churches of that time, and such men as were wanted were scarcely to be found. He paused for a moment, and then said: "Send me." The king was moved by the old man's self-sacrifice, but he could not part with him. He reckoned on his counsel; he must have him by his side; it was younger men he wanted, who could face the hardships and the climate with less risk. "Get us the men," he said; whereupon Lutkens went out to seek.

He found that he had undertaken a difficult task; himself a German, he naturally turned to

* From "The Dawn of the Modern Mission," by the late Rev. W. Fleming Stevenson, D. D., showing the characteristics of heathen religions, and what they had come to be when the gospel touched them, and how the first contact occurred. 188 pages. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, Broadway, New York.

The Ancient Coffin Supposed to be that of Alexander the Great.

The Home of a Scottish Crofter.

two of his old colleagues at Berlin. His correspondents took the matter up with warmth, and, on consulting with their brother ministers, it appeared they might return a favorable answer. The man who had been unconsciously trained for this work was at the moment in their neighborhood, and was about to leave it. One more illustration of the curious exactitude with which God's plans fit into one another.

Lange was commissioned by his brother ministers to write to a young minister named and propose that he should go as a missionary either to Africa or St. Thomas, telling him of the king's desire, and that their choice had fallen upon him and his old fellow-student Plutschau. Ziegenbalg's first impulse was to draw back; it was impossible he could be fitted for so peculiar a calling—then characteristically he yielded. If it was God's doing, he would not resist Him, but only prayed that he might be convinced he was right. The two young students were accepted, and a small sum was enclosed to each for travelling expenses. The hasty preparations were soon made, and they reached Copenhagen on October 16, to find that it was neither Africa nor St. Thomas they were to sail for, but Tranquebar!

Ziegenbalg,

A SCOTTISH CROFT.

(See Illustration.)

MUCH has been heard during the past few months of the Scottish Crofters, who have at length drawn public attention to their condition. As is commonly the case with poor people, their grievances, real or fancied, were ignored by legislators and the public, until crimes and outrages stirred the authorities to action, and people began to inquire how it was that such crimes were being committed. The reply was very simple: the crofters said they were slowly dying of starvation, as their farms, or crofts, did not produce sufficient to support them and their families. They wanted more land, for which they were willing to pay rent, but it was refused to them, because the wealthy lords who owned it wanted it as a preserve for deer to amuse themselves in the shooting season. The law, of course was with the lords, who stood calmly on their clear "rights of property." The question now is, whether the laws shall be changed so that the lords shall be required to sell or rent the land to the crofters.

The crofts are small holdings on the Outer Hebrides, some small islands off the western coast of Scotland. Thither a commission has been despatched to hear the complaints of the people and report to Parliament. One of the cases which the commissioners examined was that of a family living in a hut about twenty feet long, with no window, having light only from the door; and with no chimney, so that the smoke from a peat fire on the floor, thickly filling the hut, comes out either by the door, or through the thatch of the roof. It is said that the thatch, becoming charged with soot and with carbon from animal exhalations, when stripped off the roof makes valuable manure. A wooden box in the corner is the only bedstead, which serves for the whole family of five persons. The floor is deep in mud. At the other end is kept the live-stock, which consisted, at the time, of a cow and two ducks. The croft near Ballallan (which is the one represented in the illustration) is a more prosperous establishment, the owner possessing several stacks of grain, and many sheep and cows; this croft is inclosed with a "dry stane dyke." The view of Loch Erisort, looking southwest, with the snow-clad hills of Harris in the distance, is taken from the village of Ballallan. Mr. Platt is the owner of the deer forest nearest this croft. The crofters, when driven almost distracted with hunger, made a raid on this man's forest and killed some of his deer, whereupon he had them arrested, and they have been tried in Edinburgh, but acquitted by the jury.

THE COFFIN OF ALEXANDER THE GREAT.

(See Illustration.)

ANOTHER sarcophagus is added to the list of those which the respective discoverers contend once held the remains of the mighty conqueror, Alexander the Great. A few weeks ago the newspaper reports announced that the true and identical coffin had been found at Saida, or Sidon, in Syria. The evidence in its favor has not yet been produced, and until it is the report cannot be credited, as all the known circumstances connected with Alexander's death and burial forbid us to believe that the coffin could have ever been removed to Syria. The monarch died in Babylon November 12, 323 B. C., and his remains were carried with great pomp to Alexandria, and there interred. It is therefore much more probable that the stone coffin in the British Museum (a picture of which is given on this page) is the true coffin of Alexander, as it was found at Alexandria, and had all the evidence of the traditions of generations on its side.

The modern history of this ancient relic is soon told. Napoleon I. took possession of it during the French occupation of Egypt in 1799. Two years later the British acquired possession of Alexandria, and promptly shipped the sarcophagus to London and deposited it in the British Museum, where it still remains. An investigation satisfied Edward D. Clark, LL. D. of the identity of the coffin, and he wrote a book, which was published in 1805, giving his reasons for the belief. He quotes Strabo, Suetonius, and Leo Africanus, in support of his theory. He states that the Emperor Augustus, when at Alexandria, paid a special visit to the tomb of Alexander, and when the body was taken from the sarcophagus, placed a golden crown upon it. Dr. Clark tells how the alleged tomb continued to be an object of reverence to the Mohammedan conquerors, who would not even allow a Christian to see it.

The sarcophagus was brought to England in the government ship Madras, and before the vessel sailed the Capitano Bey, with his suite and many Turks of distinction, came on board to render a last act of devotion to this relic which they all solemnly touched with their tongues, the Capitano Bey declaring that Providence would never suffer the tomb to arrive safely in England. Turks identify Alexander under his Egyptian deification as the son of Jupiter Ammon with the two-horned "Dhulkarnein" of the Koran. The student of prophecy however identifies him with the "notable horn" between the eyes of the he-goat in Daniel's vision (Dan. 8: 5.) who attacked the ram with two horns (Media and Persia) and "cast him down and stamped upon him," as Alexander did; and when the notable horn was broken, at Alexander's death, four notable ones came in its place; that is, Alexander's empire was divided among his four generals, as history records.

THE BLACKSMITH'S ARGUMENT.

(See Illustration on page 285.)

"YOU'RE like this iron, Bob," said Ezra Miller, the blacksmith, as he held the piece in question in his great pliers, for the inspection of sailor Bob, while he put his foot on the block, according to his habit when entering on an argument.

Bob looked at the heated metal earnestly, as if to discover some portraiture of his simple features, or some resemblance in it to his figure, and then, as if giving up a conundrum, said, "Well, I ain't red-hot, anyhow!"

"No, I guess not, this morning," Ezra rejoined, "but it's like you for all that, and I'll tell you why. Before it went in the fire, I could do nothing with it, but now I can turn it to most any use it's big enough for. That's just like what you've been telling me. You wouldn't have cut up as you did last night, and fought with Jem. that's always been your friend, if you'd been sober. You allow that?"

Bob nodded assent.

"Well, the devil uses you as I do this iron; he gets you red-hot mad, and then you're fit for any job he wants done. There's this difference though: he never puts you to a good use, and the iron has the better of you there. Your use is always bad, because he never has any good jobs on hand. Do you suppose if you hadn't been heated up with rum you'd ha' done that bit o' devil's work last night? Not you! That ain't your line. You're a kind-hearted chap, and I shouldn't wonder if you ain't thinking now of taking a dollar or two to Jem's wife to help her out while Jem's laid up. That's right enough; you take it, and don't get heated up again. Quit, dead!"

Bob had not thought of taking that dollar or two Ezra had credited him with intending, but he thought of it now, and resolved to o it. Jem was a good ellow, but terribly rovoking to a man a liquor. Still, he id not mean to hit im so hard as to lay im up, and, as he new well enough, he ould not have done : if he had not been rinking. "I guess ou're right," he said t last, "I will take he money to Jem's vife. She'll let me ave the rough side f her tongue, I pre- ume. That's no more han any woman ould do. I'll have o quit the liquor, oo; I always make a ool of myself."

"It's worse than hat," said Ezra; 'you're real wicked nto the bargain. ou're a fool, first of ll, for taking the liq- ior, and putting your- elf into a condition n which the devil can —look here," and uiting the action to he word, Ezra pound- d-away on the iron, which was again hot.

"It'll be a hard job to quit," said Bob uefully, "but I'll try."

The Blacksmith's Argument.

"Oh, well, you're man enough for that, Bob, I guess," said Ezra. "Ask God to help you; He will."

"I ain't one of the religious sort," said Bob, "but I'm proud enough not to be the devil's tool, and I allow I've been that."

"You'd be a deal safer, my lad, if you did not trust to yourself quite so much. I know you ain't one of the religious sort, and I'm sorry for it; you'd be improved if you were."

Bob sauntered out of the shop, ill at ease, with an aching head and an accusing conscience. Ezra was a good fellow, who had helped him out of more than one scrape, and who always gave him good advice. He did not feel like going to work, but he knew he must go. Last night's expenses, and that dollar or two for Jem's wife, would make a hole in his week's money big enough without losing time. How his head did ache! He must have just one glass before he could do any work, and after that he would quit. So Bob had his glass to brace himself, and then dragged himself off to his work.

Somehow it was harder to quit than even Bob had estimated. He certainly did try two or three nights; he went right home, and would not go out again. It was pretty dull, he thought. His wife was at her work, but Bob could not settle to anything. He tried to read, but reading was never easy to him; he tried doing a bit of carpenter work in-doors, but he yawned and stretched himself, and looked at the clock. It seemed the longest evening he had ever passed. And how thirsty he was! At last he gave it up, and late on the third evening he found himself in his old corner in the saloon. A man was there with a violin, and the remainder of the evening passed pleasantly.

Bob felt a little ashamed of himself in being beaten in his attempt to quit, and avoided the blacksmith's shop on his way to and from his work. He did not like having to tell Ezra that he had failed. Ezra would be sure to preach again. He would limit himself firmly, and would not exceed the allowance he knew he could stand. But even there he failed—he had not reckoned on treating. One night, having taken his usual modicum, an old friend dropped in, and Bob was easily persuaded to drink at his friend's expense. Then, of course, he had to treat his friend, and after that Bob was not under his own control. He was, as Ezra told him, in the heated condition when the devil could put him to any bad use. Unhappily, a bad use was soon found for him. Lurching from side to side of the sidewalk as he went home, Bob stumbled and fell against a window. I was the window of a saloon, and the bar-tender, knowing well that Bob's condition showed that he had been at a rival establishment, had no compunction in administering punishment. Bob was not the man to take it meekly. He struck out, and with fatal effect.

The next morning he was awakened in a cell, and wonderingly inquired how he came there. Murder, he was told, had led to his position. It was reduced to manslaughter at the trial, mainly by the energetic efforts of his friend Ezra, but it meant ruin to the poor, weak creature, who trusted in his own strength. During his long imprisonment, and the years it took him to work up again in a strange town, where he went to escape the name of "a jail bird," Ezra's lecture on the hot iron needed no new illustration to imprint itself on his memory.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 270.)

A Call to Work.

MRS. BROWN searched in her basket for the map, and drew it out at last; a yellow sea-stained chart, crumpled in many folds. Philip could not take it from her, but I took it, and smoothed it out on my lap, for her to point out the pin-mark made by the dying seaman. As she laid her finger upon it, a deep heavy sob broke from my boy's lips.

"Philip!" I said, "Philip!" and I drew his head down to rest upon my shoulder, and laid my cheek against his forehead. I think he felt then how dearly I loved him, for he clasped his arms round me, and wept as passionately and unrestrainedly as though I had been his mother. I made a sign to the woman to leave us, and so we two were alone, filled with one thought, and partly one sorrow.

"Aunt Milly," he whispered, "this is almost worse than if my father were dead."

Not almost, but quite, I said to myself. But I did not speak it aloud: and by and by Philip roused himself, and leaned over the old chart to look at that pin-mark. It seemed only a week or two since he was standing at my knee to learn his first lesson in geography, and now! Ah! I foresaw that moment what lay before me; and how the restless, faithful love of that young heart would carry him far away from me.

At last Philip carried off the chart to George's room, while I went to dismiss Mrs. Brown. I followed him as quickly as possible, grudging every moment I must be away from him just then. He was kneeling by the side of George's sofa, with the chart open before him, and was telling him rapidly all that we had heard. The eager, sorrowful, boyish face! The tremulous, vibrating voice! The imploring, penetrating gaze, with which he met our eyes! It is all present to me now; and once more I feel the pang after pang that pierced my heart that night, and for many a long night to follow.

"My soul doth magnify the Lord," said Mary. "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thine own soul also," said Simeon, as if in answer. It seems to me as though that must be said of every deep love, whose birth we welcome with songs of gladness, and which we cherish as a heavenly gift, till the sharp, poignant anguish comes in its train. Yet not for centuries upon centuries of grief would Mary have forgone the blessedness of calling the Lord her Son.

Even from that night I knew that we could not keep Philip at home, with the idea of his father's sad captivity brooding in heart and brain. The perils of the search, the uncertainty of its issue, only fired the boy the more. There was his scholarship to give up, for it was granted only for purposes of study, and that grieved him a little; but it did not shake his resolution for a moment.

We obtained all the information we could, and procured letters of introduction to European missionaries and traders dwelling in that unhealthy region; and when that was done, nothing seemed left to George and me but to sink back into the dreary stillness of our former life.

I accompanied Philip to Liverpool, where we saw Mrs. Brown again, who was loud in her protests against the fruitless expedition; but she could tell us no more and give us no better clue than we had learned from her before. Until we were on the deck of the steamer which was to carry Philip away from me, I could scarcely believe that I was not in a dream. But the parting was too near at hand now for me to doubt the truth of it; and once the vessel had sailed away, there could be no return for him. But he had no wish to change his mind; that was evident. Whatever lay before him of peril, or pain, even unto death, he was prepared to meet. His face seemed to have lost for ever the last expression of boyhood, and to have taken the resolute, self-contained aspect of manhood. Yet the tears stood in his blue eyes, and he clasped my hand fast in his own, as we leaned over the bulwarks, our faces turned away from those who were standing by, looking at each other for the last time.

"Aunt Milly," he said, "God sent me to you."

"Yes, Philip," I answered; "but He is taking you away again."

"Only for a little while," he said. "I begin to see now that a whole lifetime is but a little while. We shall talk about this in Heaven. If I should never come home again, I shall tell you all about it there."

"Oh, my boy!" I cried, "It will be more than I can bear if you don't come back to me, and I never know what is become of you. Life is very long, Philip, and what am I to do through all the years, if you are lost to me, as your father has been lost to you, and I do not even know whether you are happy in heaven or in horrible slavery on earth!"

He answered me only by repeating in his low, pleasant voice a verse from one of my favorite hymns:

"Christ leads us through no darker room,
Than He passed through before;
He who into God's house would come,
Must enter by the door."

"But it is darker than I expected," I cried; and so it was. There was a dense darkness over that moment; and as I looked into the future I could not see a ray of light. I was sending my boy out upon a wild mission, into unknown dangers, which could not be exaggerated, and with no brilliant result to follow upon a successful ending. The most he could do was probably to satisfy himself of his father's death, amidst a savage tribe of native Africans. If I could have been sure that he would have found his father, I could have let him go more willingly.

"It seems to me," he said, his voice faltering a little, "as if I could almost feel Christ's hand clasping mine. He can lead us through any darkness."

Those were the last words he spoke to me, except a hurried good-bye as he left me in the boat which was to separate us. I looked up, and saw his grave, loving face looking down upon me from over the bulwarks—as I was to see it once more in after years—and a smile came across it, as he met my eyes. So we gazed, until we lost sight of one another in the distance.

There is one burden, one oppression, in life to me; the stern, inexorable regularity of time—the unhasting, unlingering beat of the moments, which pause for no fever of our pulses, nor hurry for no dreary languor of our hearts. When I reached home again the loud ticking of the time-pieces in the quiet house harassed me more than I can tell, now there was no need to watch for the hour when Philip would be coming in. Oh! the countless rounds those hour-hands must make before they point again to the moment he returns!

There were not many opportunities of hearing from him. He wrote when he landed at Sierra Leone, telling us he should join a caravan going south for the Ivory Coast, as soon as one started. Then we heard again, three months later, that a rumor of a white man kept in captivity, who was still alive, had decided him to go on with a few adventurous traders, who were venturing farther into the interior than the rest. After that all was silence, month after month. The African mails came in, and I waited, sick with hope deferred, for the coming of a letter; but there was none. Think of that; and remember that we had no personal interest in his father, he was of no kin to us, was altogether unknown to us; so that there was no special affection for him to counterbalance our anxiety for Philip. Moreover, if he found his father, he would belong to us no more. It was difficult to reconcile one's self to this.

Yet my brother George did it. Whether men are less exacting and less selfish in their love than we are, or whether he had entered more fully than I into the spirit of Christ, I hardly know. He waited with a patient hope, month after month, for tidings; and he spoke of Captain John Champion as if he was willing to give up Philip for him.

"The boy could do nothing else," he said, one day; "would you have had him remain at home in comfort, while he believed his father was in captivity among savages? Better a thousand times for the lad to perish in his brave enterprise than own such a selfish spirit as that."

"But it is very hard upon us," I answered, "after all we have done for him."

"Milly," he said quietly, "were we bringing him up for ourselves, or for God?"

I had no answer to give. My conscience spoke out loudly, but my voice could not. I had been bringing him up for myself; and centring all my love and hopes and pride in him. It was a hard struggle to pass through. I had looked upon myself as one of Christ's disciples; and so long as Philip's faith in Him, and loyal service to Him, had not crossed my own plans, I had rejoiced in both. But now that they were broken through and scattered, I could almost have wished that the boy had been less faithful to his Master.

Two years had gone by; more than twelve months had passed bringing no tidings of Philip. Our hopes had long since grown faint; though I learned at last to reconcile myself to the will of God. June was come again; and once more George and I sat with his window open, watching the flickering of the sunshine through the leafy trees. A chart of the western coast of Africa, on a large scale, lay within reach of my brother's hand; though he knew every line upon it. We seldom spoke of Philip now. But as I leaned back in my chair, with half-closed eyes, my thoughts were far away, in those strange regions which had grown familiar to me. I heard Thomas knock at the door, and open it only the space of an inch or two; and his voice came to my ear as if from a long distance.

"Miss Carr is wanted," he said.

What there was in his tone or manner, I cannot describe. My heart gave a sudden, great throb of expectation. I sprang from my chair, pushed past him as he tried to speak a few words to me, ran towards the dining-room, and caught Philip in my arms as he stood watching for me in the doorway.

I look back upon that day as perhaps the most gladsome of my life. He was changed; it was no boy who had come back; but there was the same voice, and the same sunny smile upon the face. The story he had to tell was so foreign to our life at home, that we listened with wonder and with trembling. His father was with him; but now, after the lapse of years, the recollection of him, as he sat by silent and almost melancholy, has faded from my mind; I see only Philip; I hear his voice, and once more the conviction deepens upon me that, all the perilous journey through, he had felt, as he said, Christ's hand clasping his. So close had grown his communion with Him in the dangers he had confronted, that never more could he be satisfied with the low level of the Christian life, where we were dwelling.

And now that Captain John Champion was in England again, what was to be done with him? He had brought home with him a small store of ivory and gold-dust, sufficient for his own immediate wants, and to pay for Philip's training in the hospital for a year or so; but he was not a man willing to be dependent upon others. His health had suffered severely during his captivity, with its innumerable hardships, and George urged him to get the best medical advice in London. Philip went with his father to consult the physician recommended by George's doctor, and we waited with some anxiety for their return.

They came in at once to my brother's room; their faces graver than they had been since that day they had come home. Yet Captain John Champion's was the saddest; for Philip's wore an expression so like the one I had seen when we parted on board the steamer at Liverpool, at once tender and resolute, that I felt a vague foreboding in my heart.

"Well?" said George, for neither seemed inclined to speak first.

"Bad news! bad news! answered Captain John Champion. "I'm little better than a useless old hulk."

"No," interrupted Philip. "Dr. Croft says my father may live many long years yet, and be in tolerable health. But he must not leave the sea; and, if possible, some one belonging to him must be with him, for his death might be sudden, or possibly very painful."

"That cannot be," said the father, looking sorrowfully at the son. "I cannot have anybody belonging to me with me."

"That must be," said Philip, cheerfully. "I have no calling or profession. I am as free to study navigation, and become a seaman, as I am to study diseases, and become a doctor. And what is more, uncle George, we met an old friend of my father's in the city; and when we told him the doctor's verdict, he offered my father on the spot the command of a ship chartered for Madeira, with a first-class mate and a capital crew. I've made up my mind to become a sailor."

"But, Philip," I cried, "you will throw away all your talents and your prospects; even your own wishes!"

"That's what I say," resumed his father, hal eagerly. "I cannot consent to him sacrificing everything for me. No, no; my boy. God has given you great gifts; and He looks for you to use them in His service, not to follow the sea with a broken-down old man."

"His father!" said Philip.

There was silence among us for a few minutes after that. Captain John Champion sank wearily into a chair, and leaning his head on his hands, concealed his face from us; but the light fell upon his hair, which was going white and thin. The firm, loving expression on Philip's face strengthened as he looked at his father. As for me, I could not bear the thought of him becoming a sailor.

"Philip is right," said my brother's feeble voice, breaking the silence at last.

"Thank God, you think so!" exclaimed Philip. "Why! did not our Lord Jesus Christ take up Joseph's trade for some reason or other? Though it seems to me only a fancy, you know, but it seems to me just now it could not be exactly what He would choose. That has been in my mind since I've been thinking of going to sea with my father. And, Aunt Milly, I daresay His mother would be very much disappointed and grieved, when her wonderful child had to go into the workshop, and busy His hands with the carpenter's tools. It would seem to her as if He were thrown away, with all His marvellous gifts. If ever I begin to weary of the sea, I will think of His weariness in the carpenter's shop."

What could Captain John Champion, or I say against that? I had never thought of that; but Philip had quickly caught sight of the footsteps where Christ had gone before, and now there was no other path for him to tread. His father and I were dumb before his truer discipleship.

And I found when he was gone away again there was not the same blank there had been before. We heard from him pretty often. Letters came dropping in unexpectedly, posted at different ports, or forwarded by vessels that had crossed their course upon the sea. Their voyages were not very long; and sometimes there would be the pleasant bustle of expectancy and preparation for their arrival, and sometimes the almost pleasanter surprise of their unforeseen return. They seemed to bring fresh sea-breezes into our town-built house; and we scarcely lost the sense of new life and vigor that one visit gave before another followed. Philip was studying navigation with nearly as much ardor as he could have studied medicine, that he might pass an examination in it, and get appointed as mate to his father's ship.

I understood then how Mary "kept all these ings, and pondered them in her heart"; e message of the angel, and the songs of the ıole host of heaven over her child's birth; e sayings of Simeon and Anna in the temple, d the astonishment of the doctors and elders His understanding and answers. And I also solved to wait until I saw what God meant to with my boy Philip.

(To be continued.)

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. Lesson for May 13, Matt. 26: 17-30. Golden Text I Cor. 5: 7.

ıe Most Difficult of all Sciences—Beyond the Capacity of the Disciples—Passover in Christ's Time—An Unreal Celebration—The Passover Christ Prepared—The Honor Conferred on a Host —The Feast Prepared—Divine Food for Supernatural Life—The Startling Announcement—Snares for Consecrated Christians—The Apostacy Abroad—A Remembrance of Deliverance.

AFTER His words to the disciples about His ming, and His speaking the parables of the rgins, the talents, and the sheep and the goats, sus said to His disciples, "Ye know that after ro days is the Feast of the Passover, and the on of man is betrayed to be crucified." Oh how tle the disciples understood what He said! gain and again He had declared to them that e must suffer, but they had never taken it to art. They knew His goodness, believed in is power, admired His teaching, but could not nderstand that He was about to die to redeem ieir souls. There is no science or knowledge any kind which is so difficult for the natural an to grasp as the fact of Christ's redemption, cause it goes counter to all the pride and self-liance of our nature. Only the Holy Spirit n make us believe how utterly lost we are; ly He can show us what a Saviour Jesus is.

The Sacred Season

the Passover had come. This feast, neglected the ungodly kings of Judah, was now strictly served, but there were no such manifestations in the old revivals which took place in the ays of Hezekiah, when all Judah was moved, id they kept the Passover fourteen days in-ead of seven, and the priests and scribes re-ived such a plentitude of offerings that they laid them by heaps" (II Chron. 30; 31 : 10); or the days of Josiah, when "There was no assover like to that kept in Israel from the ays of Samuel the prophet; neither did all the ings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah ept." (II Chron. 35 : 18.) Now things were dif-rent; an outside, unreal religion had set in, id Jesus likened the religious people of this me to "whited sepulchres, which indeed ap-ear beautiful outwardly, but are within full of ead men's bones, and of all uncleanness." (Matt. 3: 27.) To Jesus the Passover had a meaning hich it could not have to any other. Since iat first Passover in Egypt, when the destroy-ıg angel passed over every blood-sprinkled oorway, because God had said, "When I see ıe blood, I will pass over you," Jesus had been ıown forth in every Passover—the crucified amb, the sprinkled blood, the bitter herbs, all poke of Jesus and His atoning work; and it ıust have been with strange feelings that He nswered the question of the disciples, "Where ilt Thou that we prepare for Thee to eat the assover?"

"That we Prepare for Thee?"

esus was preparing for them a Passover of hich they little dreamt, although He had so lainly declared it to them. Oh, how our hu-ıan hearts say to Jesus, "Let me prepare for hee," and how often some thought of patron-zing God lays hold of us, and we act as though re could, some way or other, enrich God! Yet esus did not criticise; He did not come "to ondemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved." (John 3: 18.) He accepted heir desire to serve Him, while His own re-ounced will was preparing a Passover which hould serve, not a nation, but a world. "He said, ıo into the city to such a man, and say unto him, the Master saith, my time is at hand; I will keep the Passover at thy house with My disciples." "My time is at hand." None of the disciples appeared to notice His words. It was the time for slaying a lamb for every house in Israel, "My time." Oh how it spoke of His coming sacrifice! The apostles, Mark and Luke, tell us that Jesus said a man should meet them bearing a pitcher of water, that they should follow him, and say to the master of the house, "Where is the guest-chamber where I shall eat the Passover with My disciples?" When He sent forth His disciples without purse or scrip, He directed them, when they entered into a city, to inquire who in it was worthy to receive them. (Matt. 10 : 11-13.) It was just in the same spirit that He honored His host with His presence. When the lives of Christians reflect the light and heat of God, His love and holiness, on those with whom they meet, everyone who knows the Lord feels it a privilege to entertain them; for they give far more than they take; they bring, and leave behind them a blessing which endures. It is quite another thing with those who make it a practice of living on religious people, and who thus bring the cause of Christ into reproach. A true follower of Jesus will never give trouble in a house, but rather be willing to help: he will never inconvenience his host or hostess whenever it is possible to avoid it; he will not complain of inconveniences, but be grateful for everything, and he will take the inmates of that house on his heart in prayer. Oh how privileged should any of us have felt if the Master had sent His two disciples to our house, there to keep the Passover!

The disciples did as Jesus had appointed, and made ready the Passover. The unleavened bread was baked, the bitter herbs were gathered, the lamb was slain and roasted, or, rather, crucified (for the Jewish spit was in the form of a cross), the blood was taken in a basin, and sprinkled on the lintel and the door-posts, and He whose blood was so soon to be shed sat down with His disciples. When the Passover was first instituted, the children of Israel were commanded to eat it with their loins girded, their shoes on their feet, and their staff in their hand, and they were to eat it in haste, for they were in an enemy's land, and on their way to the Land of Promise.

"Christ Our Passover is sacrificed for us"; not only has He shed His blood, but He says, "My flesh is meat indeed, and My blood is drink indeed." The Passover lamb was the last food which the children of Israel ate in Egypt; it strengthened them for that miraculous journey in which the hand of God was so manifest throughout, where their very bread was to come from heaven, their water out of the stony rock, their pathway was to be in the depths of the sea, their raiment was to last untorn and unworn for forty years, and their shoes or sandals were to need no repair! What a picture of the Christian life, lived "by the faith of the Son of God"! Truly, we need divine food for the supernatural life to which God has called us. The children of Israel were made independent of the ordinary necessities of life by the fact that God undertook their every temporal need, and proved Himself sufficient. But the true Christian's life has to be as truly a life of faith as the life of the children of Israel was. The children of Israel had the pillar of clouds of fire to manifest the presence of God, but we have to take it on trust; and when we do so the Holy Spirit reveals Him. God spoke to them by a voice which their outward ears could hear. He speaks to us most often by His Word. Oh how we need divine sustenance for a life which is above nature, and which no struggles or efforts of our human nature can either produce or sustain!

Jesus sat down with the twelve. As they ate, Jesus said, "Verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray Me."

"One of You,"

One of the chosen twelve, called to "be with Him" (Mark 3 : 12) one who was selected from among other disciples to be a special witness for Jesus! Satan aims high: all the modern delusions have drawn out the worldly, half-hearted Christians, but the enthusiastic, the devoted, the consecrated, who yet wanted to be something superior to others, those whose self-life has taken such a spiritual turn that few could recognize that it was self at all. There was deep sorrow among the little band, and each one turned to the Master, saying, "Lord, is it I?" Peter and John were the most desirous to know who it was. Peter beckoned John to ask Jesus. He was the and lay on His breast at supper. When he asked, "Lord, who is it?" Jesus answered that it was he to whom He should give a sop when He had dipped it, or who should dip his hand with His in the dish; and He added, "The Son of man goeth as it is written of Him (nothing could hinder that which was coming to pass), but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! It had been good for that man if he had not been born."

Nearest to His Master,

God keep His own disciples from betraying Jesus! There are fearful forms of apostasy abroad, many saying, "I am Christ," and deceiving many, setting up themselves as some great one. If ever it behooved Christians to be little, and to know their nothingness, it is now. Judas at last said, "Lord, is it I?" Jesus said, "Thou hast said." And yet Judas consummated the deed of betrayal! He had gone too far to stop, he was bound in honor to the chief priests, and this bond was stronger than his love to Jesus. He was bound hand and foot by Satan, and was no more his own master. Probably he justified his deed by imagining that Jesus would exert His power on His own behalf, and thus he did evil, counting on the evil being turned to good—a kind of sophistry with which Satan catches many. And as they were eating —not after a fast, as the sacerdotalists teach now—Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, "Take, eat, this is My body," and, as Paul adds, "which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of Me." The Passover was to be a remembrance of their deliverance, the Lord's Supper a remembrance of

The Person of our Deliverer.

The one was to lead them to rejoice in their freedom, the other to rejoice in Him who died to set them free. "And He took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it: for this is My blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins"; and Paul adds, "this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of Me." When the Passover lamb was slain, the blood was not to be eaten, "for the life of the flesh is in the blood" (Lev. 17 : 11), but the blood of Jesus, His very life, is the life of our souls and bodies as we trust Him. "As the living Father hath sent Me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me. Jesus is as necessary to our souls as is food to our bodies; we cannot continue to live spiritually but as we draw upon Him. His flesh was given for the life of the world. All flesh has been condemned to die. "The end of all flesh is come before Me" was not only for the days of the Flood. Jesus has passed through death, and He breathes into us His own life; just as we let our self-life die, just as we deny ourselves and ignore ourselves, His life replaces ours.

The Antichrist, Babylon, and the Coming of the Kingdom, by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages; Price in cloth covers, 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes. by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

"If You Love Me, Lean Hard!"

The following incident in the missionary life of Miss Fidelia Fiske, in Oroomiah, Persia, suggested the accompanying lines:

A few Sabbaths since, I went to Geog Tapa with Mr. Stoddard. It was afternoon, and I was sitting on a mat near the middle of the church, which had no seats, and only a floor of earth. I had been to two exercises before, and was weary, and longed for rest; and with no support, it seemed to me that I could not sit there till the close of the service. But finding that there was some one directly behind me, I looked, and there was one of the sisters, who had seated herself so that I might lean upon her. I objected; but she drew me back to the firm support she could give, saying, "If you love me, you will lean hard.' And then there came the Master's own voice, "If you love Me, you will lean hard;" and, I leaned on Him, too. I was surprised to find that I was not at all weary that night, nor in the morning, and I have rested ever since, remembering the sweet words, "If you love me, lean hard."

CHILD of my love, lean hard,
And let me feel the pressure of thy care.
I know thy burden, for I fashioned it—
Poised it in my own hand, and made its weight
Precisely that which I saw best for thee.
And when I placed it on thy shrinking form,
I said, "I shall be near, and while thou leanest
On me, this burden shall be mine, not thine."
So shall I keep within my circling arms
The child of my own love; here lay it down,
Nor fear to weary him who made, upholds,
And guides the universe.
Yet closer come;
Thou art not near enough. Thy care, thyself
Lay both on me, that I may feel my child
Reposing on my heart.
Thou lovest me?
I doubt it not; then, loving me, lean hard.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

TEN THOUSAND "Curiosities of the Bible." By a New York Sunday-school Superintendent 606 pages. Illustrated. Price $2. Send for it. The St. Louis Christian Advocate says:— "This is one of the most remarkable books out. Not so much for the matter it contains, as that it is mostly from the Bible or directly referring to it, but for the ingenuity and skill with which that matter is arranged. We have not for a long time, if ever, seen anything more cleverly done and are not at all surprised that sixty thousand copies have been disposed of. It will please and delight every reader." Teachers and Agents wanted to introduce it. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, 771 Broadway, New York.

The success of some of the agents employed by B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., is truly marvellous. It is not an unusual thing for their agents to make as high as $20 and $30 a day, and sometimes the profits run up as high as $40 and $50—even more. But we hesitate to tell you the whole truth, or you would scarcely believe we are in earnest. Write them and see for yourself what they will do for you.

GOSPELS OF YESTERDAY.

DRUMMOND, SPENCER; ARNOLD. By ROBERT A. WATSON, M.A. 217 pages, 12mo, cloth. Price $1.25.

"The attempt to refute these three influential and very different writers in one small volume is a bold one. But we must declare it successful . . . By 'Gospels of Yesterday,' Mr. Watson means Gospels that, till yesterday, were unheard of. He has done much to make his title true in another sense namely, that whatever claim these Gospels had set up to be listened to yesterday, the ground is cut from under them to-day.', —Church Bells.

"The many attractive features of Professor Drummond's book, and its great popularity and influence make it all the more necessary for those who dissent from its teaching to state with courtesy, yet with firmness, their reasons for dissent. Mr. Watson has done this part of his work with great lucidity and power. So thorough is the criticism, so powerfully does he set forth the inconsistencies of the writing under his notice, that we are inclined to feel sympathy with the author and to ask whether he has not misinterpreted the meaning of Professor Drummond. But no; he gives chapter and verse, and each proposition he combats is fully given . . . If Mr. Watson had done nothing more in this book than his criticism of Mr. Spencer, he would have done most effective service. . . . His criticism of Mr. Arnold is simply an attempt to bring some of Mr. Arnold's statements to the bar of history and of criticism. The attempt is successful; and the seemingly solid reasoning of that distinguished poet and critic becomes a dissolving view, such stuff as dreams are made of." —British Weekly.

☞Sent post-paid for $1.25.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 Bible House, N. Y.

LACTATED FOOD

For Young Infants a perfect substitute for mother's milk, often saving life; for the Invalid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great value. Thousands who have used it say it is the

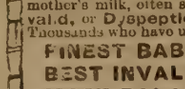
FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD.

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infants and Invalids sent on application.

Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, VT.

(33 Colors.) DIAMOND DYES



are the Purest, Cheapest, Strongest, and most Durable Dyes ever made. One 10c. package will color 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, Rags etc. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Fancy Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bronzing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instruction and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Druggists.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON, VT

MEXICO.

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

New Catalogue. Now Ready.

BEFORE YOU BUY ANY BOOKS FOR YOUR

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LIBRARY

Send to me for a full Catalogue of the cheapest and best Sunday-School Books ever offered, and our Special Offer to Sunday-Schools.

Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

WOMAN:

HER POWER AND PRIVILEGES.

A series of Sermons by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage. Just published. 12mo, 200 pages, paper cover. Sold by all dealers for 25 cents; or sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address

J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
P.O. Box 2767. 57 Rose Street, New York

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring prices. IF LEFT UPON ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Reference furnished if desired. Address BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

$10 to $300 A MONTH can be made working for us. Agents preferred who can furnish their own horses and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & Co., Publishers, 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

OUR YOUTH

J. H. VINCENT, Editor.
Weekly. Illustrated.
Till Dec. 1, on trial, for SIXTY CENTS.
Mention this paper.
Phillips & Hunt, Pub'rs,
805 Broadway, N. Y.

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

A TWELVE-ROOM MODERN HOUSE OF LOW COST.

The floor plans, full description and cost (for different localities) of the above ho
AND OF 60 OTHER BEAUTIFUL HOUSES AND COTTAGES, ranging in cost from $650 to $3,000, are given in Shoppell's latest pamphlet of designs (pages), which will be mailed to any address, post-paid, on receipt of 25 cents (stamps o Address R. W. SHOPPELL, ARCHITECT, 63 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. (Mention this paper.)

A Most Appropriate Gift Book for
"THE OLD FOLKS AT HOME."

Fifty Years and Beyond;

OR

OLD AGE AND HOW TO ENJOY IT.

A Book of Incalculable Value as well as Interest to all who have passed the Meridian of Life.

Compiled by Rev. S. G. LATHROP, INTRODUCTION BY
Rev. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D.,
Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"They are the writings of the most eminent men, living and dead. It is by no means a gloomy book, and can be marked as excellent on every page."—CHICAGO INTER-OCEAN.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—NORTH-WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—WITNESS.

A lady who received a copy of this book writes: "'Fifty years and Beyond' was bought for my aged parents, they are perfectly delighted with it, say 'it is a gem.' It is the very book I have been looking for, many, many years."

Price, Bound in rich cloth, 400 pages, $1 00.
" Presentation Edition, gilt edges, 1.50.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, - - New York.

A long-needed book. Thoroughly practical

Young People's Prayer Meetings

HOW TO CONDUCT THEM; TOGETHER WITH A GREAT MANY CHOICE THEMES AND TEXTS USED IN MANY SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS.
By REV. F. E. CLARK.

Founder and Originator of "The Society of Christian Endeavor." A book that fills a long felt want. Just the thing for "Societies of Christian Endeavor." 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

"It is an unusual combination of Christian common sense, with a broad and also minute knowledge of the Needs, Desires, Tastes and Feelings of young people. The training of young converts, and the making of them before they are trained, the place and work of the young people's meeting, the best methods of conducting it, and its relation to the development and power of the Church—these, under various heads, are considered fully and wisely. . . . We commend it heartily. It is especially indispensable to every live minister."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

UNIVERSITY PIANOS
FROM $180 TO $1500.
FINEST PIANOS IN THE WORLD.
SOLD DIRECT TO FAMILIES, saving the enormous expenses of agents. Sent with beautiful cover, stool and book, for trial in your own home before you buy. Guaranteed six years. Send for catalogue to Marshal & Smith Piano Co., 285 E. 21st St., N. Y.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

Facts Stranger than Fic

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

The Wonders of Pra

A BOOK OF WELL AUTHENTICATED AND DERFUL ANSWERS TO PRAYER, AS NARRATED BY

D. L. Moody,	W. W. Patton, I
C. H. Spurgeon,	Chas. Cullis, D.
Newman Hall, D.D.,	S. I. Prime, D.D
Bishop T. Bowman,	Bishop Simpson.
Chas. G. Finney,	F. Krummacher.
George Muller,	Martin Luther,
Abraham Lincoln,	John Knox,

And hosts of others.

New Edition. Revised by Maj. D. W.
12mo, Handsome cloth binding. Price,

To a greater extent than any other book, a extraordinary recital of facts and interest dents. It fully answers that all-important "DOES GOD ANSWER PRAYER?"

It also shows that the promises of the Bible solutely true, and faithfully fulfilled in the d of those who are constantly trusting in the L ask His help in their daily anxieties and exp It is a book of great comfort and encourag Christians, in their doubt, fear, sorrow, or t trust Him more fully in faith, and shows how delivered others in times of distress, peril, tude, can hear and deliver them also.

To those who are not Christians, it is a reco doubted facts from the experiences of in now living, proving the real existence and God, in controlling circumstances, directin wills, and all things of earth, showing His and power in daily events of life, and demo that He is not a distant Creator, but ever near

This book should be in every Christian h invaluable to all Sabbath-school teachers a ars. It should be given to every child, for i pure and healthful instruction to encourage of every one, and aims to lead all to come w willing minds to learn of the Great Comfort Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher
77 Bible House, - - New

"THE WORD FOR THE

Text, Hymn and Prayer for day in the year. Compil by A. J. A. R.

"The word for the day" has been compil erence to real every-day needs not fictitio mental ones. Its thoughts are very well sele its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for de is admirable.—New York Evangelist.

"The word for the day" is one of those st to a true Christian life.

16mo, Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00; Amer $1.75; Calf, flex., $2.50.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of pri

J. E. JEWETT,
77 Bible House, N

DEAFNE

Entirely relieved by an in which is the same to the e to the eyes. Worn for mo removal. Successful where remedy has failed. A tri 19th century. For sale only H. A. WALES, Bridgep

GALVANIZED WIRE NETT BEST AND CHEAPEST FENCE IN THE
FOR POULTRY, GARDEN OR LA
IN BALES, 150 FEET LONG.
4 FEET HIGH, ONLY..... $4 50
5 FEET HIGH, ONLY..... 5 62
6 FEET HIGH, ONLY..... 6 75
Address orders and correspondence t
U. S. WIRE NETTING CO., 42 Rence St.,

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XI., No. 19. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF PRINCE ALEXANDER OF BATTENBERG AND PRINCESS VICTORIA OF GERMANY.

LOSS AND GAIN. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE COMING CRISIS. By Dr. J. A. Wylie.

A Smoker Emancipated—A Bible Class of Judges—The Ornaments of a Goddess—A French Mechanic in a Hospital—The Horrors of Chinatown—A Magic Wand Superseded—A Telegram to buy a Sheep.

THE COMING OF THE BRIDEGROOM.

CURED AT LAST. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: Mr. Beecher at School, etc.

PORTRAIT OF CORNELIA SORABJI;

RESCUING PEOPLE FROM THE GERMAN INUNDATIONS (With Illust.)

ISAAC BOURNE'S BIRTHDAY MOTTO

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL. (Continued.)

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Prince Alexander of Battenberg, and Princess Victoria of Germany—The Palace of Charlottenburg.

ROYAL MATCHMAKING.

THE three Victorias—Victoria, Queen of England; her daughter, Victoria, Empress of Germany; and her granddaughter, the Princess Victoria, have managed together to produce a grave international crisis, which at one time promised very serious results, and which even now must be a sore subject in the imperial palace of Germany. It seems ridiculous that the love affairs of a young couple should imperil the peace of Europe, and involve the possibility of millions of men being arrayed in hostile conflict; yet so delicate are the relations of the Governments of Europe, and so sensitive are they to the slightest disturbance, that even so apparently trivial an affair as the suggested marriage of a princess sufficed to produce excitement little short of a panic.

The Project of the Marriage is said to have originated with the Queen of England. She has become infatuated with the Battenberg young men, one of whom (Prince Henry) is married to her daughter Beatrice, and another (Prince Louis) to her granddaughter, the daughter of the late Princess Alice. She then favored the espousal of the third prince (Prince Alexander) to another granddaughter—the daughter of the Empress of Germany. The young lady herself, who is not remarkable for her beauty, is said to have fallen wildly in love with the handsome prince, who, on his part, was not averse to so splendid a match as that of becoming son-in-law of the Emperor of Germany. Thus, all the principal parties to the affair were in accord, when the intervention of Prince Bismarck put an obstacle in the way, and taught the wooers that even where royalty is concerned, "true love does not run smooth." Germany and Russia have for years been on anything but cordial terms, and Bismarck perceived that if the Emperor's daughter were married to a man whom the Czar regards as his enemy, the act would be regarded as a deliberate affront to Russia, and would inflame the animosity already existing between the two Governments. The Czar would naturally expect that the Emperor of Germany had, by this act, definitely cast in his lot with those statesmen who favor the restoration of Prince Alexander to the throne of Bulgaria.

Bismarck's Protest

was made the moment the affair was broached, but he evidently failed to carry his point, for he resorted to the two measures which he always carries up his sleeve. He threatened to resign, and he published the fact in the Cologne Gazette. For so great a man, Bismarck is curiously limited in devices for getting his own way. All through his career, whenever he struck a snag he has done these two things. Sometimes he uses the Berlin Post, or the Kreuz Zeitung, instead of the Cologne organ, but it is always a threat to resign, and the rumor of it appears in some papers close to him. The central and controlling idea of his foreign policy has always been to keep friends with Russia. How much of this has been due to his own conception and wisdom, and how much to the fanatical affection of the late German Emperor for the family of the Czar, is not clear, but it is patent to the world that Germany for years has been deferring to the Czar's likes and dislikes in an almost servile fashion. The whole European concert, as it exists, may be said to rest on Bismarck's proved anxiety to do nothing which can give the Czar offence. The situation really puts the present Emperor

In a Dilemma.

If he allows the marriage to proceed he runs the chance of losing the services of Bismarck, though the chance is not great, and he formally notifies the Czar that the season of Germany's deference to Russian wishes and designs is at an end, which would be only another way of saying that if the Czar wants anything more in Europe, he will have to fight for it. If Frederick, on the other hand, breaks off the match, he publishes to the world that, so craven is Germany's attitude before Russia, it dares not even marry one of its Princesses to the man she loves because the Czar happens not to love him. Some way of escape has apparently been found, but it is generally believed that the project has been postponed, not abandoned. It will be an interesting question to watch, for the three ladies who are pitted against the iron Chancellor are not of the character accustomed to give up a project on which they have set their hearts.

That Prince Bismarck had good ground for protest, however it may result, was evident from the tone of the Russian press when the idea of the marriage was first made public. A prominent St. Petersburg journal said: "Who knows but that the placing of Prince Alexander in a new high position might rekindle thoughts of his return among the leaders of the Bulgarian revolution, and, notwithstanding assurances to the contrary, defer the establishment of tranquillity in the Balkans, and also of pacific relations between the Powers? The question is how to reconcile these possible consequences with Prince Bismarck's programme and Emperor Frederick's pacific views and friendly assurances. We are certain that the German policy will know how to weigh the consequences, and prevent possible dangers to the relations between Russia and Germany and to the general peace."

The Crisis of the Love Story, says the Berlin correspondent of an English journal, arrived at the end of March last, when Bismarck first heard that Prince Alexander was to be recognized as a German Prince, to receive the Order Pour le Mérite, and to be appointed to the command of an Army Corps. These projects the Emperor Frederick, however, after consultation with Prince Bismarck, abandoned. The second stage of the crisis was reached a few days later, when Prince Bismarck was officially informed of their Majesties' desire that Prince Alexander and Princess Victoria should be betrothed, and that the former would come to Berlin in a few days for that purpose. Then Bismarck spoke. He prepared an elaborate statement, and laid it before the Emperor.

Of this document, which is thirty pages in length, the following is the substance: The Chancellor first points out the changes in the relations between Russia and Germany which he considered would be brought about by the betrothal and by the bestowal of the above-mentioned military distinctions on Prince Alexander. On the ground of his own personal observation, Prince Bismarck then described in detail the irreconcilable differences between the Czar of Russia and Prince Alexander. He pointed out the fact that Prince Alexander's name was removed from the Russian Army List, and thence inferred the undesirable consequences of the Prince's appointment to the command of a German Army Corps. Among these the chief, Prince Bismarck thought, would be that the Czar would feel such an appointment as a deep personal affront.

Prince Bismarck's statement then discussed the possibility of Prince Alexander again becoming connected with the Bulgarian people, and described the complications which could not fail to ensue in the event of the resumption of the connection, which would deprive Germany of her present neutral position in the Bulgarian Question. A Franco-German war, the Chancellor pointed out, would by no means necessarily entail the support of France by Russia; whereas, on the other hand, in the case of a Russo-German war, the participation of France against Germany would be quite certain. The Chancellor concluded by remarking that, for the before mentioned reasons, the projected betrothal would appear to be a complete departure from the system of German policy built up during the past twenty years; that he would, therefore, no longer be able to bear the full responsibility, but must lay down his office as Chancellor if, contrary to his advice, the projected betrothal should take place. It is almost needless to add that the Chancellor had the cordial support of the Crown Prince. That young man, if he had no other reason for opposing the marriage, would have found it in the fact of its being favored by his mother and grandmother—the English influence which he so heartily detests.

PRINCE ALEXANDER.

THE Prince whose portrait appears on the preceeding page has had a romantic career, in which he has displayed remarkable personal heroism and a degree of statesmanship which is honorable to him. When he was affectionately and enthusiastically urged by the Bulgarians to hold his position in defiance of Russia he firmly refused to allow the blood of his people to be spilled in his personal interests, and resolutely insisted on abdicating his throne rather than bring on his country a disastrous war. Such conduct must be recorded to his credit; and it contrasts favorably with that of many potentates, who have not hesitated to deluge with blood the countries they ruled rather than waive their personal interests.

Prince Alexander is thirty-one years of age having been born April 5, 1857. He is the second son of Prince Alexander of Hesse, who was a brother of the late Empress of Russia and he is, consequently, a first cousin of the Czar. His great grandfather, on his mother's side, was a journalist, named Haucke, who ingratiated himself with the Russian grand-duke Constantine. Haucke's son, with the grand duke's influence, was appointed a colonel in the Russian service, and when he was killed during the Polish riots in 1830, Constantine had his little daughter educated at his own expense. She grew up a beautiful and accomplished lady and while at the Imperial Court, won the affections of the brother of the Empress, who married her and took her to his home at Hesse, in Germany, where his brother was reigning duke. The Battenburg young men are the offspring of that marriage. Two of the three are supported by the British taxpayers, having no income whatever of their own. Louis, the eldest, has a snug place in the British Navy, and the third Henry, has a still better place as husband of the Queen's favorite daughter and the holder of lucrative sinecures in the British establishment.

Prince Alexander was, in April, 1879, elected to the throne of the newly formed State of Bulgaria which by the treaty of Berlin was carved out of Turkey, and in 1885 assumed the sovereignty of Eastern Roumelia, when he proclaimed the union of the two Bulgarias. During his reign however, he maintained a perpetual quarrel with the Russians concerning the tutelage which they sought to maintain over Bulgarian affairs civil and military. In 1881 he committed a serious error in suddenly suspending the Democratic Constitution of Tirnova, which had been promulgated by the former Russian Regent Governor, Prince Dondoukoff-Korsakoff, and the Russians were not slow to take advantage of this, and intrigued for his overthrow.

In 1883, however, Prince Alexander not only restored the Constitution, but, turning upon the Russians, asked why the Bulgarians should not be allowed to have a Bulgarian Home Minister instead of having to submit to the dictation of a Russian official? This won the devotion of the Bulgarians, who supported him heart and soul, and Russia was obliged eventually to recall the Ministers who were thwarting the Prince at every turn, and to replace them by more impartial men. However, at the instigation of Russia, the Prince was removed by a coup d'état on August 21, 1886, when he resigned his crown.

THE PRINCESS VICTORIA.

THE young lady whose portrait accompanies that of Prince Alexander on the first page is the second daughter of the Emperor and Empress of Germany. Her full name is Frederica Amelie Wilhelmina Victoria. She was born April 12, 1866, and she is therefore twenty-two years of age. While but little of a biographical nature is known of her, a very favorable impression of her character is prevalent in Berlin. It is known that her mother, who is the eldest daughter of the Queen of England, and a woman of extraordinary learning and ability, has devoted special pains to the training of the Princess, and has every reason to be gratified with the result. One report sums up the prominent characteristics of the young lady in the words, "A favorite daughter in a Christian and intellectual family, she exhibits in a high degree the graces of refined and cultivated maidenhood." It is sad for the Princess that her love affair should be so ruthlessly thwarted, and that having the approval of father and mother, which in humbler circumstances would be deemed sufficient for the match, she must be disappointed for reasons of state. She has thus had to learn that an exalted station involves its penalties, and that self-sacrifice for the good of others becomes all the more imperative for her, because of the momentous concerns with which her lot is bound up. It may be hoped that, if the obstacles to the marriage should not be removed, grace may be given her to bear her disappointment bravely and cheerfully, and that she may be led to follow in the footsteps of the Prince of Heaven, of whom it was written that "He pleased not Himself."

THE PALACE OF CHARLOTTENBURG,

a picture of which appears on the first page, and where the Emperor and Empress of Germany are now residing, together with the Princess Victoria and her sisters, is situated on the west side of Berlin. Charlottenburg itself is a small, quiet town. Since the death, in 1873, of the Dowager Queen Elizabeth, Charlottenburg has not, until now, been the abode of Royalty. It has been a favorite resort of visitors from the neighboring city. The public road from Berlin is on the south side of the Palace. The Royal Mausoleum in the Park contains the body of Queen Louisa, the late Emperor's mother. Here the venerable Kaiser used to come every year on the day of his mother's death, and engage in solemn communion; and here he himself now rests until the morning of the Resurrection shall summon him, and all who sleep, both small and great, to appear before the King of kings.

A LITTLE HERO.

The heroism of a twelve-year old boy is mentioned by a surgeon in Georgia, as among the most memorable incidents of his practice. The doctor was called to attend the daughter of a railroad employee, whose lower limbs had been caught in the turn-table, and terribly cut and mangled. For some time amputation was contemplated but it was eventually decided to try to save the limbs. The effort was successful up to a certain point, but the wound would not heal. The doctors at last informed the family that it would be necessary to ingraft pieces of skin from a healthy person upon the lacerated surface, if the girl's limbs were to be saved. The brother of the girl, a boy twelve years of age heard what was said, and promptly offered the doctors as much of his skin as they needed. The little fellow was warned that the operation would be painful, but he said he guessed he could stand it if it would do Belle any good. There being no doubt of that, he stripped of his coat, and stood unflinchingly, while four strips of skin were taken from his arms, and transplanted to his sister's legs. The operation was completely successful, and the skin grew healthily, covering the wounds. The surgeon says that though he has performed many operations, he has never performed one that so impressed him with the power of the mind over the body, as that of taking the skin from the arm of the brave little boy whose love for his sister made him superior to pain. Nothing is said of the sister's gratitude, but it may be presumed she would never forget this proof of her brother's love. If through carelessness or perversity, she had obstructed the cure, and, losing her limbs after all, had rendered the boy's suffering fruitless, she would have been deemed crazy as well as wicked. Yet when sinners for whose salvation Christ gave His life die in their sins they are guilty of far worse turpitude. (Rom. 5 : 7.)

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Letting Their Finger-Nails Grow.—A minister observed: "Some people foolishly consider it to be beneath their dignity to work. The literary men in China, for instance, are very much afraid that the people will think they labor for a livelihood, so they let their finger-nails grow very long in order to produce the impression that they do not work. One literary man was so anxious about this matter that he tied splints upon his fingers to make his finger-nails grow very long and straight. And what was the result? When he took off the splints and bandages, certainly his nails were grown; he gained what he wanted, but his hand was paralyzed and perfectly powerless. Do not some Christians think it beneath their dignity to work among the poor and do humble services for Christ? They certainly are members of His body, through the faith which unites them to Him, but they are unfruitful, useless members, a very shame and reproach to the name which they bear."

Making A Public Choice of Christ.—Mr. D. J. Findlay remarked: "Some time ago, at a series of gospel meetings which were being held, a gentleman attended them night after night, and each night he came most distinctly under the influence of the Holy Spirit. At the close of one of these meetings the chairman asked those who were anxious about their souls to come forward to the front bench. This gentleman felt strongly moved to go, but he thought, 'There is not so much necessity for going to that particular seat; I can be saved at home just as easily as here!' He went home, and sought to close with Jesus, but could not. The several following nights were just the same, but one night the Holy Spirit was so importunate that the man was ready to find peace. In the meeting he rose to go to the front, but had scarcely gone three steps when he fell upon his knees in the aisle, and there God saved his soul. Yes, it is true God can save a perishing sinner anywhere, but one of the conditions of salvation is that we confess the Saviour before men, and our persistent refusal to publicly make our choice of Christ may be nothing else but a persistent shirking of that condition. Of all such will Christ be ashamed, and will not confess their names when He comes in glory."

Refusing to Let Go the Rope.—A Christian worker says: "A ship was recently on the rocks on the Scottish coast. The wind was high and the waters rough. Every minute she was expected to go to pieces. The boats were lowered, and the sailors by means of a rope were lowering the passengers over the side into the boats. Most had gone in safety, and they now came to a lady, who was told to hold on tightly to the rope until she got the word, 'Let go,' and then at once to obey, and she would fall into the boat beneath. She was lowered, the boat floated below, the word to let go was given, but the woman spasmodically held on, and the boat floated away. Again they tried her, and again at the critical moment her courage failed. They drew her up, and gave the rope to her little daughter, who, simply obeying instructions, was soon safe in the boat. They gave the mother another chance, but though she had seen her own child saved she was still afraid to follow, and when the ship went to pieces she was drowned. Similarly, there are men and women who will not let go the habit, the pleasure, or some other rope which prevents them entering the gospel lifeboat, though by doing so they would ensure their eternal safety. And too many cling to such things to the last hour of life, and then go down to a lost eternity."

A Physician on a Bed of Straw.—A Temperance lecturer observed: "I was addressing a meeting in the West of Scotland a short time ago, and at the close the wife of the chairman asked her husband to visit a doctor who was dying. He looked annoyed, and declined to go. I offered to visit the dying man, and after a minute's hesitation my chairman agreed to accompany me. While on the way thither he told me a little of the life history of the man whom we were going to see. At one time he was one of the leading men in the town, rich and respected by all. But in an evil hour he gave way to strong drink, and under its fell influence rapidly lost position, money, and respectability, until he had fallen to the miserable state in which we found him. In an attic at the top of a narrow, shaky, dingy stair we found him, his room almost without a chair, and the learned and once reputed physician lying on a bed of straw. We spoke to him, and bending over him whispered the text, 'This is a faithful saying,' etc. But I fear he had lost the power to apprehend what was said. His feet were already in the cold waters of the river of death. This is a sample of what strong drink does for its devotees. What fine capabilities has it not withered? And what brilliant careers has it not blasted? And once having given way to its influence, few there are who ever overcome it. But God's arm is not shortened that He cannot save, neither is His ear heavy that He cannot hear."

Mr. Spurgeon Throws a Stick at a Dog.—Mr. Lakin said: "When the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon was living at Nightingale Lane, Clapham, he was much troubled by a most unwelcome guest, in the shape of a dog, that frequently visited his garden, and destroyed his flower-beds and borders. Mr. Spurgeon resolved to watch and give the intruder a warm reception. One morning he saw the dog in his garden at its old trick. Picking up a stout walking-stick, he slipped out and got behind some trees to watch his opportunity. When the dog came near enough he took careful aim and threw his stick at it. But his aim was not of the best, and instead of hitting the dog, the stick spent its force on the air. The dog looked up, and seeing the stick and the man, it drew its own conclusions, and running to the stick, picked it up, and brought it to Mr. Spurgeon. His wrath was disarmed; he could not strike the dog who thus humbly brought the stick that was thrown at it. So taking the stick with one hand, with the other he patted the dog's back and said, 'Good fellow, good fellow!' This may illustrate how sinners, like that dog, have been disobeying God's law. He has caught us in the very act, and hurled at us the condemnation for our misdeeds. Let us accept the position, and own our condemnation just, and present ourselves before Him, pleading for mercy, and He will receive and pardon us."

A Sad Love Disappointment.—Mr. W. Thomson, relates: "I heard a minister tell this very pathetic story. He said: 'I had a sister whom I loved dearly, and I also had a companion with whom I was specially intimate. We had been together at school, and together at the same college, and both were studying for the ministry. He visited our house very frequently, and I suppose it was natural enough that he should fall in love with my sister. After some time they were engaged. Towards the end of his university course he accepted a situation as tutor in a gentleman's family, and accompanied them on the Continent. From that time his feelings seemed to have changed. His letters grew very frigid, and when he returned to England he had no scruple in telling me that he wanted a rich wife, and the first time he saw my sister he told her that their engagement must be considered at an end. That night my sister became a maniac, and within a week leaped out of a three-story window, and was killed. And to-day the cause of this catastrophe fails to see that he has done anything wrong, and cannot be made to understand why I can be no longer a friend of his. But that is impossible until he acknowledges that he was the means of my dearly loved sister's death. God says that we must confess our sins before we can obtain His forgiveness. Before He can save us we must acknowledge we are sinners, and then, for Christ's sake, He freely forgives.'"

LOSS AND GAIN.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, May 6, 1888.

"What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Mark 8: 36.

A Question for Bargain-Makers—The Value of the Two Properties—I. The World a Grand Property—Impossible to Get a Good Title to It—Contingent on Life and Sensibility—Subject to Writ of Ejectment—No Fire Insurance on It—Thirteen Worlds Consumed—Always Involves Trouble—Thackeray Pitying His Own Reflection—II. The Soul as a Property—Its Majestic Silence—Capacity for Happiness—The Price Paid for It—The Home Prepared for It—Values Compared—Satan's Bid for the Soul.—A Sailor's Heroic Death.

I AM accustomed, Sabbath by Sabbath, to stand before an audience of bargain-makers. There may be men in all occupations sitting before me, yet the vast majority of them, I am very well aware, are engaged from Monday morning to Saturday night in the store. In many of the families of my congregation, across the breakfast-table and the tea-table, are discussed questions of loss and gain. You are every day asking yourself: "What is the value of this? What is the value of that?" You would not think of giving something of greater value for that which is of lesser value. You would not think of selling that which costs you ten dollars for five dollars. If you had a property that was worth fifteen thousand dollars, you would not sell it for four thousand dollars. You are intelligent in all Matters of Bargain-Making.

Are you as wise in the things that pertain to the matters of the soul? Christ adapted his instructions to the circumstances of those to whom He spoke. When He talked to fishermen, He spoke of the gospel-net. When He talked to the farmers, He said: "A sower went forth to sow." When He talked to the shepherds, He told the parable of the lost sheep. And am I not right, when speaking this morning to an audience made up of bargain-makers, that I address them in the words of my text, asking: "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

I propose, as far as possible, to estimate and compare the value of the two properties.

I. First, I have to say that the world is A Very Grand Property.

Its flowers are God's thoughts in bloom. Its rocks are God's thoughts in stone. Its dewdrops are God's thoughts in pearl. This world is God's child—a wayward child, indeed: it has wandered off through the heavens. But about eighteen hundred and eighty-eight years ago, one Christmas night, God sent out a sister world to call that wanderer back, and it hung over Bethlehem only long enough to get the promise of the wanderer's return, and now that lost world, with soft feet of light, comes treading back through the heavens. The hills, how beautiful they billow up, the edge of the wave white with the foam of crocuses! How beautiful the rainbow, the arched bridge on which heaven and earth come and talk to each other in tears, after the storm is over! How nimble the feet of the lamp-lighters that in a few minutes set all the dome of the night ablaze with brackets of fire! How bright the oar of the saffron cloud that rows across the deep sea of heaven! How beautiful the Spring, with bridal blossoms in her hair! I wonder who it is that beats time on a June morning for

The Bird Orchestra.

How gently the frail harebell tolls its fragrance on the air! There may be grander worlds, swarthier worlds, larger worlds than this; but I think that this is a most exquisite world—a mignonette on the bosom of immensity! "Oh," you say, "take my soul! give me that world! I am willing to take it in exchange. I am ready now for the bargain. It is so beautiful a world, so sweet a world, so grand a world!"

But let us look more minutely into the value of this world. You will not buy property unless you can get to it. After you have looked at the property, and found out that it suits you, you send an attorney to the public office, and he examines the book of deeds, and the book of mortgages, and the book of judgments, and the book of liens, and he decides whether the title is good before you will have anything to do with it. There might be a splendid property, and in every way exactly suited to your want; but if you can not get a good title, you will not take it. Now, I am here this morning to say that it is impossible to get a good title to this world. If I settle down upon it, in the very year I so settle down upon it as a permanent possession, I may be driven away from it. Ay, in five minutes after I give up my soul for the world I may have to part with the world; and what kind of a title do you call that? There is only one way in which I can hold an earthly possession, and that is through the senses. All beautiful sights through the eye, but the eye may be blotted out; all captivating sounds through the ear, but my ear may be deafened; all lusciousness of fruits and viands through my taste, but my taste may be destroyed; all appreciation of culture and of art through my mind, but I may lose my mind. What a frail hold, then, I have upon any earthly possession!

A Good Title

In courts of law, if you want to get a man off a property, you must serve upon him giving him a certain time to vacate the premises; but when Death comes to us and serves a writ of ejectment, he does not give us one second of forewarning. He says: "Off of this place! You have no right any longer in the possession." We might cry out: "I gave you a hundred thousand dollars for that property"; the plea would be of no avail. We might say. "We have a warrantee deed for that property"; the plea would be of no avail. "We have a lien on that storehouse"; that would do us no good. Death is blind, and he cannot see a seal, and cannot read an indenture. So that, first and last, I want to tell you that when you propose that I give up my soul for the world, you cannot give me the first item of title.

A Writ of Ejectment,

Having examined the title of a property, your next question is about insurance. You would not be silly enough to buy a large warehouse that could not possibly be insured. You would not have anything to do with such a property. Now, I ask you what assurance can you give me that this world is not going to be burned up? Absolutely none. Geologists tell us that it is that the heart of the world is one great living coal; that it is just like a ship on fire at sea, the flames not bursting out because the hatches are kept down. And yet you propose to palm off on me, in return for my soul, a world for which, in the first place, you give no title, and in the second place, for which you can give no insurance, "Oh," you say, "the water of the oceans will wash over all the land and put out the fire." Oh, no. There are inflammable elements in the water—hydrogen and oxygen. Call off the hydrogen, and then the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans would blaze like heaps of shavings. You want me to take this world, for which you can give no possible insurance.

Already on Fire;

Astronomers have swept their telescopes through the sky, and have found out that there have been thirteen worlds, in the last two centuries, that have disappeared. At first they looked just like other worlds. Then they got deeply red—they were on fire. Then they got ashen, showing they were burned down. Then they disappeared, showing that even the ashes were scattered. And if the geologist be right in his prophecy, then our world is to go in the same way. And yet you want me to exchange my soul for it. Ah, no; it is a world that is burning now. Suppose you brought an insurance agent to look at your property for the purpose of giving you a policy upon it, and while he stood in front of the house he should say, "That house is on fire now in the basement," you could not get any insurance upon it. Yet you talk about this world as though it were a safe investment, as though you could get some insurance upon it, when down in the basement it is on fire.

Brings Trouble.

I remark, also, that this world is a property with which everybody who has taken it as a possession has had trouble. Now, I know a large reach of land that is not built on. I ask what is the matter, and they reply that everybody who has had anything to do with that property got into trouble about it. It is just so with this world; everybody that has had anything to do with it, as a possession, has been in perplexity. How was it with Lord Byron? Did he not sell his immortal soul for the purpose of getting the world? Was he satisfied with the possession? Alas! alas! the poem graphically describes his case when it says:

"Drank every cup of joy, heard every trump
Of fame, drank early, deeply drank, drank draughts
That common millions might have quenched; then died
Of thirst, because there was no more to drink."

Oh yes, he had trouble with it; and so did Napoleon. After conquering nations by the force of the sword, he lies down to die, his entire possession the military boots that he insisted on having upon his feet while he was dying. So it has been with men who had better ambition. Thackeray, one of the most genial and lovable souls, after he had won the applause of all intelligent lands through his wonderful genius, sits down in a restaurant in Paris, looks to the other end of the room, and wonders whose that forlorn and wretched face is; rising up after awhile he finds that it is Thackeray in the mirror! Oh

This World is a Cheat.

Talk about a man gaining the world! Who ever gained half of the world? Who ever owned a hemisphere? Who ever gained a continent? Who ever owned Brooklyn? Talk about gaining the world! No man ever gained it, or the hundred-thousandth part of it. You are demanding that I sell my soul, not for the world but for a fragment of it. Here is a man who has had a large estate for forty or fifty years. He lies down to die. You say, "That man is worth millions and millions of dollars." Is he? You call up a surveyor, with his compass and chains, and you say, "There is a property extending three miles in one direction, and three miles in another direction." Is that the way to measure that man's property? No! You do not want any surveyer, with his compass and chains. That is not the way you want to measure that man's property now. It is an undertaker that you need, who will come and put his finger in his vest-pocket, and take out a tape-line, and he will measure five feet nine inches one way, and two feet and a half the other way. That is the man's property. Oh no, I forgot; not so much as that, for he does not own even the place in which he lies in the cemetery. The deed to that belongs to the executors and the heirs,

Oh, What a Property

you propose to give me for my soul! If you sell a bill of goods, you go into the counting room and say to your partner, "Do you think that man is good for this bill? Can he give proper security? Will he meet this payment? Now, when you are offered this world as a possession, I want you to test the matter. I do not want you to go into this bargain blindly. I want you to ask about the title, about the insurance, about whether men have ever had any trouble with it, about whether you can keep it, about whether you can get all, or the ten thousandth, or one hundred-thousandth part of it.

There is the world now. I shall say no more about it. Make up your mind for yourself, as I shall, before God, have to make up my mind for myself, about the value of this world. I cannot afford to make a mistake for my soul, and you cannot afford to make a mistake for your soul.

II. Now, let us look at

The Other Property

—the soul. We cannot make a bargain with seeing the comparative value. The soul! How shall I estimate the value of it? Well, by its exquisite organization. It is the most wonderful piece of mechanism ever put together. Machinery is of value in proportion as it is mighty and silent at the same time. You look at the engine and the machinery in the Philadelphia Mint, and, as you see it performing its wonderful work, you will be surprised to find how silently it goes. Machinery that roars and tears soon destroys itself; but silent machinery is often most effective. Now, so it is with the soul of man, with all its tremendous faculties—it moves in silence. Judgment, without any racket, lifting its scales; memory, without any noise, bringing down all its treasures; conscience taking its judgment-seat without any excitement; the understanding and the will all doing their work. Velocity, majesty, might; but silence—silence! You listen at the door of your heart. You can hear no sound.

The Soul is all Quiet.

It is so delicate an instrument that no human hand can touch it. You break a bone, and with splinters and bandages the surgeon sets it; the eye becomes inflamed, the apothecary's wash cools it; but a soul off the track, unbalanced, no human power can readjust it. With one sweep of its wing it circles the universe and overvaults the throne of God. Why, in the hour of death the soul is so mighty, it throws aside the body as though it were a toy. It drives back medical skill as impotent. It breaks through the circle of loved ones who stand around the dying couch. With one leap it springs beyond star and moon and sun, and chasms of immensity. Oh, it is a soul superior to all material things! No fire can consume it; no floods can drown it; no rocks can crush it; no walls can impede it; no time can exhaust it. It wants no bridge on which to cross a chasm. It wants no plummet with which to sound a depth. A soul so mighty, so swift, so silent, must be a priceless soul.

I calculate the value of the soul, also, by its Capacity for Happiness.

How much joy it can get in this world out of friendships, out of books, out of clouds, out of the sea, out of flowers, out of ten thousand things; and yet all the joy it has here does not test its capacity! You are in a concert before the curtain hoists, and you hear the instruments preparing—the sharp snap of the broken string, the scraping of the bow across the viol. "There is no music in that," you say. It is only getting ready for the music. And all the enjoyment of the soul in this world, the enjoyment we think is real enjoyment, is only preparative; it is only anticipative; it is only the first stages of the thing; it is only the entrance, the beginning of that which shall be the orchestral harmonies and splendors of the redeemed.

You cannot test the full power of the soul for happiness in this world. How much power the soul has here to find enjoyment in friendships! but oh, the grander friendships for the soul in the skies! How sweet the flowers here! but how much sweeter they will be there! I do not think that when flowers die on earth, they die forever. I think that the fragrance of the flowers is the spirit being wafted away into glory. God says there are palm-trees in heaven and fruits in heaven. If so, why not the spirits of the dead flowers? In the sunny valleys of heaven, shall not the marigold creep? On the hills of heaven, will not the amaranth bloom? On the amethystine walls of heaven, will not the jasmine climb? "My beloved is come down in his garden to gather lilies." No flowers in heaven? Where, then, do they get their garlands for the brows of the righteous?

Christ is glorious to our souls now, but how much grander our appreciation after awhile! A conqueror comes back

After the Battle.

He has been fighting for us. He comes upon the platform. He has one arm in a sling, and the other arm holds a crutch. As he mounts the platform, oh, the enthusiasm of the audience! They say: "That man fought for us, and imperiled his life for us"; and how wild the huzza that follows huzza! When the Lord Jesus Christ shall at last stand out before the multitudes of the redeemed of heaven, and we meet Him face to face, and feel that He was wounded in the head, and wounded in the hands, and wounded in the feet, and wounded in the side for us, methinks we will be overwhelmed. We will sit some time gazing in silence, until some leader amidst the white-robed choir shall lift the baton of light, and give the signal that it is time to wake the song of jubilee; and all heaven will then break forth into: "Hosanna! hosanna! Worthy is the Lamb that was slain."

I calculate further the value of the soul by

The Price Paid For It.

In St. Petersburg there is a diamond that the Government paid two hundred thousand dollars for. "Well," you say, "it must have been very valuable, or the Government would not have paid two hundred thousand dollars for it." I want to see what my soul is worth, and what your soul is worth, by seeing what has been paid for it. For that immortal soul, the richest blood that was ever shed, the deepest groan that was ever uttered, all the griefs of earth compressed into one tear, all the sufferings of earth gathered into one rapier of pain and struck through His holy heart. Does it not imply tremendous value?

I argue, also, the value of the soul from the home that has been fitted up for it in the future. One would have thought a street of adamant would have done. No; it is a street of gold. one would have thought that a wall of granite would have done. No; it is the flame of sardonyx mingling with the green of emerald. One would have thought that an occasional doxology would have done. No; it is a perpetual song. If the ages of heaven marched in a straight line, some day the last regiment, perhaps, might pass out of sight; but no, the ages of heaven do not march in a straight line, but in a circle around about the throne of God; forever, forever, tramp, tramp! A soul so bought, so equipped, so provided for, must be a priceless soul, a majestic soul, a tremendous soul.

Now, you have seen the two properties—the world, the soul. One perishable, the other immortal. One unsatisfying, the other capable of ever-increasing felicity.

Will You Trade?

Will you trade even? Remember, it is the only investment you can make. If a man sell a bill of goods worth five thousand dollars, and he is cheated out of it, he may get five thousand dollars somewhere else; but a man who invests his soul, invests all. Losing that, he loses all. Saving that, he saves all. In the light of my text, it seems to me as if you were this morning offering your soul to the highest bidder; and I hear you say: "What is bid for it, my deathless spirit? What is bid for it? Satan says: "I'll bid the world." You say: "Begone! that is no equivalent. Sell my soul for the world? No! Begone!" But there is some one else in the audience not so wise as that. He says: "What is bid for my immortal soul?" Satan says: "I'll bid the world." "The world? Going at that, going at that! going! Gone forever!

"What is the thing of greatest price,
The whole creation round?
That which was lost in Paradise,
That which in Christ is found.

"Then let us gather round the cross,
That knowledge to obtain;
Not by the soul's eternal loss,
But everlasting gain."

Well, there are a great many people in the house who say: "I will not sell my soul for the world. I find the world is an unsatisfying portion." What, then, will you do with your soul? Some one whispers here: "I will give my soul to Christ." Will you? That is you ever made. Will you give it to Christ? When? To-morrow? No; now. I congratulate you if you have come to such a decision. Oh, if this morning the eternal Spirit of God would come down upon this audience, and show you the vanity of this world, and the immense importance of Christ's religion, and the infinite value of your own immortal souls, what a house this would be! what an hour this would be! what a moment this would be? Do you know that Christ has bought your soul? Do you know that He has paid an infinite price for it? Do you know that He is worthy of it? Will you give it to Him now?

The Wisest Resolution

I was reading of a sailor who had just got ashore, and was telling about his last experience at sea. He said: "The last time I crossed the ocean we had a terrific time. After we had been out three or four days, the machinery got disarranged, and the steam began to escape, and the captain, gathering the people and the crew on deck, said: "Unless some one shall go down and shut off that steam, and arrange that machinery at the peril of his life, we must all be destroyed." He was not willing to go down himself. No one seemed willing to go. The passengers gathered at one end of the steamer waiting for their fate. The captain said: "I give you a last warning. If there is no one here willing to imperil his life and go down and fix that machinery, we must all be lost."

A Plain Sailor

said: "I'll go, sir;" and he wrapped himself in a coarse piece of canvas and went down, and was gone but a few moments, when the escaping steam stopped, and the machinery was corrected. The captain cried out to the passengers: "All saved! Let us go down below and see what has become of the poor fellow." They went down. There he lay dead. Vicarious suffering! Died for all! Oh, do you suppose that those people on the ship ever forgot, ever can forget, that poor fellow? "No!" they say; "it was through his sacrifice that I got ashore." The time came when our whole race must die unless some one should endure torture and sorrow and shame. Who shall come to the rescue? Shall it be one of the seraphim? Not one. Shall it be one of the cherubim? Not one. Shall it be an inhabitant of some pure and unfallen world? Not one. Then Christ said: "Lo! I come to do thy will, O God"; and He went down through the dark stairs of our sin and wretchedness and misery and woe, and He stopped the peril, and He died, that you and I might be free. Oh, the love! oh, the endurance! oh, the horrors of the sacrifice! shall not our souls this morning go out toward him, saying: "Lord Jesus Christ, take my soul. Thou art worthy to have it. Thou hast died to save it."

God help you this morning rightly to cipher out this sum in gospel arithmetic: "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

A Jewish Rabbi Offering Prayer in the United States Senate, attracted considerable attention in Washington last week. The incident is described, as follows: The Senators, who were in their seats when President Ingalls rapped them to order, were somewhat surprised to see standing before them, in the place usually occupied by the Chaplain of the Senate, a little black-whiskered man who had neglected to remove his hat. He wore a long, black coat and a white cravat, and looked very ministerial all except the hat. It was at first supposed that he had forgotten to remove it, but when the Senators arose he began to ask the blessing without uncovering his head. By his side stood the Rev. Dr. Butler, the regular chaplain of the Senate, who did not seem to be at all surprised at the personal appearance of his friend. The man with the hat on was Dr. H. Pereira Mendes, a Jewish rabbi of New York. It is not the custom of rabbis to uncover their heads when offering prayer, and so Dr. Mendes did not do it even in the presence of the United States Senate. This is the second instance, probably, in the history of the Government when a Jew offered prayer in the Senate.

A SMOKER EMANCIPATED.

THE difficult achievement of breaking off the long continued habit of tobacco-smoking was described in a testimony recently given at Bethshan, and reported in Thy Healer.* He said: "'All things are possible to them that believe': and so it proved in my case in relation to smoking. Unknown to me, our friends on the platform, when building the hall, laid my case before the Lord. I had smoked for about fourteen years, and I felt it was absolutely necessary on account of my health, and because it eased my chest. After that the Lord exercised me with these words which Mrs. Baxter was speaking from one Sunday afternoon: 'Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God? And ye are not your own.' I had such an exercise that afternoon as never since the Lord revealed Himself to me twenty-five years ago. The question would come: 'Cannot I trust Him with my nerves and chest and everything?' I shall not forget going home with Mr. Boardman and telling him about the exercise of my soul. He said: 'Yes, brother, and so was I exercised, for I have been a smoker, and it was by seeing the detriment it was to me.' What I passed through that week, no one but God knew. The next Sunday Miss Murray took the same words: 'Know ye not that your body,' &c. I was just looking to the Lord, and I saw Him and no one else, and these words came distinctly to my heart as though God spoke them: 'I have come down to deliver you—I have come down to deliver you.' And He is the Deliverer, and if we do but accept the deliverance from Him, no matter what the bondage is, He will free us from it when we ask Him.

I can now say to the glory of God I have not been troubled with phlegm since. Satan has tempted me, but God helped me. I belong to the Lord, and He has redeemed me, spirit, soul, and body. And since He healed me I have scarcely spit any phlegm, and that is nearly four years ago."

A BIBLE CLASS OF JUDGES.

IN spite of the recent outbreak of persecution in Japan the missionaries are much encouraged, and the work is making progress. Mr. Atkinson, who writes from Kobe to the Missionary Herald, says: "A new building for an English night-school was begun two years ago in a rented building. It has had to move several times, but now has a building erected expressly for its use. It is established by Christian men, and the teachers are Christians. Most of the work is done by Japanese. The school has a Christian basis, and is intended to act as an evangelizing agent. The number of students is a little over sixty. Financially, it is entirely sustained by the Japanese.

"I have been invited by some judges of the Prefectural Court to give them instruction in the New Testament. This is a very interesting class, I can assure you. The coming Saturday afternoon they have notified me that nine are coming. Saturday afternoon is a half-holiday at the court. They come to my study at two o'clock, and leave a little before four. Miss Dudley has services at the house of one of these men. Lately he offered prayer there, and once at a union prayer-meeting of the three churches. I think the interest may date from last summer. At that time the Vice-Minister of Justice was here, examining this and other Prefectural Courts. He is a member of one of our Congregational churches in Tokoi. Mr. Kozaki is his pastor.

"The Kobe church building, which seats four hundred, is now too small for the congregation. Adjoining lots have been bought, and it is hoped that a building capable of holding at least a thousand people will be up before many months go by. A couple of Sundays ago I preached for pastor Harada. On a front seat half a dozen young Buddhist priests were seated. Some of them took full notes of my sermon, and all listened with evident interest. The following Sabbath the same men were there again, I was told, each man having a New Testament with him."

THE ORNAMENTS OF A GODDESS.

AN interesting offering has recently been handed into the treasury of the mission in Madura in the Indian Archipelago. Mr. Tracy, who is laboring there, says: "On Christmas day there were brought to me by a new convert some ornaments which in days gone by he and his brother had caused to be made in honor of their family goddess. The ornaments are made of copper, heavily plated with gold, and are made in four pieces, being the head, feet, body, and crown ornaments in which they were wont annually to set the goddess forth for special worship. Recently in the division of family property among the brothers, these fell to the lot of this young man, and he has brought them to me. The work and overlaying of gold must originally have cost no small sum, and he offered them on Christmas morning as his pledge of fidelity to a Saviour and a religion whose adornment is not external, but that of a meek and lowly spirit."

A FRENCH MECHANIC IN A HOSPITAL.

AT the McAll Mission Station at Rochefort, France, encouraging progress is being made. M. Durrleman, who is in charge, reports one case of especial interest. He says: "There is a man here about fifty years of age, who, after his conversion, brought his wife, his daughters, his son-in-law, and his son to the meetings. They had not been many times when the father met with a serious accident; his hand was caught in the driving-wheel of an engine, and for several days it was thought that he would lose it. I feared that, by this accident, his faith might be shaken, but, on the contrary, the trial led him to trust God even more implicitly, and when his hand was saved he did not cease to bless God, considering that it was a miracle. The family was troubled by the insinuations of the neighbors, and some of them said: 'It is not astonishing that such things happen to you when you change your religion.' But afterwards, when his wife and children saw what a comfort his Bible was to him, and what a source of strength his 'new religion' was, they returned to the meetings. A few days since the mother said to me, 'Monsieur, I owe you much; now I know that Jesus died for me.' During the time that the father was in the hospital he was permitted to lead to the Saviour a young soldier who occupied the cot next his."

Subscriptions for the support of the McAll Mission, in France, may be sent to Miss Frances Lea, 1622 Locust Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

THE HORRORS OF CHINATOWN.

IN a communication to the Church, Miss M. R. Cable, who is laboring among the opium-dens and gambling-houses of the Chinese quarter of San Francisco, reports appalling details of the cruelties and immoralities of that abode of darkness and heathenism. Beginning six years ago, with the teaching of one little girl, she has now over one hundred whom she is permitted to teach and visit in their homes. In the course of her description of this work she says: "Opium-dens, gambling-dens, and houses of prostitution abound. In one of these houses we have a class of five little girls whom we have been teaching. These children are being raised for immoral purposes. The oldest of them, about eleven years of age, has, I think, been already bought by a procuress; and although we have reported her case several times to the officials, yet the law is evaded, and it now remains for Christian women to so arouse public opinion that these things cannot exist in our country. It is a burning disgrace to our boasted civilization.

"One little waif has been rescued. She had been made to sit up every night until one or two o'clock sewing on buttons; and when she became so weary that she could no longer work, her ears were nipped with scissors to arouse her. Her hands and face are covered with scars, giving unmistakable evidence of cruelty. She is in the mission home, where her 'wrinkled old face, that looked as if there was no joy on earth,' has begun to freshen and brighten under the kindly influences of love and Christian training."

A MAGIC WAND SUPERSEDED.

DURING the visit of a medical missionary to Telarbes, in Syria, and while he was dispensing medicines to the sick poor of the town, in the school-yard, a Moslem magic medicine man entered the village, and came immediately to pay his respects to the sheikh who was in the company. The missionary says: "This travelling quack presented a strange appearance, dressed in bright-colored baggy pants, short coat, tight sleeves, and an immense turban on his head. He seated himself on the ground, and called his servant to bring him his pipe. This servant, very poorly dressed, carried a bag in one hand, and in the other a stick about five feet long, on the end a large brass object covered with strange-looking figures and Arabic characters. The man carefully placed the magic wand (for this staff is supposed to possess wonderful powers of healing) in a safe place. From the bag he extracted a hookah, or water-pipe, which he proceeded to fill with tobacco and light for his master, who sat and smoked and criticised western methods of practicing medicine. When we had prescribed for all the sick and had loaded our medicine chest on a mule, the Arab doctor asked if any one was in need of his services. When answered in the negative, he ordered his servant to bring his donkey, saying he would go where he was wanted. The animal was brought, his master mounted, gave his legs a swing, and was off. His servant, with bag and magic staff, followed after."

A TELEGRAM TO BUY A SHEEP.

IN the Missionary Training Institute in London there come, it appears, trials of faith as in George Muller's Institutions, and others which are dependent on God for support. Miss L. Guinness mentions one or two cases. She says: "We have become vegetarians in practice, if not in principle, more than once. We well remember, about ten years ago—when lack of funds made the reduction of current expenditure imperative—students, household, and all going without meat for several days. Happy they who, under such circumstances, are able to retrench sufficiently! With a family of a hundred or more members looking to one for daily support, the matter is not so simple! However we did our best, and amongst other items reduced the butcher's bill at a sweep, by dispensing altogether with butcher's meat. Our party of missionary students began to realize that mutton and beef do not grow on dining-tables by means of natural law. Soon after this, at our weekly prayer-meeting, we were interrupted one day by a telegram, and on opening the envelope discovered the somewhat startling direction: "Buy a sheep, and charge to———." It was not long before our dining-hall again saw whole some legs of mutton, vegetarianism being over for the time. Ten years have passed since then; ten years in which the lesson of faith has often been repeated. We have known the living from hand to mouth, which, one has well said, is a blessed life if the hand that feeds the mouth is the hand of God. We have learned to understand very practically the meaning of the words, 'My God shall supply all your need.' And the lesson has at times been no easy one to con. But lately, for the same sufficient reason as of yore, we have re-adopted vegetarianism on certain days each week. And so we are vegetarians again, and day by day are reminded by the simple fare before us that 'Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.'

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a monthly magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents may be sent to the Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

"Strangely enough, on opening the letters one morning recently, we came across one from an old friend, containing, with a welcome gift of £5, the words, 'Will you accept the enclosed donation towards your butcher's bill, which must be a serious item in so large a household?' The gift seemed to us doubly a propos, as funds were even more than usually wanting."

THE COMING CRISIS.

By Dr. J. A. Wylie.

The Commencement of the Twelve Hundred and Sixty Years—Its Close in Revolution—The Beginning of the Seven Vials—Daniel's Extended Periods—The Sanctuary Beginning to be Cleansed—The Predicted Period of Repose—The Frog-like Spirits Appear—The Symbolic Hail.

THE Roman Emperor, Justinian, promulgated his celebrated Code of Laws throughout the whole of his reign, from A. D. 529 to 565. This Code gave a legal standing to the Papacy, and enacted persecuting laws against the spiritual Christian Church. This Code of Laws we fix on as the probable commencement of the 1,260 years of the Papacy's chief power, and of the Christian Church prophecying in sackcloth. (Rev. 11:2, 3.) Hence, adding 1,260 years to the Era of Justinian—529 to 565—we are brought down to 1789 to 1825, the epoch which included the Era of the French Revolution. We find that Revolution abrogating the Justinian Code, alienating to State purposes the Church's property, and declaring the temporal power of the Pope to be finally abolished. In these events we find what appears to be

The Termination of the 1,260 Years.

The Seven Vials commenced to be poured out at that French Revolutionary epoch. In 1821–26 the waters of the mystic Euphrates began to be dried up at the pouring out of the Sixth Vial at the Greek insurrection. To the 1,260 years, Daniel adds a total period of 75 years, namely, first 30 years (the 1,290), and then an additional period of 45 years (the 1,335 in Daniel 12:11, 12). The first 30 bring us down to the time when Eastern Christendom began to be cleansed of the Mohammedan desolation, and its cleansing is so far advanced that Protestant congregations are already numerous, and every year becoming more so. They now enjoy legal toleration in Turkey. "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the one thousand three hundred five and thirty years."

The Appearance of the Frog Spirits.

Western Europe has been enjoying a period of repose, which it is plain from the prophecy it was to do. Peace has been so lengthened and profound as to have excited the astonishment of statesmen, And meantime we have seen the three identical froglike spirits predicted under the Sixth Vial in Rev. 16:13, secretly plotting for an agitation that will exceed anything ever known, for when the Seventh Vial shall be poured out into the air, there shall be "voices, thunders, and lightnings, and a great earthquake such as was not since men were upon the earth; so mighty an earthquake and so great." These are the usual apocalyptic symbols of tumults, insurrections, wars and revolutions. The great national changes introduced by the political earthquake are further described by the reference to "islands and mountains," the symbol of great and small monarchies. "And every island shall flee away, and the mountains shall not be found." And a great hail shall be poured down from the firmament. Hail is the emblem of warlike armies from the north. The fall both of the little kingdoms and the great monarchies of Europe is plainly predicted in these apocalyptic representations; because in the earthquake every island is to flee away, and the mountains not to be found. This revolution will be accompanied by a war of unexampled severity and horror. The symbolic hail falling from the northern region indicates its fall from France or Russia.

The winds of popular fury, bursting in terrific force, will soon sweep the fragments of the Prophetic Image away, and efface every trace of its existence. Such is which prophecy reveals as awaiting the kingdoms of modern Europe. The prophecy of Daniel 2 synchronises with the Seventh Vial of Revelation, and throws light upon it. Both portend an entire change in the social and political fabric of Europe—the fall of its kingdoms, the extinction of its dynasties, the alteration of its laws and forms of government, the abolition of its offices and dignities, the dissolution of its armies, the destruction of all the symbols of its authority, and the obliteration even of the territorial boundaries of its States, Nothing short of this can fulfil the figures of Daniel and the symbols of the Apocalypse. In the one we not only behold the Prophetic Image ground to powder, but its last particles swept away by the tempest. In the other we see the earthquake burying cities, overthrowing mountains, and so agitating the ocean that its islands are submerged by its tumultuous waves. If figures have any meaning, these must import the total overthrow of all the powers that now bear rule in Europe, and the utter extinction of the last vestige of their authority. It is a new creation which the world is to undergo, and dreadful convulsions will usher it in.

The Catastrophe

THE COMING OF THE BRIDEGROOM.

By Mr. W. Birch.*

Britain's Menace from Ireland—National Sins to be Judged—The Rise of the Napoleonic King—His Seven Years' Covenant—The Formation of the Decem-Regal Confederacy—The Rapture of the Waiting 144,000—The Ascendancy of Antichrist.

As this Age is shown by Daniel's 2,345 years, dated from the Command to rebuild Jerusalem in Passover Week, B. C. 445, to end in Passover Week 1901, and as the ten-kingdomed confederacy is to be formed by about ten years before the End of this Age, that is to say, by about 1891, therefore the European wars necessary to change the present twenty-three kingdoms into these ten, and in which France will annex the territory up to the Rhine, may be anticipated to break out before the close of 1888. Britain will be drawn into the conflict, and Ireland, taking advantage of the opportunity, will obtain Home Rule, and become practically independent of England. When it is remembered that about one-fourth of the British Army consists of Irish Romanists, and that there are many thousands of Irish Roman Catholics in each of our large towns, it will be seen that if, at a time of European war and bad trade, they join with the socialists and the thousands of unemployed or discontented, the consequences to Britain may be most disastrous. As a nation, we have forgotten God, and merit His indignation. One among many of

Our National Sins

is the widespread disregard of the injunction to "keep holy the Sabbath Day." Notice the many public-houses and shops open for buying and selling on the Lord's Day; the fashionable dinners and amusements of the rich, and the debasing pleasures of many of the poor on that sacred day; together with no inconsiderable number of the "cultured classes" looking upon the written word of God as antiquated and obsolete, upon the Judgment Day as a superstition.

When the allied ten nations have been formed within the territories of the Roman Empire, there will arise about 1891-92 an eleventh little horn or king of called "the king of the North" or Syria; Egypt being called the South. This little king will climb into power as King of Syria, by flatteries (Daniel 7: 24; 11: 21), and after having first arisen as a little monarch over some lesser State, such as Macedonia for instance, inside the present Turkish Empire, he will then make a covenant or league for seven years with the Jews—probably from Passover Week, 1894, to Passover Week 1901—giving them the right of free worship in Jerusalem, where they will build a temple, and offer morning and evening sacrifices as in ancient times—probably about November 8, 1894 exactly 2,345 literal days before the Last Day of this Age, which is shown by Daniel's dates to be Thursday, April 11, the last day of Passover Week in 1901. This little king will then wage three wars against the king or ruler of the South (Egypt), and in the second war be hindered by the ships of Kittim; but in about two years and a half after the signing of the covenant with the Jews, he will conquer Egypt; and after heading a red-republican revolution in Europe (Rev. 17. 3), he will become its Military Dictator, about April, 1897.

Napoleon Name or Nature,

The first form of

The Ten-kingdomed Confederacy,

about 1891, will have been purely monarchical and liberal, but this second of scarlet form in 1897 will be Red-republican and Ultramontane. Then the third form of the confederacy of the ten nations about three and a half years from the signing of the Jewish Covenant will be that of the little king advanced to supreme power as Universal Emperor. The Pope will then be his obsequious servant, and, looking upon him as a God, shall command the world to worship him under pain of death. This shall last about three and a half years until our Lord descends on Olivet.

Nearly two years after the signing the seven years' term of the Jewish Covenant, the Lord Jesus shall suddenly appear in the clouds, but His presence will be felt only by the Christians who, like the five Wise Virgins, are ready and watching for Him. Though there may be several millions of Christians, yet only 144,000 of them will be ready to be with the Lord. We read in Daniel 9:25, "From the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem UNTO Messiah, the Prince, shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks" (Daniel 9:25), or sixty-nine weeks. A future Commandment to restore and rebuild Jerusalem will go forth at the same time as when the Jewish sacrifices shall be restored, in a rebuilt temple at Jerusalem, about November 8, 1894; and in sixty-nine weeks afterwards, namely, about March 5, 1886, our Lord may be expected to come as a Bridegroom to call His waiting disciples to His side. At the same time "the dead in Christ shall rise first," that is, all the saints who have died since the world began shall be raised.

To Ascend in the Air

After this Firstfruits Translation of the 144,000, business and political affairs will proceed on the earth as usual.

The King of Syria will cast covetous eyes on Egypt, and seek to obtain control of the Suez Canal; but though the ships of Kittim (probably meaning Britain) shall hinder him, he will eventually take possession of Egypt, and, having previously overcome three of the ten nations (Daniel 7:24), the remaining six will submit to his victorious arms, and acknowledge him as their Head. He will break his covenant, and stop the morning and evening sacrifice. Having overcome the Jews and other nations, his navy being the combined fleets of Europe, he will rule the world, including America. Those who refuse to receive his mark or to worship his image, he will order to be beheaded upon huge scaffolds erected in every town of Europe. But at last, after his reign of three and a half years, the Lord Jesus will appear on the Mount of Olives, Antichrist and the false prophet will be seized, and cast alive into a lake of fire. (Rev. 19:19.)

* An extract from a sermon preached in Free Trade Hall, Manchester, England, where he has a regular congregation of from one to two thousand persons. He has published his sermons every week for over fourteen years. The one from which this extract is taken is No. 776.

The Antichrist, Babylon, and the Coming of the Kingdom, by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages; Price in cloth covers, 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Lerned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Highest Judicial Honor of this Country was conferred last week on Melville Weston Fuller, a Chicago lawyer—the President having nominated him Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, to succeed Chief Justice Morrison Waite, whose death was chronicled in these columns on March 29. Mr. Fuller is fifty-five years of age. He has held a prominent place at the Illinois bar for over a quarter of a century, and has been an active member of the State Legislature. As he has never held a judicial position, considerable surprise is expressed at his selection for the highest judicial office in the land, where judicial ability is needed in a greater degree than political partizanship. Politically, Mr. Fuller is a Democrat,. Washington reports agree in stating that he did not seek the Chief Justiceship. There were no papers of application in his behalf, but there were many letters of recommendation coming from some of the most prominent and influential men of the East and West. Mr. Fuller gained a high reputation as an ecclesiastical lawyer some years ago, by his defence of Mr. (now Bishop) Cheney, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, who was prosecuted for leaving the word "regenerate" out of the Protestant Episcopal service of Infant Baptism. Mr. Fuller conducted the case through several years of tedious litigation, and rendered valuable assistance in the organization of the Reformed Episcopal Church.

Important Amendments to the Interstate Commerce Act have been proposed by the Senate Committee, which has had the apparent defects of this law under consideration. One of these amendments provides that a reduction in the published railroad rates shall only be made after three days public notice, instead of without previous notice, as at present. Another and more important amendment makes it the duty of the railroad companies to keep the printed schedules open to the public. The law is to be made stricter, and its violation is to be more efficiently guarded against, by the insertion of a clause which makes violation punishable, in the discretion of the court, by imprisonment as well as by the fine already provided for. This would certainly make railroad officials more careful, and prevent more effectively than is now the case, the practice of unjust discriminations in the matter of freight charges.

Another Unseemly Wrangle in the United States Senate took place on May 1. As usual, Mr. Ingalls, of Kansas, was conspicuous in it, and also, as usual, Mr. Voorhees, of Indiana, opposed him, and lost his temper in doing so. Mr. Ingalls renewed his attack on the late Generals, Hancock and McClellan, denounced the appointment of Mr. Lamar to the Supreme Court bench, and declared that Mr. Cleveland was never elected to the Presidency, but was "counted in by a partnership of "footpads and sneaks," and declared that the Democratic Senators who had resented his (Ingalls's) attack on the dead generals were, from the beginning, the enemies of the Union, and, like Senator Voorhees, avowed in sympathy with the South, Copperheads, Butternuts, Knights of the Golden Circle, and all their degraded allies. This tirade caused much excitement, and Senator Voorhees, in reply, declared that the charge made by Mr. Ingalls was a base lie, so infamous a falsehood that the black walls of perdition could produce nothing like it. "I spit upon it!" he shouted. "I spurn it! I kick it from me! I despise it! The Senator from Kansas cannot fish up from the filth of the sewers these old, stale lies, and make them respectable in the Senate of the United States, but it is possible for him, with a short step, to put himself upon a level with them." For some time it seemed that the interference of the police would be required to keep the peace. This was a scene, not in a low pot-house, where it would have been appropriate, but in the dignified Senate of the United States, which is supposed to be composed of the most cultured statesmen in the country.

The New Treaty Regulating Chinese Immigration, whose salient features were explained in our issue of March 22, is now before the Senate, having been reported last week by the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the recommendation that it be ratified. The Committee has added two amendments. One provides that the prohibitive features of the treaty shall apply to those Chinamen who are now absent from the country, regardless of any certificates they may hold, and the other requires that the classes privileged to return to the United States shall only be permitted to land upon presenting certificates issued subsequent to the present time. There seems to be little doubt that the treaty will be ratified, although the Pacific coast Senators are not unanimous in its favor. Senator Mitchell in particular is opposed to any treaty at all with the Chinese. He thinks the existing treaty should be abrogated, and a law passed absolutely prohibiting any Chinaman from coming to this country. There are other Republican Senators who are not enthusiastic for the new treaty, but they are too few to secure its rejection. A new anti-Chinese bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives, prohibiting Chinamen from coming into the United States after three months subsequent to the passage of the act, the provisions of which are to apply to all persons of Chinese descent, whether subjects of China or any other foreign power, and the words "Chinese laborers" shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers, and Chinese employed in the mines.

Destructive Floods Have Visited Northern Texas and part of the Indian Territory. Houses, fences, and crops on the bottom-lands have been completely swept away, and in some places houses had to be held in place by strong ropes. Men went in wagons to rescue helpless women and children who had become water-bound, and were unable to save themselves. Miles of railroad track were washed away, and traffic was seriously interrupted. At Lehigh, ten miles west of Ataka, Ind. Ty., forty families were compelled to abandon their homes. There was much suffering, but fortunately no lives were lost, so far as known.

The Condition of the Emperor of Germany somewhat improved last week, though it as yet affords little ground for hope of complete recovery. The bulletins are extremely vague. One of the latest said: "The Emperor was free from fever this morning and was able to rise. His strength is gradually increasing. The present favorable symptoms indicate that he will soon overcome the weakness remaining from the recent crisis. The weakness especially affects his legs. He made slight attempts to walk today. The weather still prevents his taking outdoor exercise. The Emperor makes himself understood more than formerly by whispers and signs, but he uses no phonetic system." The Vossische Zeitung says it has learned from a reliable scource that the local disease in the Emperor's throat has increased but little since the Emperor left San Remo.

The War Between Italy and Abyssinia has not been closed by the good offices of England. The well meant attempt at mediation has however been appreciated by the Italian Government. Prime Minister Crispi stated in the Italian Chamber of Deputies last week that the Italian Government had felt bound to accept the offer, it having received proofs of England's friendship. "England has no interests opposed to ours," continued the Premier, "and knows well that we shall never injure her, and that we may, under certain circumstances, aid her. Although the mediation mission undertaken by England did not succeed in accomplishing its object, still, its services were useful, in that it apprised King John of the pacific intentions of Italy." Motions were made demanding the recall of the Italian troops who are fighting against Abyssinia, but they were not acted on.

The Problem of the Scottish Crofters is to be dealt with through assisted emigration. The British Government proposes to grant them land in Canada, pay their passage out, and lend them a little capital. On May 1 Mr. Macdonald, who is judge-advocate for Scotland, stated in the House of Commons that $50,000 would be appropriated to increase the fund raised by private subscription for the relief of the crofters. This would give to each family $600, which they would be expected to repay in twelve annual installments. A free grant of Government land would be made in each case. It is stated that the crofters have the same objections to emigration that are manifested by the Irish, and cling to their wretched crofts in spite of their hardships. Whether love of their old homes will be stronger than the tempting offer of the Government, remains to be seen. What they wish is more land from the deer forests around them, but a Conservative Government could not consistently interfere in that direction.

The Attitude of the Pope towards the Nationalist, agitation in Ireland, mentioned in our last issue, has caused the leaders of the Irish National League to prepare a circular, which has been distributed throughout Ireland to every branch of the league, calling upon the members to be firm in their adherence to that body, and arranging for the simultaneous meetings of twenty League branches at a time, until all the members have met and conferred upon the line of action to be adopted in respect to the Papal rescript and other emanations of Rome. It is reported from Rome that a special congregation of the Propaganda, composed exclusively of Cardinals, is now examining several questions relative to the Irish agitation, upon which it will formally vote. Cardinal Simeoni has submitted at least ten points to the congregation. The Vatican appears resolved that those opposing its decisions will place themselves "outside the pale of moral and Christian law." The Vatican does not doubt that the Irish bishops will feel the necessity of adopting the line of conduct the Pope prescribes.

Warlike Disturbances in Macedonia Were reported last week. They show that Russia still continues her meddling policy, and is endeavoring to find an excuse for further hostilities against Turkey. The outbreak occurred at Monastir, in Macedonia. The Servian and Greek portions of the population are said to have united to oppose the authority of Turkey. A part of the same plot was a raid on Turkey by Montenegrins. Should the Macedonian rising grow menacing, diplomatic representations will be made by the British Minister at Athens, and if they do not result in satisfactory assurances, England, Austria and Italy will send a squadron to the Piræus. It is evident from many signs that the European atmosphere is becoming highly charged with dangerous elements, and generals and statesmen are foreboding a general conflict. In an interview with a French journalist General Gourko, the Russian Governor of Warsaw, denied that Russia was desirous of war, but said it was impossible to predict events. He hoped that, should an outbreak of hostilities occur, France would not remain neutral. He hinted that in such case France, as Russia's ally, would have to deal with England as Italy's ally. Nobody could count on England's neutrality, and this, he said, was a matter for serious reflection.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church assembled in New York on May 1. Ex-Judge Fancher made an address of welcome to the delegates. Bishop Bowman read the statement prepared by the Board of Bishops. The burning question of the admission of lady delegates was delicately handled in this statement. Attention was called to it as an innovation, but the bishops did not apparently wish to influence the Conference either for or against the admission. Neither did the address of the Bishops, which was read on the following day by Bishop Merrill, deal with the question in a partisan spirit. On Thursday, however, the Committee appointed to consider the question made its report, and it was against the admission of the ladies. It ran: After serious deliberation and serious discussion for several hours they are firmly convinced that the church contemplated the admission of men only as lay representatives, and that it never has consulted or expressed its desire upon the admission of women to the General Conference. Resolved. First, that under the constitution and laws of the church, as they now are, women are not eligible as lay delegates in the General Conference. On the presentation of this report, an animated debate ensued. How closely it touches the conference, may be inferred from a test vote taken on the question whether the ladies might be allowed to occupy seats among the delegates pending the decision of the Conference. The courtesy was refused them by a vote of 106 to 103.

The Evangelical Alliance is Extending With remarkable rapidity, and the number of its branches is multiplying almost daily. Dr. Russell, whose clear and forcible address at Washington, D. C., was recognized as a masterly presentation of the aim and methods of the Alliance, has yielded to the solicitation of the Board of Managers to resign his charge at Oswego, N. Y., and devote himself exclusively to the work of the Alliance. In a recent interview at Kingston, N. Y., Dr. Russell thus summarized the benefits to be derived in a city from organizing a branch of the Alliance: First, a local branch would unite all the churches in evangelical work; second, it would give laymen something to do; third, it "would work the city clean," that is to say, that every house in it would be visited, and the subject of religion and morality would be presented to every person; fourth, it would keep the churches constantly at work, and there would be a constant centralization of religious influence brought to bear upon the people.

A Man Chased to Death by a Shadow caused some excitement on board the French steamer La Champagne, which arrived in New York on April 29. Among the passengers on board when the steamer left Havre was a young Swiss gentleman, who was returning from a pleasure trip in Europe. He had lived in New York five years, and was in prosperous circumstances. Six months ago he returned to his old home in Switzerland, and spent a pleasant time with his family and friends, and afterward travelled about through Germany and Austria. He appeared to enjoy his trip immensely, and set out on his return to America, in good health and spirits. After the steamer had been two days at sea a change came over him. He grew melancholy, and seemed to be suffering from nervous trouble. He complained that he was being followed around the ship by some one who wanted to do him a mischief, and when anyone approached him he shivered and trembled like a frightened child. It was hoped that the invigorating sea-air would rid him of his hallucination, but it did not. On the morning of April 23, the passengers on deck were startled by seeing him rush on deck clad only in shirt and trousers, shrieking to them to stop the man who was after him. He reached the vessel's side before he could be stopped, and jumping on the rail plunged overboard. The vessel was stopped, and a boat lowered for his rescue, but he was never seen again. Men in sound health find it difficult to understand any one being so terrorized by an imaginary foe, but nervous sufferers know how possible it is for a man to be driven to frenzy by nervous disorder. It is a dreadful affliction, before which the stoutest heart quails; yet scoffers, and men who live in sin in defiance of God, forget that it is one of the scourges with which their Maker threatens them. "They are to flee when no man pursues." (Lev. 26: 17.)

The Transplantation of an Eye was an Operation performed in Philadelphia on April 28. It is the first time such an operation has been performed in this country, and there is a record of only two cases in which it has been successfully performed in Europe. These were at Glessen, Germany. The patient in the Philadelphia case was a young lady who was suffering from cencoma, which is the formation under the pupil of the eye of an opaque tissue which renders the sufferer totally blind. Dr. Fox, who had witnessed one of the operations at Glessen, decided to treat her by the same method. A piece of the pupil of the eye, one-sixth of an inch in width, and the fourteenth of an inch thick, was cut out, and replaced by a piece exactly the same size, from the eye of a rabbit, and the eye was then covered by the eyelids and bandaged. The operation was skilfully done, and it is believed that the patient will be able to see. If, happily, that should be the result, the achievement will be one of the greatest in the history of surgical science, and many poor, sightless creatures will rejoice in hope. One can but wish that the spiritually blind who hear of the cures wrought by the Great Physician of souls were similarly moved, and would come to Him and receive their sight. (John 9: 39.)

A Convict Marriage was Celebrated in Atlanta, Ga., on April 30. Several years ago two convicts in the State Penitentiary—a young woman of twenty years, and a man of thirty, were brought in contact in the course of prison duties. They grew attached to each other, and eventually a sincere and ardent love sprang up between them. It had a remarkable effect on both; they changed from being disobedient and unruly to model convicts. The man was a carpenter by trade, and he made himself useful about the prison and won the good opinion of the officials by his cheerfulness and industry. The woman also listened to the appeals of Christian visitors, and her penitence and evident anxiety to receive the forgiveness of God convinced them that her heart was changed. They made an appeal to the Governor on her behalf, and eventually secured a pardon for her. She was received into the Christian Home in Peters Street, where she led an exemplary life. On April 28, her lover's term expired, and he immediately sought her out, and with the consent of the manager of the Home, they were married. It may be hoped that the love which transformed their characters in the Penitentiary will continue to exercise its potent influence over them and keep them from returning to their evil ways. They will be safe from such a relapse if their hearts are filled with a still holier love for Him who died to deliver Satan's prisoners. (II Cor. 5: 14, 15.)

A Thrilling Adventure with a Panther is reported in the Evening Wisconin. It states that a few nights ago a farmer while driving home from Hot Springs, noticed that his horses while passing through the woods became uneasy. Finally they came to a standstill, and showing symptoms of fear, would advance no farther. The farmer whistled to his large and trusty bulldog, which was but a short distance in advance of him. Just as the dog started to return, in obedience to the alarm, his owner heard a noise in the branches of a tree which stood near the roadside, and when the dog had got within twenty-five yards of the wagon, he was pounced upon by a hugh panther, which leaped from the tree upon him. A terrible fight ensued. The farmer's team, became frightened and ran home with him. As soon as he reached his home he tethered his team, ran into the house, picked up his Winchester rifle, and returned to the spot to take a hand in the battle. He found his faithful dog torn to pieces, but no signs of the panther were visible. He probably owed his life to the courage and valor of his faithful hound who had died in his defence. The poor animal will always have a place in his grateful recollection, for men appreciate a devotion which saves their lives. It is marvellous that an infinitely greater love so seldom fills their hearts when they hear of One who to save their souls from eternal death met their enemy in deadly conflict and laid down His life in their cause. (Heb. 2: 14,15.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Vital statistics just published show that the annual death rate in New York city is about 26 to every 1,000 persons. In London it is a little less than 20.

At the fifth annual meeting of the American McAll Association, recently held in Brooklyn, it was stated that the contributions to the mission from America last year were $38,856.41.

Ground has been broken for a new Congregational church in Northfield, Mass. It will have a seating capacity of over a thousand. Mr. Moody has contributed $5,000; Mr. Sankey, $1,000.

Dr. Rainsford, rector of St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, this city, states that the church, which is wholly free, is receiving more, by $10,000 a year, than when it depended on pew rents.

Joseph Rabinowitz, the Christian reformer among the Jews, has recently been warned by the Russian Government to cease from his missionary labors among his brethren in the South and West of Russia.

The condition of the Rev. J. Denham Smith, the successful revivalist, is said to have improved, some of the more serious expressions of his malady having disappeared, and this has been accompanied with a corresponding rally in his strength.

On the second birthday anniversary of the baby King of Spain, 12,000 meat pies, as many cakes and oranges, and 1,500 pounds of sweets, have been ordered to regale the school children of Madrid, who will sing hymns and odes to their young sovereign.

Dr. George F. Pentecost's revival services at Schenectady, N. Y., were remarkably blest. They were held in the Opera House, which, though it has a seating capacity of 2,000, was not large enough to hold all who came. The number of converts was enormous.

A clue to the cause of the distress in London is given by a lady who has taken a prominent part in the efforts to relieve the sufferers. She says that 150,000 of them have come before the board, and of the whole number only two were abstainers from strong drink.

The revival services of Messrs Crossley and Hunter at Belleville, Ontario, have produced a profound effect. So widespread are the interest and religious feeling manifested that balls have been stopped, and the engagements of theatrical troupes cancelled, owing to the sparse attendance, and lack of interest taken in them.

Dr. L. W. Munhall and Prof. and Mrs. D. B. Towner are at present conducting a series of meetings in St. Paul, Minn. A thorough organization of the churches of the city was made prior to their arrival, a choir of two hundred voices collected, and a band of Christian workers trained to assist in the services. A week is to be spent in each of four central churches.

Mr. William Noble has been spending a few days in Paris on his way home from a trip through Southern France and Northern Spain. He spoke at the Y. M. C. A., where he enrolled a number of pledges and put the blue ribbon on the superintendent of the Paris City Mission. He also addressed a meeting of Mr. McAll's workers, and spoke at Miss De Broen's mission at Belleville.

Nicholas Carriger, one of the leading wine men of Sonoma County, Cal., recently wrote to a veteran temperance worker as follows: "I am convinced that I made a mistake when I entered into the wine and brandy business. This day I can say that all my vines, and wines, and brandy, and costly works, and wine-cellars—all would I now gladly give if I could only say just what you can to my boys and to all the children."

A cordial invitation to the World's Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations, to be held in Stockholm, Sweden, on July 21, has been extended by the King of Sweden, who takes a special interest in the proposed Conference. Any further details in regard to this Conference can be secured from the International Secretary, Mr. Richard C. Morse, at the Y. M. C. A. Building, 52 East Twenty-third Street, New York City.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

CURED AT LAST.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And a woman having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of any, came behind Him, and touched the border of His garment: and immediately her issue of blood stanched." Luke 8:43, 44.

A Sufferer and an Outcast—A Timid, Silent Seeker—I. What she had Done—Had Resolved to be Cured if she Could—Diseased Souls kept from the same Resolve—By Indifference—She Sought the Physicians—Persevered in the Treatment—Absurd Prescriptions of Ancient Times—Doctors Ceremony and Morality—Money All Gone—II. What had Come of It—A Sad Result—Yet Led to the Cure—III. What She Did at Last—The Simplest Thing—The Most Free—The Only Effectual Thing—IV. The Thing for the Convicted Sinner to Do.

THOUGH I take Luke's statement for a text, I shall constantly refer to the version of the same story which we find in Mark 5:25 to 29.

Here we have one of the Lord's hidden ones: a case not to be publicly described because of its secret sorrow. We have here a woman of few words and much shamefacedness. Her malady subjected her to grievous penalties according to the ceremonial law. There is a terrible chapter in the Book of Leviticus concerning such a case as hers. So that, in addition to her continual weakness, she was made to feel herself an outcast, under the ban of the law. This created, no doubt, great loneliness of spirit, and made her wish to hide herself out of sight. In the narrative before us she said not a word until the Saviour drew it out of her, for her own lasting good. She acted very practically and promptly, but she was she would have preferred to have remained in obscurity, if so it could have been. The immediate cure of this woman is the more remarkable because it was a wayside miracle. The Saviour was on the road to restore the daughter of Jairus; this woman's healing was an extra of grace, a sort of over-splash of the great fountain of mercy. The cup of our Lord's power was full—full to the brim—and He was bearing it to the house of the ruler of the synagogue; this poor creature did but receive a drop, which He spilt on the way. The episodes of the Lord Jesus are as beautiful as the main run of His life's poem.

A Silent Seeker:

I. Consider, therefore, concerning this woman,

What She Had Done.

She had been literally dying for twelve years. What had she been doing? Had she resigned herself to her fate, or treated her malady as a small matter? Far from it. Her conduct is highly instructive. First, she had resolved not to die, if a cure could be had. She was evidently a woman of great determination and hopefulness. She knew that this disease of hers would cause her life to ebb away, and bring her to the grave; but she said within herself, "I will have a struggle for it. If there is a possibility of removing this plague, it shall be removed, let it cost me what it may of pain or payment." Oh, what a blessing it would be if unsaved ones here would say, each one for himself, "I am a lost soul; but if a lost soul can be saved, I will be saved!" Alas, it is not so with many! Indifference is the rule—indifference about their immortal souls! Many are sick with dire spiritual disease, but they make no resolve to have it cured; they trifle with sin and death and heaven and hell.

Insensibility has seized upon many, and a proud conceit; they are full of sin, and yet they talk of self-righteousness. They are weak, and can do nothing; yet they boast of their ability. They are not conscious of their true condition, and hence they have no mind to seek a cure. How should they desire healing when they do not believe that they are diseased? May the Holy Spirit show every unregenerate person the fatal nature of his soul's disease; for this, I trust, would lead to the making of a firm resolve to find salvation, if salvation is to be had.

Alas! many have never come to this gracious resolution, because they cherish a vain hope, and are misled by an idle dream. Some fancy that in the article of death they may cry, "God be merciful to me a sinner," and so may leap into salvation. It seems to them a very slight business to be reconciled to God. They imagine that they can be converted just when they will, and so they put it off from day to day, as if it were of no more consequence than going to shop to buy a coat or a gown. Believe me, the Word of God does not set forth the matter in this way. It tells us that even the righteous scarcely are saved, and it rouses us to strive to enter in at the strait gate. God save you from every false confidence which would prevent your being in earnest about the healing of your souls!

Let us next note, that this woman having made her resolve, adopted the likeliest means she could think of. This woman went to gentlemen who were supposed to understand the science of medicine. Was it not natural that she should look for help to their superior wisdom? She cannot be blamed for looking to the Men of Light and Leading.

Many, in these days, do the same thing. They hear of the new discoveries of professedly cultured men, and hear their talk about the littleness of sin, and the larger hope, and the non-necessity of the new birth. Poor deceived creatures! they find in the long run that nothing comes of it; for the wisdom of man is nothing but pretentious folly. We cannot blame the woman that, being a simple soul, and anxious for healing, she went to those first who were thought to know most. Let us not, with Christ so near, go roundabout as she did, but let us touch our Lord at once.

No doubt the sufferer also tried men who had diplomas, or were otherwise authorized to act as physicians. How can you blame her for going to those who were in the succession, and had the official stamp? Many sin-sick souls nowadays are, at first, very hopeful that the ordained clergy can benefit them by their duly performed services and duly administered sacraments. At least, good men, eminent in the church, may be looked to for aid; surely these know how to deal with souls! Alas! It is vain to look to men at all, and foolish to depend on official dignity, or special repute. Some teachers do not know much about their own souls, and therefore know less about the souls of others. Vain is the help of man, be the man who he may. There is no medicine beneath the sky that can stay the palpitations of a heart which dreads the judgment to come. No earthly surgery can take away the load of sin from the conscience. No hand of priest or presbyter, prophet or philosopher, can cleanse the leprosy of guilt. The finger of God is wanted here. There is one Heal-all, one divine Catholicon, and only one. Happy is he that hath received this infallible balm from Jehovah Rophi—the Lord that healeth.

What perseverance that woman must have had! I am not going to say anything about our doctors nowadays; no doubt they are the most learned and skilful that can be: but in earlier times and medicines poisonous. Many of the prescriptions of those days are sickening, and yet ridiculous. I read yesterday a prescription, of our Saviour's time, warranted to cure many diseases, which consisted of grasshopper's eggs. These were supposed to exercise a marvellous influence, but they are no longer in the list of medicines. The tooth of a fox was said to possess special powers; but I noticed that one of the chief drugs of all, the most expensive, but the surest in its action, was a nail from the finger of a man who had been hanged. It was important that he should have been hanged. another finger-nail might have had no efficacy. Poor creatures were made to suffer most painfully by cruel medicines, which were far worse than the disease. As for surgical operations, if they had been designed to kill, they were certainly admirably arranged for their purpose. The wonder is that for twelve years poor human nature could stand out, not against the disease, but against the doctors. Brethren, the case is much the same spiritually.

Surgery was Murderous,

Have you been to Doctor Ceremony? He is, at this time, the fashionable doctor. Has he told you that you must attend to form and rules? Has he prescribed you so many prayers, and so many services? Ah! many go to him, and they persevere in a round of religious observances, but these yield no lasting ease to the conscience. Have you tried Doctor Morality? He has a large practice, and is

A Fine Old Jewish Physician.

"Be good in outward character," says he, "and it will work inwardly, and cleanse the heart." A great many persons are supposed to have been cured by him and by his assistant, Doctor Civility, who is nearly as clever as his master: but I have it on good evidence that neither of them apart, nor even the two together, could ever deal with an inward disease. Do what you may, your own doings will not staunch the wounds of a bleeding heart. Doctor Mortification has also a select practice; but men are not saved by denying themselves until they first deny their self-righteousness. Doctor Excitement has many patients, but his cures seldom outlive the set of sun. Doctor Feeling is much sought after by tender spirits; these try to feel sorrow and remorse; but, indeed, the way of cure does not lie in that quarter. Let everything be done that can be done apart from our blessed Lord Jesus Christ, and the sick soul will be nothing bettered. You may try human remedies for the space of a lifetime, but sin will remain in power, guilt will cling to the conscience, and the heart will abide as hard as ever.

Golden Ointment.

But this woman not only thus tried the most likely means, and persevered in the use of them, but she also spent all her substance over it. That was perhaps the chief thing in ancient surgery! this golden ointment which did good to the physician, whatever became of the patient. The most important point was to pay the doctor. This woman's living was wasting away, as well as her life. She continued to pay, and to pay, and to pay; but she received no benefit from it all; say, rather, that she suffered more than she would have done had she kept her gold. Thus do men waste their thought, their care, their prayer, their agony, over that which is as nothing: they spend their money for that which is not bread. At last she came to her last shekel. In the end, there was an end to her means; but so long as the silver lasted, she lavished it out of the bag. What would not a man give to be saved? I never wonder that dying men give their estates to priests in the hope that they can save their souls. If gold could purchase pardon, who would withhold it? Beloved, you see where this woman was. She was in downright, desperate earnest to have her mortal malady healed, and so she spared neither her labor nor her living. In this we may wisely imitate her.

II. We have seen what the woman had done; now let us think of What had Come of it.

We are told that she had suffered many things of many physicians. That was her sole reward for trusting and spending: she had not been relieved, much less healed; but she had suffered. She had endured much additional suffering through seeking a cure. That is the case with you who have not come to Christ, but, being under a sense of sin, have sought relief apart from Him. You have been trying to feel good, and to do good, that so you may be good; but the very effort has made you feel how far off you are from the goodness you so much desire. Your self-denial has excited cravings after evil, and your mortifications have given new life to your pride. Efforts after salvation made in your own strength act like the struggles of a drowning man, which sink the more surely. As the fruit of your desperate efforts, you have suffered all the more. In the end, I trust this may work for your good, but up till now it has served no healing purpose: you are now at death's door, and all your praying, weeping, church-going, and sacrament-taking do not help you one bit.

There has been this peculiarly poignant pang about it all, that You are Nothing Bettered.

Cheerily did you hope, but cruelly are you disappointed. You cried, "I have it this time," but the bubble vanished as you grasped it. The evil of your nature, when repressed in one place, broke out in another. You dealt with the symptoms of your disease, but you did not cut off the root of the mischief: it only showed itself in another form, but it never went away. You gave up one sin only to fall into another: you watched at the front entrance, and the thief stole in at the back door. Up till now, O soul, thou hast not come to Jesus, and after all thy goings elsewhere, thou art nothing bettered.

We read of this woman, that though she suffered much, she was nothing better, but rather grew worse. No better after twelve years of medicine? She bought disappointment very dearly. Friend, is this your condition? You are anxious to be right, and, therefore, you are earnest in every effort to save yourself; but still you are nothing bettered. You climb a treadmill, and are no higher after all your climbing. You drift down the river with one tide, and you float up again when it turns. Night after night you pull up in the same old creek that you started from. Oh, pitiful condition! Getting gray, too; becoming quite the old gentleman; and yet no nearer eternal life than when, as a lad, you used to attend the house of God, and wished to become a child of God. Nothing bettered? No;

She Grew Worse?

Fresh mischief had developed: other diseases fed upon her weakness; she was more emaciated, more lifeless, than ever. Sad result of so much perseverance! And is not that the case with some of you who are in earnest, but are not enlightened? You are working, and growing poorer as you work. There is not about you so much as there used to be of good feeling, or sincere desire, or prayerfulness, or love for the Bible, or care to hear the gospel. You are becoming more careless, more dubious, than you once were. You have lost much of your former sensitiveness. You are doing certain things now that would have startled you years ago, and you are leaving certain matters undone which once you would have thought essential. Evidently you are caught in the current, and are nearing the cataract. The Lord deliver you!

This is a sad, sad case! As a climax of it all, the heroine of our story had now spent all that she had. She could not go now to the Egyptian doctor, or to the Syrian doctor, or to the Hebrew doctor, or to the Roman doctor, or to the Greek doctor. No; now she must do without their flattering unction in the future. As for those famous medicines which raised her hopes, she can buy no more of such costly inventions. This was, perhaps, her bitterest grief: but—let me whisper it in your ear—this was the best thing that had yet happened to her; and I am praying that it may happen to some of you. At the bottom of your purse, I trust, you will find wisdom. When we come to the end of self we come to the beginning of Christ. That last shekel binds us to the pretenders, but absolute bankruptcy sets us free to go to Him who heals diseases without money and without price. Glad enough am I when I meet with a man who is starved out of self-sufficiency. Welcome, brother! Now you are ready for Jesus. When all your own virtue has gone out of you, then shall you seek and find that virtue which goeth out of Him.

III. This brings to our notice, thirdly,

What She Did At Last.

Weaker and weaker had she become, and her purse had become lighter and lighter. She hears of Jesus of Nazareth, a man sent of God who is healing sick folk of all sorts. She hears attentively; she puts the stories together that she hears; she believes them; they have the likeness of truth about them. "Oh," says she, "there is yet another opportunity for me. I will get in the crowd, and if I can only touch the bit of blue which he wears as the border of his garment, I shall be made whole." Splendid faith! It was thought much of in her own day, and we may still more highly prize it now that faith has grown so rare.

After all, this was the simplest and easiest thing that she could do. Touch Jesus. Put out thy finger and touch the hem of His garment. The prescriptions she had purchased were long; but this was short enough. The operations performed upon her had been intricate; but this was simplicity itself. Not only was this the simplest and easiest thing for the poor afflicted one, but certainly it was the freest and most gracious. There was not a penny to pay. It is so this morning, dear hearer. Come, and receive grace freely. Bring no good works, no good words, no good feelings, no good resolves, as the price of pardon; come with an empty hand, and touch the Lord by faith. The good things which you desire, Jesus will give you as the result of His cure; but they cannot be the cause or the price of it. Accept His mercy as the gift of His love! Come empty handed, and receive! This is

The Only Effectual Thing.

Touch Jesus, and salvation is yours at once. Simple as faith is, it is never-failing. A touch of the fringe of the Saviour's garment sufficed: in a moment she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague. "It is twelve years ago," she said to herself, "since I felt like a living woman. I have been sinking in a constant death all this while, but now I feel my strength come back to me." Blessed be the name of the great Healer! She was exceeding glad. Tremble she did, lest it should turn out to be too good to be true; but she was most surely healed. O my dear hearer, do trust my Lord, for he will surely do for you that which none other can achieve. Leave feeling and working, and try faith in Jesus. May the Holy Spirit lead you to do so at once!

IV. And now, poor convicted sinner! here comes the driving home of the nail. Do thou as this woman did. Ask nobody about it, but do it. She did not go to Peter, James, and John, and say, "Good sirs, advise me." She did not beg from them an introduction to Jesus, but she went of her own accord, and tried for herself the virtue of a touch. You have had advising enough; now come to real work. There is too much tendency to console ourselves by conversations with godly men: let us get away from them, and speak to their Master. Talks in the inquiry-room, and chats with Christian neighbors, are all very well; but would be infinitely better. I do not blame you for seeking religious advice; this may be a halfway house to call at, but do not make it the terminus. Press on till, by personal faith, you have laid hold on Jesus. Yield to the sacred impulse which is just now operating upon you. Do not say, "To-morrow may be more convenient." In this woman's case, there was the Lord before her; she longed to be healed at once, and so, come what may, into the crowd she plunged. She was so enfeebled, that one wonders how she managed to get near Him. However, there was her chance, and she seized it. There was the fringe of the Lord's mantle; out went her finger; it was all done. Oh, my friend, you have an opportunity now, by God's great grace, for you are in His house of prayer. Jesus of Nazareth passeth by at this moment. He who speaks to you is not trying to say pretty things, but he is pining to win your soul for Jesus. Oh, how I wish I could lead you to that saving touch!

One Touch of Jesus

O Lord, save this people! Why do you come, Sunday after Sunday, in such crowds? and why must I stand here and bleed my heart away in love to your souls? Is the sole result to be that I help you to spend an hour and a half in a sort of religious amusement? What a waste it is of my labor, and of your time, unless some gracious work is done! Oh, sirs, if you are not brought to Christ, my preaching will prove a curse to you! It appalls me to think that the preaching of the gospel will be a savor of death unto you unless it brings you life. Put not the day of grace from you. By the living God, I do implore you, trust the living Redeemer. As I shall meet you all, face to face, before the judgment-seat of Christ, I do implore and beseech you, put out the finger of faith, and trust the Lord Jesus, who is so fully worthy to be trusted. The simple trust of your heart will stay the death which now works in you. Lord, give that trust, for Jesus' sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

MR. BEECHER LEARNING GRAMMAR.*

THE school-book was divided into two divisions in Grammar, under leaders on either side, and the grammatical reviews were contests for superiority, in which it was vitally important that every member should be perfected. Henry [Mr. Beecher] was generally the latest choice, and fell on his side as an unfortunate accession, being held more amusing than profitable on such occasions. The fair leader on one of those occasions took the boy aside to a private apartment, to put into him, with female tact and insinuation, those definitions and distinctions on which the honor of the class depended.

"Now, Henry, A is the indefinite article, you see, and must be used only with a singular noun. You can say A Man, but you can't say A Men, can you?" "Yes, I can say amen too," was the rejoinder. "Father says it always at the end of his prayers."

"Come, Henry, now don't be joking! Now, decline He. Nominative He, possessive His, objective Him. You see His is in the possessive. You can say His book, not Him book." "Yes, I say Hymn-book, too," said the scholar, with a quizzical twinkle. Each one of these sallies made his young Mentor laugh, which was the victory he wanted. "But now, Henry, do be serious; just attend to the active and passive voice. Now, I strike, is active, you see, because if you strike you do something. But I am struck is passive, because if you are struck you don't do anything, do you?" "Yes I do—I strike back again."

He Resolves to be a Sailor.

He made up his little bundle, walked the wharf, talked with sailors and captains, hovered irresolute on the verge of voyages, never quite able to grieve his father by a sudden departure. At length he wrote a letter announcing to a brother that he could and would no longer remain at school; that he had made up his mind for the sea; that if not permitted to go, he should go without permission. This letter was designedly dropped where his father picked it up. Dr. Beecher put it in his pocket and said nothing for the moment, but the next day asked Henry to help him saw wood. Now the woodpile was the Doctor's favorite debating ground, and Henry felt complimented by the invitation, as implying manly companionship.

"Let us see," said the doctor; "Henry, how old are you?" "Almost fourteen!" "Bless me! how boys do grow! why it's almost time to be thinking what you are going to do. Have you ever thought?" "Yes; I want to go to sea." "To sea! of all things! well, well! after all, why not? Of course you don't want to be a common sailor. You want to get into the navy?" "Yes, sir, that's what I want." "But not merely as a common sailor, I suppose?" "No, sir; I want to be a midshipman, and after that a commodore." "I see," said the Doctor cheerfully. "Well, Henry, in order for that you know you must begin a course of mathematics and study navigation and all that." "Yes, sir, I'm ready." "Well then, I will send you up to Amherst, next week, to Mount Pleasant, and then you'll begin your preparatory studies, and if you are well prepared I presume I can make interest to get you an appointment." And so he went to Mount Pleasant, at Amherst, Mass., and Dr. Beecher said shrewdly: "I shall have that boy in the ministry yet."

* From "A Biography of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher; By William C. Beecher and Rev. Samuel Scoville, assisted by Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher; 713 Pages, with numerous portraits and illustrations. Price, $3.00, cloth. Published by Charles L. Webster & Company, New York.

Cornelia Sorabji, the Indian Girl Graduate.

Isaac Bourne's Birthday Motto.

A Providential $100 Bill.

While Henry and Charles were at college, Dr. and Mrs. Beecher were very much straitened for money. One evening particularly they were talking about it, and did not know what they should do to keep the boys along. At last Dr. Beecher said: "Well, the Lord always has taken care of me, and I am sure He always will." The mother lay awake and cried. She cried because she did not see how they should get along; but what most troubled her was, that her husband had so much faith and she had not any. The next morning was Sabbath morning. Some one rang at the door and a letter was handed in, containing a one hundred dollar bill and no name. They did not know then who gave it, but learned afterward that it was Mr. Homes—a thank-offering at the conversion of one of his children.

CORNELIA SORABJI:

The First Girl-Graduate of West India.

MUCH interest has been aroused in the young lady whose portrait appears on this page, from the fact that she was the first lady in India to avail herself of the advantages of a University education. She entered the Deccan College at Poona in 1884, and like all pioneers had much to contend with. She felt keenly her isolated position among upwards of 300 men, who, with the exception of two Englishmen and a few Parsees, were all Hindus, and who naturally looked with no kindly eye upon this innovation. It is needless to dwell upon the annoyances to which she was subjected, or to the unfriendly criticisms among her own countrymen on her unprecedented course, but, with the goal of her ambition always in view, she went bravely on, winning golden opinions from Principal and Professors alike.

To all who have watched her course with interest, not unmixed with curiosity, it is no small gratification to find that she has, even at this early period of her life—for she is only just out of her teens—done her part in elevating the position of her countrywomen. Her brave, high-souled, gentle behaviour and influence, cannot fail to raise the character and ability of women in the estimation of the Parsee and Hindo young men with whom she daily came in contact. Among her own sex, her example has already borne fruit, two Parsee ladies and one Jewess having sought for admission into the Colleges in Bombay and Poona. In Miss Sorabji's case no concessions were made on account of her sex. She studied Latin in common with the men. She was "top of her year" in the previous examination, has held a scholarship each year of her course, was "Hughlings Scholar" in 1885, having passed head of the University in English, "Havelock prizeman" the end of the same year, being top of the Deccan College in English, has taken honors each time, and in the final B. A. examination of the Bombay University, held in November, 1887, she was one of the four in the entire Presidency, and the only student from her own College, who suceeded in gaining First Class honors. Miss Sorabji is a Parsee Christian lady, the daughter of a native missionary.

ISAAC BOURNE'S BIRTHDAY MOTTO.

(See Illustration.)

WHO has not seen homes in which two mighty influences are at work—the children growing up in doubt whether they shall follow the example of their pious mother, or the example of a careless, scoffing father? Isaac Bourne's home was one of that kind. He was a hard worker and had won a good position as foreman in the employ of a firm of contractors. In his youth he had been a scholar in the Sunday-school, and though never identifying himself with a church, had been regular in attendance on religious service. Latterly, however, he had grown careless in such matters, and from association with infidels, had contracted a habit of sneering at the Bible and religious teachers, much to his godly wife's distress.

"What book is that you have there?" he said one Sunday evening, as his two little girls hastily left the supper-table to resume their examination of a little volume which seemed to be regarded as a great treasure.

"Only a birthday-text book," said the younger; "Mamie's Sunday-school teacher gave it to her."

"What's a birthday-text-book?" asked the father. "I never heard of such a thing."

"It's a book with a text for every day in the year," said Mamie, "and we find out where our birthdays are and then we have a text for a motto. See, here's mine: 'Wisdom is more precious than rubies.'"

"That's sense," said Isaac, "though I suppose it is a Bible text. It's a pity religious folks don't remember it. They'd be of more use if they did. Let me have a look at the book. See, my birthday is March 25; now let us see what sort of a motto they give me." Isaac turned over the pages till he found the date, and read: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Isaac was silent. He changed color as he handed the book back to Mamie, and leaving his cup of coffee only half drunk went out.

Mrs. Bourne had not been unobservant while clearing the table; she heard the text read, and noticed her husband's embarrassment and his sudden departure. She knew from his manner that he was deeply moved, and going up-stairs to her bedroom, she fell on her knees and prayed for him as she often did, but this time with a spark of hope in her breast.

Isaac meanwhile was walking out in the fields to think it out, as he said. He knew well enough that in the natural world the crop was like the seed, and he had had enough experience in managing the rough gang of men under his control to be aware that in the moral world the same rule held good. Young fellows who took to drink and evil ways were no good in the work, and could not be got rid of too soon. What if the law held in the spiritual world! "Whatsoever a man soweth," Ah! what a harvest would be his in that case! The big strong man actually trembled as he thought of the life he had lived for the last ten years.

It was after ten o'clock when he once more entered his home. He had been walking and thinking all the time, and had made up his mind. The children were gone to bed and Mrs. Bourne was sitting up for him, reading the Bible, which she closed when he entered, lest it should lead him to utter one of those sneers which always cut her to the heart. There was no danger of that to-night, however.

"Wife," said Isaac, "I am going to turn over a new leaf. I guess I have been on the wrong track a considerable time. I want to get back to the old route; the times we had when we were married first. You'll have to help me, for I'm a long way out."

Ah, glad was the pious woman to avail herself of the opportunity! Knowing well his weakness and his temptations, she led him to abandon the hope of getting back by his own strength and directed him to the Source of the only power that could transform his heart and life.

RESCUING PEOPLE IN THE INUNDATIONS IN PRUSSIA.

(See Illustration.)

THE disastrous floods in Prussia, caused by the overflowing of the Elbe, the Oder, and the Vistula, with their tributaries, have rendered one hundred thousand people homeless, and have caused misery and immense loss of property. To the east of Berlin, and especially in the province of Posen, where the peasantry are mostly of Polish race, the destitution is severely felt, as the means of relieving it are deficient; and Her Majesty, the Empress Victoria, in her journey to that province, on purpose to see the condition of the distressed inhabitants, and to supervise the efforts of public charity, performed a a royal office which has won for her deserved applause. In the opposite direction, on the banks of the lower Elbe, between Hanover and Mecklenburg, several towns were inundated, especially Domitz and Lenzen; it was in the latter town that the scene was witnessed which is depicted in the illustration.

Rescuing People in the Inundated Districts of Germany.

Domitz, which belongs to Mecklenburg, was entirely isolated, and had all communication with the rest of the world cut off, until steamboats of the Magdeburg line arrived. Lenzen and Seedorf were so flooded that the water reached the roofs of the lower and smaller houses, and the first-floor windows of the others. At Eldenburg two hundred persons were drowned, and there was great loss of life in other districts; the bursting of the dykes suddenly overwhelmed the farm-houses and cottages built in the meadows below them, and many families perished, as well as much cattle. Huge blocks of drifting ice and congealed snow came down from the hills and floated to a great distance; in some instances with beasts, and even human beings, carried away upon them.

A famine is threatened in Posen, Pomerania, and Silesia, and the number of persons emigrating to America will soon be enormously increased. The alluvial lands of the Vistula are now a single field of destruction, affecting seventy-nine villages with about thirty thousand inhabitants. The whole of this vast tract about the town of Elbing, from three hundred to four hundred square miles, is under water. There is no possibility of either harvest this year or of spring cultivation, as the submerged land lies below the river and the Baltic. Experts say it will take months of labor to steam pump the water away. These alluvial soils are the best agricultural land. It has for the most part been cultivated by yeomen farmers, who were, till floods overwhelmed them, in fair circumstances.

The Emperor has handed 40,000 marks (about $10,000) from his own purse to Herr Achenbach, the head of the relief committee, who accompanied the Empress to Posen to inquire into the distress by the floods. The money is to be used for the relief of the sufferers. The Empress on her arrival in Posen was enthusiastically cheered by the people. She first visited the asylum, a large school-house where the homeless are temporarily lodged, and thence went to the Governor's house, where she took lunch. Addressing Councillor Jacobs the Empress said: "I commission you to express to all taking a helpful part in the present danger the thanks of the Emperor and myself. The calamity that has befallen you arouses our deepest sympathy, and we hope to alleviate your sufferings as far as human help can alleviate them." The persons who have been prominent in helping the sufferers by the floods were presented to the Empress, who thanked them for their efforts to alleviate the distress among the people.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 287.)

A Glorious Occupation.

PHILIP had been between four and five years at sea, when, one wild December evening, just as I was thanking God in my heart that he was safe ashore, and his father's ship in the Liverpool docks, Philip suddenly burst into our quiet room with an unusual vehemence, which startled both George and me.

"Quick! quick! Aunt Milly!" he cried breathlessly; "put on your bonnet and cloak in a moment, and come with me! I've a cab waiting at the door. Come quickly; for it is a wild night, and people may die out of doors, if they do not find shelter soon. Wrap yourself up warmly, my dear."

Of late Philip had assumed a masterful tone towards me, which amused me; and now he hurried me like a whirlwind out of the sitting-room, and up-stairs to my chamber-door, while he continued speaking, without giving me an opportunity for asking a question. He ran back to George while I dressed myself; but he stood at the open door, and at the first sight of me closed it, and, as if eager not to lose a moment, hastened through the hall to the cab at the door. He helped me in, sprang in after me, and the next instant we were rattling along the street, through the storm of rain and wind.

"But where are you taking me, Philip?" I asked, with increasing anxiety.

He did not answer; and there was something in his silence, and the wildness of the night that stirred me to the heart. A faint, vague dread awoke within me. During the whole of my stagnant, uneventful life I had never been out of doors in such a night and such a storm as this. The streets were almost deserted, and sudden, violent gusts of wind roared along them, with driving showers of rain and hail. Great masses of black clouds, torn into long and ragged pennons, drifted across the dark sky. I wished he would tell me where we were going, and what he wanted me to do; but I felt almost afraid of asking him.

"My dear little Aunt Milly!" was all he said; "the best little woman in the world!"

We stopped at length before a dark and narrow passage, not far from the river: for I could just catch the gleam of distant lights twinkling across its troubled current. He led me down this passage to an open space, beyond, where I could distinguish the strip of sky overhead only by the little rifts in the black clouds which covered it. He paused for a moment, and listened beside an old door, but there was not a sound to be heard; and with a hurried exclamation of fear, he lifted the latch, and opened it. There was no glimmer of light; but Philip drew out a little pocket-lantern from under his rough seaman's coat, and turned it full upon the interior of the place.

It was a mere shed; and one corner of the wall had either given way, or it was in the course of being pulled down, for the wind was blowing, and the rain and hail beating in through a great gap. Under the wall farthest from this wide opening, and upon the damp, unpaved floor, there was crouching a figure, upon which the light of Philip's lantern shone fully. It was that of a miserable girl, very young, as I knew afterwards, but old-looking to my eyes, that had never seen a face like hers; the hollow cheeks were painted, and the thin, wasted arms and shoulders were hardly covered by the dingy finery that could not shield her from the storm. Her wild, bright eyes glared at me fiercely; or, rather, they gazed past me, at Philip. I thrust myself between him and her, as if to hide her from him, with a vague sense of aversion and terror in my heart.

"Aunt Milly!" said his pleasant, pitiful voice behind me, "this is work for you, not me, to do."

"Philip!" I cried, half angrily, turning round to look into his face. It was pale and sorrowful, so as I had never seen it before, with an expression of deep pain and pity in his eyes, as they looked back at me earnestly. Yet it seemed to me, in spite of its sadness and pain, almost like the face of an angel.

"Save her!" he said, "God sent me to save her from the river; and he sends you now to save her from sin. I give her into your hands."

"Leave us," I said. I could not bear to see him so near to her, or know that her eyes were fastened upon him. Yet when he was gone I did not know what to do. The terrible, painted face looked up at me with the sullenness of despair, yet with a dumb pleading in the solemn eyes that was irresistible. I saw that her poor, tawdry clothing was drenched with rain, or perhaps with the troubled waters of the river, and that she was shivering violently. A short, dry cough shook her. We gazed at one another in painful silence. "God help me!" I cried, in my own heart; "if I cannot love her, I can do nothing for her." Then I came to know, as I never knew before, that Christ Himself could not save us from our sins, if He did not love us with a love that passeth knowledge. Love alone wins the victory over sin. I drew nearer to the crouching girl. I laid my hand, which had never touched any one like her, upon her forehead, and found it burning with fever. The fierce, questioning eyes were fixed upon me, without blenching an instant.

"Will you come home with me?" I asked gently.

"Your own home?" she said.

"Yes, with me," I answered; "come. You shall have some food first, and a night's rest; and then we will talk together."

But the girl bent down her head till it almost touched my feet, hiding it from me. "Not your home!" she repeated, sobbing.

"Yes," I said; "there is a little room inside mine. You shall sleep there; and to-morrow you shall tell me all."

"You ought not to have me," she cried; "you never would, if you knew all."

"There is no need for me to know," I answered; "our Lord Jesus Christ knows it, yet He sends me to take you home."

Perhaps, I thought, He will let me take her to another home some day, in His Father's home, where she has the same right to enter that I have. I lifted the miserable girl from the ground, though she made a feeble effort to withstand me; and I drew her cold hand through my arm. The storm beat vehemently against us as I opened the door! but Philip had been standing outside in the rain and hail, and without uttering a word, he led the way to the street, and put us both into the cab, where the girl sank down on the floor, and hid her face in the folds of my dress.

The little room, where Philip had slept when a child, did not need much preparation, and before an hour was gone by, the poor, forlorn, lost girl was sleeping there, with the painted cheeks washed clean, and the feverish head resting peacefully on the pillow. The last thing, before I went to bed myself, I stole in softly to look at her, shading the candle with my hand, as I had been wont to do when my little Philip was lying there. When I came away, I opened my Bible, and read with misty eyes, before which the words swam confusedly, the story of the woman who "stood at the feet of Jesus, behind Him, weeping, and began to wash His feet with her tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed His feet, and anointed them with ointment." "Wherefore," said the Lord, "her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much; but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little."

But the next morning the girl was sullen, and would say nothing except that she must go, and she could not live the life we led. I reasoned with her, and laid before her the awful death from which Philip had rescued her the night before, and the remorse which would again drive her to self-destruction. She listened, and shuddered, and wept; yet she persisted that she must go—the stillness and quiet of our life would kill her. I seemed to have no power to cast out the wayward and sullen spirit that had entered into her. What was I to do! Must I summon Philip to speak to her? I shrank, why I hardly knew, from that.

Then all at once a light broke in upon my perplexity, shining down the years that had gone by, as though they had been years of long training for some special work God would have us do for Him. There was my life of monotony, and separation from those ties most women have, and George's years of pain, and slowly purifying chastisement. Now Philip had guided us into the field, white unto the harvest, where we two, consecrated by suffering, might reap, and receive wages, and gather fruit unto eternal life, until we should be called to rejoice together with our Lord.

No; Philip was not the one to win the stubborn girl back to God. But I could take her to George. Without telling her where we were going, I bade her come with me. I can see her now—the weary young creature, standing on the threshold, and peering forward with searching, hollow eyes into his room. And his face worn and wasted with pain, and his thin hair white as snow, and his hand stretched out to her, as if he knew why I brought her to him, and needed no word of explanation.

"Come," he said, in a tone as if he were speaking to some wayward child, "come and talk to me, and let us see what we can do to get right again."

The girl stepped softly into the room, her face changed from stubbornness to pity. I heard him ask her to give him a draught of water, and to lower the blinds for him; and she did so with womanly gentleness, moving as quietly as I could have done. Then I waited no longer; for I saw there was a link between them there could never be between her and me. It may be that it was the travel-stained feet, and the unanointed head of the Lord, that first stirred hope in the heart of the woman that was a sinner. There was something that even she could do for Him.

How happy we were that evening! Captain John Champion's sunburnt face wore a look of great content. Philip whistled gayly as he wandered about the house and garden. George lay upon his sofa, glad at heart, for he had found work to do for God and his fellow-creatures. And I felt that life had new possibilities, and could never again sink into an insignificant monotony.

I remember that when Captain John Champion left us to go to his lodgings, which were near at hand, he put both his hands on Philip's shoulders, and looked into his eyes with a steadfast, profound look of love.

"God bless thee, my lad!" he said. "Never was father better pleased with his son!"

Yes; that was our work, given at last directly into our hands. It seemed strange to me at first, and I shrank from it a little; but it was never strange to George. There was with him some unseen power, which never failed of victory. After awhile we were compelled to take a house near to us, near enough for his influence to be felt in it. Other persons, who had the same work at heart, joined themselves to us; and before long we found ourselves too busy for life to be monotonous, or pain unendurable.

Philip was still with his father upon the sea, when his uncle's great fortune fell to him as heir-at-law. I knew of it some weeks before he did, for he had just set sail when his uncle died, and could not be recalled. I occupied myself, in such spare moments as I had, in building castles in the air for him, as I was wont to do when he was a clever boy at school.

I should like to have seen him when he first heard the news of his inheritance; but this could not be, for a letter from the lawyer found him at one of the ports they touched at, where they expected news from us. So I did not see him in the first flush of his change of fortune. When he reached home, seven weeks later, there was no difference in him that I could discover.

"You are a rich man now, Philip," I said, after I had kissed him, and held him near to me for a minute or two, scanning his face closely.

"Yes," he answered, "and I am glad of it."

"You can become whatever you please now," I said, with a thrill of exultation, for I wanted all the world to know what he was; "you will become a great man, and make yourself a famous name."

"No," he answered, so quietly that I felt checked and quieted also, "I can do nothing but what God has chosen for me. This money does not set me free from the work He has given me to do."

"What do you mean?" I asked. "This great fortune changes your position and circumstances altogether. You cannot remain a mate on board a merchant vessel; that would be absurd with wealth like yours. Remember, it brings its own responsibilities and duties."

"It brings no duty greater than that I am already fulfilling," said Philip, "you forget my father cannot live except on the sea; and that no one can take my place with him. The chief difference my uncle's money could make to us, if it were ten times as much, would be that our cabins might be more luxuriously fitted up. The sea and the wind care little whether one is rich or poor; there are the same storms and the same risks for us seamen."

"But, Philip!" I exclaimed.

"Well," he said, smiling, "there is my father in one scale, my fortune in the other. Which is to kick the beam, Aunt Milly? No, no. I gave up my profession for his sake, and it is a light matter to give up this. But I am glad to be rich, too; for if any whim or fancy should come into this dear head, I can gratify it to the utmost. Tell me what my money shall do for you?"

But it could not do anything for me to compensate for the disappointment I suffered in seeing him push aside the golden opportunities offered to him. My brother upheld him in his resolution. I know now that George and he, in their close friendship, had climbed nearer up to God than I, and looked down, as though they were already sitting in heavenly places with Christ Jesus, upon the glittering accidents of time, which dazzled my eyes with their lustre. Captain John Champion sided with me, and at times poured into my ear his bitter regrets at being a hindrance to his son's career. But there was no remedy for it; none that we could see. We never saw a cloud on Philip's sunny face, nor heard a syllable of dissatisfaction with his lot, If he felt any, the thought of our Lord in His uncongenial work checked it. What then was of gloom, and of natural disappointment, was fought out in loneliness, with no eye to witness but his Master's.

One thing would prosper from his wealth, that was certain. Our work would no more be limited for want of funds. He made, too, an arrangement that was good for us all. One evening, before he went away again, after all the law-business connected with his inheritance was settled, he found me weary, rather with the anxieties than with the labor of our work, which was increasing almost beyond my strength. I had good assistants under me, but not one who could share the special cares crowding upon me. He stood looking at me that evening with a very thoughtful face.

"Aunt Milly," he said, "you seem scarcely older than when I came to you nearly twenty years ago."

That was true; for I had had no girlhood, and his life had brought back youth and hope and gladness to mine. I hardly felt older than when he was a child, standing at my knee to say his lessons.

"But you will soon be old if this goes on," he continued. "I must find a mother for your girls."

"I wish you would," I said, almost despondently.

"I will coax Mrs. Transome to come," he answered; "she's lonely in her little place, now Transome is gone, and she will soon enter heart and soul into our work here. Don't suppose she is too old; she is a sharp, active, little woman; besides, what you want is not another person to work, but some one to share your anxiety. You must recollect I am a rich man now, and what money can buy I can pay for."

"Money cannot buy what I want," I said.

"No; you want Mrs. Transome," he went on, "and she will come. She will trot about the house, and give a kind word to this one and that; and they'll learn to look upon her as a kind of mother, with her bright, natty, old-fashioned ways, and her pleasant face. Wouldn't such a woman be a comfort to you, Aunt Milly?"

"I think so," I answered, yet doubtfully; but he would not heed the hesitation in my tone.

"She shall come," he said. "I will set about it at once. We must set apart a little room for her own; and you'll find it will become a haven for the girls in their worst moments. Yes; we must have Mrs. Transome; the home is not complete without her."

When Philip had any idea like that in his head, he could not rest till it was worked out. The next day the little room was chosen; and the day after it was so furnished that you felt, as you put your foot into it, that it was the very place where an old woman would find herself at home and comfortable. He hurried down to Lancashire, and before a week was over he brought Mrs. Transome back in triumph.

(To be Concluded.)

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for May 20, Matt. 26: 31-46. Golden Text, Heb. 5: 8.

Jesus Singing—Conscious of His Approaching Agony and Death—Supported by His Loving Confidence in His Father—His Veneration for the Written Word—The Betrayal Predicted—Peter's Self-Confidence—Self a Broken Reed—Jesus Pressed by the World's Sin—The Witnesses Prepared by the Transfiguration—The Vicarious Suffering—His Prayer Heard—Strengthened for Propitiation—Failure of the Disciples.

AFTER Jesus had commemorated the Passover with His disciples, at the Last Supper, they sang a hymn, probably one of the Psalms, which were in special use at the Passover season. Jesus had been, so to speak, anticipating the commemoration of His own death, in that last supper and first communion. To a carnal mind there was nothing to sing about, but Jesus was the great pioneer of all renounced wills. He came down from Heaven, not to do His own will, but the will of Him that sent Him. (John 6: 38.) A renounced will leaves the heart at liberty to praise; a renounced will is never crossed, never disappointed. It says:

"Ill that He blesses is our good:
And unblest good is ill:
And all is right that seems most wrong,
If it be His sweet will."

Thus they sang a hymn. There is always something wrong with a heart which cannot praise God; it is not in full health. Just because, in His every step towards the cross, Jesus was pleasing His Father, He could, in the midst of His deep suffering, sing a hymn. But while in peace as regarded Himself, even at such an hour, Jesus spoke with sadness to His disciples. They went out into the Mount of Olives, a place consecrated by the prayers and tears and teachings of Jesus. He spoke prophetically: "All ye shall be offended because of Me this night, for it is written, I will smite the Shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad,"

For it is Written,

"Jesus, though He was the Son of God, did not give special, personal revelations as His authority for what He said, but He spoke with absolute certainty of the fulfilment of what was written. Oh, how daring is the assumption of those who exalt what they suppose to be direct revelations above the written and inspired word of God!

Peter, the ever ready man of impulse, answered Him, "Though all men shall be offended because of Thee, yet will I never be offended." And Peter meant it, and believed all he said. He believed in his own integrity, his own devotion and zeal and love, and thought it was to be counted on; but Peter little knew, or little understood, the strain to which it would be put. How many have we known who have yielded themselves, as far as they knew, to the Lord, and believed themselves utterly incapable of ever being angry again, or ever feeling proud or envious or light or unkind; and yet, in a time of sore temptation, the very sins from which they have believed and asserted they were saved, have returned again upon them, and they have been broken-hearted and despairing.

Self is but a Broken Reed, and cannot be relied on. But when, in the full consciousness of our own weakness and liability to sin, we trust the Lord to keep us, we do experience the blessed truth, "None of them that trust in Him shall be desolate." (Ps. 34: 22.) Jesus could see far into the future, and with His prophetic eye looking on into the next few hours, He said, "Verily, I say unto thee, that this night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice." Peter knew Jesus as little as he knew himself, and he took upon himself to contradict his Master flatly, and say, "Though I should die with Thee, yet will I not deny Thee." He could not believe anything bad about himself. We never know God until we are and come to expect nothing more from ourselves, but everything from God. Oh, what a comfort it is to know that He knows the very worst of us, and yet loves us, yet trusts us, yet uses us, yet desires that we should be one with Him, as He is one with the Father! Our safety is not in something in us that we can count on, but it is in His keeping power.

Thoroughly Disappointed With Ourselves,

It was then, just at the very hour when the foremost of the disciples manifested so little understanding of the truth, at the hour too in which there was a strife as to which of them should be the greatest (Luke 22: 24), that "Jesus came to Gethsemane." Gethsemane means an oil press, and truly Jesus was to be pressed like the olive berries with the weight of a world's sin. He knew all that was coming upon Him, and said to the disciples, "Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder." Although He was God, yet Jesus as man began everything with prayer, How often we have failed in something which we have undertaken, because we did not first wait to ask and obtain the wisdom strength, grace, or resources which we needed for the occasion; and on the other hand, when we have recognized and acted on the knowledge of our absolute dependence upon Him, how wonderfully have we been carried through indescribable troubles!

And He took with Him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee: the same disciples who had witnessed the first resurrection from the dead by the hand of Jesus, and the same who had been witnesses of the transfiguration. We receive grace for grace, i. e., to prepare for more grace, and knowledge for knowledge. What we know of God makes us capable of and fits us to know more still. Thus the disciples who had been nearest to Him in His glory, were those who could be trusted to witness His agony. Jesus began to be Sorrowful and Very Heavy.

This was unlike Jesus. No burden of conscience, no conflict of will, no murmuring against His Father, darkened the spirit or clouded the brow of Jesus. He had no remorse for the past, no gloomy forebodings for the future, to make Him "very heavy." But he was now, as the Son of man, as the Man of men, as the Representative of all mankind, to enter into the shadow. Jeremiah, in his Lamentations, speaks prophetically of the sufferings of Jesus. "See, O Lord, and consider: for I am become vile. Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of His fierce anger." (Lam. 1: 11, 12.) Sorrows which were not His own, but man's; sins which He knew not, for He "knew no sin" (II Cor. 5: 21); shame which we sinners had brought upon ourselves; remorse for sins not His own. All these, were adopted sufferings of Jesus in that hour. Sin and all its consequences lay heavy upon Him. It was more than human strength could stand, and He said to His disciples, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Jesus never exaggerated, He felt death creeping over Him, and He had not yet fulfilled His mission, and carried our sins to the cross. He made one request to the disciples, "Tarry ye here, and watch with Me."

"He went a little farther"—He must be alone—and cried, "O, My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me! nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." Was the prayer answered? Was he spared in Gethsemane when death crept over Him, that He might expiate our sins in Gethsemane? Surely, yes. "Who, in the days of His flesh, when He had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto Him that was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared" (Heb. 5: 7); was saved from death, was strengthened by an angel in Gethsemane (Luke 22: 43), that He might fully do His work upon the cross. He did not shrink from suffering; with Him it was an understood thing from the foundation of the world, that He should be the Lamb slain; had He died in Gethsemane, it would have been

A Martyrdom, but not a Propitiation.

He was not yet judged, not yet condemned. God had laid upon Him our sins, but man had not yet sealed Him as the sacrifice, by executing the Holy One of Israel. Yet even before the prayer was heard, before the angel strengthened Him, Jesus yielded up His will, even about redeeming the world, and said, "O, My Father, if this cup may not pass from Me, except I drink it, Thy will be done." The last request which Jesus made of His disciples before He suffered, was disregarded. Instead of watching with Him, they were asleep. The mightiest battle which ever took place on earth was being fought, and they were all unconscious! He said to Peter, "What, could ye not watch with Me one hour?" Thou, Peter, who hast declared thou couldst go with Me to prison and to death, couldst thou not watch one hour? Oh how soon human nature fails! "Watch and pray," the Master said, "lest ye fall into temptation; the spirit, indeed, is willing, but the flesh is weak." What is this? An excuse? And made for the sleeping disciples at the very hour when the bloody sweat was rolling in drops from every pore? Could Jesus so forget Himself for others! O wondrous, unutterable love!

He went away the second time and prayed, as we have seen, and a second time He found the disciples sleeping. This time He said no words to them, but went back to speak the same words to His Father. "Then cometh He to His disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on, now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Arise, let us be going; behold he is at hand that doth betray Me." The first phase of His sufferings—that which took place alone with God—was over; the outward aspect, when He should be a spectacle to men and angels, was yet to come. Oh how before every cross! Oh how we need to settle matters alone with God before we are set in the front of the battle! Now Jesus was ready for the cross; now He could face men and devils as the Sin-bearer; now He who was Life itself could go through death without shrinking. But the disciples? Oh how they failed at the supreme moment! Had they been faithful in Gethsemane, they would probably not have forsaken Him on His way to the cross. The Lord teach us to watch with Him, and so to be ready for whatsoever shall come upon us. If we fail to watch and pray, we shall surely fall into temptation, as the disciples did when they forsook Him and fled.

We Need our Gethsemane

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House. New York. It isan exhaustive. treatise on the three lines of the Prophetic Scriptures, showing their unity of design, and is illustrated by a colored chart 458 pages. Price $1.50.

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes. by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

"THOU WILT GUIDE ME."

PSALMS XXXII. 8.-XLVIII. 14.-LXXIII. 24. ISAIAH LVIII. 11.

Thou wilt guide me, kind and gentle Father,
Through this life, stormy, wild;
I ask not for its gayest joys, but rather
That I may be Thy child.

I cannot go alone, unlov'd, untended,
Through life's untrodden way,
For oft into forbidden paths I've wended,
And still may go astray.

My future journey looks so dark and dreary,
Its hills so steep and long;
But oh, it's sweet when very faint and weary,
To lean upon the Strong.

And though I cannot see a step before me—
Though clouds my pathway hide—
I fear not while Thy gentle love shines o'er me,
My kind, unerring Guide!

And so I close my eyes to other voices,
And listen unto Thine:
My spirit drinks Thy counsels, and rejoices,
Tasting of life Divine.

Then lead me on, dear Saviour, in Thy kindness,
Through paths Thy feet have worn,
Unspotted by all this world's sin and blindness,
Into that glorious bourne,

Where seraphs, crowned with glory will receive me,
And take me to Thy breast,
No more to disobey, forget, or grieve Thee,
But bathe in perfect rest.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

A BOOK WORTH HAVING. "Curiosities of the Bible," pertaining to Ten Thousand Persons, Places and Things; The New York Christian at Work says:—"It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, as full of Instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant." 606 pages. Illustrated. Price $2. Teachers and Agents wanted to introduce it." E.B.TREAT, Publisher, 771 Broadway, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

TWO GOOD BOOKS

For 50 cents Postpaid.

THE SECOND ADVENT. Will it be before the Millennium? By Canon Fausset, D D. H.Grattan Guinness and Prof. Godet, D. D. 160 pages, 1m. Parchment Cover, 25 cents.

BOOKS WHICH HAVE Influenced Me. By Canon Farrar, John Ruskin, Gladstone, Joseph Parker, Marcus Dods, and others. 123 pages. 1m. Parchment Covers, 25 cents.

Address JAMES POTT & Co., Publishers,
14 and 16 Astor Place, New York.

WOMAN:

HER POWER AND PRIVILEGES.

A series of Sermons by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage Just published. 12mo, 200 pages, paper cover. Sold by all dealers for 25 cents; or sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address

J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
P.O. Box 2767. 57 Rose Street, New York.

WANTED FOR CASH!

OLD U.S. Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address

G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35
MARCHAL & SMITH,
235 East 21st Street, New York.

LACTATED FOOD

For Young Infants a perfect substitute for mother's milk, often saving life; for the Invalid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great value. Thousands who have used it say it is the

FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD.

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infants and Invalids sent on application.

Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, VT.

(33 Colors.) DIAMOND DYES

are the Purest, Cheapest, Strongest, and most Durable Dyes ever made. One 10c. package will color 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, Rags etc. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Fancy Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bronzing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instructions and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Druggists.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON, VT.

WORKS OF REV. E. DAVIES.

Life of Wm. Taylor, BISHOP OF AFRICA, with fine steel portrait and other illustrations. Price 75c. "Many will be glad to know that the life of BISHOP TAYLOR can be obtained in so compendious a form as it is here presented."—S. S. Times.
"It is an interesting and soul-inspiring volume."—Times of Refreshing.

Life of Frances Ridley Havergal, with Choice Selections from her Prose and Poetical Writings. Price 50 cts.; gilt cts.
"It will prove an evangelist of peace and faith wherever it goes."—Zion's Herald.

The Gift of the Holy Ghost, and Select Sermons. Price enamel paper covers, 50 cts.; cloth 80 cts. "It is just the book for the masses, and cannot fail to do good."—Bishop R. S. Foster.

The Believer's Handbook, on HOLINESS. Containing eight Lectures. 12mo. Price, enamel paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 40 cts.
"This is truly an excellent work. Most heartily do we commend it to all."—Mrs. Phebe Palmer.

The Gift of The Holy Ghost and Believer's Handbook. In ONE volume. Cloth, $1.

The Boy Preacher, or THE LIFE AND LABORS OF REV. THOMAS HARRISON. Fine steel portrait. Price, $1.00. Enlarged edition, gilt top, $1.25.
Mr. Harrison is one of the most successful evangelists of the present day.

Daily Food for Christian Workers. Price 15 cents; gilt edges, 20 cents.
It is adapted to the highest experiences of Christian life.

Contrast Between Christianity and Infidelity. A Book of Reference for Ministers and Christian Workers. Price, paper, 20 cents; cloth, 40 cents. "This book is worthy of a place in any library."—Lutheran Observer.

Selections From Harris' Mammon. An invaluable book. Price, paper, 10 cents.

Memoirs and Journal of Mrs. Hester Ann Rogers. Condensed and combined. Price, cloth, 50 cents.

Either of the above books will be sent by mail, post-paid on receipt of price. Address

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

An Illustrated Hand book on Africa.

GIVING AN ACCOUNT OF ITS PEOPLE, ITS CLIMATE, ITS RESOURCES, ITS DISCOVERIES, RIVERS, LAKES, AND SOME OF ITS MISSIONS.

[illegible], 50 cts. PAPER, 25 cts.

Testimonials.

Daniel Steele, D.D., writes: "I have read your ILLUSTRATED HAND BOOK ON AFRICA with great interest. Not many people have time to read Stanley's three volumes, and a still smaller number can afford to buy them. Your Hand Book, scattered widely among Christian people, will awaken our interest in the great enterprise of the evangelization of the dark continent. I hope you will be called upon for a hundred thousand copies."

We have read this book several times, studied the newly made map, looked at the striking pictures, and it is surprising to see the amount of valuable information he has gathered so rapidly together." And again, "Not one person interested in Bishop Taylor's work ought to be without this Hand Book. It contains 105 large pages of excellent reading, ten illustrations, and a map of the New Congo State." Rev. E. I. D. Pepper, in Christian Standard.

The appearance of such a publication just at this juncture is timely, not only for the specific information it contains for those who may join their fortunes with Bishop Taylor, but for the general public, who are without access to the sources of such historical and geographical facts as are grouped in this convenient form."—Dr. A. Wallace in Ocean Grove Record.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York

WANTED:—

MEN AND WOMEN to sell our "Child's Bible," the best book without question in the hands of agents to-day. Introduction by Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D Nearly 200,000 already sold and the demand still increasing. One woman without experience paid us $1792 last year. We have sold in many places to three-fourths of the Protestant families.

How can any household where there are children afford to be without it? Rev. J. H. VINCENT, Supt. Instruction, C. L. S. C. Editor S. S. Journal.

It cannot but be a great blessing to every family in which it may find a place. Rt. Rev. FRANCIS M. WHITTLE, D.D. L.L.D., Bishop of Virginia.

I shall be glad to know that all the families of the church in the diocese of Nebraska, in which there are young children, possess a copy of this interesting and well-arranged book. Rt. Rev. GEORGE WORTHINGTON, D.D., L.L.D., Bishop of Nebraska.

The idea is most happy and the execution admirable. It is more interesting to the little ones than any story book I know of. Prof. GEO. L. WINSTON, University of North Carolina.

All have not time nor talent to simplify and winnow the Scriptures, and find the child's portion of the gospel feast. It will gladden every mother to have this done in such winsome and attractive form. Rev. ROBT. McINTYRE, Pastor M. E. Church, Charlestown, Ill.

By the hour have my children read and looked at the illustrations, then come and ask their little questions, till their hearts have seemed to be filled with the true conception of the Word. Rev. M. S. WELLS, Weedsport, N. Y.

I wish that all dear children to whom I have had the pleasure of preaching the gospel, might have the privilege of reading it daily. Rev. E. P. HAMMOND, Evangelist.

For terms and particulars, address

CASSELL & CO., B. B. S. D.
40 Dearborn St., Chicago. 104 & 106 Fourth Ave., N.Y.

NORTH WEST TEXAS AND THE QUAKER COLONY.

1,000,000 Acres of Choice State School Lands for sale by the State on forty years' time to actual settlers, at $2.00 per acre at 5 per cent. interest. Excels all other openings for a good home. No healthier place in the world. The boom is this way. This advertisement is to your benefit. Do not discard it, but send for full particulars to the QUAKER IMMIGRATION AGENCY, Estacado, Crosby Co., Texas.

SPECIAL SAL

OF

SILKS & VELVE

JAMES McCREERY & CO.

will offer at retail on and after 1st the combined stocks of t wholesale and Retail Silk and vet Departments. The import and advantage of this SPECIAL fering can only be estimated b examination, which they res fully solicit.

No goods will be exhibited sale that cannot be relied upo satisfactory wear.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND MANUFACTURERS OF

Broadway and 11th St., New York.

THE AUTOPHONE

A BEAUTIFUL PARLOR ORGA

Requiring no previous practice. Anyone can play a ly and in perfect harmony the most difficult musi tains twenty-two notes and plays in three differe Made of the best material and finished in handson the exposed metalic parts being nickel-plated, wood portion in black walnut; combines simplicity ness of tone, harmony, and is calculated especially family circle, playing both

SACRED MUSIC AND POPULAR AI

Entire satisfaction guaranteed. To introduce t matic musical instrument, we will send it complete cents worth of music of your own selection from o logue, for only $3.50, and if so desired, we will se express C.O.D. with accompanying instructions express agent to allow examination before paying co

Write for Music Catalogue.

L. A. BARBER & CO., Groton,

New Catalogue. Now Ready.

BEFORE YOU BUY ANY BOOKS FOR YOUR

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LIBRARY

Send to me for a full Catalogue of the cheapest and best Sunday-School Books ever offered, and our Special Offer to Sunday-Schools.

Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS Has a Pad different from all others, in cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and clean. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

A long-needed book. Thoroughly pra

Young People's Prayer Meet

HOW TO CONDUCT THEM; TOGETHER WITH A MANY CHOICE THEMES AND TEXTS USED MANY SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS.
By REV. F. E. CLARK.

Founder and Originator of "The Soc Christian Endea or" A book that fills felt want. Just the thing for "Societies of tian Endeavor." 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

"It is an unusual combination of Christian c sense, with a broad and also minute knowledge Needs, Desires, Tastes and Feelings of young The training of young converts, and the m them before they are trained, the place and wo young people's meeting, the best methods of c ing it, and its relation to the development an of the Church—these, under various heads, a sidered fully and wisely. . . . We commend it ly. It is especially indispensable to every live ter."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, Ne

THE DINGEE & CONARD C LEADING SPECIALTIES.

ROSE

ALL VARIETIES, SIZES AND P
FINE EVER-BLOOMING PERPETU
CLIMBING and MOSS ROSES
NEW AND RARE FLOWER SEE
HARDY PLANTS, New Moon Flower, Clemat Bulbs, JAPAN LILIES, New Chrysanthemum Wonderful ORNAMENTAL VEGETA Everything sent safely by mail or express We offer Choice NEW THINGS and ST NOVELTIES in all departments. Our NEW 10 pp., elegantly illustrated, describes over 1500 N and CHOICEST Varieties of ROSES, PLANTS and BULBS, and tells how to s Free. If you wish to plant anything, 20 Years Established. Over 60 Large G
THE DINGEE & CONARD CO
WEST GROVE, Chester

WANTED

A Special Agent in every locality and one in each to offer such inducements that earnest workers cannot fail to make $100 to $300 per month. If you are looking for a profitable business fill out this and return it. Address World M'f'g Co. 122 Nassau

Name.....
Town.....
State.....

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XI., No. 20. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, MAY 17, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF SIR WILFRID LAWSON, REVS. J. T. WIGNER, CANON ELLISON, AND C. H. SPURGEON.

OBSCURATION. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS

PICTURE OF THE CHINESE TEMPLE OF THE EARTH AT PEKIN.

SCENES AT THE SECOND ADVENT. By Rev. Nathaniel Starkey.

A Victim Rescued—An African Chief's Dilemma—An Idol Beheaded—In a Calcutta Orphanage—A Widow's Help in Nice.

LITTLE JEMMY'S FATHER. (With Illustration.)

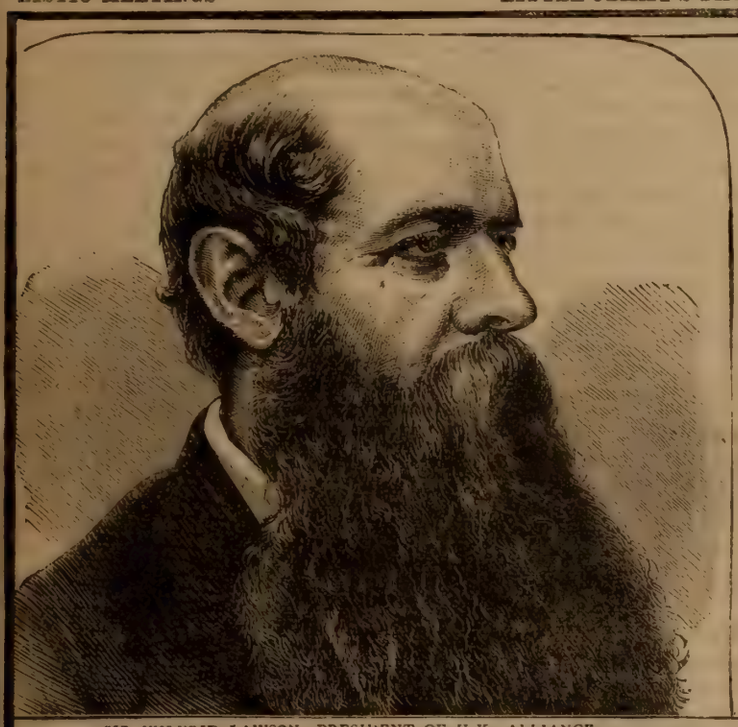
SHE WAS NOT HID. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: A Professor Puzzled—A Mistaken Chase of a Cow—Early Hardships.

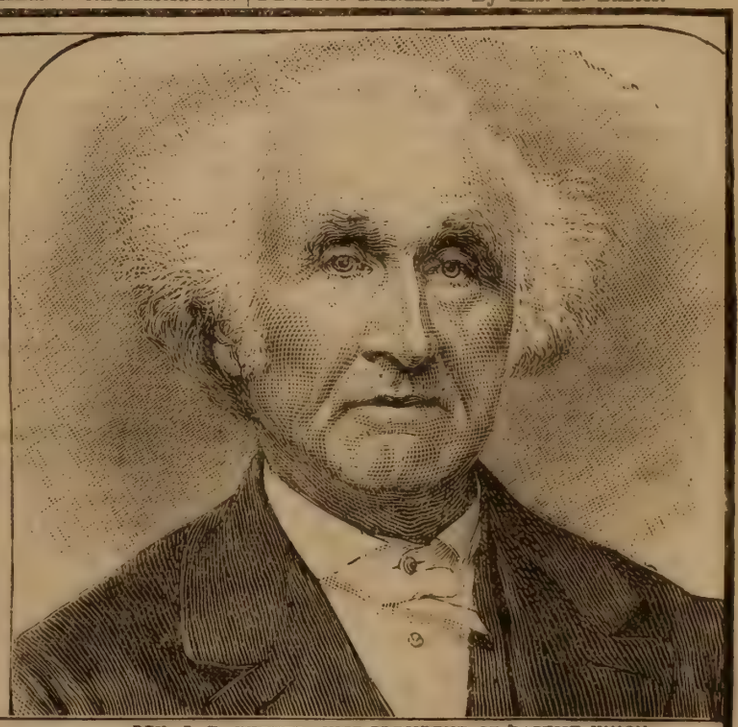
PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF BISHOP WILLIAM TAYLOR.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL. (Concluded.)

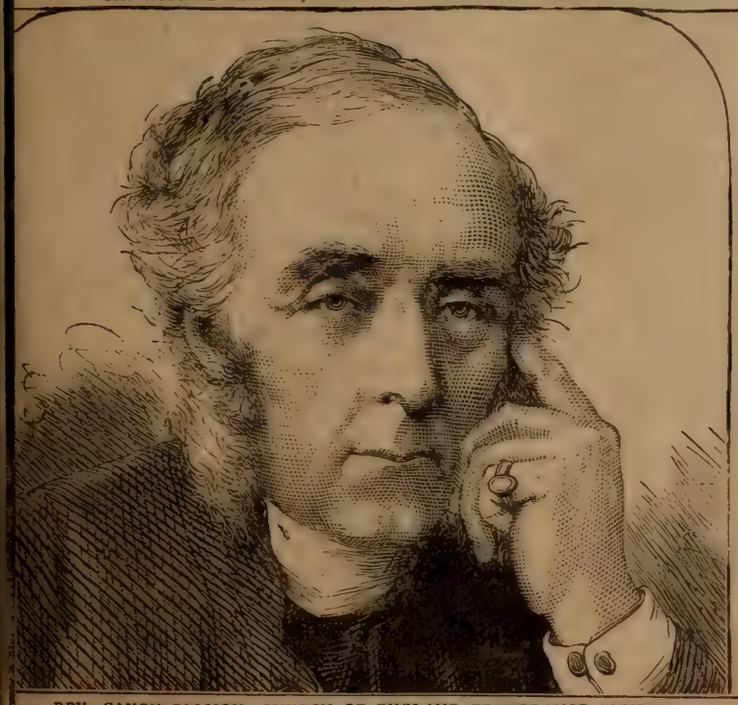
PETER'S DENIAL. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



SIR WILFRID LAWSON, PRESIDENT OF U.K. ALLIANCE.



REV. J. T. WIGNER, VICE-PRESIDENT OF BAPTIST UNION.



REV. CANON ELLISON, CHURCH OF ENGLAND TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

REV. C. H. SPURGEON, PASTOR OF METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

PROMINENT SPEAKERS AT THE RELIGIOUS ANNIVERSARIES IN LONDON.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON.

The Prohibition Leader in England—The Lawson Family—Sir Wilfrid Born in 1829—Succeeds to the Title in 1867—Elected to Parliament in 1859—Introduces his Permissive Bill in 1864—Carries his Local Option Resolution in 1880—Popularity as a Speaker—Remarks at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle.

PROMINENT among the leaders of the great religious and philanthropic organizations which are just now celebrating their anniversaries in London, are the four eminent men whose portraits appear on the first page. Three of them are clergymen, and the fourth, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, is the valorous champion of the movement which in England corresponds to the Prohibition movement here. "Ye are the salt of the earth," said the Saviour, addressing His few followers, and in every age of the world such salt has been needed, and has been found. In England, as in this country, drunkenness, immorality and irreligion are corrupting society, and there is, therefore, weighty reason to honor such men as these, whose lives and teachings exercise the beneficent influence of moral salt, and to thank God for raising them up and giving them the courage and talents to perform their work.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, whose portrait is one of the four, is the son of the late Sir Wilfrid Lawson, of Aspatria, Cumberland, a family which has been prominent in the county for nearly 300 years, and received its baronetcy from James I. He was born September 4, 1829, so that he is now in the fifty-ninth year of his age. He succeeded to the title and estates on his father's death, in 1867. From an early age he has been an enthusiastic advocate of the Temperance movement, and is now the leader of the United Kingdom Alliance, organized to promote temperance legislation in Parliament, and is its spokesman in the House of Commons.

At the General Election of 1859 he ran in conunction with his uncle, the late Sir James Graham, as a candidate for the representation of Carlisle, and was elected by only a very narrow majority over his opponent, Mr. Hodgson, a gentleman of great influence in the locality. In March, 1864, he first moved for leave to introduce the measure now so well known as the main principle of which is the giving to two-thirds of the inhabitants of any parish or township of Great Britain an absolute power to prohibit the issue of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors within their districts. It was supported by only forty members out of six hundred and sixty-five.

The Permissive Bill,

In 1865, Sir Wilfrid was displaced at the General Election by his former opponent, Mr. Hodgson; but at the General Election three years later, on appealing to the enlarged constituency as a supporter of Mr. Gladstone, he was elected at the head of the poll. He succeeded on June 18, 1880, in gaining a vote of the House of Commons endorsing the principle of his measure. It carried no legislative power, but was an expression of the opinion of the House that such a measure would be beneficial. It was known as the Local Option Resolution

and was passed by a majority of twenty-six. In 1885, he was a Parliamentary candidate for the new Cockermouth division of Cumberland, but was defeated by a Conservative majority of ten. In 1886, as a Gladstonian Liberal, he gained the seat by a considerable majority. He is a familiar figure in the House of Commons, where, as in the country districts, he is very popular. His speeches, enlivened with humorous touch and racy anecdote, are appreciated even by those who differ with him. His opposition to war and perpetual pensions, is well known. He also consistently opposes every year the custom of the House of Commons to adjourn on the day of the Derby, the great English horse-race, though he is never successful in inducing the House to sit. It is, however, of some value to have one man courageous enough to raise a protest against the habit. When members see him rise from his place with his conspicuously bald forehead, long brown beard, and twinkling eyes, brimming over with good humor and harmless drollery, they involuntarily prepare to laugh.

Doubtful Temerity.

Sir Wilfrid also maintains a persistent opposition to the annual votes in Parliament for the Army and Navy; and his constant assertion that England has nothing to fear from the colossal armies of Europe, and need not go to the expense of preparing to resist a possible invasion by them, is consistent with his principles if not in harmony with facts. His remark that England's only enemies are "the Pope and the Colorado Beetle" is amusing, but he forgets that Steam Navigation has practically bridged the English Channel and that England could not mobilise 100,000 soldiers in sufficent time to prevent 100,000 French soldiers landing on the English coast and seizing London.

At the annual meeting of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association recently held At Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle,

Sir Wilfrid made a most efficient chairman, and in the course of other appropriate and highly-appreciated remarks, said he hoped they had all read the debate of the previous night in the House of Commons, when fourteen speakers had condemned the extension of the liquor traffic to the native races of India; in fact, they were ready to protect everyone but their own countrymen. He was glad they had got as far as protecting native races, but they should protect their own land. The House of Commons had said that no man should deal in alcohol unless he had a good moral character, and that put them on a separate footing from other people, and the magistrates were very particular. Well, he was sure if he applied to a bench of Tory magistrates he should not get a license. The licensed victuallers were respectable—they said so themselves. They congratulated themselves at all their anniversaries and dinners that they had got through another year respectably

Without Getting Into Jail.

Referring to Local Option, he said Parliament had sanctioned his scheme several times. They said they would give him what he wanted in the Local Government Bill, but instead of doing so they offered a sham and a snare.

Sir Wilfrid is an evangelical churchman, a generous landlord, and beloved by his tenants.

REV. J. T. WIGNER.

Born at Harwich—Early Profession of Christ—Enters Stepney College—His First Pastorate—His Present Sphere of Work.

A SECOND prominent leader is the Vice-President of the Baptist Union, the Rev. John Thomas Wigner, whose portrait appears on the first page. He was born at Harwich, Essex, about seventy-three years ago. Shortly after the death of his mother, which took place when he was a mere child, he removed with his father to Burnham, in the same county, in which town he was apprenticed. He early made a profession of Christ, and when he was only about eighteen years of age he entered Stepney College, as a student for the gospel ministry, and here he was the contemporary of many men who have since become distinguished in the denomination. Here also he had as a fellow-student the judicious and scholarly Dr. Angus, who now presides over the College in which he was formerly a pupil, although the College, which was instituted in the year 1810, has been removed to Regent's Park. Mr. Wigner entered on his in December, 1839, at King's Lynn, Norfolk, and there he remained until 1865. During his ministry a new place of worship was built and paid for; another edifice was built at West Lynn for the people in that locality, mainly through his exertions; and throughout the entire county his influence was felt in the various efforts put forth to further the interests of the kingdom of Christ and to reach non-churchgoers.

First Pastorate

In 1866 he removed to London, and entered on his second pastorate, where his ministry has realized a gratifying measure of success. He has more than once been elected President of the London Baptist Association, in which office he has been energetic in establishing new churches, and collecting funds for philanthropic enterprises. The cost of building two of Mr. Spurgeon's Orphan Houses at Stockwell was defrayed with funds raised by his efforts. It is generally felt that the Baptist Union, which is a national organization, has acted wisely in making the London president its vice-president.

A prominent religious journal says of Mr. Wigner, "It is given to but few men to be able to carry on the Lord's work after the age of seventy years has been attained and passed, but Mr. Wigner has been graciously permitted to continue in the service of his Master, and to be doing good service when most men would be seeking repose, which to the majority of men is simply imperative; and we should pray that he may be spared a season longer to preach the glad tidings of the Gospel of Christ, and at last hear the Master's 'Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'"

REV. CANON ELLISON.

Temperance Pioneers in the Protestant Episcopal Church—Eulogium by a Church Paper—Personal Career—Scholastic and Official Honors.

The Temperance cause in Great Britain has no warmer friend than Canon Ellison, whose portrait appears on the first page. Though the early band of Temperance pioneers in the Protestant Episcopal Church included many clergymen of honor and well-won distinction for their services on behalf of the Gospel of Christ, like Dean Close, Canon Bardsley Rev. Stopford Ram, Dr. Maguire, and Canon Babington, who stood shoulder to shoulder in the hard fight against prevalent drunkenness and consequent poverty and immorality, the name of Canon Ellison has, from the outset, been conspicuous as within the church. One of the organs of the denomination, says: "It would be impossible to speak too highly of Canon Ellison's labors as a founder—one might almost say the founder—of the Church of England Temperance Society. At Church Congresses, conferences, public meetings, and in the pulpit, he has been, from the first, its chivalrous champion, through evil report and keen criticism, and happily lives to see his labors crowned with a success far exceeding the most hopeful anticipations of those who were associated with him during the exceedingly difficult course of its early history."

A Leader of the Temperance Movement

Henry John Ellison is rather more than sixty-six years of age, but happily possesses the vitality and strength of many a far younger man. His duties are multifarious and onerous, but he discharges them with a readiness and ease which demonstrates the versatility of his genius and the cordiality and thoroughness of his devotion to the work in which he is engaged. He graduated at Oxford about 1838, when he took his M. A. degree. His first benefice was the perpetual curacy of All Souls, Brighton, which he held from 1840 to 1843. From 1845 to 1855 he was vicar of Edensor, Derbyshire, and in 1854 was made Prebendary in Lichfield Cathedral. In 1855 he was appointed to the vicarage of New Windsor, and the following year made at Windsor Castle. In 1875 his active work for the Temperance cause generally, and for the Church of England Temperance Society in particular, induced him to seek a less onerous parochial charge, and he therefore resigned the vicarage of New Windsor and accepted the Rectory of Great Haseley, Oxfordshire, where he still remains; and as a result of the appreciation of the University authorities for his invariable urbanity, ripe scholarship, and conscientious ministry, he had the distinction conferred upon him, in 1873, of an honorary canonry in connection with his alma mater, Christ Church College, Oxford. He is also a Chaplain in Ordi-ary to the Queen, and has been for many years past the trusted and enterprising Chairman of the Church of England Temperance Society.

Reader to the Queen

THE REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

His Recent Stand for Evangelical Truth—His 2,000th Sermon—Success of His College—The Stockwell Orphanage—Personal Career.

IT is unnecessary to repeat here the details of the life of the great preacher whose sermons appear from week to week in this journal, as a full biography has been more than once published in these columns. He has, however, recently passed through an experience which has awakened increased interest in him throughout the religious world, and has enhanced the respect and esteem in which he is held. As our readers are aware, he has felt it his duty to make an emphatic protest against doctrines being preached which are in conflict with Evangelical theology, and has even gone so far as to withdraw from the Baptist Union when he found that the Union as a body was not prepared to insist on all its members being faithful to the orthodox creed. He was much cheered in taking this painful step by receiving from large numbers of clergymen in his own and other denominations expressions of sympathy and approval, showing how large a number of ministers are still faithful to the Gospel. Happily, too, the Council of the Baptist Union was able at its meeting on April 23, to announce the termination of what has come to be named the "Down-grade" controversy, by the emphatic manner in which the evangelical character of the basis and constitution of the Union had been officially declared, and with which declaration the Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, as representing his brother, expressed himself satisfied.

Mr. Spurgeon's 2,000th Printed Sermon was published at the beginning of this year—an event, we need not say, absolutely without parallel in the history and work of any minister of the Christian Church, and constituting a sufficient cause, if any were needed, for our once again calling attention to one who has perhaps done more than any man living during the last quarter of a century, and over, to stir the religious vitality, not in London only, but throughout the world.

Besides his pastoral work, his labors as an author, and his grand work in founding and supporting his orphanages, Mr. Spurgeon has, in conducting established a claim on the gratitude, not only of his brother Baptists, but on the Evangelical world generally. His students are to be found at the uttermost ends of the earth. In New Zealand we find his son, Thomas, and other students. On the Congo his missionaries are laboring for Christ. Not in Australia, nor in tropical Africa only do we find successful and earnest preachers who have received their training in his college; in our own land, in Canada, and other countries beside Great Britain his spiritual sons are preaching the gospel in its purity and power. Missionary work, however, forms but a small portion of Mr. Spurgeon's self-imposed labors for the glory of God.

His Pastors' College,

The Stockwell Orphanage is another splendid testimony of his sagacious and unceasing efforts to execute his Divine Master's command, "Feed my lambs." Here nearly 600 children are fed both physically and spiritually, and trained for useful service in the world. Mr. Spurgeon was born at Kelvedon, Essex, in 1834, and is now fifty-four years old. He first preached before a London congregation at New Park Street, in 1853. The Metropolitan Tabernacle was opened in 1861, and is always full to overflowing. Mr. Spurgeon has published a sermon weekly since the first week in 1855. "A book fund," carried on in Mr. Spurgeon's house, and superintended by Mrs. Spurgeon, has supplied indigent clergymen and ministers, free of charge, with over 100,000 volumes. In 1879, Mr. Spurgeon received a "Silver Wedding" testimonial of over $30,000. In 1884, on his attaining his fiftieth year, another sum of about $25,000 was presented. The whole of these funds were distributed in charity, $25,000 having been devoted to the endowment of the Tabernacle Almshouses.

It is stated that some time ago these works of charity were effectively used as an argument in a discussion with a blatant scoffer at Christianity, who expressed a profane wish that all preachers, and especially Mr. Spurgeon, were swept off the face of the earth as a useless load of rubbish. "Well," said his Christian opponent, "suppose to oblige you Mr. Spurgeon could be removed, would you undertake to support the six hundred orphans in his homes and the aged people in his almshouses? That is pure philanthropy which you approve." The scoffer made no reply, but turned away abashed.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Old Drunkard's Debt Paid.—Mr. Henry Lakin narrates: "There was a man at a meeting in this hall the other night, upon whom I pressed the claims of Christ, and urged him to accept salvation. He replied, with a smile at the idea, and said, 'Oh sir, I am nearly seventy years of age, and I have been a great sinner and a great drunkard the most of my life.' And he looked as if he had settled the matter, and that there could be no salvation for him. 'Any more to say?' I asked. 'No,' he replied, 'but I do not believe God would forgive me all that. I have so much standing against me, and I cannot see that God could or would forgive me.' 'Man,' I answered, 'it is just as easy for God to forgive you with all that load of sin upon you, as if you had only committed one sin. Christ bore all your sins upon Calvary!' The light broke in on the poor man's mind, and, though late in life, he was led to trust himself to Christ, the Almighty Saviour, who invites all weary and heavy laden ones to come unto Him, and saves 'even unto the uttermost' all who come unto Him."

An Infidel's Prayer Answered.—"There was a father, an infidel, who had an only daughter lying dangerously ill. He had not prayed for long, but as he knelt at the bedside of his daughter, he thought, 'Oh, if there were only a God, and I knew it, I would pray Him to give me back my daughter.' Then the fearful thought rushed upon him, 'What if there be a God after all!' The thought preyed upon his mind; and, in an agony of doubt, he clasped his hands, and exclaimed 'Oh, God, for the first time since my childhood, I pray to Thee! Oh, if Thou be, if there in truth be a God, then, I beseech Thee, let this little child raise her hand.' He had scarcely finished this prayer, when his little girl slowly withdrew her hand from under the clothes, and pointed upwards. The nurse, entering the room at that moment, tried to put it down, but the man cried out, 'Do not touch that hand; it is pointing the way to God.' Again, as if to show there had been no mistake, the tiny hand was slowly raised. This some time infidel accepted this as a direct message from God to himself, and from that time he became not only a consistent Christian, but a most zealous worker for the Lord."

A French Captain's Dilemma.—Rev. W. H. Burton said: "A story which my dear father once told me reminds me exactly of the condition of many anxious souls. During the war which raged between England and France in the early part of this century, a French convoy sailed from a distant land, bound for their native shores. The first part of the voyage was prosperous, and all went well, until one night a heavy storm scattered the ships, and some of them, altogether missing their companions, had to do the best they could to get home alone. One of these, being thus left, made very slow work, and it was a long time before, in a crippled state, she made the English Channel. But just then a heavy southwest gale sprang up, and, in a half sinking state, the poor Frenchman realized the impossibility of making a French port. There was Plymouth directly under his lee, and war-ships and privateers almost within gunshot. His dilemma was great. He looked upon himself already as a prisoner, and his ship as a prize in the hands of the enemy. And yet his fears were utterly groundless. There was no enemy to fear. Unknown to him, a treaty had been signed, and peace had been declared between the two nations, and when the pilot approached him with the good news, his joy was overflowing. He ran into Plymouth and was safe. Troubled soul, I want to assure you that thus you may have rest. The treaty is signed, and by 'the blood of the everlasting covenant,' it was sealed at 'the place called Calvary.' The blessed gale against which you are struggling should not be resisted. Come, and find the peace which awaits the trusting heart."

The Safer Shelter of the Harbor.—Seafaring is a dangerous calling, and the mariner often runs to the haven for shelter and safety, as well as for repose. I remember thus once running for Kingston Harbor. The sensation of calm and of safety which suddenly possessed us as we entered that place of quiet rest I cannot describe. We had had very rough weather in the Irish Sea, and were earnestly longing for the port, when, most of us being below in the cabins, and ignorant of our nearness to land, the vessel, which had been rolling and pitching so that we could scarcely keep our seats, suddenly became as apparently motionless as the house in which we sit. The change was marvellous. Glad voices all around began to say, "It is the harbor!" All care vanished! Timid people became brave, the weak became strong, and in a few moments we were all on deck, delighted for the haven and thankful for the granite ramparts behind which we were safely moored. Still the storm raged on outside. The boisterous surges of St. George's Channel, through which we had come, still continued their wild commotion. Other vessels, some of them laboring heavily under the gale, could be seen making for port: but within the haven all was calm—all was safe. Motionless, our good ship lay snugly berthed beside the jetty, and we knew that as long as that stout sea-wall stood, nothing could possibly hurt us. What a shelter! with what peace the sailor rests when he has made the haven!

Who Saved the Sentinel's Life?—"A Party of tourists were on board a great steamer on one of the American rivers, when one of their number began to sing in a deep, rich voice, that beautiful hymn beginning with 'Jesus, lover of my soul,

Let me to Thy bosom fly.'

He had scarcely finished, when a gentleman—not one of the party—came forward to him, and said, 'Excuse me, sir, were you in the late war?' 'I was,' replied the other. 'Tell me, were you in such an army, in such a place, at such a time?' 'I was,' the singer answered. 'Ah! I thought I recognized the voice and the hymn. Do you remember being sentinel on a particular night of great danger?' continued the questioner. 'Well do I remember it,' was the reply. 'When I was told that I had to be sentinel on that terrible night, my heart was in a great tremor, because I knew my life was in imminent peril. I went out with that song, that I have just been singing, upon my lips, and when I came to 'Cover my defenceless head,

With the shadow of Thy wing,' suddenly I felt a sense of inexpressible safety, and from that moment my fears fled.' 'Wonderful!' said the gentleman. 'We were on the Southern side, and that night orders were given that the sentinel on your side must be shot. I was sent to do the work, and when I came right opposite to you, you were walking up and down singing that hymn. I prepared to take aim, but you just then sang the words mentioned. My rifle dropped; I could not touch you.'"

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price $1.00.

OBSCURATION.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached Last Sunday Morning, May 13, 1888.

"The sun shall be turned into darkngss." Acts 2 : 20.

An Awful Hypothesis—The Natural Sun Extinguished—The Earth Freezing—Christianity the Sun of Mankind—The Effort of Atheism to Extinguish It—What Would Result from their Success—I. The Degradation of Womanhood—The Condition of Woman in Non-Christian Lands—A Question of Dynamics—II. The Demoralization of Society—The Death of an Infidel—Christianity a Mighty Restraint—Churches Overthrown—Sunday-Schools Scattered—Asylums Abolished—Eclipse not Destruction.

CHRISTIANITY is the rising sun of our time, and men have tried with the uprolling vapors of scepticism, and the smoke of their blasphemy, to turn the sun into darkness. Suppose the archangels of malice and horror should be let loose a little while, and be allowed to extinguish and destroy the sun in the natural heavens! They would take the oceans from other worlds, and pour them on this luminary of the planetary system, and the waters go hissing down amid the ravines and the caverns, and there is explosion after explosion, until there are only a few peaks of fire left in the sun, and these are cooling down and going out until the vast continents of flame are reduced to a small acreage of fire, and that whitens and cools off until there are only a few coals left, and these are whitening and going out until there is not a spark left in all the mountains of ashes, and the valleys of ashes, and the chasms of ashes.

An Extinguished Sun!

A dead sun! A buried sun! Let all worlds wail at the stupendous obsequies. Of course, this withdrawal of the solar light and heat throws our earth into a universal chill, and the tropics become the temperate, and the temperate becomes the Arctic, and there are frozen rivers, and frozen lakes, and frozen oceans. From Arctic and Antarctic regions the inhabitants gather in toward the centre, and find the Equator as the poles. The slain forests are piled up into a great bonfire, and around them gather the shivering villages and cities. The wealth of the coal mines is hastily poured into the furnaces, and stirred into rage of combustion, but soon the bonfires begin to lower, and the furnaces begin to go out, and the nations begin to die. Cotopaxi, Vesuvius, Etna, Stromboli, Californian geysers, cease to smoke, and the ice of hail-storms remains unmelted in their crater. All the flowers have breathed their last breath. Ships with sailors frozen at the mast, and helmsmen frozen at the wheel, and passengers frozen in the cabin;

All Nations Dying,

first at the North and then at the South. Child frosted and dead in the cradle. Octogenarian frosted and dead at the hearth. Workmen with frozen hand on the hammer, and frozen foot on the shuttle. Winter from sea to sea. All-congealing winter. Perpetual winter. Globe of frigidity. Hemisphere shackled to hemisphere by chains of ice. Universal Nova Zembla. The earth an ice-floe grinding against other ice-floes. The archangels of malice and horror have done their work, and now they may take their thrones of glacier, and look down upon the ruin they have wrought. What the destruction of the sun in the natural heavens would be to our physical earth, the destruction of Christianity would be to the moral world. The sun turned into darkness!

Infidelity in our time is considered a great joke. There are people who rejoice to hear Christianity caricatured, and to hear Christ assailed with quibble and quirk and misrepresentation and badinage and harlequinade. I propose this morning to take infidelity and Atheism out of the realm of jocularity into one of tragedy, and show you and what, if they are successful, they will accomplish. There are those in all our communities who would like to see the Christian religion overthrown, and who say the world would be better without it. I want to show you what is the end of this road, and what is the terminus of this crusade, and what this world will be when Atheism and Infidelity have triumphed over it, if they can. I say, if they can. I reiterate it, if they can.

What Infidels Propose

In the first place, it will be the complete and unutterable

Degradation of Womanhood.

I will prove it by facts and arguments which no honest man will dispute. In all communities and cities and states and nations where the Christian religion has been dominant, woman's condition has been ameliorated and improved, and she is deferred to and honored in a thousand things, and every gentleman takes off his hat before her. If your associations have been good, you know that the name of wife, mother, daughter, suggest gracious surroundings. You know there are no better schools and seminaries in Brooklyn or in any city of this country than the schools and seminaries for our young ladies. You know that while woman may suffer injustice in England and the United States, she has more of her rights in Christendom than she has anywhere else.

Now, compare this with woman's condition in lands where Christianity has made little or no advance—in China, in Barbary, in Borneo, in Tartary, in Egypt, in Hindostan. The Burmese sell their wives and daughters as so many sheep. The Hindoo Bible makes it disgraceful and an outrage for a woman to listen to music, or look out of the window in the absence of her husband, and gives as a lawful ground for divorce a woman's beginning to eat before her husband has finished his meal. What mean those white bundles on the ponds and rivers in China in the morning? Infanticide following infanticide. Female children destroyed simply because they are female. Woman harnessed to a plow as an ox.

Woman Veiled and Barricaded,

and in all styles of cruel seclusion. Her birth a misfortune. Her life a torture. Her death a horror. The missionary of the cross to-day in heathen lands preaches generally to two groups—a group of men who do as they please and sit where they please; the other group, women hidden and carefully secluded in a side apartment, where they may hear the voice of the preacher, but may not be seen. No refinement. No liberty. No hope for this life. No hope for the life to come. Ringed nose. Cramped foot. Disfigured face. Embruted soul. Now compare those two conditions. How far toward this latter condition that I speak of would woman go if Christian influences were withdrawn and Christianity were destroyed? It is only a question of dynamics. If an object be lifted to a certain point and not fastened there, and the lifting power be withdrawn, how long before that object will fall down to the point from which it started? It will fall down, and it will go still further than the point from which it started, Christianity has lifted woman up from the very depths of degradation almost to the skies. If that lifting power be withdrawn she falls clear back to the depth from which she was resurrected, not going any lower because there is no lower depth. And yet, notwithstanding the fact that the only salvation of woman from degradation and woe is the Christian religion, and the only influence that has ever lifted her in the social scales is Christianity—I have read that there are women who reject Christianity. I make no remark in regard to those persons. I make no remark in regard to them. In the silence of your own soul make your observations.

If infidelity triumph and Christianity be overthrown, it means

The Demoralization of Society.

The one idea in the Bible that atheists and infidels most hate, is the idea of retribution. Take away the idea of retribution and punishment from society, and it will begin very soon to disintegrate; and take away from the minds of men the fear of hell, and there a great many of them who would very soon turn this world into a hell. The majority of those who are indignant against the Bible because of the idea of punishment, are men whose lives are bad, or whose hearts are impure, and who hate the Bible because of the idea of future punishment, for the same reason that criminals hate the penitentiary. Oh, I have heard this brave talk about people fearing nothing of the consequences of sin in the next world, and I have made up my mind it is merely a coward's whistling to keep his courage up. I have seen men flaunt their immoralities in the face of the community, and I have heard them defy the Judgment Day, and scoff at the idea of any future consequence of their sin; but when they came to die, they shrieked until you could hear them for nearly two blocks, and in the summer night the neighbors got up to put the windows down, because they could not endure the horror.

I would not want to see a rail-train with five hundred Christian people on board, go down through a drawbridge into a watery grave. I would not want to see five hundred Christian people go into such disaster, but, I tell you plainly, that I could more easily see that than I could for any protracted time stand and though his pillow were of eider-down and under a canopy of vermilion. I have never been able to brace up my nerves for such a spectacle. There is something at such a time so indescribable in the countenance. I just looked in upon it for a minute or two, but the clutch of his fist was so diabolic, and the strength of his voice was so unnatural, I could not endure it. "There is no hell, there is no hell, there is no hell!" the man had said for sixty years; but that night when I looked in the dying room of my infidel neighbor, there was something on his countenance which seemed to say, "There is, there is, there is, there is!"

See an Infidel Die,

The Mightiest Restraints

to-day against theft, against immorality, against libertinism, against crime of all sorts—the mightiest restraints are the retribution of eternity. Men know that they can escape the law, but down in the offender's soul there is the realization of the fact that they cannot escape God. He stands at the end of the road of profligacy, and He will not clear the guilty. Take all idea of retribution and punishment out of the hearts and minds of men, and it would not be long before Brooklyn and New York and Boston and Charleston and Chicago became Sodoms. The only restraints against the evil passions of the world to-day are Bible restraints.

Suppose now these generals of Atheism and Infidelity got the victory, and suppose they marshalled a great army made up of the majority of the world. They are in companies, in regiments, in brigades—the whole army. Forward, march! ye hosts of infidels and atheists, banners flying before, banners flying behind, banners inscribed with the words: "No God! No Christ! No punishment! No restraints! Down with the Bible! Do as you please!" The sun turned into darkness!

Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists. And first of all you will attack the churches. Away with those houses of worship! They have been standing there so long deluding the people with consolation in their bereavements and sorrows. All those churches ought to be extirpated; they have done so much to relieve the lost and bring home the wandering, and they have so long held up the idea of eternal rest after the paroxysm of this life is over. Turn the St. Peters and St. Pauls and the temples and tabernacles into club-houses. Away with those churches!

Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists, and next of all

They Scatter the Sabbath-Schools

—the Sabbath-schools filled with bright-eyed, bright-cheeked little ones who are singing songs on Sunday afternoon, and getting instruction when they ought to be on the street corners playing marbles, or swearing on the commons.

Away with them! Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists, and next of all they will attack Christian asylums—the institutions of mercy supported by Christian philanthropies. Never mind the blind eyes and the deaf ears and the crippled limbs and the weakened intellects. Let paralyzed old age pick up its own food, and orphans fight their own way, and the half reformed go back to their evil habits. Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists, and with your battle axes hew down the cross and split up the manger of Bethlehem.

On, ye great army of infidels and atheists, and now they come to the graveyards and the cemeteries of the earth. Pull down the sculpture above Greenwood's gate, for it means the Resurrection. Tear away at the entrance of Laurel Hill the figure of Old Mortality and the chisel. On, ye great army of infidels and atheists, into the graveyards and cemeteries; and where you see "Asleep in Jesus," cut it away, and where you find a marble story of heaven, blast it, and where you find over a little child's grave: "Suffer little children to come unto Me," substitute the words "delusion" and "sham," and where you find an angel in marble, strike off the wing, and when you come to a family vault, chisel on the door: "Dead once, dead forever."

But on, ye great army of infidels and atheists, on! They will attempt to scale heaven. There are Heights to be Taken.

Pile hill on hill, and Pelion upon Ossa, and then they hoist the ladders against the walls of heaven. On and on until they blow up the foundations of jasper and the gates of pearl. They charge up the steep. Now they aim for the throne of Him who liveth forever and ever. They would take down from their high place the Father, the Son, the Holy Ghost. "Down with them!" they say. "Down with Him from the throne!" they say. "Down forever! Down out of sight! He is not God. He has no right to sit there. Down with Him! Down with Christ!"

A world without a head, a universe without a king. Orphan constellations. Fatherless galaxies. Anarchy supreme. A dethroned Jehovah. An assassinated God. Patricide, regicide, deicide. That is what they mean. That is what they will have, if they can, if they can, if they can. Civilization hurled back into semi-barbarism, and semi-barbarism driven back into Hottentot savagery. The wheel of and turned toward the dark ages. The clock of the centuries put back two thousand years. Go back, you Sandwich Islands, from your schools and from your colleges and from your reformed condition to what you were in 1820, when the missionaries first came. Call home the five hundred missionaries from India and overthrow their two thousand schools, where they are trying to educate the heathen, and scatter the one hundred and forty thousand little children that they have gathered out of barbarism into civilization. Obliterate all the work of Dr. Duff in India, of David Abeel in China, of Dr. King in Greece, of Judson in Burmah, of David Brainerd amid the American aborigines, and send home the three thousand missionaries of the cross who are toiling in foreign lands, toiling for Christ's sake, toiling themselves into the grave. Tell these three thousand men of God that they are of no use. Send home the medical missionaries who are doctoring the bodies as well as the souls of the dying nations. Go home, London Missionary Society. Go home, American Board of Foreign Missions. Go home, ye Moravians, and relinquish back into darkness and squalor and death the nations whom ye have begun to lift.

Progress Turned the Other Way

Oh, my friends, there has never been such a nefarious plot on earth as that which Infidelity and Atheism have planned. We were shocked a few years ago because of the attempt to blow up the Parliament Houses in London; but if Infidelity and Atheism succeed in their attempt,

They Will Dynamite a World.

Let them have their full way, and this world will be a habitation of three rooms—a habitation with just three rooms: the one a madhouse, another a lazaretto, the other a pandemonium. These infidel bands of music have only just begun their concert—yea, they have only been stringing their instruments. I today put before you their whole programme from begining unto close. In the theatre the tragedy comes first, and the farce afteward; but in this infidel drama of death the farce comes first and the tragedy afterward. And in the former, atheists and infidels laugh and mock, but in the latter God Himself will laugh and mock. He says so. "I will laugh at their calamity and mock when their fear cometh."

From such a chasm of individual, national, world-wide ruin, stand back. Oh young men, stand back from that chasm! You see the practical drift of my sermon. I want you to know Where That Road Leads.

Stand back from that chasm of ruin. The time is going to come (you and I may not live to see it, but it will come, just as certainly as there is a God, it will come) when the infidels and the atheists who openly and out and out and aboveboard preach and practice Infidelity and Atheism, will be considered as criminals against society, as they are now criminals against God. Society will push out the leper, and the wretch with soul gangrened and ichorous and vermin-covered and rotten apart with his bestiality, will be left to die in the ditch, and be denied decent burial, and men will come with spades and cover up the carcass, where it falls, that it poison not the air, and the only text in all the Bible appropriate for the funeral sermon will be Jeremiah 22:19: "He shall be buried with the burial of an ass."

A thousand voices come up to me this morning, saying: "Do you really think Infidelity will succeed? Has Christianity received its death blow? and

Will the Bible Become Obsolete?"

Yes, when the smoke of the city chimney arrests and destroys the noonday sun. Josephus says about the time of the destruction of Jerusalem the sun was turned into darkness; but only the clouds rolled between the sun and the earth. The sun went right on. It is the same sun, the same luminary as when at the beginning it shot out like an electric spark from God's finger, and to-day it is warming the nations, and to-day it is gilding the sea, and to-day it is filling the earth with its light. The same old sun, not at all worn out, though its light steps one hundred and ninety million miles a second, though its pulsations are four hundred and fifty trillion undulations in a second. Same sun with beautiful white light made up of the violet and the indigo and the blue and the green and the red and the yellow and the orange—the seven beautiful colors now just as when the solar spectrum first divided them.

At the beginning God said: "Let there be light," and light was, and light is, and light shall be. So Christianity is rolling on, and it is going to warm all nations, and all nations are to bask in its light. Men may shut the window-blinds so they cannot see it, or they may smoke the pipe of speculation until they are shadowed under their own vaporing; but the Lord God is a sun! This made up of all the beautiful colors of earth and heaven—violet plucked from amid the spring grass, and the indigo of the southern jungles, and the blue of the skies, and the green of the foliage, and the yellow of the autumnal woods, and the orange of the southern groves, and the red of the sunsets. All the beauties of earth and heaven brought out by this spiritual spectrum. Great Britain is going to take all Europe for God. The United States are going to take America for God. Both of them together will take all Asia for God. All three of them will take Africa for God. "Who art thou, oh great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain." The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Hallelujah, amen!

White Light of the Gospel

THE TEMPLE OF THE EARTH.

(See illustration on page 317.)

THE Chinese have more gods and less religion than any other nation on the globe. Almost everything in nature is deified, and the spirits of the dead emperors are added to the long list. The edifice represented in the illustration is the Temple of the Earth, the second in size and grandeur in the empire. It is surpassed only by that to the Supreme Ruler of Heaven. Sacrifices of beasts are offered there annually, being slain the day before presentation, and after presentation divided among the worshippers.

The present condition of religious observance in China affords the best opportunity there has been for centuries for the preaching of the gospel, and it is a remarkable fact that it has come at a time when the Government has declared for toleration. Christian missionaries are permitted to teach and preach without incurring legal penalties, and the people are on their side yearning for a new system of religion. Confucianism, Buddhism and Taoism, the three systems of China, still number among their adherents the conservative classes, but the younger generation, and the more honest and intelligent of the elder people, have now revolted from the corruption and fraud and superstition which flouish in the three systems. A suspicion is growing up that the priests themselves do not believe what they teach, and that such zeal as they display is not zeal for truth, but for the maintenance of a system by which they get gain. That may be the explanation of the anomaly of three national religions flourishing side by side.

The earliest religion was Confucianism, which is a system of morality concerning itself with the relations of men to each other, rather than with their relations to a Divine Being. There was sufficient sound morality in it to keep it alive in spite of its defects, from its birth in 551 B. C., to the present time. But a system that had in it no recognition of God, was not sufficient, and Buddhism was introduced about 63 A. D. Finally Taoism, with its worship of many gods and demons, came and spread throughout the country. All three systems have their adherents, and the devotees of one are often found in the temples of the others, as if it did not matter very much one way or the other which was true.

A WIFE-BEATER CONVERTED.

IN a letter from a lady-missionary in China to the Missionary Herald she thus describes a noteworthy baptism at Pas-ting-fu: "For several weeks it has been evident that the Spirit was working in the hearts of the people about us, and the interest culminated in the meetings which were held. A week ago yesterday was communion Sunday, and twenty were added to our number, some being received into full membership and others into the 'Christian Congregation.' I had never before been present at the baptism of a heathen convert, and the scene was an impressive one. This acceptance of Christ must mean so much to those who have come out of the darkness and joylessness of heathenism. As one looks into the earnest, happy faces of these redeemed ones, and contrasts them with the faces of those without hope in the world, he gains a new conception of the power of Christ's gospel. Among those who joined the 'Christian Congregation' was a man who a year ago was beating his Christian wife and trying in every way to get her to give up her religion. She was very anxious that her son should come to our school here, and prayed that some way might open which would make it possible. One day her husband surprised her by giving up his opposition and offering to come himself to Pao-ting-fu to place his boy in the school. The father was invited to join the station class, and has been one of the most earnest listeners."

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

A VICTIM RESCUED.

THE recent death of a beautiful and accomplished lady renders it possible to publish the sad story of her life without causing pain to the parties concerned. A few years before the war, a wealthy gentleman, named Golden, owning a large number of slaves, resided in Southern Georgia. He was a widower, with one son and two daughters, whom he passionately loved. The younger daughter especially, he almost idolized, and lavished on her education and amusements large sums of money. She was small and slight of figure, with dark eyes and hair, sprightly in manner, but extremely proud of her beauty and aristocratic blood. After the war, Mr. Golden, utterly ruined, came North, to earn a livelihood. He was, however, unused to work, and the restraint and confinement of an office in the city, were irksome to him. More than all, his poverty and loss of station oppressed him; he fell sick and died. His son obtained a clerkship, which only just sufficed to maintain him, and the elder daughter married an old admirer, who knew her in better days.

Anda, the younger daughter, was alone and penniless. She was glad to accept an asylum offered her in the home of a kindly old uncle, living in the country. It was not easy for the proud, haughty beauty to adapt herself to the ways of a quiet country home. It was so different to the old life of luxury, when every wish was anticipated and slaves obsequiously waited her bidding. If she had been a Christian she would have known where to go for the strength she needed to live this new and uncongenial life, and would have found in the love of God an influence that would have raised her above the petty vexations and humiliations of her surroundings. Unhappily, she had no conception of happiness but in worldly pleasure and fashionable amusements, which were now beyond her reach.

After some time a change came. A young man, whom Anda Golden had met during her brief residence with her father in the city, visited her, and it was easy to see that she was fascinated with him. His fashionable attire, his easy air of gentility won her admiration. Her protectors, honestly desiring her welfare only, sought to learn the character and occupation of her friend, but though he talked freely enough of his aristocratic acquaintances, and appeared to be living in good society, he was reticent about himself. His manner excited suspicion, which was cautiously and delicately communicated to the girl. But Anda was head-strong. She knew her own business; she desired only to be let alone; her city friend was worth a hundred of the country farmers who came around her with their clumsy, boorish admiration. She had always had her own way, and it was impossible to open her eyes to the vain frivolous character of the admirer of whom she knew nothing.

The visitor remained a few weeks, and then took his departure. Anda grew nervous and anxious. She received a few letters, but they became gradually less frequent, and finally ceased altogether. Then the haughty little beauty broke down utterly. She was in an agony of despair. With bitter tears and lamentations she confessed to her friends that she had surrendered a woman's most precious possession, and that her wicked admirer had worked her ruin. He had promised her speedy marriage, but had cast her off, and she did not know where he was living nor even his real name. Some families would have cast her out to save themselves from social disgrace; they had warned her, and she had rejected their warning and affectionate counsel with scorn; she herself was conscious that she had no further claim upon them. They, however, had learned of Christ compassion for the sinner, and they stood by her.

Out of the trouble Anda rose a new woman. The unexpected tenderness and love shown to her after her wayward and ungrateful behaviour, moved her first and most, but she was led to see the spring of conduct which seemed to her more than human. Her friends were followers of Christ, and it was from Him that they had learned compassion for the fallen. She was led to study His character and herself to become a Christian. It was astonishing to see the wonderful change that came in her character. She became humble, softened, gentle, childlike, and was never so happy as when performing some humble work that would minister to the happiness of others. She visited the cottages of the village, sat by the bedside of the sick, and was a ministering angel to any who were in trouble. Her old nature was completely gone, leaving not a trace of the former faults. Her life for years was filled with deeds of love and kindness, and her relative, from whom these facts have been obtained, and who vouches for their truth, states that when she died two weeks ago, the whole neighborhood mourned, and at her funeral there was a scene of weeping such as is rarely witnessed.

AN AFRICAN CHIEF'S DILEMMA.

IN the course of a sermon in St. Paul's M. E. Church, New York, on April 29, Bishop William Taylor related a remarkable incident in connection with one of his stations in Central Africa. Among those who came to the station, and received instruction were some children who were so eager for teaching that they attended regularly, though in order to do so they had to make a toilsome journey on foot from the village where they lived, which was seven miles from the mission-building. After a time they beguiled the way with singing the hymns they had learned in the school, and so became proficient in that accomplishment. They also took to singing them around their home, and so excited the interest of the family. Their old grandfather, though apparently not particularly remarkable for his spiritual-mindedness, was especially impressed with the singing, and at last resolved on paying the missionaries a visit. The journey was a long one for him, but he accomplished it, and God blessed the interview to his conversion.

Not long afterward, when the question of his baptism came up, the old man, who was chief in his tribe informed the missionaries that he had two wives. This difficulty is a common one in African mission work. It is extremely painful to break up family relations, and it is the most severe test of a convert's sincerity that he is called upon to make. The old chief in this case was in terrible distress, and knew not how to sever the tie he had made in accordance with heathen customs. The missionaries, at his request, agreed to see the two wives, and to explain to them why it was necessary that one of them should be put away.

The old man brought them to the mission and then a clue to his perplexity presented itself. One of the women was elderly, not much younger than himself; the other was young and strong. In a society in which all the work is done by the wife, and the husband takes his ease while his wife digs and delves for his support, it was easy to see that he would gain by retaining the young woman and discarding the old one. Still the husband clung to the elder woman, but feared the consequences of putting the younger away. As gently and delicately as possible the missionaries told the two women how the case stood, and that the chief had decided to make his choice between them. The elder woman was not slow to realize the advantages her rival had over her, and, expecting that her husband would prefer the young and strong woman to herself, burst into tears. The weeping, however, soon gave place to joy when the old chief embraced her and told her that he should cleave to the wife of his youth. The missionaries anticipated some trouble with the younger woman, who seemed to have considerable temper and spirit; but to their surprise she accepted her lot with satisfaction. The chief had been a hard master, and she was even glad to learn that she would have to toil for him no more. She had little faith in the transformation of his character, and was more than willing to separate. Thus the dreaded interview ended to mutual satisfaction, and the three departed to begin their new lives under changed conditions. It is not often that matrimonial difficulties have so mutually agreeable an ending in that or any other land.

AN IDOL BEHEADED.

A MISSIONARY at Hang-chow, China, reports a strange incident of Chinese superstition. He says: It is well-known that the Chinese are a nation of gamblers; only those who have lived among them can tell the extent to which it is carried on. During the last few years Manilla lottery tickets have offered a new and inviting field of action. A few months ago a man not far from here bought one whole ticket for six dollars. Was the number a lucky one? Who could tell? He would ask the gods to help. He therefore bought a small "god of wealth." Having put this up in his house he spread the ticket before it and prayed for success. Time went on, the lottery was drawn at Manilla, and lo! our friend drew a blank; his number did not win. What did he do? He took his god and with a knife, deliberately cut off its head because it had not answered his prayers. Strange to say, after a few days the man seemed to think he had dealt rather hardly with his god. He therefore fastened its head on again and the last I heard of it, about a fortnight ago was that he and his friends were worshipping it again. Surely these people need the Gospel.

IN A CALCUTTA ORPHANAGE.

IN the Indian Witness of March 31, is the following account of a day in the Orphanage at Calcutta: It was the Children's Day, and, therefore, it was proper that everything connected with the day and its service should pertain to these noble little folk. Hence, three orphan boys (two of Mahommedan and one of Thakur parentage) were baptized; and, best of all, thirty-one lads of all heights and sizes were recommended by their several class leaders and received into full membership in the Church. All departments of the Orphanage contributed this fine long list: the gardens and fields three, the boot and shoe department (Industrial School) ten, the various classes of the Day-school thirteen, and resident Christian families the balance. One of the above was a pahari boy from Pauri, who was received into the Orphanage only a few weeks ago; but he has behaved himself so nicely (to Pauri's credit) and won all our hearts that his leader recommended him for membership. Another—and the youngest of all—was the son of a fakir. He and his aged father were the first in their village, two years ago, to come out and accept Christianity. Soon after the old father died and Gunga Das, an only son—was left an orphan, the only Christian in that village of some 500 inhabitants. But Gunga Das was to be the small beginning of what is now a growing Christian community there

A WIDOW'S HELP IN NICE.

THE mission workers in connection with Rev. R. W. McAll's work in France, have received unexpected but very welcome aid from a widow at Nice. In their report they say: "We came to Nice, leaving on our way back the gambling hell of Monaco, the curse of the country and shame of the civilized world. Nice suffers much from that neighbor. The moral tone of the city is lower than anywhere in France, and probably in the rest of the world. For a long time our work here was almost hopeless, though very expensive; it seemed as if we were throwing pearls before swine.

"But there was in Nice a simple English widow, living modestly in a quiet lodging house, where she stayed until the heat compelled her to go to Switzerland. For twenty-five years she had spent the winter in Nice, and as she was a thorough Christian, she had done all she could to bless the city in which she dwelt. As we were discouraged, and told her one day of the great expense and the little results, she said: 'Have faith in God. I know a blessing will come on this city, and I wish you to continue the work; I promise to give you 5,000 francs ($1,000) a year as long as I am spared, on condition that you do not publish my name.'

"She kept her promise for seven years, until the Lord recently called her to Himself. She died suddenly, but not without having seen something of the expected blessing. Nice has become one of our most encouraging stations. The hall, situated in the best street, is well attended; conversions have taken place. Our friend, M. Borel, who had the management of the station, received a great blessing in his own soul through his intercourse with Mrs. Humphreys; the result was that a little revival has been produced, about thirty new converts have formed together a band of volunteers, for the purpose of evangelizing, of distributing tracts, etc. The meeting we attended was excellent. In the hearty prayers of those dear people, we felt the Spirit Himself praying."

SCENES AT THE SECOND ADVENT.

By Rev. Nathaniel Starkey.

The Coming Translation of Saints—Its Results upon Those Who are Taken and Those Who are Left—Our Lord's Intimation of the Event—The Raising of the Righteous Dead—The "Foolish Virgins" Shut Out—Their Experience of the Great Tribulation—Meeting the Bridegroom after the Translation — The Great Melchizedek—The Dead Who were raised at Christ's Resurrection—The Glorious Change.

THAT "moment" spoken of by the Apostle in 1 Corinthians 15: 52, must become presently realised by millions of our race. Something unprecedented in the world's history must soon take place, and we shall lose nothing, but possibly make a gain, by attempting to realise the result consequent upon the rapture, first to them that are taken, and next to them that are left. Concerning but little can be said. The apostle is content with saying, "And so shall we ever be with the Lord." What is expressed in the words "with the Lord," not only does language fail to utter, but the imagination fails to conceive. To be "caught away with them (the raised ones) in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air," and seeing Him to be made like Him, is altogether beyond our conception. Well might John say, "We know not what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him," and so much as we can grasp of that suffices us to know.

Them That are Taken

But this leads to reflection upon the relative of those who share in the rapture. We have it from the lips of our blessed Lord Himself that, 'Two men shall be in the field, the one shall be taken and the other left.' Let us suppose, then, that the one taken will be the proprietor or tenant of the field, and that at the homestead there will be a wife and several young children. How the case may be with the wife may depend upon the measure of sympathy in which she has been to her husband. If an enemy of the truth or careless about her state Godward, she may find herself left bereaved of husband. Again, let us suppose that "the other left" in the field has in his homestead a wife in readiness for her Lord's coming, and caught away at the same moment that he missed his friend. He will return to his house to report that some strange thing has happened when, to his amazement, he finds his home bereft of his wife, and the servants in consternation to know what has become of their mistress.

Ties and Dependents

Again, we learn from our blessed Lord, that "Two women shall be grinding at the mill," possibly fellow-servants, the one deriding, the other enduring for His name's sake, whose coming she anticipates, the one reckoning on her earthly prospects, the other looking for her Lord from heaven. No wonder that one is taken, and the other left, and where will be her derision then?

Again, "In that night also there shall be two men in one bed," possibly brothers in one family, and fellow-Christians, too. Ere they fall asleep one may be found saying to the other, "Who knows but the Lord may come before morning! How delightful to wake and find oneself 'for ever with the Lord!'" To which the other may respond, "Ah! there you are again, riding your favorite hobby; I expect to live and die and be buried many long years before then." What wonder that the one shall be taken while the other is left?

In like manner we might extend our thought to the exchange, the market-place, the crowded hospital, the lonesome sick room, or the thronged thoroughfare, where two shall be speaking together, walking together, negotiating some more or less important business matter together; when lo! in a moment, one is gone and the other remains alone. Or it may happen when believers are gathered at a table of the Lord, remembering Him until He come, and we have often thought it may be the happy experience of some to be so overtaken. But may be seen then! The minister, with one of the deacons, and a score or two of the members gone, while the rest are left in blank astonishment to self-examination and inquiry whether, after all, they have known anything savingly, or whether their faith has been only fancy. In other cases possibly the minister and the deacons, with the bulk of the congregation, may be left to see that those two or three among them that held strange pre-millennial views, and were always talking about the importance of being ready, were, after all right, while the rest were wrong. Let us then be of the number who daily say, "Thou shalt guide me with Thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to glory" (Psalm 73: 24). The change of the living and

What Empty Spaces

The Raising of the Dead

are to happen simultaneously, "in the twinkling of an eye"—the briefest point of time that can be expressed. We will here just hazard the expression of a thought we have entertained for years on this matter, for which we have indeed no express revelation, but which in the very nature of things appears to us not only likely, but reasonable that, whenever the time draws near—say, within a year, or two, or three—the Lord may spare many loved ones the pain of dying by detaining them on the earth to partake at length in the rapture of the living and changed saints. Where He has seen an earnest (perhaps a life-long) looking and longing for His appearing, coupled with a hope to escape the last enemy, we think it not improbable that His love towards them may be shown after this order; and surely the thought that such might possibly be, should prove an additional incentive to entertain the lively hope and expectation. We see in Matt. 25

The Foolish Virgins

"shut out," which, to our understanding, means, in the case of the living—that they will not be changed—but left behind to seek what sooner they ought to have found, "oil in their vessels with their lamps." They will doubtless seek it at once, by "going to them that sell," having recourse to means of grace ordinary and extraordinary, turning to the Lord with weeping and supplication, repentance and confession, crying, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," hoping that He may grant unto them a second rapture. But no, the door is shut, that day of grace is past, that degree of acceptance and approval is lost; but they may yet attain unto the second degree, if then they keep the faith, and overcome the beast, his image, his mark, and the number of his name, which must then presently rise out of the sea of trouble, emphatically called the Tribulation, the Great One.

Then will be better understood than hitherto (Luke 21: 36), "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." Their brethren comprising the little flock, or flock of little ones, that have gone up, have been accounted worthy to escape, and will be then standing before the Son of Man in His revealed glory. Those who have had their life for the most part in the earth, must remain on the earth, while those who have found their life in Christ, and lived it, shall be caught away to meet Him, having (it may be) seen this to be the hope of their calling, and followed after it, if they might apprehend that for which they had been apprehended of Christ Jesus, and so pressed towards the mark for the prize of their high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

Worthy to Escape

And now let us contemplate

The First Meeting

in person of the Bridegroom with his Bride. We think the first sight the Church matured and made meet for marriage shall obtain of her Lord, will in some sort agree with the last sight she had of Him when "lifting up His hands He blessed them, and while He blessed them He was parted from them, and a cloud received Him out of their sight." For now, as their great Melchizedek, He shall meet them fresh from the battle-field, as the true seed of their father Abraham, returning from the slaughter of kings, having fought a good fight, and kept the faith to the end: now as slain ones, yet more than conquerors, they have, as His true followers, ascended up on high, leading captivity captive, and He, their great Fore-runner, comes forth with uplifted hands to bless, and with the bread of satisfaction and the wine of joy in His hand, blesses them, pronouncing them "blessed of the Most High God, possessor of heaven and earth," and as heirs of that God and joint heirs with Himself in His Father's possession—now becomes His own and their inheritance—invites them to bless the Most High God who hath delivered them thus from all their enemies and given them a final victory. Thus as King of righteousness and King of peace, He shall invite them to share dominion with Him, and as priest of the Most High God "He shall come down from offering the sin-offering, the burnt-offering, and the peace-offering,"—all in His own person fulfilled—and forth from the right hand of the Majesty on high 'shall come out and bless the people, and the glory of Jehovah shall appear." (Leviticus, 9: 22, 23.)

Nor must we forget the many risen saints who then must bear Him company, who for 1,800 years and more have been in glory with their risen Lord. What their number may have been or who, we are not told, but Matthew says, "Many bodies of the saints which slept arose, after His resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Now, that which alone is certain of them is, that their burial-place was at Jerusalem, that the earthquake disturbed their resting-place and consequently them, and that when by the Spirit of Holiness the Father raised Jesus from the dead, it pleased Him to raise these also, and by their appearing to many in Jerusalem, "the holy city," to give our faith assurance that not our Lord alone, but all His saints, should with Him share in risen life. If we might indulge our fancy ever so little, it would be to imagine that Zacharias and Elizabeth, Simeon and Anna, and possibly John the Baptist, forerunner of our Lord, were among this favored company, who, we doubt not, tarried only the "forty days," and then as our blessed Lord's escort ascended with Him, comprising in antitype the wave sheaf (Lev. 23 10: 11), earnest, and first-fruits of the great harvest of risen ones, which at the period we are considering shall have been at length reaped to share the glory with them. "And so shall we ever be with the Lord," said the apostle; and well may he add, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Came Out of their Graves

* From his article in the Prophetic News, a monthly magazine, for sale, price six cents, at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

New Edition of Rev. M. Baxter's Pamphlets.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE.

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Lerned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Adverse Report on the Fisheries Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, was made public last week, the injunction of secrecy having been removed by the Senate: It appears from it that the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations bases its objections partly upon the fact that the Administration undertook the negotiations without first consulting the Senate. As regards the treaty itself, strong objections are made to the provisions in regard to the delimitation of the waters over which Canada has exclusive jurisdiction. The Republican majority of the committee arrived at the conclusion that the treaty, "instead of diminishing sources of irritation and causes of difficulty, arising from different interpretations and disputes, will very largely increase them." The minority of the committee, on the other hand, in a carefully prepared report, express the opinion that it is better for our country that the treaty should be ratified, and they are equally convinced that the entire class of our people who are actively engaged in our North Atlantic fishing industry will be benefited by its ratification. The minority declare that "the protocol to the treaty is an honorable and friendly overture of the British Government, and should be allowed to develop by actual experience whether this treaty will be beneficial to our fisheries and commerce."

The New Chinese Treaty was Ratified by the United States Senate, on May 7, after the two important amendments mentioned in these columns last week, had been adopted. By the addition of these amendments, the features of the treaty providing for the exclusion of Chinamen from the United States for the next twenty years, have been rendered still more stringent than was originally designed. Notwithstanding these very strict provisions, some of the Pacific coast senators expressed the opinion that the treaty was not strong enough to suit the requirements of their section of the country. The other senators thought, however, that the treaty fulfilled all reasonable expectations, and when the vote was taken, the treaty was ratified by the almost unanimous consent of the Senate. In other countries, too, the agitation against Chinese immigration is becoming very strong. The Government of New Zealand last week proclaimed all Chinese ports to be infected, in order to put a stop to the entrance into the colony of Chinese immigrants. The Government of South Australia has proposed that an intercolonial conference be held for the purpose of arranging for united measures to exclude Chinese immigrants.

The Passage of the International Copyright Bill through the Senate, was secured on the 9th inst., by a vote of 35 to 10. It was passed practically as reported from the Committee on Patents, and the amendments, which proposed to withhold the copyright from foreign newspapers, magazines, and periodicals, and to insert a provision that publishers of American newspapers or other periodicals should be allowed to copy articles from any foreign paper or periodical, were promptly rejected. It is considered certain that the bill will pass the House if it can be reached in time. The measure is not looked upon favorably in England. At a conference in London, on May 4, between representatives of the printing and allied trades and a section of the London Chamber of Commerce, the International Copyright Bill was denounced. The Right Hon. Mr. Ritchie, President of the Local Government Board, who received the deputation, was asked to invite other Chambers of Commerce to co-operate with them to prevent the adoption of such a law. It is thought that the opposition in England is caused by the clause which was inserted at the instance of the American Typographical Union, providing that copyrighted books, must be printed from type set within the limits of the United States. This expression of English disapproval causes considerable surprise and may render the House less disposed to pass the measure. To pass it in the form the English desire, would arouse the antagonism of the whole printing trade of the United States.

The River and Harbor Bill Which is Designed to take 20 millions of dollars out of the public treasury, was last week rushed through the House of Representatives under a suspension of the rules. Only 21 Democrats and 48 Republicans had their votes recorded against the proposed wasteful expenditures of public monies. Mr. Sowden of Pennsylvania, voiced the opinion of the minority when he emphatically declared that the House was not justified in making the extraordinary appropriations carried by the bill, and he asked whether the President, pledged to the honest and economical administration of the Government, would approve the measure if it was passed by Congress. It was high time to call a halt, and cease the reckless expenditure of the people's money. There never had been a more wasteful piece of legislation before Congress. It is apprehended that, extraordinary as the appropriations are, they will receive additions in the Senate. If the bill serves no other purpose, it will be instrumental in reducing the much-complained-of surplus in the treasury.

The Destruction of the Beautiful Cathedral of Buffalo, N. Y., on May 10, has caused general regret. It was caused by an explosion of the natural gas which is generally used in the city. It is supposed that there was too great a pressure on the mains, and the meter burst. A gas jet being alight near the meter, supplied the final element of destruction, and, in a minute, the great tongue of flame shot upward, setting on fire all the wood-work within reach The firemen were quickly on the spot, but were puzzled how to deal with a fire that was fed with burning gas. Before a plumber could be found to cut off the gas, the cathedral was gutted, and its two magnificent organs burned. The walls and tower still stand, but the interior is a mass of blackened ruins. There were many other explosions of natural gas in various parts of the city at the same time, and several fires were started. Among them was one in the Westminster Presbyterian chuch, but the janitor being able to turn off the gas, that building was saved.

A Terrible Catastrophe Occurred on the night of May 5, on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad near Locust Gap, Pa. A freight train of seventy-five cars became disconnected by the breaking of a coupling, and the engine and three cars ran half a mile before the crew discovered that the train was divided. The first section awaited the arrival of the second at the foot of a heavy grade, but the two brakemen lost control of the second section, and it dashed into the first section, causing an explosion in two cars which were loaded with dynamite and giant powder. At the scene of the accident the railroad runs along a steep hill, at the bottom of which stood two rows of houses occupied by the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company's employees. The force of the tremendous explosion wrecked these buildings, seventeen in all, and the stoves set fire to the ruins Eight persons, among them six children, suffered a horrible death, and twenty were badly injured. In addition to the homes, twelve cars were destroyed. All the windows in the Locust Ga churches and schools were broken and the doo blown off. In Mount Carmel, two and ha miles distant, large store windows were broke The explosion was distinctly felt in Shamoki six miles away. None of the train hands we injured, although one of them was blown considerable distance.

The Affairs of Bulgaria are Again Attractin general attention. It is reported that Bismarc in accordance with the formally expressed d sire of Emperor Frederick and the Czar, will a the Porte to depose Prince Ferdinand. Th latter, however, seems to be determined t maintain his position on the Bulgarian thron In the course of a speech at a banquet in th hall of the Sabranje, (the Legislature), at Tir nova, he emphatically declared: "Here, in th building, I swore to lead Bulgaria to the go marked out for her in history. I now repea that oath, assuring you that, without sparin myself, I shall with heart and soul adhere to th promise I made before God and the people."

The Necessity of Placing England in a Pro er state of defence, was urged by a deputatio of members of Parliament, who, last week, pr sented an address to that effect to the Righ Hon. Edward Stanhope, Secretary of State fo War. Mr. Stanhope declared that there was n occasion for a panic. England's preparations, h said, compared favorably with those of foreig powers. Still, the Government recognized th necessity for immediate action. At all the mi itary ports and coaling stations the work o strengthening the defences was being carrie on with renewed activity, and at the leadin mercantile ports every effort was being made t complete the submarine mining defences. A attack upon London by way of the Thame would be made an absolute impossibility. Mu tifarious forces of regulars, militia and volun teers, were about to be organized, and the Gov ernment would be able to produce at short no tice a field army sufficient to defend England and primarily to protect London. The Londo Dally Telegraph, in a column article heade "England in Danger," asserts on "the highes military authority," which is supposed to mea Lord Wolseley, that the strength of the army entirely insufficient, and declares that "the na tion ought to demand that instant attention b given to our army and navy."

The Papal Rescript Relating to Boycottin and the Nationalists plan of campaign have no at present operated favorably in Ireland. Th tenants of a number of estates in the Count Clare have adopted this plan, and "moon lighters" have raided four farms, because th occupants had paid their rents. They destroy ed property and injured the tenants. On Ma 10, exciting struggles took place at Carmacl near Thurles, between a strong force of eme gency policemen and tenants whom they sough to evict. The police used a battering ram i effecting an entrance to some of the house They met with a stout resistance, the tenant throwing boiling water at them and assultin them with sticks and stones. Some of the in tended evictions were effected, The others, is believed, will be abandoned. Mr. Parnell ha taken occasion to express his opinion on th action of the Vatican. At a banquet given hi by the Eighty Club in London last week h said, Irish Catholics knew their political dut and how to vindicate themselves. They woul not allow anybody, however, high or influentia to influence them a jot in their political duty t their country—a thing that had been repeatedl tried from Rome, but had always failed. Th opinion is gaining ground that the action of th Pope will have disastrous results as the mos desperate and lawless classes of agitators hav hitherto been checked by association with th priests, who to some extent restrained them. I the influence of the priests is withdrawn i obedience to the Papal rescript the Nationalis organization will fall into the hands of the wors elements of the people.

The Exclusion of the Lady Delegates from the Methodist Episcopal General Conference was voted on May 7. The debate grew warmer as it proceeded, and at last Dr. Buckley, who was the leader of the members opposed to their admission, declared that if the conference admitted the lady delegates it would exceed its powers, and he and a hundred other ministers would move for impeachment. The question was at last settled by the adoption of an amendment to the committee's report, adding to the clause against admission these words: "But since there is great interest in this question, and since the church generally should be consulted in regard to such an important matter; therefore, Resolved, That we submit to the annual conferences the proposition to amend the second restrictive rule by adding the words, 'And said delegates may be men or women,' after the words, 'two lay delegates for an annual conference,' so that it will read, 'Nor of more than two lay delegates for an annual conference, and said delegates may be men or women,'" So amended, the report of the committee excluding the ladies from this conference was adopted. The ministers and lay delegates voted separately. The former stood 159 yeas, and 122 noes. The laymen were more favorable: their vote was yeas 78, noes 76. So this question which has long agitated the church, was decided for the time, and referred to the local conferences for final settlement.

An Octogenarian Sailor Wept as He Told the story of his conversion in Sands Street Church, Brooklyn, on Sunday May 6. It was at the last service held in the old church, which is now to be pulled down to make way for the Bridge improvements, and many persons who were deeply affected, recalled incidents and scenes of the hundred years of the church's existence. Among these was Mr. Frazier, who was converted through the blessing of God on the labors of a band sent out from Sands Street Church to work among sailors: "I used to be one one of the worst boys in the Sunday-school," said gray-haired Mr. Frazier, "and they decided to put me out. But there was a little man who wore knee-breeches and a queue who said, 'No, bring him to me.' He was a glorious little man, and he put his hand on my head, and talked to me in such a loving manner that I melted there and then. I was wicked after that, but finally I gave my heart to Jesus in the old church."

A Beautiful Prodigal Girl Received a Prodi- gal's welcome last week at her father's home in St. Louis. Two years ago she was the pride of her family and the centre of an admiring circle of friends. Amateur theatricals were a favorite amusement of the social circle, and this young lady was successful in her parts, and she was so highly praised as to convince her that she had dramatic talent and would make a popular actress. Accordingly she left home, secretly, and joined a travelling theatrical company passing through St. Louis. She received a salary of fifteen dollars a week, which was subsequently raised as her talent developed. The company did not succeed when it came East, as it had done in the West, and finally on reaching New York, was disbanded, and the manager was unable to pay salaries. All this time the girl's parents had been sorrowfully searching for her and receiving letters at long intervals, saying that she was doing well and was perfectly contented. A gentleman at Newark, N. J., who was a friend of the family, had promised to keep a look out for the girl if the company came East and when he heard of its being disbanded, he made a search for her, but failed. Two weeks ago, however, he heard of a girl being in distress, and charitably went to her relief. He was agreeably surprised to find that she was the girl from St. Louis. He immediately telegraphed to her father, and was authorized to promise her full forgiveness and a welcome home if she would come. At first the girl had obstinately refused to go home, when urged to do so, refusing to believe that she would be received, but on reading her father's telegram, she broke down completely, and was eager to go. On May 7, she set out and was met with demonstrations of joy. The same assurance of forgiveness and welcome God holds out to every repentant prodigal, and none have ever been rejected who have trusted in it. (Isa. 55 : 7.)

A Gigantic Lumber Raft is being Construct- ed at Finger-Board, on the Bay of Fundy. It is being built by the same man who made the raft which caused so much trouble last year. The new raft is to contain over thirty thousand logs, and will be seven hundred feet long. It will be worth about $60,000. This second attempt to solve the problem of cheap transportation of lumber to New York will, the owner predicts, be successful. The first attempt failed, because the tug was not strong enough to manage the stupendous floating mass, and being obliged to cut it adrift, was unable to regain hold upon it, and the raft having no steering apparatus, nor any one upon it to guide it, drifted out to sea. This time the constructor will put huge masts and sails upon it, to reduce the labor of the tug; a house to accommodate fourteen men will be built upon it, and it will be fitted with a rudder. The logs will be connected with strong chains, and spiked together, and it is thought that it will be manageable and cannot be disintegrated. It will be, therefore, like a huge ship, but unlike other ships, it will be ship and cargo in combination, and its component parts will constitute its value. It is thus with the Church, which is being gathered out of the world, and which cannot be disintegrated, but which Christ will bring into the eternal haven. It will bear no earthly treasure, but its individual members are each and all precious to Him who gave Himself for them. (Eph. 4 : 16.)

The Discovery of a Cave a Mile in Length is reported from Tully, N. Y. A press despatch from that place states that on May 8, a farmer employed a number of men to dig a well near his house. When his men had excavated a few feet the bottom suddenly fell out of the well, at a time when, happily, all the men were in places of safety. There was left in the bottom of the shallow well a broad hole leading into utter darkness, apparently of unfathomable depth. In a short time an exploring party was formed, ropes and windlasses were procured, and several daring men were lowered to the bottom. It was found that the bottomless well led into a cave, whose bottom was about forty feet below the well. The explorers went over the cave with torches and lanterns, and found it to be about a mile long. It extends directly under a lake, but is entirely dry, no water whatever having been found. A number of stone columns and some fine stalactites and stalagmites were found, with fossil formations, and Mr. English, the geologist, who subsequently descended, found two very fine specimens of trilobite. Another explorer found a number of fern formations. The farmer had been living for many years over these wonderful natural beauties, utterly unconscious of their existence. It is just so with the wonders of grace. Every Christian after his conversion, is astonished that he could have lived so long ignorant of the glories revealed to him. (Rom. 11 : 33).

A Brave Girl Rescued a Whole Family from a burning house in a village near Tower City, Dak. Ter., on May 1. About six o'clock in the morning Miss Greenough, a girl only sixteen years old, was passing a lonely cottage, when she noticed smoke issuing from a window, soon followed by a tongue of flame. No one was in sight, but the girl raised a loud cry which was heard by some men at a distance, Realizing that no time was to be lost, she forced open the door of the cottage and wakened a woman who had a babe sleeping by her side. The woman ran down stairs with the infant in her arms, and escaped with slight burns received on the stairway which had by this time caught fire. She hurriedly told Miss Greenough that two other children were sleeping in the room overhead, and the brave girl ran up-stairs to save them. She brought both down, but when she came to the place where the stairs were burning they halted. Escape seemed cut off, but Miss Greenough quickly decided on her course. Calling to the men who had come to the rescue to be ready, she raised one child in her arms, and threw it over and through the flames to a man who caught it. She did the same with the second child and finally leaped herself. She was severely burned, but all the others were only slightly injured. But for her efforts the whole family would probably have perished. None who hear of the noble girl's heroism can fail to admire and honor her for it; but what must be the feelings toward her of that mother and her children! It would be strange if they were ungrateful. Yet men for whose salvation Christ suffered and died hear the story of His death with indifference. (Acts 13 : 40, 41)!

BRIEF NOTES.

Rockford, Ill., with a population of about 20,000, will have no licensed saloons during the coming year.

A great revival at Crawfordsville, Ind., followed the labors of Rev. B. Fay Mills. His services were preceded by united preparatory meetings, and the pastors are now continuing the work.

On Sunday Evening, May 6, Dr. Talmage, clad in regimental uniform, preached the annual sermon in the Tabernacle, to the Thirteenth Regiment, of which he was recently elected Chaplain.

By a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, saloon-keepers are made responsible for any injury, loss or damage suffered by their patrons in the saloons, or as a consequence of their visits there.

At the Seventy-second Annual meeting of the American Bible Society, it was announced, that by the efforts of Dr. Hepburn, the Bible in Chinese had been completed. The receipts last year amounted to $557,340.

Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, has decided to invite Dr. Lyman Abbott to become permanent pastor of the Church, in succession to the late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher. Dr. Abbott's services as temporary pastor have been highly appreciated by the Church.

Ben Hogan, the Ex-Pugilist, has been holding services in the M. E. Church, East Syracuse, N. Y. The building has been crowded to excess, and much good has been done. At the first service, after Mr. Hogan's plain, earnest talk, fifty persons rose to ask for prayer.

Three prominent members of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, who were negotiating recently for the hire of a hall in New York, were assured by the Irish janitor that the profits of the liquor sold at the bar would defray more than half the cost of the hall.

At the annual meeting of the National Temperance Society in New York, on May 8, it was stated that the receipts for the past year were $60,675.65. Eight colored men are now employed by the Society in the Southern States, and are doing good work among their brethren. Dr. Cuyler was elected President.

At the Conference on the Christian Principles of Civil Government, recently held in Philadelphia, a resolution was passed, declaring, "That we regard 'Sunday mails,' 'Sunday railroad trains,' and 'Sunday newspapers' as a triple unholy alliance, against the sanctity of the Sabbath and the rights of the people to a day of rest."

Two respectable farmers named Primley, living near Seneca, Kan., state that on May 3, a farm-hand named Althous, during a heated discussion on the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, uttered an appalling blasphemy. The words were scarcely out of his mouth, when he became violently insane, rushed around with awful groans, and, despite their efforts, made his escape into the woods.

During the first two weeks of Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings in St. Paul, Minn., fully one thousand persons publicly confessed Jesus as their Saviour. Seven hundred and eighty-three handed in their names and declared their church preferences. The services on Sundays are held in Market Hall, which seats two thousand persons, but large numbers were unable to obtain admission.

The Christian Chapel at 344 Central Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., is making encouraging progress. The work was commenced about a year ago by Mr. George Lusty, who, remarking the need of the locality, opened a Sunday-school there. There were only 20 children at first, but the school now contains 130, and there are regular preaching services, the congregation, composed chiefly of non-church goers, filling the room. Mr. Lusty had no promise of support, but relied solely on God, and he has been enabled to maintain the work.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

"SHE WAS NOT HID."

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and falling down before Him, she declared unto Him before all the people for what cause she had touched Him, and how she was healed immediately."—Luke 8 : 47.

The Divine Purpose in the Woman's Healing—A Confession Required—I. Hiding in Her Case very Excusable—She was Weak and Timid—Her Cure would be Known Without Confession—Not Essential to the Cure—II. Hiding not Permitted—Needed for the Lord's Glory—For the Sake of Others—For Her Own Good—Became a Daughter—III. Christians in Hiding should Come Out—For the Sake of the Church—The Family—Neighbors—Lady Burgoyne's Confession—Objections Answered.

LAST Sabbath morning we spoke upon the woman who was healed of her issue of blood. After having spent all her living upon physicians, and being disappointed in them all, she touched the Saviour's garment, and was healed immediately. She came behind Him, for she did not wish to be seen. She said not a word: she had not the courage to ask for the blessing in an open manner. When cured, she slunk away into the crowd: she was anxious to be unobserved.

If the narrative had ended where we left it last Sunday, what a quietus it would have afforded to those good, peace-loving people who, in these days of blasphemy and rebuke, will take no sides at all! "Anything for a quiet life." They are very comfortable, and mean to remain so. What does it matter to them though the whole Church should be rotten with error? They hope to go quietly to heaven—indeed, they feel they are going there; and, if they are not soldiers of the cross, yet they trust they are followers of the Lamb; if they do not contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, yet still they eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and enjoy the privileges of a comfortable religion. That is the present policy of many, and gladly enough would they have sheltered themselves behind this woman. She, however, was not hid, nor may they be.

I. First, then, we say concerning this woman, seemed very excusable. I have already said, that if, in any instance, a cure might have been concealed, this was one; and it was so for many reasons. First, because of this woman's natural timidity, and because of the nature of her malady. It would appear that if in any case the thing might have been done in a corner, or if done in a crowd, might have been passed over without remark, this was an evident case in point. Yet the Saviour, tenderly considerate as He is, will not have it so. And you, dear friend, may say, "I am naturally so very timid and retiring; pray, excuse me." This woman was not only bashful, but her sickness made her rightly wish to remain in obscurity, "I should not like my story to be known," says one. She might have justly said the same; it must have been hard, indeed, for her to confess what the Lord had done. Yet she had to acknowledge His grace openly, and so must you.

Her Hiding

In addition to this, remember that the Saviour did not court publicity. He laid no injunction upon those whom He healed that they should tell everyone of the marvel. He did not seek fame or observation: He did not strive nor cry, nor cause His voice to be heard in the streets. In several cases He bade the healed ones tell no man what was done; and in this case He had given the cure without any open request for it. Might she not from this conclude that her secret act of faith was approved, and that it might continue secret, since it had gained the boon? You may reason in that way about yourself, and say that Jesus does not need that you should testify for Him. Indeed, it is true, that He does not need anything of any of us; but is this a fit way of treating your Lord? You may say that quietude on your part would be excusable; but as the Saviour did not think so in this woman's case, I believe that He will not think so in your case. I trust that in His mercy He will deal with you as with her, and compel you to come out and own the wonders of His grace.

Excuse might also have been found for the healed woman, in the fact that her cure would make itself known by its results. When she reached home everybody would see that she was quite another person; and when they asked how it came to pass, she could tell them all about it. They would see in her life the best evidence of the work of our Lord upon her. Is it not better to speak by your life than by your lips? Exactly so, and herein lies the apparent force of this excuse for disobedience. It needs some truth to keep

A Falsehood on its Legs.

Note well that this woman was not permitted to withhold the open avowal of her indebtedness to Christ, even though it was certain that her health and her conduct would witness to His power. I know what you say: "I need not join a church: I can be a Christian at home. Better live a Christian life than wear a Christian name." My friend, we never proposed to you that you should put the wearing of a Christian name in the place of a Christian life—we have solemnly spoken the reverse of such a notion. We would earnestly remind you of our Saviour's words: "These things ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone."

Another pretext might have served this woman, if she desired an excuse. She might truthfully have said, "It is evident that an open confession is not essential to my cure, for I am cured." She was healed immediately, and it is added, that she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague; so that she knew that she was healed, and it was clear that of her faith was not necessary to her receiving that great boon from the Lord. Hence, many argue, "To confess Christ and join with His people is not necessary to my salvation." Who said it was? Open confession is not necessary; nay, is not permitted, till you are saved. How could this woman have made any confession of a cure till she was cured? But being cured, it then became necessary that she should confess it: not necessary to the cure, that is clear; but necessary because of the cure.

An Avowal

Thus I have shown you that in her case many excuses might have been made; and yet, after all, it would not have been a fitting thing if she had stolen away in the crowd, and gone home cured without praising and blessing her Lord. It would have been to her everlasting dishonor. Within herself she felt that it was a marvellous cure which had come to her by a touch of Him, and she could not praise Him enough. The stones would have cried out against her if she had not confessed His miracle of gracious power, and the earth would have refused to bear up such a monster of ingratitude. Instantly she fell down before Him, and told all the truth.

II. Secondly, her

Hiding Was Not Permitted

by the Saviour. For, first, an open confession on her part was needful in reference to the Lord's glory. If this woman concealed her cure, others might do the same; and if they all did it, then Christ's commission would have no visible endorsement from the Lord God. I should like to impress this idea upon those of you who do not confess your Lord: whatever is right for you to do is right for other people to do. If it is right for one Christian not to confess Christ and join a church, it must be allowable for other Christians to do the same. If you may go to heaven by the backstairs so may I, and God's grand entrance to the kingdom may be deserted. Who will care to go to heaven by the open way, with all its responsibilities and opposition, if you can just as easily take the snug road behind the hedges, and slink into glory without observation? The change wrought in the spiritual and moral condition of the saved is God's attestation of the gospel; and if this is not to be spoken of, how is the world to know that God has sent the gospel at all?

As God is seen in his works of creation, Jesus is seen in His miracles of grace. Shall we rob Him of His glory? God forbid that we should do Him this serious dishonor. When first I knew the Lord, if anybody had said to me, "You will be ashamed to confess Christ although He has saved you. The day will come when you will blush to own His name," I should have felt indignant at the suggestion. Why, I wanted to tell everybody of the Saviour's love. If there had been nobody else to hear me, I should have had to tell the cat. I felt like Bunyan did when he said he wanted to tell the crows on the ploughed land all about it. I cannot understand how it is that you who know the Saviour, or think you do, can imagine it to be right to hide away, and cover up the glory of Christ. Oh, tell it! Tell it all the world over that He has healed us, forgiven us, and saved us.

But the confession had to be made

For the Sake of Others.

Do any of you wish to live unto yourselves? If you do, you need saving from selfishness. I have seen it brought as a charge against evangelical religion that we teach men to look to their own salvation first, and that this is a kind of spiritual selfishness. Ah, but if that salvation means salvation from selfishness, where is the selfishness of it? It is a very material point in salvation to be saved from hardness of heart and carelessness about others. Do you want to go to heaven alone? I fear you will never go there. Have you no wish for others to be saved? Then you are not saved yourself. Be sure of that. What is the most natural plan to use for the salvation of others but to bear your own personal testimony?

But especially she had to do this

For Her Own Good.

The Saviour had designs of love in bringing this poor trembler forward before all the people. By this He saved her from a host of fears which would have haunted her. Suppose she had gone home healed, and had never confessed it; surely she would have felt uneasy? A sense of having stolen the boon without leave or license would have caused her uneasy dreams and sad apprehensions. She would worry herself with the fear that the disease would soon return again, or that she would die from a fearful judgment. All such fears were rendered impossible by her open confession, and that which followed upon it. Jesus assured her that He had taken no offence; He wished her to have no fears, for, said He, "Thy faith hath saved thee. Go in peace."

Our Lord also gave her an increased blessing after her confession. Perhaps the Lord is reserving some great favor for some of you when you avow His name. You hide indoors, and He allows you milk enough to live upon; but if you would come out and confess Him, He would feed you with the strong meat of the kingdom. You would become a braver and more useful person if you would take up your cross. Confess what Christ has done for you. For what did the Saviour give her?

He gave her clearly to know her relationship to Him. He said, "Daughter!" I do not know that the Saviour ever called any other woman daughter, for He was guarded in His speech to women; but to this one woman

He Said, "Daughter."

Oh, may the Lord give trembling ones to see and feel the near and dear relationship which exists between Christ and their souls! May your sonship come up before your minds most vividly, as a reward of obedience. May Jesus say to some of you, "Son, be of good comfort" or to another, "Daughter, be of good cheer, thy faith hath saved thee." "What would I give," says one, "if Jesus would call me 'daughter'"! Give Him your whole self by believing in Him, and confession of Him, and see if He does not reveal to you His love."

Next notice that He gave a commendation to her faith: "Thy faith hath made thee whole." Why, it was not her faith which made her whole, was it? No, but Jesus puts His own crown upon the head of faith. It is always safe for Jesus to crown faith, because faith always crowns Jesus. Her faith would answer, "Lord, I did nothing, thou didst it all," and, therefore, Jesus ascribes her healing to her faith. How much I desire that you, who are now afraid of your own faith, would win your Lord's praise by coming out and bearing witness to what He has done for you! Then will you not only believe, but also know that you have believed, and end for ever your present state of miserable doubt.

III. Thus I have already reached my last point: your Hiding Ought to be Ended.

"Whom are you speaking to, sir?" Well, not to you, dear friends, who are always to the front, lifting the banner of the cross. "Whom are you speaking to, sir?" To you, my friend, if you are really a disciple, but secretly, for fear of the Jews. If you keep yourself to yourself, it is to you that I am speaking, and I desire to press upon you your obligations. What owest thou to my Lord? You are washed from your uncleanness. You are clothed with the robe of righteousness. You are accepted in the Beloved. You know that you have passed from death to life. Unless fearfully mistaken, you know that you are the Lord's. Well, then, own it. Do not be ashamed to take your place in

The Cross-Bearing Procession, and follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. This is still the way to honor and immortality.

Do you not think you owe something to the church of God, which kept the gospel alive in the world for you to hear? Did not a band of godly men and women meet together, and see that the gospel was preached? Was it not so that you were saved? Should you not help to keep that church going by whose means you were brought to Jesus? May I be permitted also to say, I think you owe something to the minister who led you to Jesus? What a cheer it is to us when we get a letter from one who has found the Lord through our teaching; and better still, when face to face we meet one who has trusted the Saviour through our poor instrumentality! Those who are sowers of the seed know what a joy it is to see it spring up. Besides, you owe it to yourselves. Are you going to be mere bats, fluttering out when none will observe you, and hiding from the light? Are you going to be like mice, which only come out at night to nibble in the pantry? Quit yourselves like men! You owe it to your family. You should tell your household what grace has done for you. Many a person wonders that his sons and daughters do not turn out well, when he himself has never been openly on the Lord's side. Do you not think you owe it to your neighbors to show your colors. O ye saved ones, fly them at the mast-head, nail them there; and never let the enemy take them down.

Now let me hear some of

Your Objections,

and answer them. I hope I have been answering them all through my sermon. Here is one. "Well, you know, Mr. Spurgeon, I am such an insignificant person. It cannot make any difference what I do." Yes, and this woman was a very insignificant person—only a woman! When I speak thus in English, it is a very ungallant speech, but if a Rabbi had said it in Christ's day, it would not have seemed at all out of place, for they taught that no holy person ought, in the streets, to allow a woman's dress to touch him, lest he should be defiled thereby. They thought that if a scribe tried to teach a woman the law, he dishonored the law by doing so. Religious men lightly esteemed women in the Saviour's day. Our divine Lord never gave the slightest sanction to such an abominable spirit, and I am not going to lend any sanction to your saying "I am only a poor feeble woman." God thinks much of the lowly: you must not talk so. Besides, many of you do not think so meanly of yourselves as you pretend to do when you want to avoid your duty. Do not excuse yourselves through pretended humility.

Jesus does not excuse one of His healed ones from owning the work of His grace. A dear lady, who has long since gone to glory, was once an honored member of this church; it was and when she wished to unite with us she said to me, "Dear sir, I cannot go before the church. It is more than I can manage to make a confession of Christ before the members." I told her that we could make no exception for anybody, and especially not for her, who was so well established in the faith that she could surely answer a few questions before those who were brethren and sisters in the Lord. She came bravely, and spoke most sweetly for her Lord. Some of you may remember her, with her sweet countenance, and venerable bearing. When she had owned her Lord, she put both her hands on mine, and said emphatically, "With all my heart I thank you for this; I shall never be ashamed of Christ now. When aristocratic friends call upon me I will speak to them of my Lord." She did so constantly. You never found her slow to introduce the gospel, whoever might be with her. She frequently said to me, "Oh, what a training that was for me! I might have been a timid one all my days if I had not made that confession before the church." Now I say to you, if it be an ordeal, undergo it for Christ's sake. But, indeed, it should be a pleasure to own your Lord among His own disciples.

Lady Burgoyne,

False Shame.

"Alas!" says one, "I could not tell of what the Lord has done for me, because mine is such a sorrowful story. You know what I used to be, sir, sovereign grace has made me to differ, but my former life silences me!" Was it not so with this woman? How could she tell her story? But then it was to the glory of God, and so "she told Him all the truth." Whatever you were before you were converted, never boast of it; but at the same time do not deny it, but honor your Saviour. Remember how often Paul tells us what he was before conversion. If any rake up your old sin, answer that it is sadly true, but you have been washed, and much has been forgiven you. Own that you were the chief of sinners, and that even now you are less than the least of all saints, but the Lord has brought you from death to life to the glory of His name.

"Ah!" says one, "but suppose after I had confessed Christ I should become as bad as ever." Suppose that this woman had supposed such a sad thing, and had said, "O Lord I cannot confess that thou hast healed me, for I do not know how I may be in six months' time." She was not so mistrustful. "But suppose the Lord should leave me, and suffer me to leave Him." Yes, and suppose you were to leave off supposing anything of the sort, and just take His promise as it stands. "He that believeth in Him hath everlasting life." "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." Do you believe His word? Then lay aside such suspicions. Jesus does not give us

A Trumpery, Temporary Salvation;

He does not save us for a quarter of a year and then leave us. If saved by Him, you will be forever saved! He is the Author of eternal salvation. If He gives you a new heart, it is a new heart, and will never become an old one. When I trusted Christ, I did not trust Him to save me for a year or two, but for ever. When you go the heavenly journey, take a ticket all the way through. Some of our friends take a ticket to the next station, and then rush out to get another. Take your ticket for the New Jerusalem, and not for a half-way-house. The train will never break down, and the track will never be torn up. If you can trust Jesus Christ to carry you through to glory, He will do it. Let not that fear disturb you.

"Ah!" says one more, "it seems too good to be true. I cannot think that such a one as I may dare to link myself with the Lord Jesus Christ, who is so great and so glorious." Yet this is your only hope. You are only saved through being in Christ. This may be too great, too good for us to imagine, but then we need not imagine it; it is clearly revealed in the infallible Word of God. He that believeth in Jesus is one with Him. Come, then, and own that blessed oneness.

Be one with Christ to-day in his humiliation, and you shall be one with Him by-and-by in His glory. Be despised and ridiculed for His sake, and you shall be honored and glorified with Him in the day when He appeareth. God bless you for Christ's sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A MISTAKEN CHASE OF A COW.*

Living in the outskirts of the city, where the fences were poor, and straying cattle often gave them great annoyance, Henry [Mr. Beecher] one day, to his immense disgust, found a cow quietly resting in the middle of the barn floor. With the accumulated indignation aroused by numerous chases which these poachers of the highway had led him, by many tramplings across flower-beds and destruction of garden vegetables, he drove her out and chased her down the street. Coming in hot and tired from his run, he threw himself on the sofa, saying, "There, I guess I've taught one old cow to know where she belongs." "What do you mean?" said his father, looking up apprehensively from his paper. "Why, I found another cow in the barn, and I have turned her out and chased her clear down the street, and I think she will stay away now." "Well," said Dr. Beecher, "you have done it. I have just bought that cow, and I had to wade the Ohio River twice to get her home; and, after I have got her safely into the barn, you have turned her out. You have done it now, and no mistake." And the chasing of that cow was renewed.

A Professor Puzzled.

Mr. Beecher roomed, while at college, with Professor Stowe, who was the soul of punctuality, and was continually pained at the failure of his young room-mate to be on time at morning prayers in the seminary chapel. Having done his best to wake him up one morning, apparently without success, he had gone down-stairs with many expressions of disgust. No sooner was he out of the room than Mr. Beecher sprang up, dressed himself as only college students can, ran to the seminary by a back way, and when the Professor entered, was sitting demurely in front of the desk. The amazement of the teacher at this unexpected appearance, rubbing his glasses and peering at him again and again, to determine whether it was real or he only saw a vision, was always remembered by Mr. Beecher with a chuckle of merriment.

Early Hardships.

Of his first pastorate, at Lawrenceburg, Ind., Mr. Beecher wrote at a later date: "I had no idea that I could preach. I never expected that I could accomplish much. I merely went to work with the feeling, 'I will do as well as I can, and I will stick to it, if the Lord pleases, and fight His battle the best way I know how.' And I was thankful as I could be. Nobody ever sent me a spare-rib that I did not thank God for the kindness which was shown me. I recollect when Judge —— gave me his cast-off clothing; I felt that I was sumptuously clothed. I wore old coats and second-hand shirts for two or three years, and I was not above it, either, although sometimes, as I was physically a somewhat well-developed man, and the Judge was thin and his legs were slim, they were rather a tight fit.

"You can form some conception of that field when I tell you that it was a place where they had four gigantic distilleries, from which was carried to market a steamboat-load of liquor every day. When I went there, I entered upon my vocation of preaching; I found a church—a little red-brick building—with nineteen or twenty members. There was one man, and the rest were women. With the exception of two persons, there was not one of them who was not obliged to gain a livelihood by the labor of the hands. So you will understand how very poor they were.

* From a Biography of Henry Ward Beecher, by William C. Beecher and Rev. Samuel Scoville, assisted by Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher. 713 pages, with numerous portraits and illustrations. Price, $3. Published by Charles L. Webster & Company, New York.

Bishop William Taylor.

Jemmy's Friend Exhibited the Shoes.

"I was sexton as well as minister. There were no lamps, so I went and bought some, and filled them and lit them. I swept the church and lighted my own fires. I did not ring the bell, because there was none. I opened the church before every meeting, and shut and locked it after every meeting. I took care of everything in the church. Here, in this little frontier village, then on the very borders of civilization, I began my real work."

BISHOP WILLIAM TAYLOR.

(See Portrait.)

THE most conspicuous figure, and by far the most interesting, in the throng of eminent men assembled in the Methodist Episcopal Quadrennial Conference in New York, is that of Bishop Taylor, whose life and labors have made his name known all over the world. William Taylor was born May 2, 1821. He is therefore now sixty-seven years of age, but his manly, upright figure, his quick, nervous energy, and his elastic step give the impression to a stranger that he is still in his prime. The place of his birth was a city at the base of North Mountain, Rockbridge County, Virginia. His father was a tanner, and until he was twenty years of age the future Bishop spent his working hours in the tannery. The family were Presbyterians; but the father, having attended a camp-meeting at Cold Sulphur Springs, in 1833, profited so much under the preaching of a Methodist minister that he resolved on joining a Methodist church.

William Taylor was converted while a youth, and it became his highest ambition to preach the gospel, especially as an evangelist. He applied for and received an exhorter's license from the Baltimore Conference, and was subsequently licensed as a preacher and appointed missionary to San Francisco, Cal. His work, "California Illustrated," gives a vivid picture of his life in that State. He evidently entered upon his duties in an apostolic spirit, and devoted himself without reservation to the service of his Master. So earnest was he, and so widely did God bless his labors, that the name "California" Taylor is that by which, even at this day, he is best known.

In 1862 Mr. Taylor commenced his first foreign evangelizing tour. His destination was Australia. Dr. Buckly, writing of Mr. Taylor's labors in that country, says that at the Ecumenical Council he inquired of the Wesleyan ministers there from Australia as to the success of the different American and European evangelists who had visited the scene of their labors, and without exception they stated that the permanent effects of the evangelistic labors of William Taylor in Australia were greater than those of any man who visited that country.

From Australia Mr. Taylor went to Africa, and labored in Cape Colony, Natal, and Caffraria, where great additions were reported, both among foreigners and natives, 1200 colonists and 7000 Kaffirs professing conversion.

India is probably the land nearest to Mr. Taylor's heart. For that country he has labored and prayed incessantly since the first time he set foot in it, in 1870. He had no salary, but he set to work in faith, believing that God would feed him as long as He had need of him. He had written one or two books, which were selling well in America, and they supplied him with funds for travelling expenses. He preached throughout Southern India, opening preaching-stations everywhere, and where churches already existed doubling and trebling the number of the worshippers. He left India in 1875, to assist Mr. Moody in England; but the condition of India has been a burden on his heart.

Space will not permit a description of his work in Palestine, Ceylon, Canada and South America. The Bishops' address at the General Conference at Cincinnati thus referred to his work in the last-named sphere: "The western coast of South America was visited a few years since by the Rev. William Taylor, and under his influence several young men and women have gone to that region, chiefly as teachers, risking their support among the people and also endeavoring to preach the Gospel of Christ."

At the Conference, in May, 1884, Mr. Taylor was present as a delegate from Southern Inc and when it was resolved to elect a Bishop the African field, he was chosen for the offi Since that time he has labored zealously in t Dark Continent, planting stations and direct the labors of the missionaries who have go out at his invitation.

LITTLE JEMMY'S FATHER.

(See Illustration.)

IN one of the poorest and most squalid d tricts of a great city a few workingmen w assembled in their dinner-hour in a salo They brought their dinners with them, and t saloon-keeper, with an eye to custom, allow them to eat them in his place.

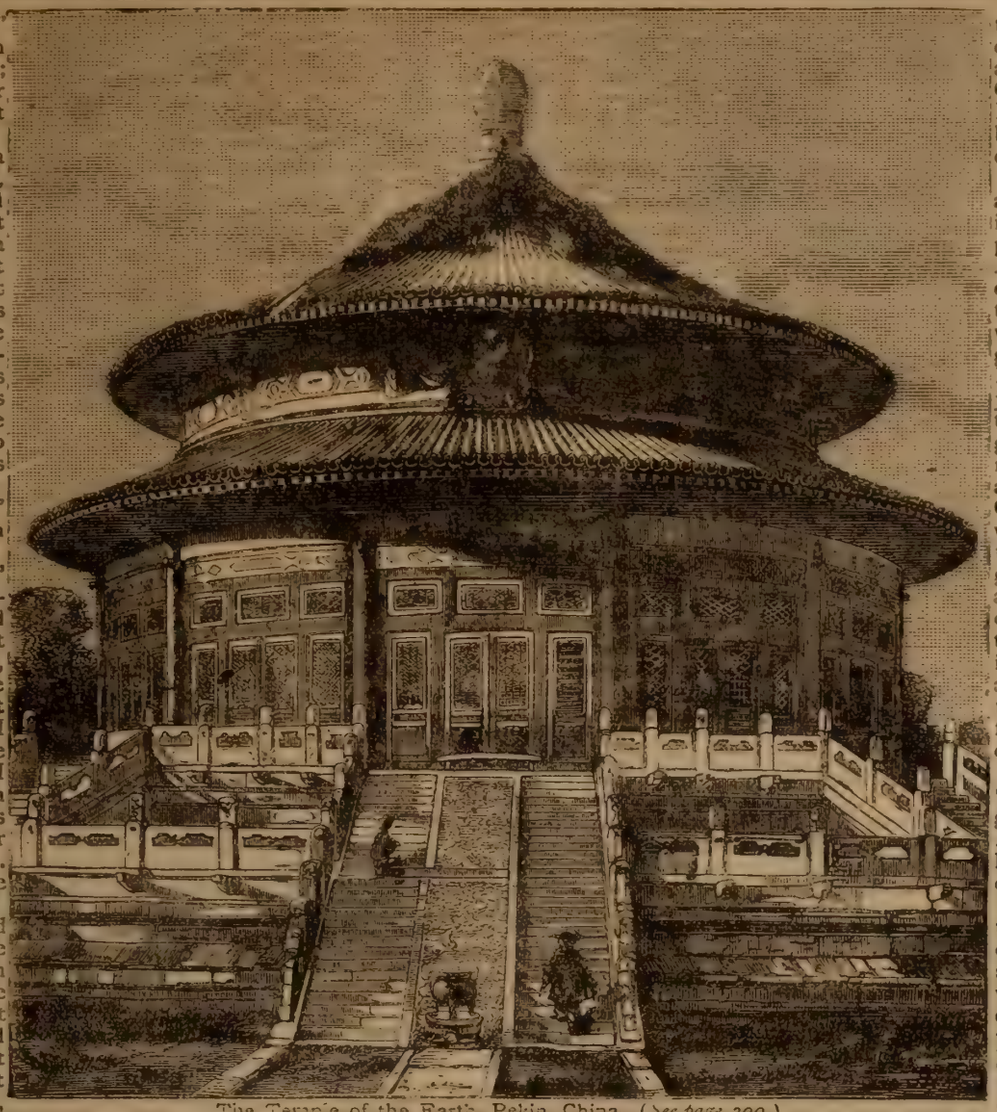
They were all chatting amicably except o man, who sat on a barrel reading the newspa which the proprietor thoughtfully provided the use of his customers. He was not a c tomer though he would like to have been, r was he in the strict sense of the word a worki man, though he ought to have been, as he h a wife and children who were in sad need money. Simon had no money either, and t bar-tender had just apprized him that he h no credit, but Simon wanted a drink badly, a was waiting in the hope of some friend comi in who would treat him.

Now and again the saloon-door was push open an inch or two, and a little curly head w two bright eyes could be seen. One of the d ers caught sight of it at last, and beckoni the child in, said to his companions, "Look this pretty little lad. Come here, boy; what you want?"

"Want a piece o' bread," was the brief repl

"Well, you little scarecrow, you do lo hungry. See what you can do with a cracke And he lifted the child on the counter, a handed him a big cracker out of the dish. T child had on a ragged shirt and pants, no soc and his little bare feet were thrust into a p of boots so much too large for him that it m have been difficult to keep them on. There w a general laugh at these boots when they came conspicuous from the child's position.

"Where did you get your boots from, y little man?" said his friend, who was hold him on the counter.



The Temple of the Earth, Pekin, China. (See page 309.)

'They ain't my boots," d the child. "They'm her's Sunday boots; ther said I could wear 1 'cause I ain't got ne."

'Now, ain't that a me?" said the man, aling an arm around child. "Fancy what nan must be to let a as pretty and smart this go around in this y. And these are his nday boots, too; he st look a nice respect- e kind of a man if his nday clothes match his nday boots." And he d the thin little leg up the inspection of his npanions.

'Father's out o' work," in the child, as if in ence of his parent.

I should think so," d the man, "and judg- by your looks, I should he generally is. I'll bet has his beer every day, ugh. If I'd a lad like i, I'd see if I couldn't a bit better for you. I t my little un when he s about his age, and I t got over it yet, though a good many years I guess his father uld get over it easier. don't seem to take ch stock in him."

'Don't I, though?" said son, who all this time d kept his position on cask, hiding his face ind the newspaper, lest child should see and ognize him. That last roach, however, cut n to the quick; and, nping down, took the in his arms. "He's the dearest thing I ve in the world, and he loves his father, n't you, Jemmy? But you are about right, te, in what you've said beside that. I aint good father, but please God I'll make a nge."

Simon started out before the men had recov- d from their surprise. The thought that he ght lose his boy, and deserved to lose him, ickened his steps. He went right to a place ere he could sign the pledge; signed it, took boy home, and then set about looking for rk with an energy that ensured success.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 303.)

The Wreck.

WHEN I saw Mrs. Transome I knew that Philip s right, and that he had brought me what oney cannot buy. She had once been rather l, but she was bent into a small woman. Such leasant, wholesome, motherly old dame she ked, that I stooped down and kissed the pla- l, sweet face, which was smiling at me.

'Thank you kindly, my dear," she said; "there's elcome in it."

'She stroked my hand with her wrinkled gers, and before I could prevent her, lifted it her lips, and kissed it. I followed her and ilip to the room he had prepared for her, and tched him point out to her all the little things had chosen for her himself, with a boyish dness that I had not seen in him since he s a boy.

'You are to be a mother to us all," he said, tting her in a cushioned, old-fashioned chair had found somewhere, just suited for her; d she sat in it, smiling at us both, with her spectacles pushed up to the white border of her cap; "we're a set of rebel children," he went on, "and you'll find us harder to manage than your little school. As for me, I intend always to have my own way."

"Aye!" but thee has chose the Lord's way, Pippin," she answered, "and now thee canst have thine own way. Only, mind thee, He chose thee first."

"And you'll be at home here?" I asked.

"Sure!" she replied; "as much at home as in any place where Transome isn't? I shall go home where he is some day; but never fear me not being happy till the time comes."

That was true; for there was a quiet cheerfulness, which was almost merriment in her, that never seemed to flag. The storm of life was over with her, and she was in the haven where she would be. Even the sorrow and the sin with which we had to deal did not disturb her deep tranquillity and profound trust in the immeasurable love of God. And this came into our refuge as a calm and pacifying element, which breathed itself over the passionate and stubborn hearts among whom our work lay. There was not one among the poor, miserable, lost girls, whom we sought and gathered into our home, who did not learn, before many days had passed, to call her "mother."

I know now that this was the perfect hour of my life. I had almost said, "Would to God I had known it then!"

One thing I grudged—that Philip should gain so little personal advantage from his wealth. Certainly he bought a vessel of his own, and he and his father went hither and thither as they pleased. They came in home oftener; but every time that they staid on shore longer than a few weeks, it became more evident that as long as Captain John Champion was living, Philip must still spend the best portion of his time on the sea.

It was about two years after Philip came into his inheritance, that at last a plan for sending out to America some of our rescued girls became practicable and advisable. It was a new step for us, and gave us much anxiety. But Philip had already joined in some emigration movements, and had given free passages to many a poverty-stricken artisan and his family to Canada. For the times were bad in England just then; and there was a great clamor of distress and want, which reached our ears more directly than it could have done in former days. George and Philip and I discussed the matter in and out, from every possible point of view.

"Milly," said George, "what would you say to going out yourself to America, and seeing the ladies who are to take charge of our girls?"

Such a question positively made my heart cease to beat for some seconds. It opened such vast changes, such undreamed-of revolutions in the habits of my life, that I shrank back frightened.

"Could you spare her!" cried Philip, all aglow with excitement.

"To be sure," said George, calmly, as if it were no unusual thing, "I should like her to go, if you promise to bring her home safely in two months or so."

"There is nothing I should like so much," exclaimed Philip; "you shall have no trouble at all, Aunt Milly; and we shall be back in two months at the latest, with three or four weeks to spare on the other side. You will know something of the sea, then! Say you will come."

"You might just as well take Mrs. Transome," I said; "I am too old now."

"I will take her," answered Philip; "she will come if I ask her, and you cannot say you are too old then. Say no more, Aunt Milly, I shall run down to Liverpool this very night, and see that everything is made comfortable for you.

I made some faint remonstrances; but it was impossible to me to oppose him when George was on his side. There were only a few days for me to prepare in; for all our arrangements had been made, and our emigrants were waiting to go. After all it was far less trouble and exertion than I had expected. Philip came back from Liverpool to fetch Mrs. Transome and me; and I had simply to leave myself in his hands, and have everything done for me. It was I who obeyed now, not Philip, I bade George farewell, and left home, with a strange sensation of losing almost my own identity.

But there were no good-byes at Liverpool. All we had to do was to cross over to the steamer, which lay in the river, ready to start, for we must get over the bar at the next tide, and the last hour was come. As we drew near, I was surprised to see how large it was.

"That is not your own ship, Philip?" I said.

"No," he answered, "ours is much smaller, and not as steady a sailer as this is. So we are all going as passengers only; and I shall have nothing to do but take care of you both."

"Why wouldn't you let us rough it with you?" I asked, disappointed that we were not to cross the Atlantic in Philip's ship, and under Captain John Champion's command.

"Nothing rough should come near you, if I could help it," he said tenderly.

Certainly he had no intention to let us meet with any hardships on the sea. The stateroom he had chosen was the best on board, and was furnished luxuriously. The saloon upon which it opened was fitted up at a still greater cost, with a magnificence that astonished me, and still more amazed Mrs. Transome.

We had been out seven days, and more than two-thirds of the voyage were over; yet the same unvarying, shimmering, tossing plain of water stretched round us to the unbroken circle of the horizon. From the first the sky had been almost cloudless, and the vast dome of it bent over us like an hospitable roof, which would shelter us from all storms; for no one could dream of change in heavens so clear and calm.

"What are you looking at so earnest, Captain!" asked Mrs. Transome on the seventh evening, as we watched the solemn setting of the sun into the crimson sea. A low streak of livid purple, with a line of gold on its ragged edge, lay along the horizon southward; and Captain John Champion, with his brown hand shading his eyes, was searching the sky above it with keen glances. I asked Philip what it meant.

"A change in the weather," he said lightly; "you must get ready for some slight hardships, Aunt Milly."

We lingered late upon deck that night, so late that Mrs. Transome, who felt chilly with the night air and dew, left us. The moon was at the full, and we watched it rising in the clear eastern sky.

We bade one another good-night then, but after he had taken me down to my cabin, I heard him go up on deck again. Even to me there was a difference that night in the sound of the waves, as they beat against the thin planks between me and them. There came, too, all at once, a low, long, suppressed moan of the wind across the sea; the first sigh of the storm that was driving towards us. I shall hear it to my dying day; a sound never to be forgotten, sad and inexpressibly mournful.

All the next day, and the night following, did the storm rage. At first the passengers took little heed of it; but as hour after hour passed by, and the tossing of the sea did not lull for a moment, they grew frightened. The steerage-passengers were almost unmanageable. Whenever we saw the Captain, he looked grave and anxious; but he remained on deck most of the time, as did Philip and Captain John Champion. After the night set in, I sat with Mrs. Transome in our cabin, listening to the heavy roar of the storm, and the groaning timbers of the vessel, till Philip opened the door.

"Lie down," he said; "but do not undress to-night."

"Is there any danger?" I asked.

"Yes," he answered, "there is some danger, but my father and I are here to take care of you. You must trust yourself to me, and promise to obey me implicitly, and at once, whatever I may tell you to do."

"Philip?" I said, questioningly.

"Obey me like a child," he continued. "We have sprung a leak, and if the danger increases, there will be mad confusion on board among the steerage-folks. Your only safety will rest in simple obedience, even if we have to be parted for a little while. Do you understand me?"

"Oh, Philip!" I cried, "do not let me be parted from you."

"Not if I can help it," he said. "But it may be our duty to be separated. Will you leave me when I bid you go? Promise me, my darling."

"You will not leave me if you can help it?" I asked.

"Not for a moment," he answered, cheerfully, "And you promise me the same, mother?"

"No," said Mrs. Transome; "no, Pippin."

She was gazing at him earnestly, with a placid smile. Philip gazed back at her; and a solemn, steadfast, happy expression passed over both their faces.

"God bless thee, my boy Pippin!" she said. I think I see thee like thee was when I saw thee first! God bless thee!"

"We watched the daybreak dawning slowly over the whirl of waters that washed against the cabin-window. It strengthened very slowly into a dull, leaden light. There went a shiver suddenly all through the great ship; and a cry, as of one voice, rang through all the roaring of the tempest. Captain John Champion ran down to us. All the saloon was thronged with hurrying and frightened people. We struggled up the ladder on to the deck; some hands helping us, and others dragging us back again. All the deck was covered with panic-stricken men and women, fighting for their own safety. Captain John Champion pushed a way for me through the crowd; and all at once I felt Philip's arms about me.

"Shall we all be saved?" I cried,

"Not all," he said, "not all. But I promised George you should go home safely. I must do all I can for you."

"Will you be saved yourself?" I asked.

He did not speak. But the look upon his face, the young, beautiful, solemn face, was answer enough for me.

"He saved others: Himself He cannot save."

"Let me die with you," I cried, clinging to him.

"No! there is George at home," he said, "you must go for his sake."

He unclasped my hands from about him, and carried me across the deck to the place where the last boat was filling rapidly with passengers. I looked over the sea, heaving and swelling still, though the fierceness of the storm was over. Here and there peaks of black rock, against which the white foam was tossing. Some of the boats were already hurrying away, so heavily laden that they sank dangerously in the water. Underneath the deck there was a mingling of fearful sounds, of cries and shrieks for help which none could give. Every face about me wore a terrified aspect; except Philip's and Mrs. Transome's, who looked at me sorrowfully indeed, yet peacefully, as though they were thinking of me, not of themselves.

"Isn't she coming?" I said to Philip.

"No, she may stay with me," he answered.

"Good-bye, my dear," she said. "To-day I shall be with Him, and with Transome."

"There is not another moment!" cried Philip; "good-bye, my darling. God keep you."

I know nothing of the next few minutes. Only as the boat cast off from the ship's side I heard Philip's voice again calling to me. God gave me strength to look up and see his face once more. He was standing apart from the throng now, for there was no more work for him to do, and his father and Mrs. Transome were beside him. I could see their faces clearly, their eyes following me, and their hands waving a last farewell to me. The sun was breaking through the mass of drifting clouds, and shone full upon them. "Is there no hope?" I asked from one of the crew beside me, who was putting all his strength to his oar.

"No; she is settling down fast," he answered; and I saw that the seamen were urging the boat onward, to get well out of the swirl of the water when the ship went down.

Oh Christ! thou knowest how much anguish a human heart can bear without breaking. For though thine own heart was broken, it was not under the burden of thy sorrows but under the weight of our sins.

A few hours after we left the steamer we were picked up by a vessel homeward bound. I know very little of the voyage back. Fortunately I could tell the captain and the doctor, who attended me assiduously, who I was, and where I lived; but all else seemed blotted out of my memory. All was a blank to me, a dreary emptiness, through which I vainly tried to get at some realization of my sorrow.

It was not three weeks from the time I left home, when I landed in Liverpool again. I remember the long journey up to London, solitary and desolate, as if it had been yesterday. There was still the confused sense of a terrible grief hanging over me; but when I rang the bell of our own house door, that bell Philip had so often rung when I was listening for him to come home, the cloud upon my brain began to lift itself. Before the door was opened to admit me, all was clear and distinct; I knew that his foot would never cross the threshold again. I beckoned to our servant to keep silent as I entered the house, where henceforth life would be for me a solemn waiting for death. At the farther end of the hall was the door of my brother's room, which stood partly open; and as I drew nearer to it I heard a quiet voice reading aloud. I had no thought of going in, though I was longing to weep the bitter tears that were burning under my eyelids. But I must be careful of George. The sudden shock of my return now might be dangerous for him. The quiet voice fell upon my ear in these words—

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea."

I sank down on the ground beside the door and my tears came like a flood; still my brother's low, calm voice went on reading:

"And God shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

I could see him from where I knelt at the half open door. He had lifted up his eyes from the book, and was looking across the room with almost a smile upon his face. Who could it be he was looking at, out of my sight? What was it that made my heavy heart leap with a hope springing from the very darkness of my sorrow?

"If we only knew that Aunt Milly was safe!" said the other voice;

I could not, for the first moment, believe it was Philip who was speaking.

I cannot tell you how we met. I only remember that after a while I found myself in my own chair, on my brother's hearth, with Philip beside me, my hand grasping his, as if we were again in a sinking ship, and I had nothing else to hold as the waters were closing over us.

Philip had to tell me how, when the steamer went down, his father and Mrs. Transome sank at once with it, and he lost sight of them forever; while he, who was young, caught a floating spar, and was upheld by it for a time while the vessel settled. The shock I had felt in the cabin, and the shiver that ran through all the timbers of the ship, had been caused by it striking, though lightly, upon a sunken reef, and there was but little swirl of the waters, such as had been anticipated. The upper portion of the rigging had even remained above the surface; and Philip with a few others had found safety amongst it. They did not remain there long, for they lay in the course of vessels, and before night came on they were rescued by a steamer, which had brought him home even more quickly than I had been brought myself. He had reached London only the day before I did.

There is little more for me to tell you. In the course of a few weeks we heard that our emigrants, the girls we were taking out to settle in American homes, had all reached New York in safety. They wrote to us in the hope that we had also been rescued, telling how Philip and Captain John Champion had quietly marshalled them to their boat, through a crowd of passengers frenzied with terror.

here is now no longer a necessity for Philip ive upon the sea. His life has grown fuller nfluence and of power over his fellowmen. e one duty has been faithfully discharged; l broader, perhaps grander duties are rising in its place. What he will become, what cial work he will do here for God, I do not know. But it is no more as a servant that he ks, it is rather as a son. There is a perfect- s and unity in his obedience which is not obedience of a hireling.

THE END.

PETER'S DENIAL.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

3. Lesson for May 27, Matt. 26: 58-75. Golden Text, 1 Cor. 10: 12.

e Astonishment of the Disciples—Their Master tefraining from Using Miraculous Power—heir Flight—Peter Following at a Distance—. Suffering Believer in Dakota—Peter Hindered om Faith by Self-Confidence—The Depletion f Strength by Small Unfaithfulnesses—Peter as Spectator of his Master's Trial—His Silence a enial—The Three Challenges—His Remorse.

UDAS had already betrayed Jesus, and He o came to preach, and to bring "deliverance the captives" (Luke 4: 16) was arrested like a nmon criminal, and conducted by armed cials to the High Priest. In spite of His re- ted assertions that He should be delivered into the hands of wicked men and crucified, disciples had never believed that it would lly be so. They were so set on their own as—formed, indeed, from Scripture, but ipture only partially understood—that they l never yet abandoned the hope that Jesus ld become the reigning Messiah, and rid the ly Land from the Roman yoke. Now that y saw Him apprehended, and led away for l, without exercising His wonderful power to iver Himself, their Hopes Were at an End,

l in the despair of the moment, they, who l declared that they would follow Him to son and to death, all "forsook Him and l." They had seen Him conquer the waves l the wind, multiply the loaves, overcome kness, and prove Himself Master of death it- —how, then, in this supreme moment should let His cause fail; how yield just now, when, He had but smitten down His enemies, and uck Herod from the throne, He might have n proclaimed King of the Jews by a devoted l grateful crowd of followers, and Galilee, naria and Judea might so easily have come der His sceptre. But they did not under- nd that His kingdom was "not of this rld"; if it had been, then would His servants e fought that He should not be delivered to Jews. (John 18: 36.) "But Peter followed m afar off." Peter must be a leader; for, od or bad, he was always foremost. Zealous, venturous, daring to a degree, it was he who pped out upon the water to go to Jesus; he o sought to drive bargains with the Master; who attempted to dictate to the transfigured viour. And now when all had forsaken Jesus, was the only one who at first turned back, l followed Him. But still he Followed Afar Off.

how many disciples there are who follow us at a distance! A poor sufferer, in Dakota, in the greatest suffering. All human reme- s had failed to cure her terrible disease—in- nal scrofula. Through a copy of THE CHRIS- AN HERALD, she was led to see the Lord as r Healer, and reading in her Bible (James 5: -16) God's command to the sick that they ould send for the elders of the Church to oint them in the name of the Lord, she sent a minister of one of the churches, who re- ed to anoint her, giving as his reason that ople would talk so if she were not healed! e then sent for another minister, who told r that her body should first be purified of the ease by medicines, and then she might be ointed. Surely these men, who cannot take God His Word are following afar off! There are some who need to be met in church to be known as Christians; elsewhere the difference between them and the world is not sufficient to be distinguished. They speak the language of the world; they have the spirit of the world; their interests, their tastes, their houses, their appearance, all betoken a heart set on things below rather than on things above. Peter was not aware how long he had been following Jesus

Afar Off in Spirit.

He had not learned the lesson which Jesus would have taught him when he walked upon the water, and was for the moment lifted above things seen and temporal. He had not seen how liable he was to fail, or recognized, in his ready fear of the winds and waves, how little real confidence he had in Jesus. True, his faith had ventured further than that of the other disciples, but he was still full of self-confidence, and this came between him and a continuous confidence in the Lord. As long and as far as we reckon upon ourselves at all, just so far we lack confidence in Jesus. Peter had not learned the lesson which Jesus would have taught him when in answer to his Master's prediction of His coming sufferings, Peter suggested that he should pity Himself. True, Peter had just previously acknowledged Jesus as "the Christ, the Son of the living God," but, in his spirit, both upon the water, and in his rebuke to Jesus, he was found afar off from the spirit which animated Jesus, and He said to him, 'Get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offence unto Me; for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." (Matt. 16: 16-23.) Again, upon the Mount of Transfiguration, Peter failed; he again presumed to bring forward his own ideas; "Lord, it is good for us to be here; let us make here three tabernacles, one for Thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias." (Matt. 17: 4.) How far off was all this from the spirit of the Master! Jesus had no resting-place on earth, He had "not where to lay His head." When again Peter bargained with Jesus saying, "We have forsaken all and followed Thee; what shall we have, therefore?" O, how far off was his spirit from that of Jesus! Before any child of God comes to have a grievous fall, there must have been many leading up to it. There have been lessons only half learned, warnings of God which have not been laid to heart. There have been many circumstances which appealed to the conscience, and which were calculated to arouse the attention, but they have not been laid to heart, and at last there is nothing for it, but that God should let His child go on, until the fall comes which fills him with shame, confusion, and remorse. All the teachings, all the hints, all the warning which Jesus gave Peter never taught him as much as he learned, when at last he found by bitter experience that he was capable of denying his Lord.

Small Unfaithfulnesses

Peter followed afar off, but at last he "entered into the high priests' palace and went in and sat with the servants to see the end." He took the place of a mere spectator, who looked on from simple curiosity. He it was who had asserted, "Though I should die with Thee, yet will I not deny Thee." (Matt. 26: 35.) Yet his very position at that hour was in itself a denial of Jesus. Peter was witness to all that happened. He heard them seeking for false witnesses, yet as a true witness in his Lord's defence! He heard their wresting of His words, yet he did not state the facts, or tell the exact words which Jesus uttered about the temple! He heard the high priest ask Jesus: "Answerest thou nothing? What is it which these witness against Thee?" And he saw his Master as a sheep dumb before her shearers! It was perhaps the first time Peter had ever seen an innocent person unwilling to defend himself. There was nothing in Peter's nature which responded to, or understood such forbearance, and when, at last, Pilate put the question, "Art thou the Christ, the Son of God?" Peter heard Him say, "Thou hast said. Nevertheless, I say unto you, hereafter ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Had not God revealed unto Peter that Jesus was "the Christ, the Son of the living God"? How came it, then, that now, when the question was raised before the priestly tribunal, Peter had not a word to say? Oh, how easy it is to speak of what we believe among those who understand us, and who themselves believe! But to witness for Christ among His enemies is no light task; it needs the power of the Holy Ghost to do it. The high priest said, "He hath spoken blasphemy;" the people, "He is guilty of death!" And Peter heard it all, and yet

Peter Did Not Stand Up

Never Confessed his Lord!

Then did they spit in His face, and buffeted Him; and others smote Him with the palms of their hands." And Peter was like one paralyzed or stupefied; he saw, he heard, but as though he saw and heard not. And why? Because he still clung to his former idea that Christ was to assume earthly sovereignty at this time, and with this idea in his mind, and the knowledge he had of Christ's power over the elements and over man, it would seem to Peter a waste of suffering, and a needless endurance, for Jesus to suffer thus. Perhaps he was awaiting a moment when Christ would, in one instant, change the whole scene, and the high priest would bend on his knees abashed before the revealed Messiah. Oh, how dangerous it is for us to run away with certain ideas from Scripture, and then, blind to its general tendency, strain every point, and disregard the teachings of God in the course of events which happen around us, in order that we may establish our theory! All heresies begin thus.

Peter sat without, in the palace, as far from Jesus as he could well be. A damsel came unto him, saying, "Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee." It was a name of scorn; it meant reproach, and was

A Well-directed Sneer.

Peter was no longer, by faith and by choice, under the keeping of Jesus. It is a fearful thing to say, but it is true, that when a child of God does begin to sin, he sins more terribly and goes down more rapidly than one who is unconverted. The unconverted have a certain power of will and conscience which keeps them; the child of God has yielded himself unto the keeping of another, and when he wrests himself out of the hands of his keeper, he has no ballast, but rushes madly downwards. Peter denied, before them all, saying, "I know not what thou sayest." The deed was done, yet Peter was not alive to it. Another maid saw and recognized him as a follower of Jesus. With an oath, Peter again denied, saying, "I do not know the man." Many of us would shrink from words such as these, but what does our life say? Does it say to all around us, "I know Jesus"? After a while, others who stood by said, "Surely, thou art one of them; for thy speech betrayeth thee." The more determined the assertion was, the more vehemently Peter contradicted it. "Then began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew." Till that moment he thought Jesus in the wrong, and might, perhaps, have tried to excuse himself. But now the word of his condemned Master was fulfilled: "The cock crew." All was changed. He did not understand Jesus, but he would no longer disbelieve Him. But oh, his sin! Peter's heart was broken; he went out, and wept bitterly.

The Antichrist Babylon and the Coming of the Kingdom, by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages Price in cloth covers, 50 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes, by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

"THY WILL."

Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God. PSALM cxliii., 10.
I delight to do Thy will, O my God; yea, Thy law is within my heart. PSALM xl., 8.

Take Thine own way with me, dear Lord,
Thou canst not otherwise than bless;
I launch me forth upon a sea
Of boundless love and tenderness.

I could not choose a larger bliss
Than to be wholly Thine; and mine
A will whose highest joy is this,
To ceaselessly unclasp in Thine.

I will not fear Thee, O my God!
The days to come can only bring
Their perfect sequences of love,
Thy larger, deeper comforting.

Within the shadow of this love,
Loss doth transmute itself to gain;
Faith veils earth's sorrows in its light,
And straightway lives above her pain.

We are not losers thus; we share
The perfect gladness of the Son,
Not conquered—for, behold, we reign;
Conquered and Conqueror are one.

Thy wonderful grand will, my God!
Triumphantly I make it mine;
And faith shall breathe her glad "Amen."
To every dear command of Thine.

Beneath the splendour of Thy choice,
Thy perfect choice for me, I rest;
Outside it now I dare not live,
Within it I must needs be blest.

Meanwhile my spirit anchors calm
In grander regions still than this;
The fair, far-shining latitudes
Of that yet unexplored bliss.

Then may Thy perfect, glorious will
Be evermore fulfilled in me,
And make my life an answ'ring chord
Of glad, responsive harmony.

Oh! it is life indeed to live
Within this kingdom strangely sweet
And yet we fear to enter in,
And linger with unwilling feet.

We fear this wondrous rule of Thine,
Because we have not reached Thy heart;
Not venturing our all on Thee,
We may not know how good Thou art.

—Jean Sophia Pigott.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

The above beautiful poem printed in booklet form on extra heavy bristol board, 18 pages, with a delicate spray in tint on each page, ribbon-tied, and enclosed in titled envelope, will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or three together for 50 cents.

A TRULY HELPFUL VOLUME, and deserving the high commendations it is receiving, is "Curiosities of the Bible." By a New York Sunday-school Superintendent. Introduction by J. H. Vincent, D.D. The Centropolis, Kansas City, says: "We like it better than any book which has come into our hands for a long time. It is not merely calculated to gratify the curiosity hunter or the seeker for novelty, but administers the most useful lessons to those who seek for truth. To any one who labors in the spiritual and religious fields of effort it is invaluable. Price $2. We would not take twenty for ours and do without it." Teachers and agents wanted to introduce it. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, 771 Broadway, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

TWO GOOD BOOKS
For 50 cents Postpaid.

THE SECOND ADVENT. Will it be before the Millennium? By Canon Faussett, D.D. Prof. Godet, D. D. 160 pages, Im. Parchment Cover, 25 cents.

BOOKS WHICH HAVE Influenced Me. By Canon Farrar, John Ruskin, Gladstone, John Grattan Guinness and seph Parker. Marcus Dods, and others. 123 pages. Im. Parchment Covers, 25 cents.

For Young Infants a perfect substitute for mother's milk, often saving life; for the Invalid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great value. Thousands who have used it say it is the

FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD.

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infants and Invalids sent on application.

Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, VT.

(33 Colors.) DIAMOND DYES

are the Purest, Cheapest, Strongest, and most Durable Dyes ever made. One 10c. package will color 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, Rags etc. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Fancy Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bronzing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instructions and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Druggists.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON, VT.

NIECE'S
India Ink Portraits.

Portraiture in India Ink is at once the most beautiful process of producing the human face in monochrome, (black and white as more commonly termed).

The skill, artistic taste and care required to produce India Ink Portraits have prevented them from becoming more widely known, and their beauties have only been enjoyed by the wealthier classes of our large cities.

We have recently perfected an ingenious process whereby we secure the most beautiful effects with India Ink with much less labor than heretofore.

Resplendent in rich shadows full of detail, cool gray half tints, and pure, silvery lights, they possess such a beautiful life-like appearance that to introduce color in them would seem superfluous.

Avoiding the two outrageous extremes so commonly practised, viz., deceptive cheapness and fancy high prices, we give our customers the finest results, at very moderate prices.

Our Special feature in India Ink is a Life Size Portrait in a massive bronze frame with plush lining, and deep gilt mat (in all 8 inches wide) boxed complete for $20.00.

One-half the amount must accompany order when goods are to be sent C.O.D.

Complete satisfaction is assured or money returned.

Send best photo or other small picture with particulars to NIECE, 15 and 73 Bible House, New York.

TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

For beautiful, soft, life-like effects, Mr. Niece's India Ink Portraits certainly surpass anything I have ever seen. Too much cannot be said in their praise. I recommend this establishment to the readers of this paper as the best of its kind in the city. J. E. JEWETT.

UNIVERSITY PIANOS
FROM $180 TO $1500.
FINEST PIANOS IN THE WORLD.
SOLD DIRECT TO FAMILIES, saving the enormous expenses of agents. Sent with beautiful cover, stool and book, for trial in your own home before you buy. Guaranteed six years. Send for catalogue to Marshal & Smith Piano Co., 285 E. 21st St., N. Y.

HAVE YOU TRIED
DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC
SUMMER CORSET

If not, "THE PALL MALL ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION, OF LONDON," urge you to do so, besides being the best ventilating and most desirable Summer Corset made, they possess miraculous health and invigorating Elements, restoring normal action to the Digestive Organs, impaired Circulation, and immediately on the Liver and Kidneys, and stimulate the nerves. They prevent as well as Cure Rheumatism, those distressing Headaches, Constipation, Backache and kindred diseases. They can never harm, always do good. Their wonderful merit is evidenced by thousands of testimonials we are constantly receiving. Send for Book of Valuable Information, mailed Free.

This Corset is made of double thickness first quality Nottingham Net, and is elegant in shape.

The above remarks refer equally to our regular Electric Corsets, which retail at $1, $1.50, $2 and $3. No. $1.50. Abdominal, $3. The $1 and $1.50 goods are of extra fine and durable Jean, and the $2 and $3 Abdominal Corsets of Superfine English Sateen, except Summer Corsets come in white and drab, 18 to 30 inches; we make the Abdominal up to 38 inches. The postage on each is 15 cts. Every one is sent out in handsome box accompanied by a silver-plated coin with which the electro-magnetic power is tested.

Dr. Scott's Genuine Electric Belt for men and women, $3. Professional men assert that there is hardly a disease which Electricity or Magnetism may not benefit or cure, and they daily practice the same, as your own physician will inform you.

If you cannot obtain them in your own town, send us the price, with 15c. added for postage, and we will deliver them into your hands free. Always mention this paper, and remit by P. O. Money Order, Draft, or currency in Registered Letter payable to

GEO. A. SCOTT, 842 Broadway, N.Y.

Agents wanted. Quick sales, large profits and satisfaction guaranteed. No risk. TRY $1000 WORTH OF LAW FOR $1.50.

How to be Your Own Lawyer is the title of an entirely new book of over 500 pages, adapted for use in every State and Territory in the Union, and is by far the best and most complete work of the kind ever published. It gives instruction on all the most important law points which a Farmer, Mechanic, Merchant, or anybody else would want to know about, and if carefully studied and kept at hand for consultation when needed will save any man, in the course of an ordinary business career, hundreds, if not thousands of dollars. It is a lawyer whose retaining fee (the price of the book, $1.50) has to be paid but once in a life-time. Plain and concise directions are given and forms furnished for the transaction of all kinds of business, and the preparation of every description of legal document in common use, such as Agreements, Bonds, Deeds, Leases, Notes, Mortgages, Wills, Etc. It takes up and treats in alphabetical order over 70 different subjects as follows: Acknowledgement and Proof of Deed, Administrators, Affidavits, Agents, Agreements, Apprentices, Arbitration, Assignments, Auctions, Bankruptcy, Bills of Sale, Bonds, Bills of Exchange, Cattle and Dog Laws, Collection of Debts, Common Carriers, Consideration, Contracts, Copyright, Corporate Associations, Custom House, Deeds, Divorce, Dower, Drafts, Executors, Exemption Laws, Farmers, Fences, Guaranty, Guardian and Ward, Highways, Hotels and Boarding-Houses, Husband and Wife, Insolvency, Insurance (Life, Fire, and Marine), Interest, Internal Revenue, Landlord and Tenant, Law of Place, Leases, Letters of Credit, Letter-Writing, Libel, Slander, Licenses, Lien Laws, Limitation of Actions, Marriage, Master and Servant, Mining Laws, Minor, Mortgages, Naturalization, Pensions, Parent and Child, Parliamentary Rules, Partnership, Patents, Payment and Tender, Personal Property, Partition, Power of Attorney, Promissory Notes, Real Estate, Receipts and Releases, Rights of Married Women, Schools, Shipping, Subscription Papers (How to Draw), Trade-Marks, Trespass, Trusts and Trustees, Vessels, Voters, Wills, Warranty of Horses.

There is also a very complete Dictionary of Legal Terms; Tables for the Computation of Interest; Measurement of Land, Lumber, Logs, Grain; Legal Weight of a Bushel of Grain, Seed, and Roots; Quantity of Seed required to plant an Acre; Table showing Paper Required to make a Book of any size: U. S. Land Measure; Number of Bricks Required to Construct any building; Presidential Vote from 1824 to 1885; Time for holding Elections in different States; Population of the U. S.; Prices of various Commodities for fifty-three years; Valuable Rules for the use of Farmers and Mechanics; and much other important information. A copy of this valuable work, handsomely bound in extra cloth, with ink side-stamp, will be mailed to any address, postpaid, on receipt of $1.50; or bound in sheep, legal style, for $2.00. Address

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

A NEW WALL ROLL.

DAILY COMFORT IN FOUR-FOLD LINKS, PRAYER, PROMISE, PRECEPT, PRAISE,

This beautiful New Wall Roll of Scripture Texts is compiled for use in Homes, Hospitals, Halls, Day-school Rooms and other places where striking Scripture Texts arranged with much prayerful thought, are apt to give comfort, or awaken interest in sacred truth. Particular attention is called to the arrangement of the texts and to the very clear type in which they are printed. Size of sheet, 14x20. Can be read from opposite side of a large room.

Jno. T. [illegible] KEY, Secretary Mo. State S. S. Association, says: "I must thank you, and I do so over and over each day as I look up from my desk to the precious words of God on the Wall Roll. I had known of Wall Rolls before, but never had one and knew not the enjoyment to be enjoyed in using one. It is a grand treasure. I am going to put one in every home I can, for I know I shall thereby be doing a good that may tell for eternity.

31 sheets, for a full month, Mounted on Roller, price 75 cents.

Sent by mail, post-paid, to any address, on receipt of price. Address

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Dr. TALMAGE'S
SERMON ON
Cursing and Swearing,
AND HIS SERMON ON
Modern Spiritualism

Just preached, and which has been so largely commented upon by the newspapers, is now ready in tract form, and will be sent, post-paid to any address for 3 cts. each, or both for 5 cts., or 25 cts. per dozen. Special terms by the 100 or 1,000 to those who wish to distribute them. Address

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

WOMAN:
HER POWER AND PRIVILEGES.

A series of Sermons by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage. Just published. 12mo. 240 pages, paper cover. Sold by all dealers for 25 cents; or sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address

J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
P.O. Box 2767. 57 Rose Street, New York

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best reference furnished if desired. Address

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured.

WORKS OF REV. E. DAVIES

Life of Wm. Taylor, BISHOP OF AFRICA, with fine steel portrait and other illustrations. Price "Many will be glad to know that the life of Bishop TAYLOR can be obtained in so compendious a form as it is here presented."—S. S. Times.
"It is an interesting and soul-inspiring volume."—Times of Refreshing.

Life of Frances Ridley Havergal, with Choice Selections from her Prose and Poetical Writings. Price 50 cts.; gilt 75 cts.
"It will prove an evangelist of peace and faith wherever it goes."—Zion's Herald.

The Gift of the Holy Ghost, and Select Sermons Price enamel paper covers, 50 cts.; cloth 80 "It is just the book for the masses, and cannot fail to do good."—Bishop R. S. Foster.

The Believer's Handbook, on HOLINESS. Containing eight Lectures. 12mo. Price, enamel paper 25 cts.; cloth, 40 cts.
"This is truly an excellent work. Most heartily we commend it to all."—Mrs. Phebe Palmer.

The Gift of The Holy Ghost and Believer's Handbook. In ONE volume. Cloth, $1.

The Boy Preacher, or THE LIFE AND LABORS OF REV. THOMAS HARRISON. Fine steel portrait. Price $1.00. Enlarged edition, gilt top, $1.25.
Mr. Harrison is one of the most successful evangelists of the present day.

Daily Food for Christian Workers. Price cents; gilt edges, 20 cents.
It is adapted to the highest experiences of Christian life.

Contrast Between Christianity and Infidelity. A Book of Reference for Ministers and Christian Workers. Price, paper, 20 cents; cloth, 40 cts.
"This book is worthy of a place in any library."—Lutheran Observer.

Selections From Harris' Mammon. An invaluable book. Price, paper, 10 cents.

Memoirs and Journal of Mrs. Hester A. Rogers. Condensed and combined. Price, cloth cents.

Either of the above books will be sent by mail, post-paid on receipt of price. Address

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller
77 Bible House, New York.

WANTED
A Special Agent in every locality, and other unchallenged Either Sex, in employment that cannot fail to make $100 to $300 per month. If you are looking for a profitable business fill out this and return at once. Address World M'f'g Co. 122 Nassau St. N.Y.

Name.....
Town.....
State.....

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XI., No. 21. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, MAY 24, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF CAPTAIN ALLEN GARDINER, THE PIONEER OF SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONS.

A CASE OF LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE SIGNS OF CHRIST'S COMING.

A Persecuted Christian Widow—Consecrated Saturdays in the East—Remarkable Cure of a Diseased Hip—A Long Search Ended—A Remarkable Movement in India.

THE PROPHETIC CRISIS IN EUROPE.

A MISSIONARY HERO'S PERIL. (Illustrated.)

A YOUNG LAWYER'S DECISION. (Illustrated.)

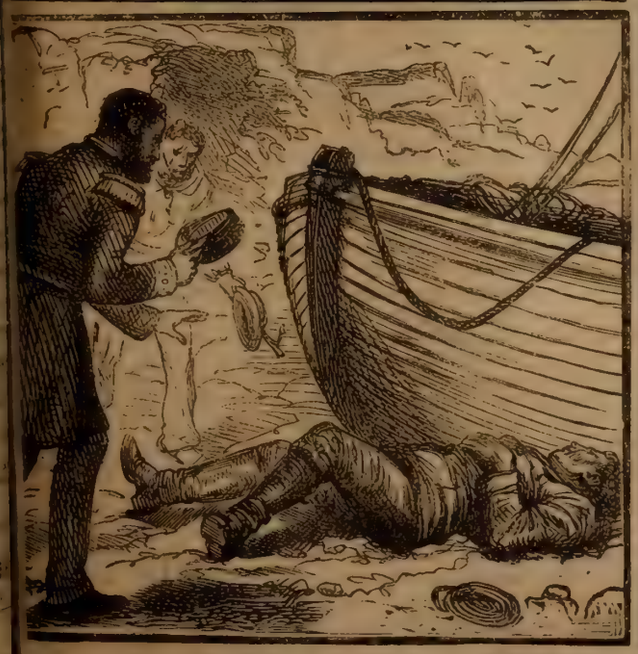
THE RAPID BELIEVER. A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon

Gems from New Books: Lost in the Mountains, etc.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF W. H. HOWLAND, Esq., Ex-Mayor of Toronto.

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE. A New Serial Story by Rev. L. S. Keyser.

JESUS CRUCIFIED. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



CAPTAIN ALLEN GARDINER—Finding His Body—Scene on the Shores of Patagonia.

COMMANDER ALLEN GARDINER.

Pioneer Missionary to Terra del Fuego.

Birth and Boyish Predilections—Voyages and Appointments—A Memorable Era in his Life—Death of his Wife—Consecration to Pioneer Missionary Work—Explorations in Africa—Among the Indians of South America—Difficulties—Crosses over to Patagonia—An Unpatronized Expedition—Among Hostile Natives—Accumulated Disasters—Starved to Death—The Present South American Mission.—Bishop Riley's Efforts.

THE prediction of Charles Darwin, that missionaries would never do any good with the natives of Terra del Fuego, has long been falsified. Even before the death of the eminent scientist much progress had been made, and he was manly enough to admit that he had been mistaken, and as a practical evidence of his change of opinion he made a handsome donation to help the missionaries to carry on their work. "I am now convinced," he said, "that you were right and I was wrong in our respective estimates of the native character." But in making that admission, Darwin did not rightly perceive his mistake. It was not so much in his estimate of the native character that he was mistaken as in failing to rightly appreciate the power of the Gospel of Christ to change character, savage as well as civilized. The work begun by the noble pioneer, Captain Allen Gardiner, whose portrait appears on the first page, has extended through the whole southern section of the South American Continent, and, in spite of obstacles in climate and human character, is being vigorously pressed. A steamer bearing the honored name of Allen Gardiner now carries the missionaries from place to place, and fifty thousand dollars have been raised as an endowment fund to support a Bishop, and secure Efficient Organized Effort.

Residents in Paraguay, who formerly despaired ever introducing the gospel among the Indians, now speak most hopefully of the work, and, impressed by what has already been accomplished, now confidently predict the happiest results. That the obstacles were of a character to dishearten any man but one permeated with living faith in the omnipotence of God may well be conceived. The people were sunk in the lowest barbarism, and seemed destitute of the elements of character to which Gospel appeals could be made. Mr. R. Stewart Clough, whose portrait appeared in this journal on July 17, 1887, gives an appalling description of their condition as he saw it. He states that as the steamer on which he travelled passed along the coast, and the passengers gazed in wonder and delight on the forests and luxuriant foliage, they saw men and women almost destitute of clothing moving like wild animals among the trees or clustered on the water's edge gazing in wonder on the steamer. (The illustration on the first page is taken from a sketch made by this devoted missionary during his journey.) As we read the hopeful reports of the missionaries now in the field, our thoughts are carried back to the gallant man who laid down his life to found the work which is now thriving—Captain Allen Francis Gardiner, the pioneer of South American Missions.

He was born at Basildon, England, on June 28, 1794, and died, in 1851, at the age of fifty-seven. His father, Samuel Gardiner, was a God-fearing man, and early instilled into the mind of his sons, of whom Allen was the fifth, principles of truth, which subsequently developed and ripened into abundant and widespread fruitfulness and blessing.

Boyish Predilections.

Very early in life Allen chose the navy as his profession. His boyish imagination was fired by a desire for adventure, which manifested itself in various ways, some of them amusing, and all of them significant. On one occasion he was found asleep on the floor, when he ought to have been in bed, giving as his reason when aroused that it was his intention to travel all over the world, and that he therefore wished to accustom himself to hardships, of which his hard bed was the first in order. These incidents were carefully noted by the family, and in after years, when he became famous, they were published as proofs of his early ardor.

He Entered the Naval College on February 13, 1808, at the age of fourteen. There he remained for two years, and became proficient in the theory of his chosen vocation. He first went to sea as a volunteer in the Fortune, on July 20, 1810, and was transferred to the Phœbe, in March of the following year. The following year he exchanged into the Dauntless, and sailed to Madras, Penang, Malacca, Singapore, Manila, and Macao. A little later the ship sailed to Australia, and thence to Chili and Peru, and eventually Allen Gardiner invalided from the ship, while she was at Sydney, and took passage to the Cape of Good Hope.

Allen Gardiner's connection with the Dauntless, marks

A Memorable Era in his Life, for it includes the time in which he steadily set his face toward the service of God, and in which he began to take that deep interest in the aborigines of South America, and especially of Chili, which never afterward left him. It was on this voyage, moreover, that he made his first acquaintance with Christian missionaries, and had an opportunity of acquainting himself with the blessed effect of their devoted and self-denying labors at Singapore, and again at Tahiti. From his journal at this period, we extract the following, under date, "Cape Town, August, 1822: The last time I visited this colony, I was walking in the broad way, and hastening by rapid strides to the brink of eternal ruin. Blessed be His name, who loved us, and gave Himself for us,

A Great and Blessed Change has been wrought in my heart, and I am now enabled to derive pleasure and satisfaction in hearing and reading the Word of God, and in attending the means of grace. I trust that this alteration has indeed been effected by the Holy Spirit of God."

On July 1, 1823, he was married to a lady of high Christian character, and in the following year was again called to active service in his profession. He served three years more, visiting various ports in the Old and New World. He obtained his promotion as commander September 13, 1826; but though he retained his early fondness for the service, and often applied for employment, he was never after this period actively engaged in it.

Mrs. Gardiner's health had never been robust, but in 1833 consumption developed itself with an ominous rapidity. Though everything was done that love and skill could suggest, she gradually declined, and on May 24, 1834, died full of hope and peace through faith in the atoning sacrifice of Christ. Her last days were most bright and happy, and writing of the event a year later, the bereaved husband says: "Oh, what assurance of pardon, what joy, and peace, and heavenly tranquillity, and ardent desire to be with her Saviour did He infuse into her soul!" From this time he devoted himself afresh to the service of God, and with all the force of his strong character, set himself upon a new course. He chose the work of and went first of all to Africa, explored the Zulu country, and started the first missionary station at Port Natal. A few years later he devoted many months to an attempt to obtain entrance into New Guinea. Animated with love to Christ, and full of apostolic fervor, he went from island to island of the Indian Archipelago, endeavoring to find opportunity of introducing Christianity; but all his efforts were baffled.

A Missionary Pioneer,

Having devoted his time and fortune for more than three years to the cause of the Gospel at Port Natal and in the Zulu country, he left South Africa when the breaking out of war between the Zulus and the Boers rendered missionary work impracticable. But with characteristic energy he sought another sphere of work. His mind reverted to and of Chili, whose heroic maintenance of their own independence had, years before, excited his admiration, while their continued Paganism was, in his view, a standing reproach to the Christian world. Captain Gardiner left Table Bay, in South Africa, on May 15, 1838, and conducted his family to Rio Janeiro, thence to Buenos Ayres, and across the Pampas to Mendoza, and as soon as the season was sufficiently advanced, they crossed the Cordillera into Chili.

The Indians of the Pampas

From 1838 to 1841 Captain Gardiner visited one tribe of Indians after another, his self-imposed mission being attended with at every turn. Many of these people he found friendly to himself, and favorable to his purpose of planting the standard of the cross of Christ among them; but much of his effort was succeeded only by disappointment through the machinations of the Spanish padres, or priests, of the Roman Catholic Church. Being at Chiloe, July 31st, 1841, he writes:

Imminent Perils

"Having at last abandoned, with great reluctance, all hope of reaching the Indian population in the part where they are most civilized and least migratory, my thoughts are necessarily turned toward the south. I purpose going to the Falkland Isles and from thence crossing over in a sealing vessel, and, if possible, bringing back with me two or three in order to teach them English, and thus prepare them to become interpreters to the missionaries who, we trust, may eventually settle among them. Who can tell but that the Falkland Islands, so admirably suited for the purpose, may become the key to the aborigines both of Terra del Fuego and of Patagonia!"

Patagonian Lads

In consequence of the peaceable and friendly demeanor of the Patagonians, Captain Gardiner was encouraged to believe that a good work might be carried on among them, with every hope of blessing. In 1844 a special society was formed for South America alone. Its headquarters were established, and soon afterward the principal of a public school, Mr. R. Hunt, volunteered to go out and become the first catechist in Patagonia. He and Captain Gardiner were landed at Oazy Harbor, in the Strait of Magellan, with three small huts, and necessary provisions for three months. This was in the month of February, 1845. Before long, however, it was necessary to abandon Patagonia, at least for a time.

Swimming with an Indian.

But Captain Gardiner was not to be daunted by difficulties. He heard the Saviour's command to preach the Gospel even to the ends of the earth, and, at his own expense, penetrated with unabated heroism into Bolivia and Terra del Fuego. The difficulties he had to encounter were not spiritual and moral only; there were natural obstacles to overcome. One of these was met and successfully overcome during a journey in Bolivia. On March 23, 1846, he came to the banks of the river Pilcomayo, which he had to cross. He had no boat and the river was too high to ford. He therefore engaged an Indian to swim across with him, and away they went, leaning together on a bundle of reeds. The current was very rapid, but the captain, assisted by the Indian, breasted it gallantly, and at length stood safely on the opposite side.

We must turn now to the final effort which ended Captain Gardiner's exertions for the benefit of the Indians in the extreme south of the Continent. Anxiously did he desire that some branch of Christ's Church would evangelize the immense territory; but he failed to enlist the support of his own countrymen, or of the Moravian Church, to which he applied. At length, mainly through the generosity of a private lady, was fitted out under Gardiner's superintendence, and the little company sailed from Liverpool on September 7, 1850. Three months later the party were landed at Picton Island, Terra del Fuego, one of the group of islands separated from the mainland of South America by the Straits of Magellan. All the islands are bleak and almost barren, mere rocks, the highest of which are covered with perpetual snow. Here little beside disappointment and danger attended them. Affairs reached a crisis in the following December, when food began to run short, and the attitude of the Indians became menacing.

A Missionary Expedition

Winter was coming on, and in the missionaries' quarters there was an almost Utter Absence of Food.

Sickness also had prostrated some of the number, and death had invaded their ranks. A vessel had been long expected with provisions for the party, but it did not arrive. The anxious glances cast seaward took in no welcome sail. They watched, but it was all in vain. In January, 1852, the English Government ship Dido went to their relief. She left the Falklands, and arrived at Banner Cove on the 19th. The captain of the Dido says: "Our notice was first attracted by a boat lying upon the beach about a mile and a half inside of Cape Kinnaird. I sent Lieutenant Pigott and Mr. Roberts to reconnoitre and return immediately. They returned shortly, bringing some books and papers, having discovered and that of Mr. Maidment unburied. On one of the papers was written legibly, but without date, "If you will walk along the beach for a mile and a half, you will find us in the other boat, hauled up in the mouth of the river at the head of the harbor on the south side. Delay not, we are starving."

The Body of Captain Gardiner

"I landed early next morning, January 22d, and visited the spot indicated, where we found the wreck of a boat with part of her gear and stores, and the remains of two bodies. They were those of Mr. Williams, a surgeon, and John Pearce, a Cornish fisherman, and papers which show the death and burial of all the rest of the mission party, seven in all. The two boats were about a mile and a half apart. Near the one where Captain Gardiner was lying was a large cavern, called by him Pioneer Cavern, and in it Mr. Maidment's body was found. Captain Gardiner's body was lying beside the boat, which apparently he had left, and being too weak to climb into it again, had died by the side of it. We were directed to the cavern by a hand painted on the rock, with 'Psalm 62: 5-8,' ['My soul, wait thou only upon God for my expectation is from Him,' etc.,] under it." (See Illustration.) Thus the whole party had perished in their endeavor to carry the Gospel to the benighted people. While we mourn the sad circumstances of their death, we cannot but rejoice that their sacrifice was not in vain.

The South American Mission is now successfully at work, and in Terra del Fuego, the Falklands, and the Fuegian Archipelago, the Gospel is being preached, and many of the natives have gladly accepted Christ, and been baptized in His name. This mission was definitely founded in 1854, and ten years later chaplaincies were appointed on the east and west coasts of South America. The earnest prayerful efforts which Bishop Riley is now making to build up evangelical work in Mexico and to make it a centre from which to reach the Spanish American peoples of South America will we trust be blessed to the same object. If the Christian Churches of the United States respond to his appeals and furnish him with the necessary funds, his missionaries from the North may yet join hands with those of the South American Mission from the South, and so the whole of the great South American Continent may ring with the glad tidings of salvation. As this work of Bishop Riley's is the branch identified with the United States, it has the first claim on American Christians, who realize the responsibility of the church for the heathendom in our hemisphere. Subscriptions in aid of it may be sent to the Treasurer, Mr. J. P. Heath, 43 Bible House, New York.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Cry that Brought Salvation.—An Evangelist said: "I was once addressing a Gospel meeting, and at the close of it a little girl came to me and earnestly said, 'Please, sir, I want to come to Jesus.' 'Then come in here and just kneel, and ask Him to take you,' I replied, pointing to the ante-room. We went in together, and the child knelt and prayed this short, effective, and most personal prayer, 'Jesus Christ save me.' As she pleaded, the tears flowed freely; but at length, as on an April day, the sun shone forth in the midst of the shower. And, rising from her knees with a most radiant face, she joyously exclaimed, 'Jesus has heard me; Jesus has saved me.' And she left the hall 'a new creature' in Him. For a long time I could not forget that prayer, the pointedness of it; there was no going round about, but simply 'Jesus—me.'"

Prayer in a Thunderstorm.—"I was once preaching," said Mr. Richard Weaver, "in a country district, and after the service I had to go twenty miles before I reached the farmhouse where I was staying. The night was very stormy, and as we went along, the farmer's son, who was driving, would exclaim after each vivid flash of lightning, 'Lord protect us.' 'No, Lord,' I rejoined, 'keep on thundering.' 'Why do you say that?' the young man asked in a trembling voice, 'Do you not wish the storm to stop?' 'Yes,' I replied, 'but I wish much more than that you might keep on praying.' On our arrival at the house the farmer's wife was glad to see us safe home. 'Yes, I am right glad to be home,' I said; 'yet I would not have missed that storm for a good deal. Do you know, it made your son pray? and I hope that having approached God in the time of trouble, he will stay there all his life, for there alone is perfect peace and safety.' The young man did accept Christ as his Saviour.'

A Sceptic Collier's Fear.—Richard Weaver said: "When I was a working collier, I remember working alongside a great boastful sceptic, who was engaged removing the supports from certain parts of the workings. It sometimes happens, as on this occasion, that a stone gets loose, and comes crashing down upon the miner. This particular stone was only a small one, but quite large enough to frighten my brave sceptic. I was not a Christian myself then, yet I always abhorred his braggart scepticism. When I went up to him he was lying under the stone and moaning, 'Lord help me.' Putting my hand upon the the stone I pressed it down so as to make it appear heavier. 'What are you going to do?' I asked; but his only answer was, 'The Lord help me.' As I pressed heavier, and heavier, his fear increased, and he redoubled his cries to the Lord whom he had affected to despise. At length I took off my hand, and showed him the size of the stone, saying, 'See there! What is the worth of all your infidelity, when a stone that size can drive it all out of you in half a minute?' Atheism cannot stand the approach of death."

The Silk-Weaver's Prodigal Daughter.—A noted Evangelist said: "Early one morning there came to the farm at which I was staying, a poor girl. Her clothes were saturated with rain, and she was faint with fatigue. During the night she had walked twenty miles through all the storm to see me. She wanted to be shown the way of salvation. She was furnished with dry clothes, and food was set before her, but she would not eat. She asked if there were any promises in the Bible for a sinner like her. Many were pointed out to her, and soon in that room the seeking sinner passed from death to life. Poor girl, her story was a sad one; she had left her home five years before, and had walked in the downward path. Her mother was dead, and her father was a silk-weaver. After having placed her under the protection of a Christian lady, I sought her father. When I met him I told him of the conversion of his daughter, and asked him if he would be reconciled to her. 'She can never enter my house again,' he said. 'If she did, her brothers and sisters would leave it.' 'The Lord has forgiven her,' I said, 'will not you? If her mother could speak from heaven, would she not plead with you to take her back?' Here he suddenly exclaimed, 'Send her home.' I took her home that night. The door was opened by her brother, who held out his hands to her, saying, 'Welcome home, my sister.' It was indeed a welcome she got, but not to be compared with that accorded to the returning and penitent sinner when he seeks his Father's face."

A Boy's Anxiety for His Parents.—"I was preaching in Sheffield not long ago," says Richard Weaver, "and at the end of the meeting I noticed a man, woman, and little boy sitting in the centre of the hall. The boy was crying bitterly. Going up to him I inquired the reason of his tears. 'Did he wish to be saved?' 'Oh, no,' he answered, 'Jesus pardoned me last night; but here are my father and mother, and I want Jesus to save them. Turning to the father, I said, 'You should thank God for such a son.' here the boy looked up into his father's face, and said, 'Father, do you give God your heart?' The father appeared to be about to tell his son to be still, but the child continued, 'Do come into the ante-room, and mother, do you come, too,' and taking each by the hand they walked into the room together. There the little fellow prayed, 'Oh God, Thou hast saved me, save my father and mother.' The father interrupted him, saying, 'But I am too bad to be saved, my son; I am too great a sinner.' But the little home-missionary answered, 'God commendeth His love towards us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.' God blessed these words, and the earnestness of that son, and they left the hall together rejoicing in the Lord Jesus as their Saviour."

A Perilous Ride.—Some Years ago the bridge over the Usk, near Caerleon, Monmouthshire, was washed away, and a new one had to be constructed. While the buttresses were being built, a commercial traveller, who had been absent some time from the place, drove up one night in his gig to the riverside, where the bridge used to be. It was a very dark night, and he gave the reins to his horse, who, he knew, was well accustomed to the road. They crossed safely over what he took to be the bridge, and came to an inn near the river. The landlady asked him, being an old acquaintance, what part of the country he had come in from. "From Newport," he answered. "Then you must have crossed the river?" said the woman in astonishment. "Yes, of course. How else could I have come?" "But how did you manage it, and in the dark, too?" "The same as usual; there is no difficulty in driving over the bridge, even though it be dark." "Bless the man!" said the landlady, "there is no bridge to drive over. You must have come along the planks left by the men." "Impossible," was the answer; and nothing could persuade the traveller that night that there was no bridge. But early next morning he went to the river-side, and found, as he had been told, that the bridge was gone. His horse had taken him safely over three planks, left by the workmen, where one false step, to the right or to the left, would instantly have plunged him into the swollen river beneath. The man stood aghast at the dreadful danger he had gone through, and so marvellously escaped.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

A CASE OF LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning, May 20, 1888.

"And she went and came and gleaned in the field after the reapers; and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech." Ruth 2 : 3.

An Eventful Day in the Harvest-Field—A Beautiful Gleaner—The Ancestress of Jesus—I. Trouble Develops Character—A Pastor's Sermons Improved by Bereavement—The Fountain of Hippocrene—The Nation Purified by its Trials—II. The Beauty of Unfaltering Friendship—The Poor Deserted in Misfortune—Ruth's Fidelity—III. A Joyful End of a Dark Path—The Road from Sinai to Calvary—IV. The Insignificant May be Momentous—Luther's Discovery of the Bible—A Long Succession of Conversions—V. The Beauty of Female Industry—Madame De Stael's Boast—VI. Value of the Gleanings.

THE time that Ruth and Naomi arrive at Bethlehem is harvest-time. It was the custom when a sheaf fell from a load in the harvest-field for the reapers to refuse to gather it up; that was to be left for the poor who might happen to come along that way. If there were handfuls of grain scattered across the field after the main harvest had been reaped, instead of raking it, as farmers do now, it was, by the custom of the land, left in its place, so that the poor, coming along that way, might glean it and get their bread. But, you say: "What is the use of all these harvest-fields to Ruth and Naomi? Naomi is too old and feeble to go out and toil in the sun; and can you expect that Ruth, the young and the beautiful, should tan her cheeks and blister her hands in the harvest-field?" Boaz owns a large farm, and he goes out to see the reapers gather in the grain. Coming there, right behind the sun-browned reapers, he beholds

A Beautiful Gleaner

—a woman more fit to bend to a harp, or sit upon a throne, than to stoop among the sheaves. Ah, that was an eventful day! It was love at first sight. Boaz forms an attachment for the womanly gleaner—an attachment full of undying interest to the Church of God in all ages; while Ruth, with an ephah, or nearly a bushel of barley, goes home to Naomi to tell her the successes and adventures of the day. That Ruth, who left her native land of Moab in darkness, and travelled through an undying affection for her mother-in-law, in the harvest-field of Boaz, is affianced to one of the best families in Judah, and becomes in after-time

The Ancestress of Jesus

Christ, the Lord of glory. Out of so dark a night did there ever dawn so bright a morning?

I learn in the first place from this subject how trouble develops character. It was bereavement, poverty and exile that developed, illustrated and announced to all ages the sublimity of Ruth's character. That is a very unfortunate man who has no trouble. It was sorrow that made John Bunyan the better dreamer, and Dr. Young the better poet, and O'Connell the better orator, and Bishop Hall the better preacher, and Havelock the better soldier, and Kitto the better encyclopedist, and Ruth the better daughter-in-law.

I once asked an aged man in regard to his pastor, who was a very brilliant man: "Why is it that your pastor, so very brilliant, seems to have so little heart and tenderness in his sermons?" "Well," he replied, "the reason is our pastor has never had any trouble. When misfortune comes upon him, his style will be different." After awhile the Lord took a child out of that pastor's house; and though the preacher was just as brilliant as he was before, oh the warmth, the tenderness of his discourses. The fact is that Trouble is a Great Educator.

You see sometimes a musician sit down to an instrument, and his execution is cold and formal and unfeeling. The reason is that all his life he has been prospered. Bnt let misfortune or bereavement come to that man, and he sits down at an instrument, and you discover the pathos in the first sweep of the keys. Misfortune and trials are great educators. A young doctor comes into a sick-room where there is a dying child. Perhaps he is very rough in his prescription, and very rough in his manner, and rough in the feeling of the pulse, and rough in his answer to the mother's anxious question; but years roll on, and there has been one dead in his own house; and now he comes into the sick-room, and with tearful eye he looks at the dying child, and he says: "Oh, how this reminds me of my Charlie!" Trouble, the great educator.

Sorrow, I see its touch in the grandest painting; I hear its tremor in the sweetest song; I feel its power in the mightiest argument. Grecian mythology said that the fountain of Hippocrene was struck out by the foot of the winged horse Pegasus. I have often noticed in life that the brightest and most beautiful fountains of Christian comfort and spiritual life have been struck out by

The Iron-shod Hoof

of disaster and calamity. I see Daniel's courage best by the flash of Nebuchadnezzar's furnace. I see Paul's prowess best when I find him on the foundering ship under the glare of the lighting in the breakers of Melita. God crowns his children amid the howling of wild beasts and the chopping of blood-splashed guillotine and the crackling fires of martyrdom. It took the persecutions of Marcus Aurelius to develop Polycarp and Justin Martyr. It took the world's anathema to develop Martin Luther. It took all the hostilities against the Scotch Covenanters and the fury of Lord Claverhouse to develop James Renwick, and Andrew Melville, and Hugh McKail, the glorious martyrs of Scotch history. It took the stormy sea, and the December blast, and the desolate New England coast, and the war-woop of savages, to show forth the prowess of the Pilgrim Fathers—

"When amid the storms they sang,
And the stars heard, and the sea;
And the sounding aisles of the dim wood
Rang to the anthems of the free."

It took all our past national distresses to lift up our nation on that high career where it will march along after the foreign aristocracies that have mocked, and the tyrannies that have jeered, shall be swept down under the omnipotent wrath of God, who hates despotism, and who, by the strength of His own right arm, will make all men free. And so it is individually, and in the family, and in the Church, and in the world, that through darkness and storm and trouble men, women, churches, nations, are developed.

II. Again, I see in my text the beauty of Unfaltering Friendship.

I suppose there were plenty of friends for Naomi while she was in prosperity; but of all her acquaintances, how many were willing to trudge off with her toward Judæa, when she had to make that lonely journey? One—the heroine of my text. One—absolutely one. I suppose when Naomi's husband was living, and they had plenty of money, and all things went well, they had a great many callers; but I suppose that after her husband died, and her property went, and she got old and poor, she was not troubled very much with callers. All the birds that sung in the bower while the sun shone have gone to their nests, now the night has fallen. Oh, these beautiful sun-flowers that spread out their colors in the morning hour! but are always asleep when the sun is going down! Job had plenty of friends when he was the richest man in Uz; but when his property went and the trials came, then there were none so much that pestered as Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamahite.

Life often seems to be a mere game, where the successful player pulls down all the other men into his own lap. Let suspicions arise about a man's character, and he becomes like a bank in a panic, and all the imputations rush on him and break down in a day that character which in due time would have had strength to defend itself. There are reputations that have been half a century in building, which go down under some moral exposure, as a vast temple is consumed by the touch of a sulphurous match. A hog can uproot a century plant.

In this world, so full of heartlessness and hypocrisy, how thrilling it is to find some friend

Faithful in Adversity

as in days of prosperity! David had such a friend in Hushai; the Jews had such a friend in Mordecai, who never forgot their cause; Paul had such a friend in Onesiphorus, who visited him in jail; Christ had such in the Marys, who adhered to Him on the cross; Naomi had such a one in Ruth, who cried out, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried; the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

Joy out of Sorrow.

III. Again, I learn from this subject that paths which open in hardship and darkness often come out in places of joy. When Ruth started from Moab toward Jerusalem, to go along with her mother-in-law, I suppose the people said, "Oh, what a foolish creature to go away from her father's house, to go off with a poor old woman toward the land of Judæa! They won't live to get across the desert. They will be drowned in the sea, or the jackals of the wilderness will destroy them." It was a very dark morning when Ruth started off with Naomi; but behold her in my text in the harvest-field of Boaz, to be affianced to one of the lords of the land, and become one of the grandmothers of Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory. And so it often is, that a path which starts very darkly, ends very brightly.

When you started out for heaven, oh, how dark was the hour of conviction—how Sinai thundered, and devils tormented, and the darkness thickened! All the sins of your life pounced upon you, and it was when you first found out your sins. After awhile you went into the harvest-field of God's mercy; you began to glean in the fields of divine promise, and you had more sheaves than you could carry, as the voice of God addressed you, saying, "Blessed is the man whose transgressions are forgiven, and whose sins are covered." A very dark starting in conviction, a very bright ending in the pardon and the hope and the triumph of the gospel.

The Darkest Hour you ever Saw

So, very often in our worldly business, or in our spiritual career, we start off on a very dark path. We must go. The flesh may shrink back, but there is a voice within, or a voice from above, saying: "You must go;" and we have to drink the gall, and we have to carry the cross, and we have to traverse the desert, and we are pounded and flailed of misrepresentation and abuse, and we have to urge our way through ten thousand obstacles that must be slain by our own right arm. We have to ford the river, we have to climb the mountain, we have to storm the castle; but, blessed be God, the day of rest and Reward Will Come.

On the tip top of the captured battlements we will shout the victory; if not in this world, then in that world where there is no gall to drink, no burdens to carry, no battles to fight. How do I know it? Know it? I know it because God says so: "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water, and God shall wipe all tears from their eyes."

It was very hard for Noah to endure the scoffing of the people in his day, while he was trying to build the ark, and was every morning quizzed about his old boat that would never be of any practical use; but when the deluge came, and the tops of the mountains disappeared like the backs of sea-monsters, and the elements, lashed up in fury, clapped their hands over a drowned world, then Noah in the ark rejoiced in his own safety and in the safety of his family, and looked out on the wreck of a ruined earth.

Christ, Hounded of Persecutors.

denied a pillow, worse maltreated than the thieves on either side of the cross, human hate smacking its lips in satisfaction after it had been draining His last drop of blood, the sheeted dead bursting from the sepulchres at His crucifixion. Tell me, O Gethsemane and Golgotha! were there ever darker times than those? Like the booming of the midnight sea against the rock, the surges of Christ's anguish beat against the gates of eternity, to be echoed back by all the thrones of heaven and all the dungeons of hell. But the day of reward comes for Christ; all the pomp and dominion of this world are to be hung on his throne, uncrowned heads are to bow before Him on whose head are many crowns, and all the celestial worship is to come up at His feet, like the humming of the forest, like the rushing of the waters, like the thundering of the seas, while all heaven, rising on their thrones, beat time with their sceptres: "Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth! Hallelujah, the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ!"

"That song of love, now low and far,
Ere long shall swell from star to star;
That light, the breaking day which tips
The golden-spired Apocalypse."

IV. Again: I learn from my subject that events which seem to be most Insignificant May be Momentuous.

Can you imagine anything more unimportant than the coming of a poor woman from Moab to Judah? Can you imagine anything more trivial than the fact that this Ruth just happened to alight—as they say—just happened to alight on that field of Boaz? Yet all ages, all generations, have an interest in the fact that she was to become an ancestor of the Lord Jesus Christ, and all nations and kingdoms must look at that one little incident with a thrill of unspeakable and eternal satisfaction. So it is in your history and in mine: events that you thought of no importance at all have been of very great moment. That casual conversation, that accidental meeting—you did not think of it again for a long while; but how it changed all the phase of your life!

It seemed to be of no importance that Jubal invented rude instruments of music, calling them harp and organ; but they were the introduction of all the world's minstrelsy; and as you hear the vibration of a stringed instrument, even after the fingers have been taken away from it, so all music now of lute and drum and cornet is only the long-continued and Jubal's organ. It seemed to be a matter of very little importance that Tubal Cain learned the uses of copper and iron; but that rude foundry of ancient days has its echo in the rattle of Birmingham machinery, and the roar and bang of factories on the Merrimac. It seemed to be a matter of no importance that Luther found a Bible in a monastery; but as he opened that Bible, and the brass-bound lids fell back, they jarred everything, from the Vatican to the furthest convent in Germany, and the rustling of the wormed leaves was the sound of the wings of the angel of the Reformation.

Strains of Jubal's Harp

It seems to be a matter of no importance that a woman, whose name has been forgotten, dropped a tract in the way of a very bad man by the name of Richard Baxter. He picked up the tract and read it, and it was the means of his salvation. In after-days that man wrote a book called "The Call to the Unconverted," that was the means of bringing a multitude to God, among others Philip Doddridge. Philip Doddridge wrote a book called: "The rise and Progress of Religion," which has brought thousands and tens of thousands into the kingdom of God, and among others the great Wilberforce. Wilberforce wrote a book called: "A Practical View of Christianity," which was the means of bringing a great multitude to Christ, among others Legh Richmond. Legh Richmond wrote a tract called: "The Dairyman's Daughter," which has been the means of the salvation of unconverted multitudes. And that tide of influence started from the fact that one Christian woman dropped a Christian tract in the way of Richard Baxter—the tide of influence rolling on through Richard Baxter, through Philip Doddridge, through the great Wilberforce, through Legh Richmond, on, on, on, forever, forever. So the insignificant events of this world seem, after all, to be most momentous. The fact that you came up that street or this street seemed to be of no importance to you, and the fact that you went inside of some church may seem to be a matter of very great insignificance to you, but you will find it the turning-point in your history.

V. Again: I see in my subject an illustration of

The Beauty of Female Industry.

Behold Ruth toiling in the harvest-field under the hot sun, or at noon taking plain bread with the reapers, or eating the parched corn which Boaz handed to her. The customs of society, of course, have changed, and without the hardships and exposure to which Ruth was subjected, every intelligent woman will find something to do.

I know there is a sickly sentimentality on this subject. In some families there are persons of no practical service to the household or community; and though there are so many woes all around about them in the world, they spend their time languishing over a new pattern, or bursting into tears at midnight over the story of some lover who shot himself! They would not deign to look at Ruth carrying back the barley on her way home to her mother-in-law, Naomi. All this fastidiousness may seem to do very well while they are under the shelter of their father's house; but when the sharp winter of misfortune comes, what of these butterflies? Persons under indulgent parentage may get upon themselves habits of indolence; but when they come out into practical life their soul will recoil with disgust and chagrin. They will feel in their hearts what the poet so severely satirized when he said:

"Folks are so awkward, things so impolite, They're elegantly pained from morning until night."

Through that gate of indolence how many men and women have marched, useless on earth, to a destroyed eternity! Spinola said to Sir Horace Vere: "Of what did your brother die?" "Of having nothing to do," was the answer. "Ah," said Spinola, "that's enough to kill any general of us." Oh! can it be possible in this world, where there is so much suffering to be alleviated, so much darkness to be enlightened, and so many burdens to be carried, that there is any person who cannot find anything to do?

Madame de Stael

did a world of work in her time; and one day, while she was seated amid instruments of music, all of which she had mastered, and amid manuscript books which she had written, some one said to her: "How do you find time to attend to all these things?" "Oh," she replied, "these are not the things I am proud of. My chief boast is in the fact that I have seventeen trades, by any one of which I could make a livelihood if necessary." And if in secular spheres there is so much to be done, in spiritual work how vast the field! We want more Abigails, more Hannahs, more Rebeccas, more Marys, more Deborahs consecrated—body, mind, soul—to the Lord who bought them.

VI. Once more: I learn from my subject

The Value of Gleaning.

Ruth going into that harvest-field might have said: "There is a straw, and there is a straw, but what is a straw? I can't get any barley for myself or my mother-in-law out of these separate straws." Not so said beautiful Ruth. She gathered two straws, and she put them together, and more straws, until she got enough to make a sheaf. Putting that down, she went and gathered more straws, until she had another sheaf, and another, and another, and another, and then she brought them all together, and she threshed them out, and she had an ephah of barley, nigh a bushel.

Elihu Burritt learned many things while toiling in a blacksmith's shop. Abercrombie, the world-renowned philosopher, was a philosopher in Scotland, and he got his philosophy, or the chief part of it, while, as a physician, he was waiting for the door of the sick-room to open. Yet how many there are in this day who say they are so busy they have no time for mental or spiritual improvement; the great duties of life cross the field like strong reapers, and carry off all the hours, and there is only here and there a fragment left that is not worth gleaning. Ah, my friends, you could go into the busiest day and busiest week of your life and find golden opportunities, which, gathered, might at least make a sheaf for the Lord's garner. It is the

Stray Opportunities

and the stray privileges which, taken up and bound together and beaten out, will at least fill you with abounding joy. There are a few moments left worth the gleaning. Now, Ruth, to the field! May each one have a measure full and running over! Oh, you gleaners, to the field! And if there be in your household an aged one, or a sick relative that is not strong enough to come forth and toil in this field, then let Ruth take home to feeble Naomi this sheaf of gleaning: "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." May the Lord God of Ruth and Naomi be our portion!

A MISSIONARY HERO'S PERIL.

(See Illustration on Page 332.)

THE courage which sustains the good man who is engaged in his Master's service, and is sure that God will preserve his life until his work is done, was marvellously displayed in a moment of supreme peril by the late Robert Moffat in the early days of his work in Southern Africa. The ignorant and superstitious savages by whom he was surrounded regarded the white man with suspicion, and many of them were convinced that his residence in their midst would surely bring evil on the tribe. It was, therefore, not surprising that when a season of protracted drought occurred, the missionary's enemies charged him with being the cause of the trouble. The professional rain-makers were set to work, but without success, and then a band of natives with their chief at the head went to the mission to demand the departure of the white men.

Moffat was in his garden repairing a wagon when the deputation arrived, but he was quickly on the scene when he heard of his visitors. "We stood patiently to hear the message," he said, when relating the story in after years, "and we expected the worst. The principal speaker informed us that it was the determination of the chiefs that we should leave the country, and, referring to our disregard of threatenings, added what was tantamount to the assurance that measures of a violent character would be resorted to, to carry their resolutions into effect, in case of our disobeying the order. While the chief was speaking, he stood quivering his spear in his right hand.

"Mrs. Moffat was at the door of our cottage, with the babe in her arms, watching the crisis, for such it was. I replied: 'We have indeed felt most reluctant to leave, and are now more than ever resolved to abide by our post. If you are resolved to rid yourselves of us, you must resort to stronger measures, for our hearts are entirely with you. You may shed blood, or burn us out. We know you will not touch our wives and children.'" Then throwing open his coat, Moffat stood erect and fearless. "Now, then," said he, "if you will, drive your spears to my heart; and when you have slain me, my companions will know that the hour has come for them to depart."

At these words the chief man looked at his companions, remarking with a significant shake of the head, "These men must have ten lives, when they are so fearless of death; there must be something in immortality."

A PERSECUTED CHRISTIAN WIDOW.

How much it costs to make a profession of faith in Christ in heathen lands may be seen by the following narrative from Rev. S. Knowles, the well-known missionary in India: "A Kshatri widow at Mahadeva, who had been virtually treated as a slave, and then greatly neglected and almost starved to death by her high caste friends, had been instructed in the truths of the gospel by our people, when she made up her mind to fully accept Christ, and cast in her lot with the Christians. For this purpose she came with her son and daughter—the one aged thirteen, the other eleven years—and asked our people to receive them. As soon as her caste relations, who had despised and treated her as a poor wretch under a heavy curse, found out that she and her two children wanted to connect themselves with us, they at once began their persecuting annoyances. The first thing they did was to confine the widow and her two children to their huts, and make them prisoners; and then they betrothed her daughter to the son of a distant relation. Not satisfied with this, on the morning of March 27 the chief man of the village headed a mob and proceeded to the place where our Christian families resided. There this excited crowd began wildly shouting and gesticulating, and giving the women the foulest abuse, which latter the Hindus, on the festival, know only too well how to give in all its ugly filthiness; threatening to burn down their houses and cut off their feet if they ever came near any of the Kshatri homes again. The next day they formally ostracised our people by excluding them from the village well, and from visiting any of their families. In a hundred petty ways they daily annoyed and disturbed the peace of these Christian families. They appealed to us for help, and we endeavored to settle the question by calling the Kshatris to our tent and quietly reasoning with them; but only a few leading Brahmans responded to our call. These were men whom we had met on former visits, and who again listened to the gospel patiently and with apparent favor. After these friends had left us, we sat down and wrote out an account of the Mahadeva affair to the Agent of the Balrampur Estates, and in whose charge this village happens to be placed."

CONSECRATED SATURDAYS IN THE EAST.

THE remarkable devotion of a Christian church in Koordistan has recently been shown in the erection of a place of worship. It was mainly accomplished by the manual labor of its members, who are too poor to give much money, but were willing to work. The account of the work is given in a report from Mr. Browne, of the Eastern Turkey Mission, to the American Board. In the course of it he says: "As I approached Haine I saw the white walls of their new chapel, the most conspicuous building in the town. The undertaking of building it seemed at first preposterous, but it has been accomplished. After various disappointments the pastor secured a large but very cheap lot on the edge of the town, and also an old ruin, with stone for building. The firman, the Sultan's permission to build, a document not easy to obtain, and which it was thought would require a long time, and perhaps a large expense, 'was granted at the first request, and at a cost of a single postage stamp.' This has not ceased to be a marvel to the whole community. The stone from the ruin was soon exhausted, and the Government gave the pastor permission to open a quarry wherever he could find one. After prayer one was found where the stones readily came out in blocks just suited to the building, thus saving expense.

"Henceforward the building proceeded without interruption. All through the long summer 'the people had a mind to work' as well as give and pray. Every Saturday they dedicated entire to the work of the Lord's house. Long before day ox-carts and beasts of burden, men and women, left the town for the quarry, where they toiled joyfully till evening. Going and coming and while at work their songs were borne into the town, which seemed stirred to its centre in sympathy and admiration for these brave toilers for Christ and the church. In the fall the building stood completed.

"So much were the Gregorian priests and ecclesiastics impressed that again and again they were forced to say to their people: 'If these Protestants, so few and so poor, can do a work like this, what ought we to be able to do?' Two leading Gregorians, master workmen employed on the chapel, became so impressed by the zeal and spirit of our people that before the building was finished they had become 'persuaded,' and with eight other Gregorian houses joined the Protestant community."

REMARKABLE CURE OF A DISEASED HIP.

IN the current number of *Thy Healer Mrs. Baxter publishes the following remarkable narrative which was sent to Bethshan by a friend at Plymouth, England: "A dear girl, Sarah Vanstine, of not yet twenty summers, has been a great sufferer with hip disease for seven years, and went first to the hospital at Newton Abbot; from there to Exeter Hospital for two years, and last to Plymouth Hospital for seventeen months. Here an operation was performed, diseased bone extracted, and thigh bone scraped. This caused great inflammation, which broke out in several very large abscesses. She could eat no food, her life appeared ebbing out fast. They discharged her from the hospital incurable, with a certificated nurse to dress her wounds. We shall not soon forget that emaciated form as we entered that room for prayer; but as we anointed and prayed, the power of the Lord was present to heal, and in her own words, she felt as though His hand touched every wound and all soreness was gone; and the next morning the dear girl, that had not moved for seventeen months, got up in her bed, got to the window, raised it, and stood looking out. She improved rapidly, the leg that was so much shorter began to develop in length and strength with the other. One crutch soon went, and then the other, and now she is the strongest, and, her mother says, the heartiest in the family; praise the Lord. Is there anything too hard for the Lord?"

A BROTHER RECOGNIZED BY A SCAR.

CAPTAIN CHARTERS, of Stanley Pool, commander of the Mission ship Peace, relates an affecting incident which he witnessed during his recent voyage in Africa. He says: "In the month of July, 1887, we reached the mouth of the Arameni. We had on board a boy of fifteen years of age. He was a personal attendant of Mr. Stanley. The boy had been captured a number of years previously to our arrival, by Arabs. The town had been burned, and he, together with many others, had been sold into slavery. He had met with Stanley, and the explorer, finding him intelligent, had taken him into his service. As we approached the mouth of the Arameni, you could see the boy, just like any other boy, when he sees home after a long absence. He began to get excited, and could scarcely keep himself still. As we approached, the natives looked at the Peace. They saw us on board, and, thinking the Arabs had come back again, they took to their canoes and paddled away as quickly as they could; and then we saw one or two canoes coming nearer, until one came right alongside of the Peace. The moment it touched, the boy said to one of these wretched looking men, 'You are my brother.' But the savage would not be persuaded. By and by he looked at him and said, 'Yes, you are my brother; you have a mark on your arm that you got while we were bathing in the river one day, and a crocodile bit you. The moment he said that, you should have seen how that poor boy acted. He threw his arms around his brother, and the two wept for joy. As the two embraced, Stanley was touched. He pointed to the pathetic sight, and said: 'Some people say the African has no love, has no gratitude. There is a sight that speaks for tself.'"

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a monthly magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to the Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

A LONG SEARCH ENDED.

A LADY missionary in India was speaking in a village to some native women, and, at the close of the address, an aged man who had listened intently to her words, accosted her and asked: "Would you come and visit my wife at my home?" He was one of a religious order, an elderly man, past seventy, and this lady said, "Oh, gladly!" and she followed him home, where he had a tank and a grove—a sort of religious establishment. He listened and listened and believed, and while his wife was taught the lesson, he was the chief learner. He related his history afterward to the lady. He said, "From the time I was a youth I have been seeking after God, longing that I might find Him. I was willing to dare anything if only I could know God. I went and joined myself to an order of monks, and went through their course of austerities. In summer time I have sat in the jungle, lighted four fires, and sat between them, with the burning sun overhead, enduring much suffering; then I would plunge into a tank in the bitter colds of winter, and there I would stand for hours until life almost fled. Oh! I sought after God for years in different places, and by all manner of austerities, but I never found Him, and, at last, I said, I have sought Him so long that I shall wait until He reveals Himself to me. But now, as I listened to your words, I have found that which I have been seeking all my life." He was baptized, on a profession of his faith in Christ. And now we see this aged man, with tears streaming down his cheeks as he weeps, because, he says, so short a time is left to him in which to serve on earth this Saviour whom he had sought so long.

A REMARKABLE MOVEMENT IN INDIA.

THE Rev. M. J. Coldron, of Chandbally, thus describes in the Indian Witness a remarkable movement begun by a native teacher:—There is a very interesting case of a native "Guru," who about eight years ago, got a tract, most probably the one entitled "The Confuter of Caste." This gave a new tendency to his mind, and he began preaching the doctrine of no caste, that all men are the children of one Supreme Father, and that the Son of God is the only Person who is authorized or has the power to save sinners.

This Guru has shown such earnestness and such adaptation to his work, that he now has about 5,000 followers. He told me his experience, how he came to enter upon this work. He was formerly rich, owned lands, and one year he had a large amount of rice in his godown, and the Lord appeared to him in a dream and told him to sell all his rice, and give the proceeds to the poor; then the Lord came to him again and said, sell all your land and give to the poor and I will make you rich in dharma; he said it took him a long time to be willing to give up everything, but since he did he has found the Lord's promise true.

The Spirit has evidently been teaching him many things regarding the principle of Christianity, but his two most prominent features are "one caste," and the Son of God the Saviour of sinners. He holds to some superstitious ideas, and probably will, but the real essence of the plan of salvation seems to be in him, and I believe he is called of God to further the cause of Christ. One peculiarity about him is that he claims to be especially called of God to preach this new doctrine, and brings as his proof three "birth marks; the print of a foot," a mark in the form of a lotus, and that of a sea-shell," all of which are recognized by the lower classes of Hindus as positive proof that he is a teacher from God, and they feel bound to obey his words. So he asked me to have these signs published in an Oryia tract, stating that he proclaimed that all people were to be in one caste, and to accept the Son of God as the Saviour from sin. He is a man about thirty-eight years old, and all that his enemies can say against him is that he is teaching the "Sahibs' religion" and his followers disregard the Hindu religion. His followers are in forty different villages.

The Zemindars and Brahmins tried to stop his preaching by threatening to stop his barber and dhobie, but he simply replied, they belong to my disciples. Although in his present state of development he has some ideas, which we with a clearer vision could not accept, still I believe God is leading him, and that if properly managed he will come with all his followers; and that this may yet prove an opening for the people of Orissa to receive the Gospel.

THE SIGNS OF CHRIST'S COMING.

By Rev. E. Bullinger.

AT Christ's second coming there shall be signs from heaven, great and terrible, but we have already and now the signs of the "sure word of prophecy." We desire to show from these signs of the Scriptures, that we are fast approaching the time when there "shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven." The second advent of Christ will consist of

A Series of Events, of which the visible and personal appearing of Christ will be the great central point. His first coming consisted of many events, and extended over a period of about thirty-three years. A Jew read of this coming in Micah 5:2, "Thou Bethlehem Ephratah . . . out of thee shall He come forth unto me that is to be uler in Israel;" and he also read of this same coming in Zech. 9:9. "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy King cometh unto thee," &c. But there was nothing in these prophecies to tell him that there were to be more than thirty years between these two events, which were both Christ's coming. So likewise in the prophecies of Christ's second coming, we read, "I will come again and receive you unto Myself" (John 14:3), and "The Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with Thee." Some interval is clearly implied between

The Rapture and Reception of the saints by Christ and their return with Him in glory. And so when we read that the saints are to be caught up "to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. 4:17), there is nothing in that passage to tell us how long they shall be with Him there, before they return with Him in glory; whether it is to be momentary or prolonged. We learn, however, from many Scriptures that at least seven years will run their course. All the events that are recorded in the book of "The Revelation of Jesus Christ" are connected with and form part of that Revelation, and go to make up the Second Advent; while the personal appearing of Christ will of course form a definite act in that series of events, as definite as the lightning's flash. (Dan. 7:25.)

The Return of the Jews

will not be accomplished in a day or a week. There will be a preliminary, or partial, gathering: and there will be also a "second" complete and miraculous gathering. The return from Babylon occupied more than forty years. The re-building of the street and the wall was to be in "the strait of times." (Dan. 9:25, margin) i. e., the smaller interval of the two named, viz., in "seven weeks," or seven sevens of years, i. e., forty-nine years. The dispersion of the Jews likewise was not completed until the destruction of Jerusalem, till forty years after Christ foretold it in Luke 21. So that we might expect the gathering of the Jews to their city and land to be accomplished gradually in the course of years, and by apparently natural causes; when the Antichrist shall be revealed in his time, and first by flatteries and deceit, then by violence and persecution shall lead up to his own destruction by the glory of Christ's coming with His saints—the saints having been previously caught up to meet Him in the air.

In a work by Dr. Kellogg entitled, "The Jews: or prediction and fulfilment," there is a mass of evidence, and a collection of facts showing how in the past history of the Jews the most minute predictions have been literally fulfilled, and pointing the most powerful argument to a like literal fulfilment of prophecies in the present, and in the near future.

Their Restoration Will be Gradual

(Ezek. 37:7–14.) The restoration is not to be the one work of a moment, but it is marked by successive stages. (1) "a noise," (2) "a shaking," (3) "the bones came together, bone to his bone," (4) "the sinews and flesh came up upon them," (5) "the skin covered them above," (6) "the breath came into them and they lived," and (7) they "stood up upon their feet."

Now as the Restoration of Israel cannot be the work of a moment or a day, or of a mere brief period, is it too much to ask whether we may not call present movements, the "noise" and the "shaking," even if not the coming together of bone to bone.

THE PROPHETIC CRISIS IN EUROPE.

Turkey in Extremis.

THE condition of Turkey is thus described by a contemporary: "Not for years has the couch of the 'sick man' been so prickly. A quarrel with Greece; Roumania veering towards revolution and anarchy; Crete boiling up; Bulgaria quiet with the dull quietness which usually precedes a storm; even Armenia daring to make public protest about her grievances—such are some of the troubles which torment the poor invalid at Constantinople. Nor can he flatter himself that he possesses a single friend on whose assistance he could rely, were Russia to pick another quarrel with him. And that is the chief danger which is even more acute than it was two months ago. The spectacle of this helpless and fatuous Power vainly endeavoring to gain its ends by the obselete chicaneries of old-fashioned diplomacy is a standing temptation to the heirs-expectant to make an end of the business. Events seem moving to the partitioning of Turkey between Russia and Austria, or to a great European war." The end of Turkish Mohammedan rule in Europe—or in prophetic phraseology—"the drying-up of the river Euphrates" is one of the predicted signs of the end of this dispensation.

France and Boulanger.

There is a pause in what is called in derision "the Boulangist craze," but in the opinion of those best qualified to form an opinion on the subject the pause is on the surface only. The fact is clearly perceived by unprejudiced observers who mix with the masses of the people. The able correspondent in Paris of the London Record says: "The fear of an immediate appeal to the country, and, as the result of this, of the revision of the Constitution and the establishment of a Dictatorship, drove the innumerable sections of the Republicans together, and caused them to support the Floquet Cabinet. Even if this spasmodic concentration, the mere creation of terror, could be developed into a loyal, patriotic, and consistent upholding of the Republic, I believe it would come too late. The discontent with the existing state of things is now far too deep-seated and wide-spread to be appeased with anything short of revision. Were it otherwise, I do not see any satisfactory indications that partyism is inclined to give way to patriotism. Imagine the existence of no less than fourteen parties, or groups, in the Chamber, each with its duly constituted chairman and committee! For this reason, therefore, because the forces that would oppose Boulangism are so pitiably incapable of rising above their petty differences, and uniting for the good of the commonwealth, and still more, perhaps, because of the extraordinary hold which Boulangism has taken upon the popular mind throughout France, my belief is that its success is inevitable. A French lady residing in one of the central Departments told me the other day that you cannot buy a pound of sugar or coffee in the little town near her home, but the paper in which it is wrapped up bears the portrait of Boulanger; and one of the Directors of the Western Railway assures me that almost every guard and engine-driver on their line carries the brav' General in his pocket!" We have already pointed out that Boulanger will in all probability play the part of forerunner to the Napoleonic Antichrist that is to arise very shortly; hence the importance of observing the steps he takes in order to realise his ambition—the military dictatorship of France.

Affairs in Eastern Europe.

The omens in Eastern Europe are becoming increasingly disquieting and portentous. A large body of Montenegrins have crossed the river Lim into Servia, and the Mussulman population of Nova Warosch in the Sandjak of Nova Bazar, fled precipitiously on the approach of the invaders. The evident determination of Greece to extend its activity to Macedonia, and the undisguised encouragement it is receiving from the agents of Russia, leads the Bulgarians to conclude that if they allow the Greeks to proceed unhindered in that direction, Macedonia will for ever be lost to them. If the Bulgarians connive at any movement in Macedonia they will be putting themselves in flagrant opposition to the stipulations of the Berlin Treaty, and will at once call down upon themselves the anger of the Turkish Government; yet it is believed that they would risk that, rather than abandon Macedonia to Greece. Meanwhile intelligence received at Belgrade from Yranji states that "disturbances of some magnitude have broken out in the vilayet of Monastir, and that Servians and Greeks have united to oppose the Turkish authorities." Should this trouble develop into a triangular quarrel between Greece, Servia, and Bulgaria, the strong sympathies of both Russia and Austria will involve them in the struggle, and when once the dogs of war are unchained, the weakest will go to the wall. The London Times says:—"Although nothing is happening of a distinctly alarming character, the condition of European affairs at this moment inspires widespread uneasiness, if not actual apprehension.

Minor Portents.

Numerous unsettled questions exist which taken singly might be ignored, but collectively involve no small peril to the general tranquillity. Wherever we turn we find unsettled weather, and although no storm has actually burst, the political meteorologist cannot but confess that he has little ground for a confident forecast. Statesmen, however, indulge the hope that peace may be maintained through the summer. Beyond that time they do not venture to build. The London Standard says: "The rival interests of Russia and Austria-Hungary are not to be reconciled by the wit of man. It may be that the main crater of the volcano has not yet opened, and that it is only a subsidiary and transitory eruption in the little outbreak in Macedonia that is now beginning to attract the attention of Europe. But what if we are now on the eve of the long-threatened explosion? The thought is a terrible one; but it is one which wise men will not shrink from on that account. From some quarter or other, by some agency or other, the Eastern Question must at no distant day be reopened. Has the day come? Is it near at hand? No one knows for certain. All we know is, that the elements of mischief are once more in an ominous state of activity."

The Antichrist, Babylon, and the Coming of the Kingdom. by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages; Price in cloth covers, 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes. by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE.

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Lerned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Change Made in the Chinese Treaty by the Senate before ratification, will delay its going into execution if it does not annul it altogether. The Senate treated it as if it were a bill from the House and ratified its own amendment inserted without the consent of the sovereign power of the second part. The Senate recollected that there were Chinamen who had left the country with the right to return, and they wished to prevent those from getting back. So the treaty was changed and the assent of the Chinese Government to the changes must be obtained before any part of the treaty can take effect. The assent of the Chinese Government cannot be obtained, if it is obtained at all, before the end of the summer, and it is probable that by that time the Chinamen who wish to return will hasten back to avoid the exclusion with which they are menaced in the amendment.

Another Whole Week has Been Devoted by the House to the interminable Tariff debate. A remarkable feature of the proceedings, which, however, is by no means unique, is that in a matter in which the interests of the whole country are so seriously involved, the members of the House occupy their time in making speeches which are only useful as campaign documents, and are not adapted or designed to aid in the solution of a difficult and momentous problem. The statesmen in Washington seem to be content to have the question decided at the polls by the votes of men who cannot be supposed to have the time or facilities for gaining an intelligent comprehension of the subject, rather than to accept the responsibility belonging to them of dealing with it in a dignified and statesmanlike manner. The majority appear to consider how their action on the tariff will affect their prospects of re-election, rather than how their action will affect the interests of the nation. One important fact was brought out during last week's debate which shows that the Ways and Means Committee did not treat the bill in so sectional a spirit as was supposed. Mr. Breckinridge of Arkansas, declared that although the committee had put wool on the free list, the number of sheep in the South had increased during the past twelve years from three to nine millions, while in New England and the middle States the number had decreased from nine to eight millions. The main difficulty in dealing with the question is evidently caused by its being approached in a party rather than a patriotic spirit.

An Uninstructed Delegation to the Republican National Convention, in Chicago, is to go from New York. At the State Convention, held in Buffalo on May 16, it was resolved that "the Republicans of New York, in convention assembled, certain that the National Convention at Chicago will present candidates for President and Vice-President whose devotion to American ideas, and to the protection of labor, agriculture and manufactures, will command the approval of the people, pledge to the Republican standard-bearers, in the national contest their united and zealous support, and enter upon the canvass confident of victory." This resolution would not, however, have been passed, had it not been understood that the delegation would support Mr. Blaine's candidacy. Mr. Depew's friends were numerous in the convention, but in the face of the action of conventions in other States, the presentation of Mr. Depew's name might have involved the New York delegation in embarrassment. This was especially considered unwise, because it was evident that, as in 1880 and 1884, New York will be the battle-ground on which the Presidential election will be decided. The fact that the delegation is headed by the names of United States Senator Frank Hiscock, ex-United States Senator Warner Miller, Chauncey M. Depew, and Thomas C. Platt, shows how the State's vote in the National Convention will be cast. The tariff resolution was worded with extreme caution. It did not afford "the guiding light" which legislators in Congress had expected, as an indication of the extent to which the party in New York is prepared to go in tariff reduction. It simply approved "the action of the Republican members of Congress in opposing the Mills tariff bill, so-called," and urged "them to persevere in defeating every device intended to place upon the statute book the free-trade theories of Mr. Cleveland's annual message."

The New York State Democratic Convention, which has been the subject of much anxiety in the Party throughout the country, assembled in New York city on May 15. It was generally understood that upon the action of this Convention depended the question of the renomination of Mr. Cleveland. If the opposition manifested toward him by a large and influental section of his party proved strong enough to prevent his receiving the endorsement of his own State, the prospect of a renomination would be very small. The Convention, however, appeared from the outset to be entirely in the hands of the President's friends. Not only was there selected a delegation to St. Louis wholly in favor of Mr. Cleveland's renomination and instructed to do all in their power to bring this about, but most of Mr. Hill's supporters in the State Committee were forced to make way for pronounced Cleveland men. Mr. Cleveland's name was received with the heartiest enthusiasm, and the plank in the platform commending his message to Congress on the surplus met with more enthusiasm from the delegates than any other utterance. The portion of the platform which refers to the tariff gave trouble to the committee having the matter in charge. After much discussion, it was simply determined not to be too pronounced on the subject, and the matter was dismissed with the indorsement of the recommendations contained in the President's message to Congress. The convention could not decently avoid endorsing Gov. Hill's administration: but it did so in a perfunctory manner which must have been very discouraging to those friends of the Governor who have been advocating his nomination for the Presidency.

The Great Flood now Prevailing along the Mississippi river, exceeds in horror all that have preceded it since 1851. The water reached the danger point at Quincy, Ill., on May 9, and since that day it has risen steadily. On May 13, the first break occurred in one of those great embankments known as the Indian Grove Levee. During the day other crevasses were made, and within a few hours thousands of acres of winter wheat were laid waste. The farmers had been working on the embankment night and day, in the hope of saving their homes, and when the flood came a majority of them had barely time to save their families, so sudden and overwhelming was the rush of the torrents. The next day the Sny Carte levee gave way, causing still greater destruction. That was followed by the Alexandria levee and it is now feared that not an acre of ground in this vast territory can escape the flood. At the close of the week cattle and horses in the fine wooded pastures were overwhelmed in many localities and drowned. The river above and below the city was from ten to fifteen miles broad, covering all the farms on both sides and extending from the bluffs on the Illinois side to the high bluffs in Missouri. On the dry places on the embankment hundreds of cattle, horses, and hogs stood without food, and no prospect of drink except when in danger of being swallowed up by the floods. Far across on the opposite bluffs were gathered hundreds of men, women, and children, many of them utterly destitute, without sufficient clothing, and some suffering for want of food.

The Irish Members of Parliament have issued a formal protest against the rescript which the Pope recently launched against boycotting and the plan of campaign. They flatly contradict, seriatim, each of the assertions made by the Pope, and say, in conclusion: That the demand of the Irish people for agrarian reform and political liberty is dictated by necessity, sustained by natural justice, and conducted by modes of action and methods of organization prescribed or allowed by the constitution to which the Irish people owe whatever they have won of civil and religious freedom; that the force of this national movement against unconstitutional coercion and organized calumny will continue to be exerted until we shall have achieved success. While unreservedly acknowledging the spiritual jurisdiction of the Holy See, we, as guardians of those civil liberties which our Catholic fore-fathers resolutely defended, feel bound to solemnly reassert that Irish Catholics can recognize no right of the Holy See to interfere with the Irish people in the management of their political affairs."

A Combination in the French Chambers has been arranged which promises to cause a serious crisis in the affairs of the Republic. The Bonapartist group in the Chamber of Deputies have resolved to combine with the Right in an effort to bring about a dissolution of Parliament. Whether this resolution has been formed with the pure idea of causing embarrassment to the Government, and so leading the nation to believe that tranquillity and security are not to be expected under Republican Institutions, or that some concession of value to the Bonapartists has been made by the Right, is not stated, but it is certain that the crisis which the combination will produce is one of a very serious character. In the meantime Gen. Boulanger becomes more outspoken in his ambitious appeals to the people. Speaking at a luncheon at Douai, Gen. Boulanger called the Constitution a "ridiculous compromise between a pseudo-monarchy and a false republic." Those who feigned to propose revision, he said, refused it now because they feared to lose their seats.

The Suffering Emperor of Germany has entered on another period of improvement. The intense weakness which followed his last crisis has gradually disappeared under the careful treatment of his physicians. The cable report on Friday last stated that he was able to take an airing in the park, dividing the time between resting in the tent, and driving about in the pony-carriage. The consultation of the doctors was held in the tent. On leaving the park the Emperor walked up the steps of the Schloss supporting himself by the balustrade. He was also able to visit the chapel. Another encouraging feature of the case is that the matter taken from his throat has been submitted to microscopical examination by Professor Virchow, who declares that it does not contain any cancerous cells. Dr. Mackenzie, however, does not speak hopefully of the case, though he persists in his assertion that if an operation had been performed when the German doctors recommended it the Emperor would surely have died. He says that his present condition proves that he had not the recuperative power which would have been necessary to recover from it. Dr. Mackenzie said recently to a press correspondent: "The Emperor is certainly suffering from perichondritis, which with disease of the cartilage is very dangerous, though not necessarily fatal. He also has cancer, that will necessarily prove fatal sooner or later."

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored Ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $13.30. They are from: East Line, N. Y., $1; Seymour, Ind., $1.80; East Des Moines, Iowa, $2.50; No. Greenfield, N. Y., $1; Philadelphia, Pa., $2 and $5. Testimonies to the value of this agency are continually coming to hand. Many colored ministers have no commentaries, nor theological works, and they gratefully acknowledge the benefits they have derived from the sermons and other exegetical matter published in these pages. Thus every dollar subscribed is a benefit not only to the preacher, but to his hearers. Christians who have the welfare of the colored race at heart, may materially promote it by enabling us to extend the benefits of this fund.

A New and Powerfully Written Story by Rev. L. S. Keyser is commenced in this number of THE CHRISTIAN HEALD. It is gratifying to learn that his previous story, "The Way Out," published two years ago in these columns, was blessed of God to the conversion of several young men who were known as sceptics and that others were led by reading it to abandon their attitude of hostility to Christianity. The rapid and alarming increase of scepticism among the young men in our colleges is a most serious omen for the country, which is causing anxiety to true and enlightened patriots. We earnestly hope that our readers will pray that the publication of Mr Keyser's story will be blessed even more abundantly than his former one.

The Methodist General Conference Decided on Thursday last to add five bishops to the list. There are twenty-five candidates for the vacancies so that the announcement led to increased activity among the friends of the clergymen whose names are prominent. Complaints have been made to the Conference of the methods adopted by enthusiastic partizans. They savor, it is alleged, too much of the political system, and requests have been made that lobbying shall be prohibited. The vexed question of the Status of Bishop Taylor has been submitted to a sub-committee, which, in a series of resolutions, defines the position of a missionary bishop. It is declared that his functions and jurisdiction are limited to the mission field to which he is appointed, and his salary is to be paid out of the foreign mission fund, and not out of the general treasury.

Rev. Thomas Harrison's Meetings at the Eighteenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church in New York, are being blessed in a remarkable manner. The church is densely crowded at every service by men and women of all classes. Among those who last week made a profession of faith, were a wealthy Wall Street broker and his wife, who were in deep grief over the death of their little daughter. The scene when the wife, who first found peace, discovered that her husband was in the church, and was also seeking the Saviour, was most affecting. She joined in the prayers for his conversion, and when, after a period of much distress and conflict, he finally gave himself to God, her joy was greater than she could express. The number of persons who have made a profession of faith through the blessing of God on Mr. Harrison's labors in New York, is now over fourteen hundred.

The Discovery of a Miser's Hoard is Reported in the Pittsburgh Despatch. It states that as the owner of a sawmill was engaged in halving a big cypress log, the teeth of the saw began to grate harshly on his ear. He stopped the machine to ascertain the cause, and, to his surprise, he discovered a box, measuring about four by eight inches. After much difficulty he got the box out and pried the lid open, his eyes almost starting from their sockets when he saw that it was filled with coin. After satisfying himself that it was real gold, the sawyer put his treasure in a place of safety. He refused to tell the neighbors the amount of his find, but satisfied their curiosity to some extent by displaying several twenty-dollar gold pieces. When the man from whom the sawyer obtained the log learned of the discovery, he laid claim to the box, and when his claim was not recognized he threatened a lawsuit. It is supposed that the money was placed in the tree many years ago, by a man named Spencer, an old miser, who lived near where the tree was cut down. When he accumulated the hoard he could have had no idea that it would ever fall into the hands of a stranger or he would have been greatly distressed. If he knows now it will cause him no concern. The only matter of moment to him now on his side of the grave is whether in this life he was rich toward God. (Luke 12: 20, 21.)

The Disposal of Soldiers' Clothing was the subject of newspaper discussion last week. A complaint was made in a daily journal that recruits were required to sell their civilian dress immediately on enlisting, and that the recruiting officer introduced them to a second-hand clothes dealer, to whom they were obliged to sell their clothes, and who gave the recruiting officer a commission on the transaction, of course paying the recruit an inadequate price. The other side of the story soon found its way to publication. It appears that it is true that the recruit on entering the army is not allowed to keep his civilian's clothes, but he is allowed two weeks in which to dispose of them and can make his own bargain with a purchaser of his own choice. Experience, however, proves that the transaction has not much profit in it for any one. The men who offer themselves, do so generally as a last resort. They are often coatless, and their other garments are seldom worth a dollar; very often they are given away. It is with them very much as it is with the sinner who enters the service of Christ. He, too, is driven to his last resource, and his own righteousness has to be discarded before he takes on the robe which Christ provides for him, but he knows it is only filthy rags, of no value to any one. (Isa. 64: 6.)

Terror at a Waving Wire Caused a Block of traffic on Broadway, New York, on May 12. It was one of the Brush Illuminating Company's wires, and hung from a pole near Howard Street. The wire parted close to its connection with a pole on the east side of Broadway and fell across the roadway. The end of the wire, from which the insulation had been torn when it parted, struck the railroad tracks in the centre of the street and there was at once a vivid display of daylight pyrotechnies which attracted a great crowd. The wire in its fall narrowly escaped striking a man and horse passing beneath it, Every time the naked end of the wire touched the steel rails, there were emitted long streaks of blue flame and showers of brilliant sparks All travel on Broadway was stopped, and no one had the temerity to touch the wire, in view of recent experiences in that direction. The police captain of the Precinct sent a messenger to the station of the Illuminating Company in Elizabeth street, and linemen were soon on the spot. The current was shut off and the wire was removed. Then, after a delay of nearly an hour, traffic was resumed. A few months ago a score of hands would have been thrust out to remove the obstruction, but so many persons have been killed of late by touching electric wires that more caution is exercised now. Would that a similar result were produced by the moral and spiritual catastrophes which occur! Men see their companions go to a fate worse than death through liquor and the indulgence of vicious propensities, yet they heed not the warning (Job. 12: 5).

An Important Lawsuit was Closed by a Practical experiment, in Brooklyn, N. Y., on May 15. A druggist was sued by a customer for ten thousand dollars in compensation for injuries she claimed that she had received as a result of his blunder. She said that she had taken a prescription to his store to be made up, and, when she received the medicine, she took one dose and was soon afterwards seized with severe pain in the stomach, with a burning sensation and a copious hemorrhage from the mouth. She had submitted some of the medicine to an analyst who had tested it, and who stated that caustic potash had been used in it instead of iodide of potassium. After the plaintiff and the analyst, had given their evidence, the druggist was called to the stand. He declared that the prescription was accurately dispensed, and that the medicine was not poisonous, and could not have produced the results described. "Should you be afraid to take the medicine yourself?" asked the Judge. "Not at all," said the druggist, and, before any one could prevent him, he took a large dose in the presence of the court. Several doctors, who were witnesses, wanted to administer antidotes, but the witness would not have it, and he showed no bad effects from swallowing the mixture. The jury thereupon gave him a verdict. The personal testimony and practical evidence had more weight with them than the scientific reasoning of the experts. It is so with the world in spiritual matters. Neither cogent reasoning nor eloquent appeals are so efficacious in the conversion of sinners, as the personal witness of men whom religion has blessed (I John 4: 13, 14).

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. Thomas Whitley, of England, whose son recently died in the missionary work on the Congo, has paid the outfit and passage of a man to take his son's place.

Rev. Eynon Davis, a Welsh clergyman, recently stated that there is not a single atheistic book published in the Welsh language.

Pundita Ramabai's appeal for funds to found a school for high-caste Hindoo women has met with such favorable response that the school will open next January.

A pastor of Columbus, O., estimates that the number of church accessions resulting from the meetings held in that city by Dr. L. W. Munhall, number 1,000.

The Baptist Year Book, just issued, records a membership of 2,917,315 in the 31,891 churches. During the year 158,373 were added to the membership, and 608 new churches were established.

The union meeting of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor of the various churches in New York was held at the Central Presbyterian church, last Thursday afternoon and evening.

Mr. Charles Herald is now conducting services in Bethesda Chapel, Brooklyn, N. N., the mission in connection with the Central Congregational Church, of which Dr. Behrends is pastor. The attendance is of an encouraging character, and much good is being done.

Bishop Littlejohn, of Long Island, is preparing a memorial to Congress on the subject of the spiritual destitution in the Army. The memorial asks for the appointment of more chaplains, and of men of greater efficiency.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society received the past year $551,596, of which $145,603 was received by contributions for general purposes; $41,579 for schools and buildings, and $39,629 for church extension. The receipts from legacies were $245,485.

The Rev. Edward Judson announces that he has received subscriptions amounting to $135,000 for a Judson Memorial Church for the benefit of the masses in New York. The site is the southwest corner of Washington Square and Thompson Street. The amount yet to be raised is $65,000.

The Springfield Republican says: "A Boston notion in church work is called a House Committee, and its members scatter themselves among the congregation. Each one is responsible for the five pews in front of him, to whose occupants he speaks and shows the attentions which will make them feel at home."

During the hearing of a case before the referee in New York last week, a witness desired to be sworn instead of affirming. Five hours were spent by the messengers in a fruitless search for a Bible. The referee wanted the witness to swear on a volume of the Civil Code, but he declined, and the case was adjourned to the next day.

The leading Hebrew congregation of New York have now added a Sunday service to their long-time Sunday-school; they sit in pews, ladies and gentlemen together, instead of the women being compelled to climb upstairs into the "court of the women;" the gentlemen remove their hats, instead of donning them as heretofore. A synagogue in Chicago, and another in Philadelphia, also now have Sunday services.

Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, it is now stated, declines to resume his membership in the Baptist Union. The concessions which satisfied his brother were not sufficiently explicit to remove Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's scruples. He said: 'All has been done that can be done, and yet without violence to conscience we cannot unite; let us not attempt it any more, but each one go his own way in quiet, striving honestly for that which he believes to be the truth of God.'

THE RAPID BELIEVER.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Jesus answered and said unto him, Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? Thou shalt see greater things than these."—John 1 : 50.

The Plain-Speaking, Honest Man—No Dissimulation in Him—The Password between Jesus and Nathanael—I. One who Believed Readily—Was Not a Suspicious man—Meant Business—Satisfied with Evidence—II. A Man Highly Commended—Received a Promise—Men with Eyes and no Eyes—III. A Man with Peculiar Temptation—Ready Believers Doubting the Reality of Conversions—Reasons Why Some Escape Severe Conviction—A Talk with a Scotchwoman—A Despairing Hearer Saved.

NATHANAEL was by nature a man free from cunning and deceit. He was a specimen of that "honest and good ground" of which our Saviour speaks in the parable, upon which, when the seed fell, a hundredfold harvest was produced. We have some such men about us, thank God, in this country; regular John Blunts, as we say, clear as crystal, true as the sun in the heavens. Speech is not to them the medium for concealing their thoughts. When they have a mind to speak,

They Speak their Mind.

You know where they are. They may have a great many faults, but they have not the faults of deception and dissimulation. They are Israelites indeed, in whom is no guile. You know the kind of people: they may at times speak too harshly, and hurt your feelings; they may put things in an ugly shape, and tread on people's corns; but they are as straight as a plumb-line, and you may be sure you know them when you have heard what they say.

Now, when the good brethren who had joined the Saviour came to tell Nathanael that they had found the Christ, he blurted out his objection at once. They said, "We have found Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth"; but he did not take everything for gospel which his friends told him. He does not beat about the bush, but he says at once, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" It is always a good thing, when a man has a prejudice, if he will but state it, and "out" with it. You can always deal with this kind of fellow. If he will say what is troubling him, and tell you what keeps him back from faith, why, then you can put your finger on his difficulty, and try to remove it.

Nathanael's question was met at once by his comrades, who said to him,

"Come and See";

and, like the honest man that he was, he took up their challenge. He would "come and see"! How many there are who make objections, but they will not "come and see"! They have heard concerning a certain preacher, perhaps, such and such absurd things; but another says, "It is not so. Come and see." Not they. They do not want to come and see: for they are unfair, and prefer to cherish a bad opinion of the man. They know so much that they do not wish to learn any more. Nathanael was not of that sort. "Come and see," was an invitation which commended itself to his judgment. "Oh, yes," said he, "by all means."

Nathanael is on his way to see for himself, when the Lord Jesus Christ, turning to those around Him, says, in a voice loud enough for him to hear, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!" Here comes a man with no craft, no cunning in him. Nathanael is startled to find his real character so clearly read, and somewhat bluntly asks, "Whence knowest thou me?" I must do him the justice of believing that he said it respectfully; yet, nevertheless, he curtly said "Whence knowest thou me?" As much as to say—"Thou hast hit the nail on the head; but how camest Thou to know this?"

"Jesus answered and said to him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee." What Nathanael was doing under the fig-tree I do not know. Some think that he was there in meditation; others say in prayer. Very possibly, but I do not know, and the wisest expositors do not know, and you do not know. Anyhow, Jesus mentioned to him a something which he remembered, and thought much of, though it was entirely between God and his own soul. Between Jesus and Nathanael, "under the fig-tree" served as a pass-word. They were known to one another by that; and at once Nathanael cried, "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel." He is fairly won, and by an open confession he commits himself at once to what he believes. He is

Not Ashamed of his Convictions,

He has enlisted beneath the banner of the King of Israel once for all. Forth he comes without a moment's reservation with that blessed confession of faith—"Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel." Our Lord Jesus, charmed with the grace which He had Himself given, delighted with the faith which He had Himself created, answers, "Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? thou shalt see greater things than these." This ready convert, so speedily convinced, was very acceptable to the Lord Jesus.

I. First, then, here is

One who Believed Readily.

The first time he saw the Saviour he was converted to the faith. The first sentences that were addressed to him by the Lord Jesus Christ fairly won him to hearty faith and loyal service. Why was that? Why was he so soon brought to discipleship?

I think, perhaps, it was because he was such a true man himself that the element of suspicion was not in his character. Persons who are remarkably suspicious and constantly incredulous, are seldom very truthful themselves. If you follow them home, you will discover that they are suspicious of others, because they are not true to themselves, and their difficulty in believing others arises from the fact that they measure other people's corn with their own bushel. They imagine that other people are as big liars as they are themselves. I believe this is the bottom of much of the distrust and questioning which seethes around us. Sometimes that suspiciousness comes upon men's minds through long dealing with deceptive persons. But if you find that a man began life with a general suspicion and doubt of others, you may conclude that he was a born deceiver, radically false from his birth. Nathanael had never taken anybody in nor tried to mislead anyone in his life, and, therefore, he did not expect to be deceived. He was just as honest as the day; and so he came to the Saviour with a heart that was open to faith, ready to believe Him.

An Expectant Believer.

But, further, this Nathanael, this rapid believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, had, I have no doubt, been seeking guidance beforehand, and that guidance he had honestly followed. I should think that he had for years been expecting the coming of the Messiah. The tone of his language argues that. Therefore, when Philip came to him, and told him that he had found the Messiah, and indicated to him that he had better come and see for himself, he was willing at once to come, and without delay he came with the view of seeing for himself whether this Jesus of Nazareth was the promised one. He was not only candid, but he was interested. He was concerned about divine things, and in thorough earnest to know the truth in reference to them. So that he came to Jesus with solemn intent and eager desire. Oh, dear friends, if you came to hear the gospel, meaning business, we should expect to see more of you converted.

Observe that he was satisfied with one piece of clear evidence. That one item of evidence convinced him. The Lord Jesus said, "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee." Nobody knew that he had been under the fig tree, except the Lord who sees all things. No mortal living was aware of what Nathaniel had done, or thought, or purposed in that shady retreat. When Jesus, therefore, with a peculiar look, said "I saw thee," Nathaniel also saw Him that spake to him. "Godhead alone could speak thus," said he "there is the Spirit of God in that man. He knows the secret things of my life. He has revealed me to myself." "Rabbi," said he, "Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel." The conclusion was a sound one, but how speedily it was reached!

II. In the second place, here is one who Was Highly Commended.

The Lord Jesus owned his faith to be the true faith. He said, "Believest thou?" but He meant that He perceived that he truly believed. He owned that, though his faith was born then and there, it was the genuine article. Christ owns, as true faith, that faith which is not long in coming. Fear not, dear hearer, that if thou believest off-hand at this very moment thy faith will be any the less sincere and effectual.

Jesus did more than own it to be faith. He commended it as rarely excellent. He spoke as if He were astonished, and was so pleased with this ready faith, that He made a promise to Nathanael. Said He, "Thou shalt see greater things than these. If thou canst see so much in My one saying, that I saw thee under the fig tree, thou hast the kind of eyes that are fit to see great sights." He that will see shall see, but he that closes his eyes shall be blinded. Many are the people in this world who, if you show them the greatest marvel, do not wonder. They look at it, and see nothing. When you meet with such an unobservant person, you say to yourself, "I shall not show that man anything more. It does not pay to unveil rarities to him; he has no appreciation of them." But here is another who, when you show him some curio that you have in your house, is pleased with it and spies out at once the excellence and beauty of it. You say, "I have something more which I will gladly show you!" Oh, you that readily believe in Christ, you are the men to whom Christ will make known His secrets! Oh, my beloved hearers, may it be so with you! Because your faith so readily chimes in with what Christ reveals, may you have visions of God, and may none of you be so dull of heart that it shall be said, "He could not show them many mighty works because of their unbelief"!

III. I come, thirdly, to notice that here is a man who might possibly be troubled with A Peculiar Temptation.

People of this kind are subject to a special trial, with which I will now deal. In the church a considerable number of us, beginning with the pastor, came to Christ after an awful amount of conviction and despondency. We are none the better for this, but we are at least free from one particular temptation of the evil one. Oh, how I look back upon those times in which I felt my bondage, but could not attain to liberty—those days in which Christ was preached to me, but I could not hear Him, and I wandered up and down everywhere before I found peace! In this church, and in the office of the church among the deacons, there is especially one dear brother who sometimes can hardly understand me when I speak about the difficulties some have in coming to Christ, for he never experienced them. You all know him as one of the sweetest and best of men; but he came to Jesus Christ as a boy readily enough. He heard the gospel, and he believed it, and without any sort of terror he rejoiced in the Lord, and he continues to do so to this day. He is none the worse saint for this, but in some respects all the better.

Satan's Sophistry.

I know, however, what is the peculiar temptation of those who come so readily to Christ. The devil comes to them, and he says, "Now look you. You have read Mr. Bunyan's 'Grace Abounding,' have you not?" "Yes," says the good man. "Well," says he, "you never went through the like battle and struggle." "No, never did." "Then," says he, "you are not a child of God. You see, you were easily converted; there was no deep work in your soul

You came to Jesus Christ one sunshiny day, and you will go away from him one dark day. You are like the stony-ground hearer, the seed sprang up in you on a sudden, because there was no depth of earth, and you will soon die away when the sun is risen with fervent heat." Now, the next time the devil comes to any of you with that, I want you to talk to him, if he is worth it, for your own good. I want you to Quench that Fiery Dart.

Let me help you with a few considerations. Those you have read of, who came to Christ under so much terror, it may be that they had some other trouble at the same time, as well as the trouble of their conscience. Perhaps, in addition to being convinced of sin, they were suffering from poverty, or sickness, or dyspepsia, or remorse, or some other vexation of spirit. Discern carefully between spiritual trouble and temporal trouble. Temporal trouble may help to aggravate the spiritual, but it is not a necessary part of it, but very much the reverse. It may increase the apparent depth of the work of repentance, but it may detract from its real worth.

May it not also be that those who are so hard put to it in coming to Christ are without the helps that you have? Perhaps they cannot read. Possibly they have nobody to explain the Scriptures to them. They may be misled by their religious guides, and have no one to keep them out of the ditch. It may be that they are placed where they are rather hindered than helped; they have no Sunday-school teacher, no Christian friend to sympathize with them; and so they have a hard fight of it. Many a man who is wounded in battle is soon restored, because the surgeon takes him up as soon as the bullet lays him low; whereas the wound of another, who has to lie and bleed for hours, will prove far more serious. Do you not think that you ought to be very thankful that you have so many things to help you, and that thus you the more readily come to Christ?

Very possibly, too, many of those who had those terrors and horrors in coming to Christ, as I had myself, must lay them to the door of their unbelief. Had they believed, they might have had comfort long before; but they went to the law for comfort, or they looked to feelings instead of looking to Christ, and so they remained in darkness. Now, if you have the privilege of believing at once, as I pray you may have, should you not be glad of it, and, instead of envying those others, should you not thank God that you were brought to find Jesus Christ by so sunny and speedy a route.

There is a story that I have told you before, but I must tell it to you again, for I do not know anything better. A young man in Edinburgh went out, and he thought he would speak about Jesus to the first person that he met with. He met carrying a great load on her back, I cannot speak Scotch: I have not that useful acquirement; so I will put the conversation into English. He said to her, "Here you are with your burden." "Ay," said she. "Well," he said, "did you ever feel a spiritual burden?" "Ay," said she, "that I did, long ago, long ago, and I soon got rid of it; for I did not go the same way to work that John Bunyan's pilgrim did." "Oh," thought the young man, "I hoped that I had met with a Christian woman, but she must be a great heretic to talk in that way." "Now," said she, "Bunyan's Evangelist that he speaks of was not half a gospel preacher. He was one of the usual sort. He was not clear in the gospel; for when he met with the poor pilgrim, weary with his burden, he said to him, 'Do you see that wicket-gate?' 'No' said the man, 'I do not see it.' 'Do you see that light over the gate?' 'Well,' he said, 'I think I do.' 'Now,' he said, 'you run that way with your burden.' Why man," said she, "that was not the way to do at all. What had that man to do with the wicket-gate or with the light over it? The gospel does not say run to a gate or a light. What he should have said was, 'Do you see that cross? Look at that, and your burden will fall from your shoulder.' I looked straight away to the cross, and not to the wicket-gate; and at the cross I lost my burden.

A Musselburgh Fishwife

"Now," said she, "what did the pilgrim get by going round to the wicket-gate? He tumbled into the Slough of Despond, and was like to have lost his life there." "Ah!" said the young man, "did you never go through the Slough of Despond?" "Ah, yes!" she said, "I have been through that slough many a time; but, let me tell you, it is much better to go through it with your burden off than it is with your burden on." And so it is. I do not want any of you to attempt to flounder through the Slough of Despond with your burden on. I want you to have done with the Slough of Despond, and the wicket-gate, and all that bother, and just look to Christ alone; for salvation lies in a look at Him, and there is salvation in none other. Peace comes to sinners by nothing else but faith in Jesus. All else is vain, be it what it may. Frames and feelings, sinkings and risings, doings and frettings—all these may go for nothing. Believe in Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. This is God's short way to heaven, and blessed is he who knows how to take it.

A Desperate Man.

Again, the Lord may deal roughly with some because he means to qualify them for comforting despairing souls. He puts His servants through the furnace when He means them to work at pulling others out of the fire. He chastens them every morning because He means to make Barnabases of them, that they may be sons of consolation to souls in distress. I have been through the thick darkness at times for your sakes. If ever a soul was in a horror of great darkness, I was one day when I preached in this pulpit from "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" I could not understand why I felt in such an awful state as I did, till that evening there came into the vestry a man whose hair seemed to stand on end. He looked at me, and said, "I have never found a preacher that met my experience before." We sat down, and he told out his tale of woe. I rescued that man, by seasonable comfort, from being sent to a lunatic asylum, and perhaps from committing suicide; and then I said to the Lord my God, "Let me go through the fire again, if it will help me to meet the case of thy poor afflicted children." But you, my dear brother, my dear sister, may not be called thus to cut your way through the

Forrests of Sorrow

as the pioneer of others. You are not sent to be a guide to thousands, but quietly to pursue your own lowly way; and why do you want all this painful experience? You cannot make use of it; be thankful that you are spared the ordeal.

I was going to have another head, but I think that I will not; I will venture no further, but close with a word to sinners, although I have in truth been speaking to them all through.

Here me, thou that wouldst be saved. The way of salvation is by believing in the Lord Jesus Christ; that is, by trusting Him. There are two things I have to say to thee. First, God commands thee to believe in Jesus Christ: and, secondly, nothing thou canst do will please God so much as for thee at once to believe in His Only-begotten Son, whom He has set forth to be the propitiation for sin. Look at the sixth chapter of John's Gospel, and the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth verses. There you have it. "Then said they unto him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?" They meant, "What are the best works, the works most pleasing to God?" "Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." If you could build a row of alms-houses, or endow a church, or pay the salaries of a hundred missionaries, it would not half so well please God as for you to believe on His Son Jesus Christ.

Thou poor guilty man, thou poor guilty woman, humble, unknown, obscure, a nobody God bids thee trust His Son, and assures thee that this will please Him more than all else thou canst do! Wilt thou not do it? Oh, end your ramblings; end your strivings; end your seekings. Come and trust my Lord Jesus, and thou shalt receive eternal life. Your frettings, and your hopings, and your doubtings, your comings, and your goings—end them all by simply trusting Jesus, and it is finished: thou art saved from wrath, and the life of holiness has begun in thee. Now shalt thou live after a nobler sort. Now shalt thou be filled with good works to the praise of His glory, seeing thou art no more trusting in them. I beseech thee trust in the Lord Jesus Christ alone, and thou shalt receive power to become a child of God. Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

LOST IN THE MOUNTAINS.*

"OUR next stage," says Dr. Grant, "was over the mountain pass of Dohar, the most difficult between Constantinople and Persia. The recollection of what Messrs. Smith and Dwight experienced in their passage over this mountain, together with the fact that three natives had perished in the snow not long before, prepared me to expect a toilsome and difficult ride. But delay was not likely to make any improvement for many days to come; and moreover a storm of rain had set in on the plain, which would soon quite obstruct the road, as the horses would sink almost to their stomachs at every step. As we began to ascend the mountain we found the rain changed to snow, and accompanied by a strong wind, which soon increased to a gale. When about two-thirds of the way up the mountain, the guide, who professed to be well acquainted with the road, led us into such deep snows that our hardy horses were unable to proceed, and it became evident that we had wandered from the path. After much difficulty we succeeded in finding it, but it was soon lost again; and the guide, after a fruitless search, declared it impossible to proceed. To turn back was nearly as hopeless, as the snow had filled our tracks as soon as they were made, and the wind would then be in our faces. Under these circumstances I felt that our hope was in God alone; but with His assurance that He would direct the path of those who acknowledge Him in all their ways, I felt that He would order all for the best, though in what manner or to what end I could not foresee. Just then, as unexpected as if an angel had descended from heaven, four hardy mountaineers came tramping over the snow from the opposite side of the mountain. With much difficulty we prevailed on one of them to act as our guide; and by breaking down the high drifts of snow with our feet, and leading our horses where we could not ride, we at length succeeded in passing the mountains."

A Providential Ride.

Dr. Grant was suffering from malarial fever during his stay at Mardin, in Eastern Turkey, and seemed likely to die. Skilful treatment and careful nursing, however, saved his life, and when he became convalescent, he was persuaded by Mr. Homes to go out one morning for a ride. In their absence the Koords mutinied and slew the Governor and several others of the local authorities, massacred some of the native Christians, and then proceeded to the residence of the missionaries bent on murdering them.

* From "Light in Darkness," by Rev. J. E. Godbey, D. D., and A. H. Godbey, A. M. A valuable and comprehensive survey of mission work in heathen lands, from the organization of the missionary societies to the present time, with numerous illustrations; 768 pages. Sold by subscription only. Published by Holloway & Company, St. Louis and San Francisco.

W. H. Howland, Esq., Ex-Mayor of Toronto.

Robert Moffat's Heroic Answer to the African Chief. (See page 325.)

When Dr. Grant and Mr. Homes returned to the city after their ride, they found the gates closed to prevent the escape or rescue of the intended victims, especially of themselves, who were supposed by the Koords to be somewhere within the walls. Hearing the fearful uproar, and guessing the cause, they went to a Syrian convent a few miles from the city, and were hospitably received by the inmates until they could find a place of safety.

W. H. HOWLAND, ESQ.

(See Portrait.)

THE energetic and public spirited gentleman whose portrait appears on this page is one of those rare examples of high Christian principles united with vigorous administrative capacity in municipal life. Mr. Howland has twice occupied the mayoral chair of Toronto, and in both cases his administration has been a public benefit to the city. As an earnest Christian, a strong temperance advocate and a munificent philanthropist he has won an enviable position in the esteem of his fellow citizens.

William H. Howland was born at Lambton Mills, in the County of York, Ontario, in 1844, and is therefore now forty-four years old. His father, Sir Wm. P. Howland, was first Lieutenant-Governor of the new Province of Ontario, when the Dominion was formed.

In 1860, when Sir W. P. Howland entered public life, his son, who was then sixteen, left school to take his father's place in the large business institution of which that gentleman was head. The steady and persevering lad at once found himself at home in his new sphere of life, and speedily developed business traits and talents that have ever since kept him a successful member of the mercantile community.

Mr. Howland was first led to seriously think of the things of God in 1876. Up to that time he had been like most young men moving in the higher circles of society, a lover of pleasure. In that year he visited England, and being invited to spend a few days at the residence of a friend, he complied. After dinner on the first day of his visit, on retiring to his room his eyes were directed to a Scripture text worked by one of the ladies of the house, and placed over a mirror. The text was "Fear not, I have redeemed thee; thou art Mine." The Holy Spirit carried home the silent message, and the young man was led to think, "Fear—What have I to fear? Whom have I to fear?" These were the changes which kept ringing through the chambers of his heart. Get rid of that text he could not. It was a nail fastened in a sure place by the Master of Assemblies. Jesus Christ was accepted, and the young convert stepped from the thought of "fear" to that of "love."

On his return to Canada, he found the country aroused upon the great question of Intemperance, and into this great movement he threw his whole energies. He at once became a total abstainer, and from that day Canada has not known a more courageous advocate of the principles of Total Abstinence. Mr. Howland is a man of action. He must work, and when as an unconverted man he was ever to be found meeting his share of the demands made on him by fashionable society, so now as a child of God he promptly entered into Christian activity. His first Christian effort was in connection with Hospital work, which came in his way as a member of the Trust Board of the Hospital, of which he subsequently became chairman. His duties in that office were not in his opinion confined to mere administration, but included earnest effort for the spiritual welfare of the patients. In his church work he was equally energetic, and his Bible-class soon became one of the largest in the city. Its numbers, indeed, increased so rapidly that it was deemed advisable to organize it on an independent, undenominational basis and make it an agency for mission work. A Hall was secured and fitted up, and the class has since become a prominent feature in the Christian work of the city. From it really sprang the "Toronto Mission Union," an organization which has accomplished untold good among the poor of Toronto.

While working in those and many similar efforts for the salvation of souls and the elevation of his fellows, there came in 1886 a call from his fellow-citizens to offer himself for election to the office of chief magistrate of the chief city of the Dominion. Many hours were spent in prayer before he gave his consent. By a vote previously unparalleled in the history of the city, he was elected; and when, at the end of his first term of office, he was requested to offer himself for another term, his opponent being backed by all the money which the liquor interests could supply, the result was Mr. Howland's re-election by a majority far exceeding that of the previous year. To the great regret of the citizens, he declined a re-election in 1888, owing to the claims pressing upon him as a son, for his father, through ill-health, felt unable to care for the interests of the large and growing business carried on by the firm.

A YOUNG LAWYER'S DECISION.

(See Illustration on page 333.)

"WHERE can Frank be?" said the elder of two ladies—mother and daughter—as they looked at the clock on the mantel-piece of a luxuriously furnished room where the morning me was spread. "He has not been in all night. never knew him stay out before."

Mrs. Belton was not kept long in suspen for as she spoke a ring at the bell was hear and in a few minutes a stalwart young man five and twenty years entered the room, a affectionately saluted his widowed mother a his sister.

"I am very glad you have come, Frank; I w worrying about you dreadfully," said t mother. "Where have you been all night?"

There was an unwonted pallor on the you man's face and a gravity in his manner that w not habitual with him, which both ladies n ticed. He leaned heavily on the table as answered in solemn tones: "Mother, Ernest dead. I have just come from his bedside."

"Poor fellow," said Alice; "how very sa Such a promising young man, and so wealth too. It must be a terrible blow to his fathe All his hopes were centred in his heir."

"Yes," said Frank Belton, "and they a shattered now. The poor man is almost besi himself with grief, and I think the mother worse still. She is a good Christian woma but it will take some time to reconcile her this loss."

"I do not doubt that," said Mrs. Belto looking fondly at the speaker, the thought ev dently crossing her mind of what her own fee ings would be if she were to lose her son. can sympathize with her sincerely, though knew little of him. It is a melancholy end so much anticipation; but I should not be su prised if his death improved your prospect Frank. I know it appears selfish to say so, b it is not really selfish, for I wish with all m heart the young man had lived. It is of no u wishing in such matters, and it does seem like that his father's firm will offer you a partnersh instead of a salary now."

"Ah, mother," Frank answered, "you a always thinking of me, but I am afraid you w be disappointed. Mr. Meritt will offer me th partnership, I believe; but I shall not accept i I shall never be a lawyer now."

"Not accept it! Never be a lawyer!" repea ed Mrs. Belton, rising in astonishment an clasping her hands to keep down her excit ment. "What can you mean, Frank?"

"Simply, mother, that grand as the profe sion is, I cannot follow it. I must preach th Gospel. It is my duty, and I dare not trifle wit it. I never saw it clearly until now."

Mrs. Belton stood aghast. She was speech less for a moment, and stood looking reproach fully at her son. At last she said: "Frank re you lost your senses? Do i mean that you will give up untarily a prospect that does come to one man in a thousd? With your talents and h a position at your age there no office beyond your reach.

u might sit in the Senate yet, even become President, bee you die. Do you know what i are giving up to be a clergy-n, with a small salary, and t precarious?"

"Yes, mother," he said, "I ve counted the cost; I had a g talk with Ernest last night.
u know we have been very imate friends, almost like others, and have often talked gether of our brilliant future, ough not so much lately, since knew what religion really ant. But last night Ernest nted to see me principally on t matter. He wanted to tell that, standing, as he did, on brink of the grave, the bril-t career we had sketched ether had lost all its roseate
. He said he could see noth-satisfactory in it at all, and uld not follow it if he were recover. He begged me with dying breath to give my life olly to God's service, and, ther, with God's help I will it."

"Frank, you astonish me,"
s. Belton said: "I thought i had too much manliness to on the impulse of a moment.
is feeling will pass away, and n you will regret this insane p."

"No, mother, never, God help-me. It is not the impulse of moment; I have often medied this course. Ernest's apl only confirms me."

His sister Alice had sat looking at Frank riously while this dialogue was going on; she w rose, and throwing her arms around his ck kissed him, and told him she would ever y that God would give him strength to keep resolution. "You are right, Frank," she said;
is a far nobler thing you do than anything
e you could have done. May God bless you."

The worldly mother, thus deserted by the ly ally who could have inflenced her son, sat wn in despair, weeping tears of disappoint-nt. But the time came when she too rejoiced Frank's decision, and was content when she w him a useful and successful minister of the spel, even though she knew his name would ver become famous, nor his wealth and station society attain the eminence she had hoped for.

The Young Lawyer Declares His Resolution. (See page 332.)

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE.

A NEW SERIAL STORY.

By Rev. L. S. Keyser.

A Mind Disquieted.

IT is only when middle age is reached, and rhaps not quite fully until near the close of
, that the epochs of a career can be identified d their momentous nature appreciated. Then is easy to lay the finger on the day, even the ur, when, standing at the parting of the ways, choice was made which determined all the
ure. Or it may be that no choice was made, t some influence entered into the stream of turning it imperceptibly into a channel herto unknown, rendering its onward course ooth and tranquil, or troubled and tumultu-
s. Most frequently that influence comes by sociation with some other life in friendship or love. It may come gradually, or it may come ddenly without warning or premonition, but comes, and life is not the thing after its ad-nt that it was before. Such an epoch arrived the lives of two young men, one lovely morning in May, as they strolled through a country clad in all the glories of luxuriant verdure.

"I want to tell you, Hadley," said one of them, "about a lecture I heard a few weeks ago. It was a revelation to me. It threw a new light on subjects that I have been familiar with from infancy, but never looked at from the lecturer's standpoint. I daresay it will be new to you too."

"There is nothing new under the sun, George," returned the other." We have Biblical authority for that fact. Still, I am sufficiently conscious of my own ignorance to be aware that there are many old things, and especially old ideas, that I should think new. Anyway, whether your light is new or old it will be welcome if it is useful, so I shall be glad to get your account of it."

"I believe I could almost reproduce the lecture verbatim if I had time," said the one addressed as George," for it has made an indelible impression on my mind. It was so striking, so piquant, so unique, and the lecturer's bold, forcible style was so convincing, that every sentence seems to be burned into my brain. But, of course, I shall not attempt to rehearse the whole. A few of the salient points will be enough."

"But had you not better tell me first what was the theme of the address?"

"The subject was—'Logic versus Christianity.'"

"Ah! it was an infidel lecture, was it?" said Hadley, with a gesture of impatience. "I do not think that I care to hear about harangues of that character. The less attention we pay to discussions on anti-religious themes the better, I'm inclined to think."

"Why, Hadley, you are not so narrow as that, are you?" returned George, almost scornfully. "That is precisely what the lecturer told us—that the devotees of Christianity are prejudiced, mentally-contracted and bigoted, and do not want information; that they are opposed to free discussion, because they fear that their faith in their cherished dogmas might be disturbed. Surely you and I, Hadley, who are seeking to extend the horizon of our knowledge, ought to welcome light from every source. Truth can be attained only by free, untrammeled investigation and by keeping the mind in a receptive attitude. Come, friend Hadley, we must not be so dense and narrow-sphered as the people around us. I thought that you, at least, had made sufficient progress on the highway of knowledge to get beyond believing blindly in what may prove to be effete traditions."

The young man called Hadley looked up at his companion with an eye that flashed momentarily with anger and wounded vanity; for he had just reached that degree of mental culture, when a precocious youth cannot brook a reflection on his intellectual acquirements, and therefore his friend's suggestion that he shrank from investigation through fear or prejudice piqued his pride of intellect and was decidedly humbling to his self-esteem, especially as he was, though not a professing Christian, a believer in the Divine origin of the Scriptures. By dint of considerable effort he succeeded in getting his ruffled feelings partially under control before he spoke.

"I wish you to understand, George," he said, presently, "that I am not biassed on the subject of religion, but am open to conviction. Let us sit down here on the hill-top, and with that panorama before us"—pointing toward the broad valley below them, bounded by sloping hills on each side—"we shall be in a good position to examine an argument to prove that all this glorious beauty came into existence without a God. I will personate the chairman and you the infidel acrobat and gymnast. I now call on Mr. George Tomlinson Dane to favor us with an epitome of a grandiloquent disquisition."

"Dick Swiveller redidivus," laughed George.

The young men were warm friends, having many traits of character in common. Hadley C. Madelling had from early youth manifested a more than ordinary aptitude for learning, and was ambitious to secure an education. At the time of which we speak, he was attending a preparatory school, called "The Academy," in the village of Banesville, near his home, and in another year he would be fitted for college. Which of the institutions of learning in his own State or those adjacent he would make his Alma Mater he had not as yet fully determined.

The evolution of his spiritual life up to this time demands a brief notice. He had been reared by pious parents in the tenets of the Christian religion, and until the period of our meeting him he had never entertained any doubts as to the divine authority of the Bible. It is true, he had never experienced a revolution of character through the converting power of Christianity, nor had he made a public profession of religion; yet he had accepted intellectually the faith of his father and mother as a matter of course. Nothing in his history had occurred to suggest doubt. Indeed, so busy had he been in the pursuit of his technical studies that he had bestowed very little attention upon the subject of religion, scarcely enough to lead him into scepticism.

Like others reared in Christian households, he had been frequently importuned by his parents to yield himself to Christ, but owing to that perversity of the human heart, so familiar to all careful students of man's natural state, he had persistently disregarded these earnest admonitions, although more than once he had to fight against the convictions of conscience. And having steeled himself against the counsellings of his friends and his better nature, he had just arrived at that period of life and that stage of mental attainment when he might easily be swayed one way or the other, according to the hands into which he fell.

It was at this critical time of his moral and spiritual development that his intimate friend, George Dane, heard the cavilling lecturer against the Christian religion who had stopped in his peregrinations at a neighboring town, and Dane had listened to him with the rapt enthusiasum peculiar to young persons.

Dane, like Hadley, was preparing for college. The homes of the young men were about three miles apart, so that they were not regarded as belonging to precisely the same neigborhood; yet on account of their community of ambition and employment, a warm friendship had sprung up between them, which frequently brought them into each other's society. George was also a student of remarkable natural gifts. In the country school he had outstripped all competitors, and had gone far beyond his teachers, and at the early age of sixteen he had himself undertaken a school, carrying it through with gratifying success. The country could not boast of a more ready debater or a more eloquent public speaker than George Dane, among all its young knights of the school-room. He would traverse the country for miles to attend a lyceum, if there was any prospect of an exciting intellectual tournament.

Religiously, the little experience he had had was unfortunate. In a time of religious awakening while he was quite young, he had, without any very defined ideas of his undertaking, united with the church, in company with a number of his associates; but not finding his experience satisfactory, and lacking perhaps in moral earnestness, he had finally abandoned the church; for which act of disloyalty he had been "disciplined" by the official board and lectured with a little want of tact by the minister. These circumstances had stirred not a little hostility in him toward churches and religion itself. Howbeit, no well-defined scepticism had taken possession of his mind until he heard the aforesaid lecture. That was one of the epochal events in his religious history.

It must not be supposed that these neoplastic sceptics were capable as yet of profound philosophic thought or research. Metaphysics was still a terra incognito to them, nor would they have been able to comprehend a scholarly work on speculative theology, even if they had had access to one. They were just at the age when young students are most likely to be impressed and captivated by the scepticism of the lower type intellectually, with its dashing style, its gorgeous diction, its scurrilous mode of assault and its proneness to ridicule all sacred institutions. More than one popular representative of this grade of infidelity will be thought of in this connection. Unfortunately many talented young persons during the formative period of their lives fall into the hands of these superficial carpers at the Christian religion, and thenceforward the arid life of infidelity or agnosticism begins with them.

A popular writer of the day speaks as follows of the period of life now under consideration: "I call it the period of transition. Every young person, especially if engaged in reading and study, comes to a time when the powers of reason are growing fast, and habits of independent thought begin to start inquiry. The growing mind asks a reason for things." If at "this transition state between the intuitive and rational periods" of the young investigator's development, he is not firmly grounded in the faith, "he begins to say of one thing after another which he may have been taught, 'That is not true; I can no longer believe it.' He begins to untie from one stake, but has no other to tie to, and so he drifts away from all fastenings into a general doubt, if not denial, of all truth. His faith suffers wreck." It may be added, that this is especially true if the infidel tracts that are scattered broadcast over the country happen to fall into the hands of the neophyte in unbelief.

It was a radiant morning when the colloquy just described took place. From their elevated point of observation the young men looked below them into a deep hollow, filled with willows and dense underbrush, which formed the wedge-like beginning of the valley that widened out into broad upland fields and green meadows farther away, while to the right and left the ridge-like hills towered up to a considerable altitude. The scene, stretched out in perspective before them, was an enchanting one. Melodious sounds also added to the gay joyfulness of the day. All about them could be heard the lyrical trills of the birds. Upon the topmost twig of a willow-tree the robin heaved his red bosom in tuneful vocalization. In the bushes below, the brown-thrush and the cat-bird were vying with each other in their efforts at melodious mockery. A cardinal grossbeak interlarded the more continuous music with an occasional outburst of clear, resonant notes, while at frequent intervals a little goldfinch shot through the air in an irregular course, like a flake of gold from the sun, now falling, now rising in graceful arcs, with a burst of fine, quickly repeated notes at every downward movement.

> "It was a joy to watch the gleam
> Of tender sky and tinted leaf;
> The wind scarce stirred the placid stream—
> It was a day for sweet belief."

But the minds of the young men were not in harmony with the sweet aspects of nature. It was strange that on a morning like this they should start out on the weary, arid, unsatisfactory pilgrimage of doubt, with its shadowless stretch of barren wastes. Nature herself might have admonished them, had they listened to her voice, that the way of trust and faith in God was the way of mental tranquillity. It must be remembered, however, that the young intellectual adventurers were not aware of the sterility into which they were about to plunge. For one of them, at least, no mirage of the desert, no promised lands, ever appeared more green and refreshing to the weary traveller than the land of "independent research" appears to him.

"As I said," began George Dane, "I shall rehearse only the most telling points of the lecturer. Here is the one that occurs first to my mind. The Bible, said the speaker, tells us that all things are possible with God. That is not a true statement. It is not in accordance with the constitution of things. God cannot do all things. There are natural impossibilities which can never be made possible. For instance it is impossible to place two hills near to gether without having a valley between, or to turn a grindstone two ways at once."

"Shades of Chesterfield!" exclaimed Hadley, nonplussed for a moment, "who would have thought of such absurdities? But what point did he make against the Bible by that poor witticism?"

"Do you not see? He meant to show that the Bible is inaccurate and unscientific in its statements. A clear and exact writer would have said, 'All things that are possible in the nature of things, are possible with God, if there is a God.' The evident conclusion is this: If the Bible speaks so loosely, so unphilosophically, of one matter touching ultimate principles, can we repose confidence in any of its ipse dixits, and above all, can we believe it to be an inspired and infallible book? Mistaken in one point, may it not be mistaken in many others? I tell you, Hadley, as the speaker put these questions, in clarion tones and with flashing eyes, his argument seemed conclusive."

"I never thought—" began Hadley. But he was soon lost in reflection. His eye was be upon the valley before him, but so preoccupi was his mind, that he only gazed into vacan A terrible tremor of uneasiness thrilled throu his being; it seemed as if something had giv way, as if the foundations of a building h been partially undermined and the structi were trembling, tottering, poised on the uns ble air.

"Ah! there are many things of which y and I have never thought," said George, wh he noted his friend's look of perplexity. "W you hear more?"

"Yes; let us have the facts," assented Ha ley, becoming more willing to listen now th at the beginning of their dialogue.

"At one point in his lecture," resumed Geor "the speaker dilated on the miracles of t Bible. 'A wonderful book for prodigies!' said. Now, these supernatural occurrences a contrary to all experience. We never witn now-a-days anything like the dividing of t Red Sea; ships and boats must be used in mo ern times for transporting armies across lar bodies of water. Neither are warriors at prese able to blow down the fortifications of th enemies with horns and trumpets, as it is sa was done with the walls of Jericho. We a never permitted to witness the spectacle of fi descending miraculously from heaven in answ to a modern Elijah's prayer. Then the lectur became daring. 'If you believe in the God of t Bible,' he said, 'come out here on the rostru and pray that fire may be sent down into th hall to devour the enemies of Jehovah! Ever thing occurs according to the sway of inexo able law. The rain descends, the winds blo the waves dash, men are born, they survive ar perish—all things take place in accordance wi the unchanging laws of nature, without th intervention of a supernatural agency. If m acles were necessary in Scriptural times bolster up a faltering faith, they are necessa now, for there is as much doubt now as ever the world's history.'

And then the lecturer lifted his hands in mo supplication to heaven and said, 'Lord, give one miracle to-night, just one little miracle, ar it will accomplish more good than all the preac ers and Bibles in Christendom!' He waited moment, as if to see if the daring prayer wou be answered. I confess that his words and the trical attitude made my blood curdle."

A look of pain crossed Hadley's face as h listened to the recital "That was horrib sacrilegious," he said, with a shudder.

(To be Continued.)

JESUS CRUCIFIED.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for June 3, Matt. 27: 33-53. Golde Text Phil. 2: 8.

The Discussion of Christ's Enemies—The Awf Remorse of Judas—What He had to See to Jesus Lineally King of the Jews—Arraigned b fore Pilate—His Majestic Silence—The High Indictment as Man's Substitute—Pilate's R luctance to Sentence a Law-Abiding Man—H Futile Expedient—A Pertinent Momento Question—The Great Scapegoat—The Crowd o Calvary—Mocking the Dying Saviour—The Ap palling Darkness—Without God in Death—Th Last Cry.

THE morning broke upon Jerusalem, bu neither Jesus nor His enemies had slep Strange that His disciples could sleep in th Garden while His enemies were so awake strange that to this day, while the enemies o God's truth are so on the alert, the disciples o Christ are so asleep! Which of us is awake a we should be awake to the danger of perishin millions, at home and abroad? Who is awak to the deadening encroachments of Rome i our schools and churches? Who is alive to ou national responsibility regarding India and th drink traffic? China and the opium? Tha morning opened upon a council of men whos souls were in danger of eternal death, and th subject they discussed was how to put Jesu Christ, the Son of God, who alone could sav em, to death! In order to do this, they must liver Him to Pontius Pilate, the Roman vernor. It was just at this time that Judas scovered his fatal, fearful mistake, and in his ter remorse, he who might have gone to Jesus ce, went to the chief priests, threw down the irty pieces of silver, the price of Jesus, the ual price of a slave, "a goodly price that I was ued of them" (Zec. 11 : 13), and cried, "I have ned, in that I have betrayed the innocent ood," but the unhappy man made his confession man, not to God, and he was met with the olent, heartless rejoinder, "What is that to us?

"See Thou to That."

Is there one reading these pages who runs e awful risk of passing day after day with all e burden, guilt and stain of his life's sins, un-ansed and unforgiven, on his own soul? Jesus ready now to see to that, and to take the ole responsibility upon Himself. He offers to swer for you. But if, like Judas, you leave it l it is too late, then the very enemy of your ul, who has led you into sin, will say to you, he taught the chief priests to say unto Judas, What is that to us? See thou to that." Could iests, religious leaders, be so indifferent to a ul broken with remorse? Yes; and God says them, "The diseased have ye not strength-ed, neither have ye healed that which was k, neither have ye bound up that which was oken, neither have ye brought again that ich was driven away, neither have ye sought at which was lost." (Ezek. 34 : 4.)

Jesus stood before the Governor, He who is "from the beginning," who was "with God," d "was God," from all eternity, stood be-re the Roman ruler of the country! He who knew no sin," "neither was guile found in His outh," stood there accused before a sinner! ilate asked Him, "Art Thou the King of the ws?" And Jesus said unto Him, "Thou say-t." The Jews had but to search the pedi-ees to find that He was lineally descended n David, and was therefore by birth the ng of the Jews. But they wanted no such ng, they sought the greatness of this world; king who received not honor from man ould not suit them. The chief priests and ders were the chief accusers of Jesus! They ho of all men should have received, and made im known were loud in their accusations gainst Him! Why was this? Their religion id degenerated into a mere form, and the ower and works of Jesus was such a reflection their powerlessness that it found them out be mere hypocrites, if He were really proved be the Son of God, and thus their religious putation hung on the hope that they might ove Jesus to be an impostor. They accused im of many things, but as He was speechless fore the chief priests, so was He also before ilate, and Herod too. (Luke 23 : 8, 9.) Jesus as not there to carry out His own cause, but ie cause of lost undone sinners. Pilate marv-led at His silence, for he could not tell all that as taking place in that hour, how that Man ho stood dumb before him, was arraigned at ie same moment before the bar of God as ho of His own free will and by His own divine uthority, included in Himself all men of all ations, and all generations. And there, as He ood silent, the accumulated history of the sin f man came up, and dark, mighty waves of ccusation rolled over Him, until in spirit He ried, "All thy waves and thy billows are gone ver me (Ps. 42 : 7). Thou hast made the ini-uities of us all to meet on Him" (Isa. 53 : 6 iargin). He adopted, He the great sin offer-ng, all the sins of the world, and His pure and ensitive spirit, which could not respond to a ingle breath of sin, was dumb before man and umb before God. God keep us from making ght of sin which cost Jesus so much! "Fools ake a mock at sin" (Pro. 14 : 9).

The Man

Pilate was not envious of Jesus; He had lways been subordinate to the laws of the ountry, and had in no way assumed other than piritual authority, and authority over disease and death; He neither sought money, land nor honor; and Pilate was deeply impressed by what He saw and heard of Jesus. He was against Him. He thought of an expedient. It was the custom at the feast to release one prisoner who should be the choice of the people. There was in custody at this time, a notorious man who had been the dread of many, a murderer and disturber of the peace. Pilate gave a choice to the people whether he should release Barabbas or Jesus, the murderer or the Prince of Life. There were many living in Jerusalem who had personally benefited by the ministry of Jesus; only three days ago the blind and the lame had been healed in the temple (Matt. 21 : 14). Surely the people would choose the great Healer! But the chief priests were exerting all their influence and using their strongest arguments to get the people on their side, and they choose Barabbas. Pilate was sorely perplexed; his wife had sent warning him not to condemn Jesus, but he plainly saw that if he did the right thing and acquitted Jesus, he should lose his popularity and probably his office. "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" A strange question for a judge to ask of the people; but it is a question which every man must answer. Reader, have you answered it! Pilate knew that Jesus was innocent, but he thought he would shift the responsibility so he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just Person; see ye to it." Was he innocent? When we say so often, "He suffered under Pontius Pilate," do we count him innocent? The people replied in their rash fanaticism, "His blood be on us and on our children." "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." (Matt. 12: 37.) In the scattered, persecuted, despised race of Jews, we see how this fearful challenge has been accepted of God.

Unwilling to Pronounce Sentence

Then Barrabas was released, and Jesus was delivered to be crucified. Man had his choice. but he did not do as he chose with Jesus. God had measured the cup He was to drink.

All Had Been Foretold.

Pilate, his conscience all uneasy, scourged Jesus, but he could have had no power at all against Him, except it had been given him from above (John 14 : 11.) "I gave My back to the smiters, and My cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not My face from shame and spitting" (Isa. 50 : 6.) Of His own free will, our most loving Lord yielded Himself to be mocked, and scourged, and spit upon, that all the world might know how hateful sin is in the eyes of a holy God. But all this contumely from man was little in comparison with the awful shadow which He was entering when the Father's wrath came upon Him as the one eternal Scapegoat. Aaron, on the great day of atonement, laid both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confessed "over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat," and then sent him "away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness." And the goat bore upon him all their iniquities, unto a land not inhabited (Lev. 16 : 21, 22.) And just so, sin after sin of man was transferred to Jesus, who His own self bore our sins in His own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness. (1 Pet. 2 : 24.) The Messianic Psalms, especially Ps. 22 : 35-69, express much of the agony of Jesus, when sin, sickness, sorrow, lay there upon Him for our sakes.

Scarcely was the cross raised with its wondrous burden, than the unconscious and mercenary soldiers claimed their perquisites in the clothing of Jesus, parting His garments and casting lots upon His vesture, as had been foretold. (Ps. 22 : 18.) Jesus was the centre of all eyes: "sitting down, they watched Him there." Yet how little of what really was taking place did any of them see! Two thieves were crucified with Him, but again it was to fulfil the Scripture, "And He was numbered with the transgressors." (Isa. 55 : 12.) Satan was abroad among the crowd, and who form the largest part of every crowd, eagerly took their cue from the chief priests, and saw that it was "the thing" to revile Jesus. Oh, how unlike His own spirit, His wonderful compassion! He lifts up the fallen and seeks the lost. The cry that ran through the crowd was, "Thou that destroyeth the temple and buildest it in three days, save Thyself! If Thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross!" The chief priests, forgetting their own dignity in their mad and bitter hatred of Jesus, added, "He saved others (they would not deny that), Himself He cannot save. If He be the King of Israel, let Him now come down from the cross, and we will believe Him." "Himself He cannot save!" No, the whole spirit and mission of Jesus ran counter to self-saving; He gave Himself, He saved others. Had He saved Himself at that hour, and accepted the impious challenge of these so-called spiritual guides, a world's salvation would have been lost! He could have caused the earth to open and swallow them up, like Korah, Dathan and Abiram, but "the Son of Man was not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them (Luke 9, 56), and instead, He looked up to His Father before His communion with Him was shut out by the intense blackness of man's sin, and prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Torn with intense agony, He yet would remember others, and commended His mother and his beloved disciples to each other's care. After three long hours—how long to Him we know not, for a thousand years to Him may be as one day (II Peter 3 : 8)—the eyes which looked on in vulgar curiosity were to be disappointed. No earthly eye might see Jesus die. "From the sixth hour there was darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour." Darkness stills the ignorant, and doubtless the scoffing jests grew fewer and fewer, and one and another of the gazers went away. But the climax came at last. "About the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" He must taste as man even that awful bitterness, that blackness of hell itself,

The Roughs and Idlers,

To be Without God!

One more cry, and the soul of the Redeemer left His lacerated body and broken heart until, three days later, he claimed them from the grave! His murderers were forced to hear the last cry, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit," and around the cross all was still. But away on Mount Moriah the same hand which received His spirit rent the veil of the temple from the top to the bottom, shook the earth, and it quaked, rent the rocks, and broke open the sepulchres of many of the saints. Two hearts were rent, if not more; one thief passed into Paradise quickly after his Lord, and the centurion, a heathen Roman, put the Jews and the disciples to shame by saying, "Truly, this was the Son of God!" Thus Jesus died, and thus He died for me.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for May:

Prophetic Events between 1888 and 1901. By Mr. W. Birch.

Coming of the Son of Man. By Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D. D.

The Development of Prophecy. By Rev. N. West.

Jerusalem "A Burdensome Stone. By Rev. A. C. Tris. Jewish Wailing.

The Historical and Futurist interpretations of Unfulfilled Prophecy—How Far Agreed. By Rev. W. Frith.

The Plain of Jezreel—Past and Future. By Rev. E. J. Hytche.

The Sudden Rise and Downfall of the Antichrist. By Mr W. Birch.

The Doctrine of the 1,000 Years Millennium. By Rev. S. R. Maitland, D. D.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes containing the monthly numbers for 1884 and 1883 may be had; price $1.]

GOD'S BLESSINGS.

LILLA M. ALEXANDER.

Like the apple blooms at Springtime,
By the gentle breezes fanned,
They are falling all about us,
Scattered from His bounteous hand;
Yet how carelessly we gather,
All the gifts so freely strewn,
Often envying another,
Yet ungrateful for our own.

How we try His love and patience,
By complaining o'er our lot;
How we murmur and we question,
While our mercies are forgot;
How we turn away from Jesus,
And forget He bore the cross,
While we number every trial,
And repine at every loss;—

How we walk amid the shadows,
When the sun is shining bright,
How we weep amid the darkness,
Though He calls us to the light;—
How we grieve Him, and we wound Him,
By ungrateful words and ways,
When our hearts should brim with gladness,
And our lips be filled with praise.

Oh! the love must be exhaustless,
That can bear with us like this,
And still count us as His children,
Heirs of Heaven and endless bliss.
But I think that when the portals,
On their golden hinges swing,
And we stand redeemed forever,
In the presence of our King,

And revealed in all its fulness,
Is His wondrous love and grace,
That with shame we shall remember,
As we gaze upon His face,
How we went our way unmindful,
Of the debt of love we owed,
For the constant daily blessings,
And the hand bestowed.

J. E. [illegible], Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York will [illegible] above poem in leaflet form at twenty-[illegible] per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

A Great Offer.

In another part of this paper will be found the advertisement of a prominent Soap Manufacturing Firm of Buffalo. The offer is a peculiar one from the fact that this firm will send to any subscriber of this paper who will send their address on a postal card, a case of assorted Family and Toilet Soap on 30 days' trial. The Soap is probably as fine as can be made; but yet in addition there will be packed in each case, for a limited time [illegible] presents, premiums, extras, etc., for which no charge is made. You cannot well afford to miss this bargain, so send your address at once to J. D. Larkin & Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

CHAUTAUQUA 1888.

A DELIGHTFUL RESORT.
A PLACE OF INSPIRATION.
NEW DEPARTMENT.

July 5-26.—School of English Bible. Under able instructors (Drs. W. R. Harper, J. A. Brandus, Marcus D. Buel, George S. Burroughs, etc.) the Bible will be studied like any other classic, from an historical and scientific standpoint. The spiritual side will not be neglected. Frequent Conferences for Discussion, Recreation, Outdoor Sports and Entertainments.

Aug. 8-21.—Sunday-School Normal Work. Drs. A. E. Dunning and J. L. Hurlbut, Mrs. W. F. Crafts. Thorough drill every day in the class-room. Regular courses of study (beginning and advanced), final examinations and conferring of Diplomas.

LANGUAGE SCHOOLS MOST COMPLETE IN THE WORLD. Brilliant General Programme; Lectures, Concerts and Entertainments. PROMINENT SPEAKERS.

A SUMMER AT CHAUTAUQUA IS A PRICELESS PRIVILEGE. Good board at low rates. Tuition fees small. Rail road fares reduced. For circulars and full particulars address W. A. DUNCAN, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR MY STORY OF THE WAR
By Mary A. Livermore

Her own narrative of "Four Years' Personal Experience as Field and Hospital Nurse." It portrays the Woman's or "Heavenly" side of the War, its Lights and Shadows "as a woman saw them." Bright, Pure, and Good, full of "laughter and tears" of thrilling interest and touching pathos, it sells at sight to all. Splendid Steel-Plates, and famous old Battle-Flags richly colored in exact fac-simile. The "booming" book for Men and Women Agents. $1 00 to $200 a month made. Distance no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

A WIFE'S OPPORTUNITY?

to obtain a HANDSOME GIFT the retail value of which is $8.30. Read OUR OFFER: If you will mail us your name and address on a postal card we will send you one case of Sweet Home Soap containing all the articles as named in following list, freight prepaid, on terms named below.

100 Cakes (full size) "Sweet Home" Family Soap

(Enough to last the average Family One Year.)

$8.30 ABSOLUTELY GIVEN AWAY.

(finest, best seasoned & most economical Soap made)	$6.00
One Box 1-4 dozen, Artistic Toilet Soap	.25
" " " Elite "	.25
" " " Creme "	.15
" " " Ideal Bouquet "	.25
" " " Ocean Bath "	.25
" " " Jasmine "	.25
Six Packages Boraxine	.60

BORAXINE saves half the labor of washing, is a thorough disinfectant, and is a blessing to every housekeeper who uses it. Boraxine is nothing but a fine quality of Soap & Borax pulverized together

THIS SILVERWARE IS EXTRA DOUBLE PLATE, VERY HANDSOME and SERVICEABLE.

Six fine silver-plated Teaspoons	.75
One " " " Child's Spoon	.20
" " " " Napkin Ring	.25
" " " " Butter Knife	.50
" " " " Individ'l Butter Plate	.30
" Extra fine long Button Hook	.25
" Celluloid Ladies' Pen Holder (very best)	.20
One Arabesque Mat	.25
" Turkish Towel (genuine)	.20
" Wash Cloth	.10
" Glove Buttoner	.15
" Package Hair Pins	.10
" Spool White Linen Thread	.10
" Japanese Silk Handkerchief	.25
One Gentlemen's Handkerchief (large)	.25
" Ladies' "	.25
" Child's Lettered Handkerchief	.10
Two Celluloid Collar Buttons	.10
One Biscuit Cutter	.20
" Cake Cutter	.20
" Doughnut Cutter	.20
" Handsome Scrap Book or Portfolio	.50
" Package Assorted Scrap Pictures	.10
" Tack Hammer	.10
Two Engravings	.40
A large package of pictures suitable for art studies, scrap albums, framing, etc., etc.	.50
Actual Value	$14.80

* This collection includes pictures of noted people, scenery, animal heads, children, prize babies, types of beauty, etc., etc. Each, all and every article named herein is packed in every case of the "Sweet Home" Soap.

OUR PRICE for the BOX COMPLETE IS $6.00 (Freight Prepaid)

WHY WE MAKE THIS TEMPTING OFFER.

FIRST—It is to introduce SWEET HOME SOAP in every neighborhood where this advertisement is read. It is the very best Soap made, and any person once using it always uses it, and thus be a steady customer

SECOND—We propose a new departure in the Soap Trade, and shall sell direct from the factory to consumer, spending the money allowed for expenses of traveling men, wholesale and retail grocers profits in handsome presents to those who will start with us now and order, at once a case of Sweet Home Soap.

THIRD—Sweet Home Soap is made for the select family trade only. It will not be sold to grocers. It is perfectly pure, thoroughly seasoned and beyond a doubt gives perfect satisfaction. It will not destroy articles that are washed with it, neither will it become soft and melt or waste away; it is a solid, substantial Soap which we shall take a pride in introducing to the 12,000,000 families of this country, freight charges paid, and to induce people to try it we accompany each case with the 39 useful & beautiful presents (named above) well worth $8.30. Sweet Home is the acme of family Soaps as you will see by nor take any chances. We merely ask permission to deliver you a case of these goods, and if after a 30 days' trial you are fully convinced that the soap is all we claim, and the extras all we advertise, you can then pay the bill. But if you are not satisfied in every way no charge will be made for what you have used. How can we do more?

OUR TERMS: WE DO NOT ASK YOU TO REMIT IN ADVANCE, NOR RUN ANY RISKS,

Here are a few letters, samples of many we are constantly receiving

ORDERS MORE.

"Please ship six more cases of the Soap at once, as several of my friends and neighbors have requested me to order for them. The Soap is all you claim and the presents more than you advertise."
MILTON HOLMES, Lawyer and J. P., Asbury Park, N.J.

PRESENTS FOR EVERY ONE.

"We opened the case last night in the kitchen, and madame, the children and servant were delighted with the extras. We found presents for everybody. How you can afford to give so much for so little money we do not know."
J. B. VAN BURGEN, Carbondale, Pa.

LIKES OUR HONEST WAY.

"We like the Soap (both toilet and laundry), and further, we like your frank honorable way of doing business. J. E. PINE, Winstead, Conn.

ENTIRELY SATISFIED.

"The great box of Soap has arrived—been tried and found entirely satisfactory. The fun of opening the box was worth half the cost. No soap but "Sweet Home" will ever be used in this house, so saith the lady." VIRGIL C. GILMAN, Nassau, N. Y.

DON'T WANT 30 DAYS TRIAL.

"Sweet Home' received in good order. You have given so much more than promised that I will not wait thirty days, but send money order herewith."
FRED. H. WALDRON, Room 17, City Hall, New Haven, Ct.

SAYS WE DID AS WE AGREED.

"I enclose check for the case of Soap, and will say you have done all you agreed and more too. The 'extras' exceeded our expectations."
W. H. COE, Coshocton, O.

Write your Name and Address plainly on a Postal Card (mentioning this paper), mail same to us, and a case of these goods will be delivered at your house on 30 days' trial.

J. D. LARKIN & CO., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our Firm has been in the soap business many years, and we refer you to any Bank in the U. S. as to our reliability. Visitors are always welcome. Our factory is a large one and has a capacity of TEN MILLION POUNDS PER YEAR.

NIECE'S PORTRAITS.

OUR SPECIALTY in INDIA INK

is a life size (bust) Portrait in heavy flat bronze frame, plush lining and heavy gold mat, or carved oak frame, steel lining and heavy white mat; boxed and shipped for $20.00.

We ship them C.O.D. with privilege of thorough inspection and if in least unsatisfactory they can be returned. Send good photograph or other small picture with particulars. For further information see our advertisement in last issue of HERALD or address NIECE, 15 and 73, Bible House, New York. Opposite Cooper Institute.

Now Ready. Just Published.

The Word.

The Addresses on Prophecy delivered at the recent Believers' Meeting for Bible Study held at Niagara; by Rev. James H. Brooks, D.D., Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D.D., Rev. N. West, D.D., Rev. H. M. Parsons, D.D., and other eminent expositors. Revised and corrected by the speakers.

193 Pages. Price, 50 Cents.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 [illegible] House, New York.

TWO GOOD BOOKS

For 50 cents postpaid.

THE SECOND ADVENT Will it be before Millennium? By Canon Fausset[illegible] H Grattan Guin[illegible] Prof. Godet, D. [illegible] 160 pages, [illegible] ment Cover, [illegible] nts.

BOOKS WHICH HAVE Influenced Me. By Canon Farrar, John D. Ruskin, Gladstone, Joseph Parker, Marcus Dods, and others. 123 pages. Im. Parchment Covers, 25 cents.

J. E. [illegible] ETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices. IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

Now Is The Time to Paint.

EVERYBODY'S PAINT BOOK

A new work on INDOOR and OUTDOOR painting which is designed to teach people how to DO THEIR OWN PAINTING and save the expense of a professional painter. The most practical and valuable work of the kind ever issued. Full and plain directions are given for mixing paints for ALL PURPOSES. Tells all about PAPER HANGING, KALSOMINING, STAINING, VARNISHING, POLISHING, as well as how to RENOVATE FURNITURE, so that it will look as good as new. Tells all about HOUSE-CLEANING.

Full directions are given for mixing and applying Kalsomine to ceilings and walls. It tells how to make and use stencils for ornamenting ceilings. Gives detailed directions for PAPER HANGING so that every one can paper a room successfully. Tells how to make DAMASK WALLS, etc. Tells how to paint a kitchen or chamber FLOOR, varnish OIL-CLOTHS, varnish RUSTIC WORK, restore CHROMOS and oil paintings, renovate PICTURE FRAMES, CLEAN MARBLE, etc. Many useful hints on ARTISTIC WORK for HOME DECORATION are given. Full directions are given for making the beautiful SPATTER-WORK pictures in which the ladies are so much interested. Tells how to paint OUTBUILDINGS, ROOFS, FARM WAGONS, FARM IMPLEMENTS, and CARRIAGES as well as how to polish a PIANO or ORGAN—how to imitate GROUND GLASS or make paint for BLACKBOARDS—GRAINING in oak and black walnut, painting in imitation of EBONY—MAHOGANY and ROSEWOOD stain, GILDING, BRONZING and SILVERING. Elegantly printed, handsomely bound in extra cloth, with ink and gold, contains a large number of illustrations; will save its cost in a short time. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, $1.00. Five books for $4.00. Get four friends to send with you and thus get your book free. Address,

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$55 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35 MARCHAL & SMITH, 285 East 21st Street, New York.

WANTED:—MEN AND WOMEN our "Child's Bible."

best book without question in the hat agents to-day. Introduction by Rev. J. B cent, D. D Nearly 200,000 already sold ar demand still increasing. One woman w experience paid us $1792 last year. We sold in many places to three-fourths of the estant families.

How can any household where there are child ford to be without it? Rev. J. H. VINCENT, Instruction, C. L. S. C. Editor S. S. Journal.

It cannot but be a great blessing to every fa which it may find a place. Rt. Rev. FRAN WHITTLE, D.D. L.L.D., Bishop of Virginia.

I shall be glad to know that all the families church in the diocese of Nebraska, in which are young children, possess a copy of this inte and well-arranged book. Rt. Rev. GEORGE W INGTON, D.D., L.L.D., Bishop of Nebraska.

The idea is most happy and the execution adm It is more interesting to the little ones than an book I know of. Prof. GEO. L. WINSTON, Uni of North Carolina.

All have not time nor talent to simplify and the Scriptures, and find the child's portion of t pel feast. It will gladden every mother to ha done in such winsome and attractive form. ROBT. McINTYRE, Pastor M. E. Church, G town, Ill.

By the hour have my children read and looked illustrations, then come and ask their little que till their hearts have seemed to be filled with t conception of the Word. Rev. M. S. WELLS, port, N. Y.

I wish that all dear children to whom I have h pleasure of preaching the gospel, might have th lege of reading it daily. Rev. E. P. HAMB Evangelist.

For terms and particulars, address

CASSELL & CO., B. B. S. D.
40 Dearborn St., Chicago. 104 & 106 Fourth Ave

THE DINGEE & CONARD C LEADING SPECIALTIES.

ROSES

ALL VARIETIES, SIZES AND PR
FINE EVER-BLOOMING PERPETU
CLIMBING AND MOSS ROSES
NEW AND RARE FLOWER SEE
HARDY PLANTS, New Moon Flower, Clemati Bulbs, JAPAN LILIES, New Chrysanthemum
Wonderful ORNAMENTAL VECETA
Everything sent safely by mail or express to
We offer Choice NEW THINGS and STE NOVELTIES in all departments. Our NEW C 100 pp., elegantly illustrated, describes over 1500 NE and CHOICEST Varieties of ROSES, S PLANTS and BULBS, and tells how to gr Free. If you wish to plant anything, sen 20 Years Established. Over 60 Large Gre
THE DINGEE & CONARD CO.
ROSE GROWERS. WEST GROVE. Chester

WANTED

A Special Agent in Either Sex, in every locality and offer such inducements that earnest workers cannot fail to make $100 per month. If you are looking for a profitable business fill out this and return at Address World M'f'g Co. 122 Nassau St.

Name.....
Town.....
State.....

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

WOMAN

HER POWER AND PRIVILEGES

A series of Sermons by Rev. T. DeWitt Tal Just published. 12mo, 260 pages, paper cover. S all dealers for 25 cents; or sent to any address by post-paid, on receipt of price. Address

J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers.
P.O. Box 2767. 57 Rose Street, New Y

ON 30 DAYS' TRIA

THIS NEW

ELASTIC TRU

Has a ball different from others, is cup shape, w adjusting Ball in center, itself to all positions of body while the ball in th presses back the int tines just as a per does with the finger. With light pressure the nia is held securely day and night, and a radical certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail unless otherwise ordered. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago.

A long-needed book. Thoroughly practi

Young People's Prayer Meeti

HOW TO CONDUCT THEM; TOGETHER WITH A GO MANY CHOICE THEMES AND TEXTS USED IN MANY SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS.

By Rev. F. E. CLARK,

Founder and Originator of "The Societ Christian Endeavor." A book that fills a felt want. Just the thing for "Societies of Ch tian Endeavor." 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

"It is an unusual combination of Christian com sense, with a broad and also minute knowledge of Needs, Desires, Tastes and Feelings of young pe The training of young converts, and the makin them before they are trained, the place and work o young people's meeting, the best methods of conc ing it, and its relation to the development and p of the Church—these, under various heads, are sidered fully and wisely. . . . We commend it hea ly. It is especially indispensable to every live m ter."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New Yo

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XI., No. 22. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, MAY 31, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF GENERALS O. O. HOWARD AND "STONEWALL" JACKSON.

DISABLED HUNTERS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

THE BURDENSOME STONE. By Rev. A. C. Tris.

A Girl Waif Rescued—A Nobleman's Testimony—A Chinese Christian Beheaded—A Superstitious Exhumation—Bright's Disease Cured, etc.

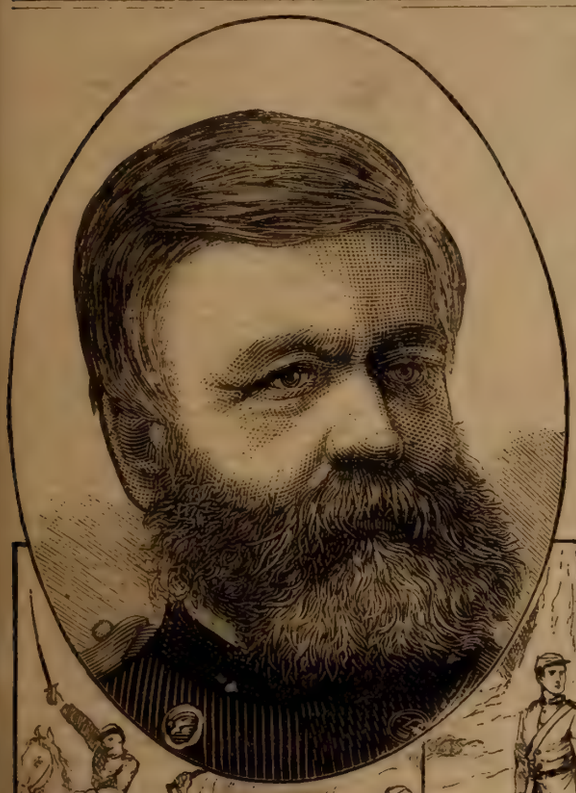
INVITATIONS TO THE WEDDING. A Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

PICTURE OF MERCHANT STREET, MANDALAY.

AN INJURED WIFE'S RESOLVE.

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE. A New Serial Story by Rev. L. S. Keyser.

JESUS RISEN. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



GEN. O. O. HOWARD—GEN. "STONEWALL" JACKSON—Jackson's Statue and Scenes in the War.

GEN. OLIVER OTIS HOWARD.

The Havelock of America.

THE observance this week throughout the Northern States, of Decoration Day, turns all our thoughts back to the bitter struggle which a quarter of a century ago desolated homes and filled the land with mourning. No patriotic citizen desires to revive the memories of that time in an angry spirit, or to inflame passions which the years of peace have happily tranquillized; but we cannot, and it would not be honorable to human nature if we could, forget the dead heroes who took part in that desperate struggle. We decorate their graves and cherish their memories, the tributes of affection and personal sorrow mingling with the floral offerings which public reverence places on their last resting-place. In harmony with the emotions which are aroused through the community by the day, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this week bears upon its first page the portraits of two Christian men who were leaders in the long strife, each of whom, while taking opposite sides, honestly and sincerely, we cannot but believe, acted conscientiously in thus choosing the flag under which they fought—General Oliver Otis Howard, and General Stonewall Jackson, the Christian hero of the South, are to Christians of all names and denominations the two representative men who, without invidious distinctions, will be recognized as fitting types of what was best and noblest in the two armies.

"The Havelock of America,"

Oliver Otis Howard, who is now the general commanding on the Pacific slope, and whose continuance in that position recently evoked strong expressions of gratification from men of all parties in that section, was born at Leeds, Maine, in 1830, and is now therefore fifty-eight years of age. He was descended from an English family which settled at Bridgewater, Mass., where for several generations the name held an honored place in the esteem of the citizens. His great grand-father, Seth Howard, had so far abjured his English prejudices that he fought in the Revolutionary War and attained the rank of Captain. His youngest son, who during that heroic conflict remained at home caring for his mother, and carrying on the work of the farm, was the grandfather of Gen. O. O. Howard, the subject of this sketch. Rowland B. Howard, the father of the General, married Eliza, daughter of Oliver Otis of Scituate, Mass., from whom our hero derives his first names.

Early in Life

the future general gave evidence of Christian character. It is recorded of him that during his father's last illness, the boy, then only nine years old, one day, looked earnestly up in his father's face and put to him the solemn question, "Father, do you ever pray?" "Sometimes, my son," said the sick man; "would you like to have me pray now?" "Yes," said the boy, and there and then, father and son knelt together at the throne of grace. Not many weeks afterwards the father died, and the boy was left to the care of his noble Christian mother. He acquired the rudiments of education at a school in the neighborhood, after which he was sent to the Academy at Hallowell, residing in the house of his uncle, the Hon. John Otis, member of Congress. Subsebuently, he studied at Monmouth and Yarmouth Academies, until he was ready to enter Bowdoin College, from which he graduated in 1850. Thence he went to West Point, graduating there in 1854.

Strong Temperance Principles characterized him in those days. In his first term he declined to join a companion on some festive occasion in a bottle of wine, and being reminded that great men had always had a liking for intoxicants, replied that if it were necessary to drink to be a great man, he would rather never be great. He has steadfastly adhered to that resolution through his distinguished career, and has successfully demonstrated the possibility of a temperance man becoming great. Throughout his career at West Point he was known, not only as a total abstainer in a society where it was the fashion to drink, but as a young man abhoring profanity, and as a Bible-reader and a praying man.

His first position after leaving West Point was at Watervliet, N. Y. Shortly after attaining the rank of second lieutenant he secured a twenty days' leave of absence, and running down to Maine in February, 1855, he was married to a lady whom he fell in love with in his boyhood, and who has been to him ever since the best wife and the staunchest friend man ever had. little more than a year afterward—a year spent in pleasant association with congenial friends, at the arsenal at Kennebec, Me., and at Watervliet, the young husband and wife were separated by the call to military service. Mrs. Howard went home to her friends, and her husband went to Florida to serve against the Seminoles, During that conflict the gentleness and humanity which have distinguished his later years were first observed, and were all the more remarkable by being united with daring and valor. At the close of the Seminole war he received the appointment of mathematical instructor at the military academy, and had the happiness of again enjoying the society of his wife.

His Conversion

he has himself frequently described. His brother had a sweet-heart, a simple fragile girl, who had been brought under the influence of the Holy Spirit and had a yearning desire to know more of the great truths unknown to any one. She visited a minister and shortly became an ardent believer and true Christian. Gen. Howard's brother soon felt the influence of his lady friend, and through him the General himself was led to Christ, "and the cause of all," said General Howard in the course of an address a few weeks ago to the prisoners in the State prison at San Quentin, Cal., "was the tender, simple girl. And what is the result? My brother has been ministering to thousands for years, and thank God! with success." He commenced Christian work at West Point, immediately organized a cadets' prayer meeting, regularly visited the soldiers' hospital, and every Wednesday held a meeting for soldiers and their wives and families, at which he gave religious addresses.

The Outbreak of War

interrupted this life of happy usefulness. In May, 1861, he received the appointment of Colonel of the Third Maine Regiment of volunteers, and resigned his commission in the regular army to accept it. At the dinner given at the Astor House, New York, to the officers of the regiment, the health of the Colonel was proposed, and the guests raised their bumpers of wine to drink it. The Colonel duly responded, but his glass was filled with water. "The true beverage of a soldier," he said, "is cold water, and in this I pledge you." Every glass was lowered and his health was drunk in water. How many lives might have been saved if every officer in that army had been similarly minded! The regiment marched on to Washington, and shortly afterwards—in September 1861 Colonel Howard received his star, and became Brigadier General of volunteers. He took part in the first battle of Bull Run, and after that disaster to the Union arms went into camp near Alexandria Va., to drill and instruct his men.

The Empty Sleeve.

In the succeeding campaign General Howard was assigned to the duty of making a reconnoissance from Warrenton Junction to the Rappahannock, and acquitted himself with so much sagacity as to win special praise from Sumner, who was in command of the Second corps. The bloody battle of Williamsburg was fought before Howard could reach the scene of action, though he marched all night through a drenching rain. The sight of the field with its heaps of dead filled him with sorrow, but he exerted himself in aiding and directing the men engaged in the removal of the wounded. (See Illustration No 1.) He also visited the hospital and prayed with the dying. It was, however, with the battle of Fair Oaks that General Howard's name was to be most closely identified. The battle had gone against McClellan all through the first day, when toward evening Sumner's corps crossed the bridge, which was trembling under the pressure of the swollen waters, and attacked Johnston's flank. Howard gallantly led the attacking force (See Illustration No 2) and fought with dauntless courage. He was wounded in the right arm, but tying a handkerchief about it to stop the bleeding he was soon again in the thick of the fight. His horse was shot under him, but another was secured, and he was waving his wounding arm aloft to cheer on the men when a second shot struck it and shattered it. Then he was compelled to leave the field and go under the care of the surgeons who quickly amputated the injured limb. He went home to be nursed back to health, but even there he sought to serve his country by stirring speeches delivered in the chief centres, pleading for volunteers and arousing patriotic enthusiasm.

At Chancellorsville.

After two months' rest, General Howard insisted that he was well enough to return to duty, and in spite of the urgency of his friends, he rejoined McClellan as the army was returning from the Peninsula. He was assigned to the command of "the California Brigade," but after Antietam he was transferred to the command of Sedgwick's division, and subsequently of the Eleventh Corps. A month later, on May 3, 1863, occurred the incident depicted in the lower left of the illustration on the first page. It was at Chancellorsville and the corps was overwhelmed with the panic which sometimes seizes troops on the field when without shelter, they are exposed to the enemy's fire. Howard, careless of his own danger, rode toward the retreating men earnestly trying to check the stampede. Seizing the colors and holding them under the stump of his maimed arm he rode in front of the troops, that had become a mere mob, with voice and gesture vainly striving to induce them to make a stand. For some time the disgrace of this panic reflected on General Howard, but those who knew all the circumstances praised instead of blaming him, and the public has long since given him the honor he deserved.

Our space does not permit of our tracing, in detail, the heroic actions which marked General Howard's career in the later years of the war. He was conspicious at Gettysburg, and bore a worthy part in the conflict before Chattanooga. He was placed in command of the Fourth corps shortly afterward, and made the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta. As commander of the army of the Tennessee, he led the right wing of Sherman's army from Atlanta to Savannah, and thence northward in the march which terminated in the surrender of Johnston. The administrative capacity and sterling for which he was noted, led to his being chosen Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, an appointment which he accepted in deference to the wishes of President Lincoln though conscious of the enormous labor and responsibility it entailed. Since that time, his life has been one of continuous activity. In command against the Indians and in his duties on the Pacific slope, where he is now stationed, he has won the good opinion of the military authorities and the general public. It may be mentioned as a striking proof of the energy and devotion of the General that though engaged so constantly in the duties of his profession he has found time to study the Bible in the original languages, and has neglected no opportunity of conducting religious services and visiting the hospitals and prisons wherever he might be placed.

Christian Principles

The Antichrist, Babylon, and the Coming o the Kingdom, by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages Price in cloth covers, 75 cents (postage included). For sale a this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

GENERAL "STONEWALL" JACKSON.

ON the Southern side of the terrible conflict the name of General Thomas Jonathan Jackson occupies a place second to none in military ability, as well as in the Christian graces of character, and his tragic death on May 10, 1863, has invested him almost with the glories of martyrdom. He was born at Clarkesburg, Va., on January 21, 1824, and was therefore only thirty-nine years old when he died. He was left fatherless at the early age of three years, and his mother after a hard struggle of three years, at length found it necessary to accept the offer of her husband's family to take charge of her children. Thomas and his brother Warren were received into the home of an uncle. The parting with their mother was a very bitter one, and Thomas especially could never speak of it even after he had attained manhood without tears. He loved her with a passionate devotion rare in so young a boy, and when one year afterward he was recalled to her bedside during her last illness, the earnestness with which she pleaded with him to love the Saviour, and trust only in Him, was never effaced from his memory.

In June, 1842, Jackson, then eighteen years of age, was admitted to West Point, where he devoted himself most earnestly to his studies. Owing partly to his own restless temperament and his impatience of the control which his uncle wisely endeavored to exert over him, he was behind most of his fellow students in acquirements when he entered the institution. He graduated, however, in 1846 with distinction and when asked afterward by an aunt, whom he loved tenderly on account of her resemblance to his dear, dead mother, how he had managed to learn so much in so short a time, said, "By weeping, study and prayer." was raging when Jackson graduated, and he went at once to the front with the brevet rank of Second Lieutenant of artillery. His bravery in that war, and notably his intrepidity at the capture of the City of Mexico won him considerable fame, and he rose to the rank of Captain, and at the close of the war to that of major. From Mexico, Major Jackson was sent with his command to Fort Hamilton, Long Island. There he remained two years, his thoughts dwelling much upon religious subjects. In July, 1851, having been elected Professor of Natural Philosophy and Artillery Tactics in the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, he resigned his position in the army, and went thither. A few months later he joined the Presbyterian Church. His perfect and childlike faith in God's goodness, as revealed most fully in Christ, made him cheerfully confident that nothing could happen except for the best.

The War With Mexico

He had been in Lexington a little over two years, when he married Miss Eleanor Junkin, on the 4th of August, 1853. After spending fourteen months of uninterrupted happiness with his young wife, she was torn from him by death, in the autumn of 1854. His grief for her was so great that his friends were alarmed about him; yet in his moments of bitterest agony his resignation to God's will was unshaken. His duties as professor might well have satisfied the appetite of any ordinary man for teaching, but Jackson longed for more distinctively Christian work, and he accordingly at Lexington, in which he labored with all his heart. His thoughts often turned longingly to the Foreign Mission field, and in his letters to his aunt he frequently referred to missionary work as that which seemed to him the grandest occupation in which a man could engage. For the present, however, the way was not open, and he was content to labor in the sphere in which he was placed, until God should indicate His will by clear leading. His grief over the loss of his wife lightened under constant occupation, and eventually he married a second time. The lady was Mary, second daughter of Dr. Morrison, an eminent Presbyterian clergyman of North Carolina. A quiet summer vacation spent in New England in 1860, was probably the happiest period in Jackson's life; but its calm enjoyment was ended by the meaning of which, and all it involved, none knew better than he. He declared that war was inevitable, "but," said he, "it seems to me that if our people would unite in prayer, even yet peace might be preserved." The decision of Virginia could not be ignored by such a man as Jackson. Nor was he one to stand idle in such a crisis. Robert E. Lee, on his appointment of Commander-in-Chief of the Virginia forces, called out at once the senior cadets in the Virginia Institute, and it devolved on Jackson to lead them to Richmond. Before setting out he retired with Mrs. Jackson, and devoted two hours to reading the Bible, and prayer. After a few days in drilling the raw levies, Jackson was appointed major in the engineer department, but almost immediately it was exchanged for that of colonel at Harper's Ferry.

Opened a Sunday-School

The Cry of Secession,

The events which followed in rapid succession are too well known and too numerous to have description here. His valor and his extraordinary strategic ability did much to secure for the Southern armies the victories which marked the early stages of the gigantic struggle. No more able nor daring a General rode under the Southern flag, and his firmness and determination soon won for him the love and ardent admiration of his men, and the significant title of Stonewall Jackson. The circumstances of will never be forgotten while American history is read. They form so romantic and pathetic a picture that the interest and sympathy of the reader dwell upon them with unfailing zest. It was at Chancellorsville, on May 3, 1863, that the memorable attack of Lee on the Union army was made. In that dreadful charge Jackson was the impersonation of military enthusiasm. Onward he dashed at the head of his column, as much carried away by the success of his men as the most thoughtless soldier in the ranks. "Forward!" "Press on!" were his answers to every question. His enthusiasm was contagious, but the men had marched twenty miles and were weary. They received a check and began to retreat. After endeavoring to restore order to his lines, he rode along the turnpike to make a reconnoissance. On both sides the skirmishers were firing, and Jackson's escort was mistaken for a body of Federal cavalry and received a volley from the Confederate line of battle. General Jackson was struck and received three balls, one in the right hand and two in the right arm, one of which shattered the bone and cut the artery about two inches below the shoulder. Captain Wilbourne, one of his escort, and Wynn, his assistant, ran up to him as he reined up his horse on the plank road near the spot where he had received the fatal fire, and stood gazing at his troops as if dumbfounded at what they had done. The firing had ceased, but around him were lying the dead and wounded, while their horses, dashing riderless and terrified through the woods, added to the confusion and horrors of the scene.

His Death

The wound was dressed and he was placed in a litter (see illustration), and though firing had recommenced he was carried through the leaden storm to the rear. It is thought that his wound would not have proven fatal had it not been for an accident. One of the men who was helping to bear the litter, caught his foot in a trailing vine, and fell. The General was thrown out and fell heavily on his wounded shoulder. On reaching the hospital the arm was amputated, and for a day or two hopes were entertained that he would recover. He grew worse, however, and on Sunday, May 10, he peacefully passed away. The illustration in the centre of the front page is a representation of the statue which his sorrowing fellow citizens have erected to his memory.

Volume X. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1887, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Lost in the Alps.—A Minister in the North says: "Two young men were one day going up a narrow pass in the Alps. One of them lost his footing and slipped, and was falling, when the other caught hold of him firmly, and, looking over the icy precipice, said, 'It is all right, brother; I have you, and, God helping me, I will tightly hold you.' He did his best, but the weight was too great, and after much vain struggling, he had to let his brother slip from his weakening grasp as if torn from him by the strength of a giant. But Christ can keep us. His arm is all powerful; not the weight of our own evil nature, nor the strength of the great giant sin, nor anything on earth or in hell, is able to pluck us from His omnipotent hand."

A Lady's Last Look at Her Children.—Mr. W. Thompson relates: "A lady who had something the matter with her eyes consulted a doctor, and was told that at any moment she might lose her sight for ever. In great distress she went home, and dressed her children, a boy and a girl, in their best clothes, and as they stood she seated herself before them, and gazed at them, feasting her eyes upon them, and fixing every line of their features upon her memory. Eventually, as the doctor had said, her sight utterly failed, and she became blind. But she treasured the images of her darlings in her heart. It is with such a look as that of the mother on her children that we should look to Jesus—a look that will imprint His image for ever on our hearts, so that whatever happens we may not forget the beauty of His dear face."

Last Visit to the Billiard Saloon.—A worker relates: "About sixteen years ago, when I was sitting alone in my lodgings, one night, the thought came to me most forcibly, 'On which side of the great white throne shall I stand?' The thought was oppressive; I knew I was then unsaved. I could not get rid of the question, and at last in desparation I lifted my hat and went to a billiard saloon, and there, amid the click of the balls and general excitement, hoped, for a time at least, to deaden the clamour of my awakened conscience. But God was too kind to let me run far from Him, and that same night He was found of me who sought Him not. I never visited a billiard saloon again. Now I know when I stand before that once dreaded 'great white throne,' I shall be on the right side, for I am trusting in Christ for salvation. Brother, sister, on which side will you stand in the last day?"

An Aged Woman's Battle with a Fiend.— "I was once preaching in Edinburgh," says Richard Weaver, "and, at one of the meetings there, a young lady said to me, 'There is a poor old woman who wants to speak to you.' As soon as I saw her I knew she had seen better days. 'Mr. Weaver,' said the wretched woman, 'I have been to hear you every night, but my besetting sin is drink, and I cannot overcome it. Last night I resolved to give it up, and what a fearful battle I had to keep from the rum shop, but I begin to fear the Lord will not pardon me.' 'But God is love,' I said, 'and loves with a love far beyond anything which we can apprehend. Perhaps you have had some one who loved you.' The woman produced a little card, upon which was wrought in delicate letters the very words I had quoted, 'God is love.' 'That,' she said, 'was wrought by my daughter, who, as she lay dying, said, "Mother, when I am gone and there is no one to love you on earth, remember, 'God is love.'"' Looking at me she inquired, 'Is God love'? 'God is love,' I repeated. The woman knelt, and, ere she rose, she had given herself to Christ. About a year afterwards I was in Edinburgh, where I met this woman, well-dressed and happy-looking. I asked if she still had the card. In answer she pulled it from her breast. Ah, she carried the declaration of God's love near her heart, and the love itself in her heart. That was a sinner saved by Divine grace, and plucked from the talons of the fierce fiend of strong drink."

DISABLED HUNTERS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, May 27, 1888.

"The lame take the prey."—Isa. 33 : 23.

Maimed Winners of Life's Prizes—Blind Poets—Famous Invalids—Eminent Christian Sufferers—A Deaf Mute's Answer—A Legend of St. Modobert—Cure of a Blind Boy—A Man on Crutches—Orphaned Children—Men of Small Talent—Unknown Gospel Workers—A Child Rescued by an Engineer—Men off the Track—A Sinner Cut Down—A Tremendous Gospel—Doubtful of Sympathy—A Pilot's Ring on a Moonlight Night.

THE utter demolition of the Assyrian host was here predicted. Not only robust men should go forth and gather the spoils of conquest, but even men crippled of arm and crippled of foot should go out and capture much that was valuable. Their physical disadvantages should not hinder their great enrichment. So it has been in the past, so it is now, so it will be in the future. So it is in all departments. Men labor under seemingly great disadvantages, and amid the most unfavorable circumstances, yet making grand achievements, getting great blessing for themselves, great blessing for the world, great blessing for the church, and so "the lame take the prey."

Blind Poets.

Do you know that the three great poets of the world were totally blind? Homer, Ossian, John Milton. Do you know that Mr. Prescott, who wrote that enchanting book, "The Conquest of Mexico," never saw Mexico, could not even see the paper on which he was writing? A frame-work across the sheet, between which, up and down, went the pen immortal. Do you know that Gambassio, the sculptor, could not see the marble before him, or the chisel with which he cut it into shapes bewitching? Do you know that Alexander Pope, whose poems will last as long as the English language, was so much of an invalid that he had to be sewed up every morning in rough canvas in order to stand on his feet at all?

Do you know that Steuart, the celebrated painter, did much of his wonderful work under the shadow of the dungeon, where he had been unjustly imprisoned for debt? Do you know that Demosthenes, by almost superhuman exertion, first had to conquer the lisp of his own speech before he conquered assemblages with his eloquence? Do you know that Bacon struggled all through innumerable sicknesses, and that Lord Byron and Sir Walter Scott went limping on clubfoot through all their life, and that many of the great poets and painters and orators and historians and heroes of the world had something to keep them back, and pull them down, and impede their way, and cripple their physical or their intellectual movement, and yet that they pushed on and pushed up until they reached the spoils of worldly success, and amid the huzza of nations and centuries, "the lame took the prey"?

You know that a vast multitude of these men started under the disadvantage of Obscure Parentage.

Columbus, the son of the weaver. Ferguson, the astronomer, the son of the shepherd. America the prey of the one; worlds on worlds the prey of the other. But what is true in secular directions is more true in spiritual and religious directions, and I proceed to prove it.

There are in all communities many invalids. They never know a well day. They adhere to their occupations, but they go panting along the streets with exhaustion, and, at eventime, they lie down on the lounge with achings beyond all medicament. They have tried all prescriptions, they have gone through all the cures which were proclaimed infallible, and they have come now to surrender to perpetual ailments. They consider they are among many disadvantages; and when they see those who are buoyant in health, pass by, they almost envy their robust frames and easy respiration.

But I have noticed among that invalid class those who have the greatest knowledge of the Bible, who are in nearest who have the most glowing experiences of the truth, who have had the most remarkable answers to prayer, and who have most exhilarant anticipations of Heaven. The temptations which weary us who are in robust health they have conquered. They have divided among them the spoils of the conquest. Many who are alert and athletic and swarthy loiter in the way. These are the lame that take the prey. Robert Hall, an invalid, Edward Payson, an invalid, Richard Baxter, an invalid, Samuel Rutherford, an invalid. This morning, when you want to call to mind those who are most Christlike, you think of some darkened room in your father's house from which there went forth an influence potent for eternity.

Intimacy With Jesus Christ,

A step farther: Through raised letters the art of printing has been brought to the attention of the blind. You take up the Bible for the blind, and you close your eyes, and you run your fingers over the raised letters, and you say: "Why I never could get any information in this way. What a slow, lumbrous way of reading! God help the blind." And yet I find among that class of persons, among the blind, the deaf and the dumb, the most thorough acquaintance with God's word. Shut out from all other sources of information, no sooner does their hand touch the raised letter than they gather a prayer. Without eyes, they look off upon the kingdoms of God's love. Without hearing they catch the minstrelsy of the skies. Dumb, yet with pencil, or with irradiated countenance, they declare the glory of God.

A large audience assembled in New York at the anniversary of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, and one of the visitors with chalk on the blackboard wrote this question to the pupils: "Do you not find it very hard to be deaf and dumb?" And one of the pupils took the chalk and wrote on the blackboard in answer: "When the song of the angels shall burst upon our enraptured ear, we will scarce regret that our ears were never marred with earthly sounds." Oh! the brightest eyes in Heaven will be those that never saw on earth. The ears most alert in Heaven will be those that in this world heard neither voice of friend, nor thrum of harp, nor carol of bird, nor doxology of congregations.

This Sublime Sentence

A lad who had been blind from infancy was cured. The oculist operated upon the lad, and then put a very heavy bandage over the eyes, and after a few weeks had gone by, the bandage was removed, and the mother said to her child: "Willie, can you see?" He said: "Oh! mamma, is this Heaven?" The contrast between the darkness before and the brightness afterward was overwhelming. And I tell you the glories of Heaven will be a thousandfold brighter for those who never saw anything on earth. While many with good vision closed their eyes in night, and many who had a good, artistic, and cultured ear went down into discord, these afflicted ones cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and He made their sorrows advantage. and so "the lame took the prey."

In the seventh century there was

A Legend of St. Modobert.

It was said that his mother was blind, and one day while looking at his mother he felt so sympathetic for her blindness that he rushed forward and kissed her blind eyes, and, the legend says, her vision came immediately. That was only a legend, but it is a truth, a glorious truth, that a kiss of God's eternal love has brought to many a blind eye eternal illumination.

A step further: There are those in all communities who toil mightily for a livelihood. They have scant wages. Perhaps they are diseased, or have physical infirmities, so they are hindered from doing a continuous day's work. A city missionary finds them up the dark alley, with no fire, with thin clothing, with very coarse bread. They never ride in the street-car; they cannot afford the five cents. They never see any pictures save those in the show-window on the street, from which they are often jostled, and looked at by some one who seems to say in the look: "Move on! what are you doing here looking at pictures?" Yet many of them live on mountains of transfiguration. At their rough table He who fed the five thousand breaks the bread. They talk often of the good times that are coming. This world has no charm for them, but heaven entrances their spirit. They often divide their scant crust with some forlorn wretch who knocks at their door at night, and on the blast of the night-wind, as the door opens to let them in, is heard the voice of Him who said: "I was hungry and ye fed me." No cohort of Heaven will be too bright to transport them. By God's help they have vanquished the Assyrian host. They have divided among them the spoils. Lame, yet they took the prey.

I was riding along the road one day, and I saw

A Man on Crutches.

I overtook him. He was very old. He was going very slowly. At that rate, it would have taken him two hours to go a mile. I said: "Wouldn't you like to ride?" He said: "Thank you, I would. God bless you." When he sat beside me, he said: "You see, I am very lame and very old, but the Lord has been a very good Lord to me. I have buried all my children. The Lord gave them, and the Lord had a right to take them away. Blessed be His name. I was very sick, and I had no money, and my neighbors came in and took care of me, and I wanted nothing. I suffer a great deal with pain, but then I have so many mercies left. The Lord has been a good Lord to me." And before we had got far, I was in doubt whether I was giving him a ride or he was giving me a ride! He said: "Now, if you please, I'll get out here. Just help me down on my crutches, if you please. God bless you. Thank you, sir. Good morning. Good morning. You have been feet to the lame, sir, you have. Good morning." Swarthy men had gone the road that day. I do not know where they came out, but every hobble of that old man was toward the shining gate. With his old crutch he had struck down many a Sennacherib of temptation which has mastered you and me. Lame, so fearfully lame, so awfully lame; but he took the prey.

A step further: There are in all communities

Many Orphans.

During our last war, and in the years immediately following, how many children we heard say: "Oh! my father was killed in the war." Have you ever noticed—I fear you have not—how well those children have turned out? Starting under the greatest disadvantage, no orphan asylum could do for them what their father would have done had he lived. The skirmisher sat one night, by the light of fagots, in the swamp, writing a letter home, when a sharpshooter's bullet ended the letter which was never folded, never posted, and never read. Those children came up under great disadvantage. No father to fight their way for them Perhaps there was in the old family Bible an old yellow letter pasted fast, which told the story of that father's long march, and how he suffered in the hospital; but they looked still further on in the Bible, and they came to the story of how God is the Father of the fatherless, and the widow's portion, and they soon took their father's place in that household. They battled the way for their mother. They came on up, and many of them have in the years since the war, taken positions in church and State. While many of those who suffered nothing during those times have had sons go out into lives of indolence and vagabondage, these who started under so many disadvantages, because they were so early bereft, these are the lame who took the prey.

A step further: There are those who would like to do good. They say:

"Oh! if I had Wealth, or, if I had eloquence, or if I had high social position, how much I would accomplish for God and the church!" I stand here to-day to tell you that you have great opportunities for usefulness. Who built the Pyramids? The king who ordered them built? No; the plain workmen who added stone after stone and stone after stone. Who built the dikes of Holland? The government that ordered the enterprise? No; the plain workmen who carried the earth and rung their trowel on the wall. Who are those who have built these vast cities? The capitalists? No; the carpenters, the masons, the plumbers, the plasterers, the tinners, the roofers, dependent on a day's wages for a livelihood. And so in the great work of assuaging human suffering and enlightening human ignorance and halting human inquity. In that great work, the chief part is to be done by ordinary men, with ordinary speech, in an ordinary manner, and by ordinary means. The trouble is that in the army of Christ

We all Want to be Captains and colonels and brigadier-generals. We are not willing to march with the rank and file and to do duty with the private soldier. We want to belong to the reserve corps, and read about the battle while warming ourselves at the campfires, or on furlough at home, our feet upon an ottoman, we sagging back into an arm-chair. As you go down the street, you see an excavation aud four or five men are working, and perhaps twenty or thirty leaning on the rail looking over at them. That is the way it is in the church of God to-day: where you find one Christian hard at work, there are fifty men watching the job.

Oh! my friends, why do you not go to work and preach this Gospel? You say: "I have no pulpit." You have. It may be the carpenter's bench, it may be the mason's wall. The robe in which you are to proclaim this Gospel may be a shoemaker's apron. But woe unto you if you preach not this Gospel somewhere, somehow! If this world is ever brought to Christ, it will be through the unanimous and long-continued efforts of men who, waiting for consecrate to God what they have. Among the most useless people in the world are men with ten talents, while many a one with only two talents, or no talent at all, is doing a great work, and so "the lame take the prey." There are thousands of ministers of whom you have never heard—in log cabins at the West, in mission chapels at the East—who are warring against the legions of darkness, successfully warring. Tract-distributors, month by month undermining the citadels of sin. You do not know their going or their coming; but the foot-falls of their ministry are heard in the palaces of Heaven. Who are the workers in our Sabbath-schools throughout this land to-day? Men celebrated, men brilliant, men of vast estate? For the most part, not that at all. I have noticed that the chief characteristic of the most of those who are successful in the work is that they know their Bibles, are earnest in prayer, are anxious for the salvation of the young, and Sabbath by Sabbath are willing to sit down unobserved and tell of Christ and the resurrection. These are the humble workers who are recruiting the great army of Christian youth—not by might, not by power, not by profound argument, not by brilliant antithesis, but by the blessing of God on plain talk, and humble story, and silent tear, and anxious look. "The lame take the prey."

No Special Endowment,

An engineer on a locomotive going across the western prairies day after day, saw a little child come out in front of a cabin and wave to him; so he got in the habit of waving back to the little child, and it was the day's joy to him to see this little one come out in front of the cabin-door and wave to him, while he answered back. One day the train was belated, and it came on to the dusk of the evening. As the engineer stood at his post he saw by the headlight wondering why the train did not come, looking for the train, knowing nothing of its peril. A great horror seized upon the engineer. He reversed the engine. He gave it in charge of the other man on board, and then he climbed over the engine, and he came down on the cowcatcher. He said, though he had reversed the engine, it seemed as though it were going at lightning speed, faster and faster, though it was really slowing up, and with almost supernatural clutch he caught that child by the hair and lifted it up, and when the train stopped, and the passengers gathered around, to see what was the matter, there the old engineer lay, fainted dead away, the little child alive, and in his swarthy arms.

That Little Girl on the Track,

"Oh!" you say, "that was well done." But I want you to exercise some kindness and some appreciation toward those in community who are snatching the little ones from under the wheels of temptation and sin—snatching them from under thundering rail-trains of eternal disaster, bringing them up into respectability in this world and into glory for the world to come. You appreciate what the engineer did; why can you not appreciate the grander work done by every Sabbath-school teacher this afternoon?

Oh! my friends, I want to impress upon myself and upon yourselves that it is not the number of talents we possess, but the use we make of them.

God has a Royal Family in the world. Now, if I should ask, "Who are the royal families of history?" you would say, "House ef Hapsburg, House of Stuarts, House of Bourbons." They lived in palaces, and had great equipage. But who are the Lord's royal family? Some of them may serve you in the household, some of them are in unlighted garrets, some of them will walk this afternoon down the street, on their arm a basket of broken food; some of them are in the almshouse, despised and rejected of men; yet in the last great day, while it will be found that some of us who fared sumptuously every day, are hurled back into discomfiture, there are the lame that will take the prey.

One step further: There are a great many people discouraged about getting to Heaven. You are brought up in good families, you had Christian parentage; but you frankly tell me that you are a thousand miles away from the right track. My brother, you are the one I want preach to this morning. I have been looking for you. I will tell you

How You Got Astray.

It was not maliciousness on your part. It was perhaps through the geniality and sociality of your nature that you fell into sin. You wandered away from your duty, you unconsciously left the house of God; you admit the Gospel to be true, and yet you have so grievously and so prolongedly wandered, you say rescue is impossible. It would take a week to count up the names of those in Heaven who were on earth worse than you tell me you are. They went the whole round of iniquity, they disgraced themselves, they disgraced their household, they despaired of return because their reputation was gone, their property was gone, everything was gone; but in some hour like this they heard the voice of God, and threw themselves on the divine compassion, and they rose up more than conquerors. And I tell you there is the same chance for you. That is one reason why I like to preach this Gospel, so free a Gospel, so tremendous a Gospel. It takes a man all wrong, and makes him all right.

In a former settlement where I preached, a member of my congregation quitted the house of God, quitted respectable circles, went into all styles of sin, and was slain of his iniquity. The day for his burial came, and his body was brought to the house of God. Some of his comrades who had destroyed him were overheard along the street, on the way to the burial, saying: "Come, let us go and hear Talmage damn this old sinner!" Oh! I had nothing but tears for the dead, and I had nothing but invitations for the living. You see I could not do any otherwise. "Christ Jesus came to seek and save that which was lost." Christ in his dying prayer said: "Father, forgive them," and that was a prayer for you and for me. Oh! start on the road to Heaven to-day.

You Are Not Happy.

The thirst of your soul will never be slaked by the fountains of sin. You turn everywhere but to God for help. Right where you are, call on Him. He knows you, He knows all about you, He knows all the odds against which you have been contending in life. Do not go to Him with a long rigmarole of a prayer, but just look up and say: "Help! Help!"

But you say: "My hand trembles so from my dissipations, I can't even take hold of a hymn-book to sing." Do not worry about that, my brother; I will give out a hymn at the close so familiar you can sing it without a book. But you say: "I have such terrible habits on me, I can't get rid of them." My answer is, Almighty grace can break up that habit, and will break it up. But you say: "The wrong I did was to one dead and in Heaven now, and I can't correct it. By the grace of God, go into the presence of that one, and the apologies you ought to have made on earth make in Heaven.

"Oh!" says some man, "if I should try to do right, if I should turn away from my evil doing unto the Lord, I would be jostled, I would be driven back, nobody would have any sympathy for me." You are mistaken. Here, in the presence of the church on earth and in Heaven, I give you to-day the right hand of Christian fellowship. God sent me here to-day to preach this, and He sent you here to hear this: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thought, and let him return unto the Lord, who will have mercy, and unto our God, who will abundantly pardon." Though you may have been the worst sinner, you may become the best saint, and in the great Day of Judgment it will be found that "where sin abounded, grace does much more abound," and while the spoils of an everlasting kingdom are being awarded for your pursnit, it will be found that the lame took the prey. Blessed be God that we are, this Sabbath, one week nearer the obliteration of all the inequalities of this life and all its disquietudes.

The Pilot's Ring.

Years ago, on a boat on the North River, the pilot gave a very sharp ring to the bell for the boat to slow up. The engineer attended to the machinery, and then he came up with some alarm on deck to see what was the matter. He saw it was a moonlight night and there were no obstacles in the way. He went to the pilot and said: "Why did you ring the bell in that way? Why do you want to stop? there's nothing the matter." And the pilot said to him: "There is a mist gathering on the river; don't you see that? and there is night gathering darker and darker, and I can't see the way." Then the engineer, looking around and seeing it was a bright moonlight, looked into the face of the pilot, and saw that he was dying, and then that he was dead.

God grant that when our last moment comes we may be found at our post doing our whole duty; and when the mists of the river of death gather on our eyelids, may the good Pilot take the wheel from our hands and guide us into the calm harbor of eternal rest!

"Drop the anchor, furl the sail,
I am safe within the vale."

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.00.

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes, by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents, including postage. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

A NOBLEMAN'S TESTIMONY.

LORD BRASSEY'S personal testimony on the subject of Christian missions in distant lands, which he gave recently at a public meeting, speaks volumes when we remember that it comes from a cultured man, and a shrewd observer. He said: "I can give you the personal testimony of an old sailor, and a wide traveller, to the good and noble work which is being done in distant lands under the auspices of this and kindred societies. I have been on board the storm-tossed vessel in which a good bishop of the Anglican Church was engaged in carrying the gospel to the distant and storm-bound and ice-bound shores of Labrador; I have been in the stormy waters of the Straits of Magellan, and have seen at what sacrifice and by what efforts the gospel is carried to the savage people of Terra del Fuego; I have seen the devoted missionaries who are sent forth by the United States at their work at Beyrout and Lahore. On the occasion of a recent journey, both at Umritzur and Agra, I saw what devoted men, and not less devoted women, were doing in the great cause of the education of heathen children. I have had the privilege at the Island of Tahiti of listening to a French Protestant pastor, a man of great culture, a man who had formerly held the post of teacher to one of the most distinguished nobles of our land, and I have heard that man deliver a sermon which was listened to with great attention by his native audience. The last missionary station which I visited was that established in Darnley Island, and we had the privilege of taking the wife of a missionary, Mr. Hunt, in the Sunbeam, from Thursday Island to Darnley Island. We spent a most interesting day with Mr. Hunt and Mr. Savage at Darnley Island. We saw the place of worship on the island—a humble, but picturesque building; we saw much of the native teacher and his wife, persons whom it was impossible to know without feeling the greatest admiration and respect for them. We heard a most interesting narrative of the difficulties and efforts which are involved in carrying the gospel to the savage races of New Guinea. We heard, and it was impossible to hear the story without a thrill of admiration, of the devotion which is shown by the native teachers acting under the guidance of their English leaders in this great cause. The greater the peril, the more imminent the prospect even of death in the great cause, the more earnest is the enthusiasm of the native teachers to go forth into this dangerous field."

A CHINESE CHRISTIAN BEHEADED.

DURING the excitement aroused in China over the French campaign in Tonquin, all Europeans were in peril through the prejudices of the people, who were unable to discriminate between the French and other foreigners. Mr. Whitehead, a missionary there, relates that there was a still stronger antipathy to Chinamen who had become converts to the Christian religion. "They had," he says, "to pass through a very severe ordeal. One man, a native assistant, went through a town called Kau-Kong, when a reward of fifty dollars was posted in the marketplace for his head, and yet he entered the place and preached Christ's Gospel. Some of the Christian women even had naked swords held over their heads and crossed over their throats, and still remained firm. At a place called Tin-Un, the mandarin positively sat in his chair and watched the mob pull down the houses and shops of the Christians, carry off their goods, and then turn the poor men and women half-naked into the street, never lifting a finger unless the mob touched a heathen man's shop; and all he did was to provide them a boat to take them away in their half-naked condition, and when they left he clenched his official fist in their faces, and said, 'Never let me see you here again.' These men lost their home, lost their business and property—all with the exception of bare life—for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ. A native assistant was dragged off with violence to the temple, and ordered to worship the idol there. 'No,' he said, 'I am a Christian, I cannot worship an idol.' 'You worship the idol or you die,' they said. 'I can die,' said the courageous man, 'but I cannot deny my Lord and Master.' He did die. They led him to the top of a hill near which the city was built, and there they deliberately severed his head from his body; they took his mangled remains and threw them over the precipice, far into the river running at its foot, and he died a martyr for his Lord."

A GIRL WAIF RESCUED.

THE beneficent work Dr. Barnardo is doing for the homeless children of London has no better illustration than in the following sorrowful incident which recently occurred: "Among the candidates who were admitted during the last month to our Home," says the philanthropist, "was Kate, a girl of fourteen, whose story was told in a few words by the lady who brought her under my notice. This child, my correspondent wrote, was born in an immoral home. She seems to have known nothing but cruelty and want, and had been in a drunken fighting household all her life. She actually never slept in a bed till she came to our town one year ago. Her mother was a bad character all her life, an inveterate drinker, and openly immoral. Kate used occasionally to coax her mother out of the saloon, and when she could, obtained money for food, taking it from her mother's dress while the woman was drunk, and telling lies to screen herself from the thrashings that the man whom she called father gave her. From this man poor Kate suffered a course of systematic cruelty until the wretched mother died. Then he put her into a train to get rid of her. On arriving at J. she was supposed to be a girl for whom there was a look-out, so she was kept in the workhouse until identified. When the truth leaked out she was sent to me and placed in our temporary Home. I found her emaciated, forlorn and ragged. This poor girl-waif, with none in the world to help her, was at once admitted to our Home."

BRIGHT'S DISEASE CURED.

THE disease which has carried off so many eminent men, and is believed to be incurable, and which is known as Bright's Disease, is the subject of a testimony which Miss Carrie F. Judd publishes in her Triumphs of Faith. The sufferer, who dates from New Marlborough, Mass., and signs herself Mrs. Ellen E. Hall, says: "During the summer of 1885, my limbs were swollen to the knees so badly that I could not button my shoes. I had a bad cough, and my heart troubled me. If I moved about quickly my heart would beat so rapidly that I could hardly breathe. The latter part of August I went to see a physician, and he told me that I was in a very bad condition, but did not tell me how badly off I was, but told my friends that I had Bright's Disease, and it was impossible for me to live through the year. This doctor moved away, so I employed another excellent doctor, but I grew rapidly worse, a good deal of the time not able to wait upon myself. I was in this condition for about seven months.

I had read accounts of prayers being answered for sick and troubled ones at the Fulton street prayer-meetings and thought I would write and ask them to pray for me that I might be spared and well enough to see my children. I did not ask to be cured, as I knew that my disease was called incurable. I began to be better from that time, so that I could do a little light work and ride out in warm, pleasant weather. I told a friend about writing to the Fulton street prayer-meeting, and she gave me your little book to read, entitled "The Prayer of Faith." This was the first that I had ever known about being healed by the prayer of faith, but it was several months before I could accept healing in this way for myself. I was taking very powerful medicine all this time, nearly every hour during the day and sometimes at night. My physician had told me that he was afraid that I might be worse when cold weather came on, as the cold was very bad for my disease, and that it would take but a very little to make me worse than I was before, and in the fall of 1886, as cool weather came on some of my symptoms were worse.

November 16, 1886, Dr. Charles Cullis of Boston offered prayer for my recovery, and Miss Judd and several of my friends also united in prayer for me. Our pastor also offered prayer for me at the same time, and anointed me with oil according to James 5: 14, 15. The Lord heard and answerd the prayers that were offered for me, and healed me. I left off taking medicine that day, and have not taken a drop of any kind of medicine since. That night I slept all night like a child, something I had not done for a long time. And from that time my cough left me, my strength began to return. At first I was only able to do light work, but in about three months I was able to do all my work, washing included. I have not been sick since.

A SUPERSTITIOUS EXHUMATION.

AT a recent missionary meeting the Rev. T. Bramfitt, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, said: "I will illustrate some of the difficulties under which we labor in China. At Kwang-Chi I have not only preached, but have played the part of a medical man. One day a woman came to me with two children, both being very ill. She asked me to prescribe for them, and I did so successfully. She returned, giving thanks to God and the missionary, and became a constand attendant at our chapel. Her home was about two miles from the town, and notwithstanding her cramped feet, every Sunday for two or three years she was found in the house of God. In the course of time she was converted, and was the means of bringing into the Church the whole of her family. As years went on the work of God developed in her village round about, and I was enabled to accomplish the work of enlarging the chapel, and building a minister's house. Whilst building the minister's house the woman came to me in sad distress and said, 'What do you think the people in the village have done? You remember having interred the brother of my husband? Well, the head man of the village has gone to the grave and exhumed the coffin and thrown it by the roadside.' It seems that a man in the village has become suddenly ill—it was said in consequence of the evil influences proceeding from that grave. I went to see the offending head man, and pointed out that he had committed a capital crime against his country's laws, personally offended against me, and illegally injured the Christians. The man was very determined, and refused to reinter the body or apologize to the family. I threatened to send a petition to the mandarin. I gave the head man of the village till 12 o'clock the next day before I sent in my petition, and at that time I did so. The mandarin came immediately in his robes of office, and very soon the headman of the village was before me, kneeling and asking me to dictate my terms. A little firmness on that occasion assured the rights of our friends in the village. The cause of God all around has progressed in consequence."

A TWENTY YEARS' PENANCE.

A MISSIONARY in India sends to the Indian Witness a description of a valuable work in which the leaders are a former devotee and his Christian wife. He says: We are encamped under the trees where for over twenty years Jhandula Ram (the banner of Ram) did severe penance, imposed on himself both as a supposed adequate punishment for sins of the present and past births, and as an expression of penitence and the highest virtue. Five years ago he heard the Gospel of Christ preached in the open air, when he believed, and was baptized. His name was then changed to Jhandula Masih [the banner of Christ] and a true banner his has been, read and known of all about Mahadeva. He was married to his chelin, or female disciple, who chastely attended him through all the long years of his self-inflicted tortures, and both were induced to remain in the place where they had been called to work for the Great Master according to the light they had received. And the Lord has blessed and owned their labor of love and work of faith and patience of hope. Three other families have been brought out and baptized through their agency; and two schools, one for boys and the other for girls, have been established. A year ago a Christian teacher and his wife were sent for the latter, and they have both rendered good service. So that, here, in this centre of a great village population there is a small Christian community growing up and taking form.

THE BURDENSOME STONE.

By Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard Kans.*

The Stone Quarried—Now Temporarily Cast Away—Always Burdensome—Pharaoh's Experience—Supremacy in Asia Minor—A Burden in Babylon—A Burden in the Dispersion—Persecution Futile—A Burden to Turkey—In the Future—A Financial Burden—A Theological Burden—The Key to the Eastern Question—A Loadstone.

AMONG the prophecies of the seers of Israel a remarkable expression of deep significance is used respecting Jerusalem. Zechariah says: (12: 3): "In that day I will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all peoples. All who burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people (nations) of the earth be gathered together against it"—a prophecy which sets before us in bold relief the future condition and the deliverance of God's ancient people, restored in their land Canaan.

In these words we have a panorama of the past, and a vista of the future before us, and a most unique exhibition of the most singular character of Israel through the ages, which is represented as "a stone" taken by the Almighty from the quarry of the creation, as a stone which in itself possesses no worth above other stones or nations, and yet which is set apart by election, and chiselled by the hand of the Great Architect to be the greatest wonder of grace, mercy, and judgment ever known among nations; yea, as for a time, which shall be restored to such a glory that its "dust" shall be precious in the eyes of the Church of God. (Ps. 102: 14). Israel is not only as a stone of strength, it is also like a golden thread interwoven in the web of nations, beautiful in its design and visible to all nations, so that the spirit of the age cannot close their eyes in seeing the yellow golden fabric intermixed in the affairs of nations. It is an obvious fact that Israel from its beginning has been "a burdensome stone" for all the peoples, a firebrand (Zech. 3: 2) to many nations—a factor or medium placed on earth to try men, that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed, and to be a dispenser of blessings unique to any nation on the globe.

A Stone Cast Away

A cursive review of the past and present time will place our suggestion above all contradiction. In the history of the Patriarchs we see all the particulars of the text verified: Abram called and taken from the Chaldean quarry, was placed in the land of Ham, was loaded with earthly and heavenly blessings (Ps. 68: 30), migrated in the midst of mighty nations, lived as a stranger and sojourner, and yet as "a mighty Prince" (Gen. 23: 6), being indeed a burdensome stone in the eyes of the Canaanites, and so protected by Jehovah that not any one dared to burden himself with him.

In Egypt the children of Israel were "burdensome stones;" being shepherds of sheep, they were loathsome stones in the eyes of Mizraim, and their servile occupation was to burn "brick."

Pharaoh's Experience

was another instance of the truth of the words of Zechariah: "He shall be cut in pieces," while the host of Israel sung the anthem of praise and deliverance on the borders of the Red Sea. As long as Israel had no idols in their camp, Balaam could not curse (Num. 24: 17), and the prowess of the Nations of Canaan melted "like snow in Salmon. (Ps. 68: 14). In the theocracy and in the kingly rule of Israel and of Judah, the children of Abraham were "a most burdensome stone" for the nations of the East—divided, and yet strong, small in territory and resources, and yet exercising a supremacy in Asia Miner.

In the captivity the tribes of Israel were like burdensome stones: a people who would not sing one of the songs of Zion to please their captors in Babylon (Ps. 137: 1-6)—a people who did not bow before the Amalekite Haman, the highest officer of the court of Artaxerxes—a nation always resembling the burning bush of Sinai (Exod. 3: 2), and yet, the angel Jehovah was in the midst of them.

Jerusalem, as a city, had the reputation of being: "A rebellious city, hurtful unto kings and provinces" (Ezra 4: 15), and was in many respects "a burdensome stone"

For Eastern Nations, and when the fullness of time came, and the Christ of God was born, the City of the Great King did not receive "the born King of the house of David," but rejected the Prince of life, and nailed Him on the tree (Acts 3; 14-15; 1 Peter 2: 24); and, consequently, Jerusalem lost the Divine favor, and had to endure the burning wrath of Jehovah.

But, let us see in what respect Israel is left in the Diaspora. Their covenant God has never yet repudiated His own covenant people; they are still a people of one origin and blood. In religious matters they have lost the acumen of mental qualifications of discernment in regard to their own prophecies (Rom. 2: 7); their sharp-minded philosophers and Talmudistical expositors are going around their own prophetical oracles, and can see nothing of the Logos, and of the Son of David, Jesus our Lord; and, this fact is the more remarkable because, in all other things, the Jews have naturally acute mental powers, and a quicker perception than ever their fathers had. In the deep recesses of their being, powers are slumbering and burning, which cause and from this is springing forth the anti-Semitic agitation in our day, and the hatred of the Teutonic-Muscovite Turko-Slavonic persecutions. The Jews are an enigma in the world, a stone of contention, and a rock on which the radical philosophical and agnostic delusions of the age have suffered shipwreck. Jerusalem, the gate city, leading to three continents, has been for many years past the burdensome political stone, which has burdened the greatest statesmen of the age. The Eastern Question has become a household word, and that question can only be solved, and this Gordian knot cut by the restoration of Israel to Canaan, and

The Envy of the Nations.

The Fall of the Moslem Power.

If we recall the sufferings of the Jews in the East, in Spain, in England, in the middle ages, and those of recent times, and how Old Jewry, Jewish Strasse, and the Ghetto, are names familiar to every one; and how many among Christians look upon the Jews as a people of the weary breast and wandering foot, who can claim only a grave! Can any one doubt the truth of the prophecy: "That Jerusalem is called a burdensome stone," and the Jews are yet in the Diaspora, but thank God, the exiles scattered in all the world are to come home (Ezek. 37: 1-12; Zech. 12: 7.)

The Future.

At that day, says the prophet, Jerusalem shall be "a burdensome stone." That day is yet future; it will be when the Jews will come from the north (Jer. 3: 18,) from the east and west, and take possession of their fatherland. No nation on earth has better claim than Israel to call it by that name; then, Israel shall dwell in peace (Ezek. 39: 11,) and only outward circumstances shall make Jerusalem to be a burdensome stone. At that day Jerusalem shall be financially a burdensome stone, and shake the money centres of the world, as never happened before, when Israel shall draw their wealth (Isa. 60: 17,) marvellous sums, from the Exchanges and Bourses, to be placed in the land of their fathers. Values of properties must consequently suffer a depletion, and a money crisis will be experienced.

At that day Jerusalem shall be

A Burdensome Theological Stone, and bring to naught the doctrine told for many ages—that the Christian Church is Zion and Jerusalem, and that Israel must first be converted in their exile condition. All nations will hear that Zech. 12: 10 is fulfilled, and that the Jews have seen Him who has come to save and to bless them in their own land (Ps. 118: 26–29.) Oh, what a stone of confusion will be the return of Israel for the religious and political world at that day, the far seeing English statesmen, and the rulers of the New Western world, as the islands of the sea (Ps. 72: 10) shall send their ships and their presents (Isa. 66: 19), and the work will be done speedily (Acts 12: 41).

At that day, when Israel shall dwell safely and quietly in Jerusalem and in the lands of their fathers, the Eastern and European nations especially will look upon Jerusalem as the bonanza of the world, and especially the Prince of the mighty Empire of Russia, with a multitude of allies (Ezek. 38, 39), will think of pillaging the treasures of Palestine, and will actually go up with greater armies than ever were gathered on the earth, to destroy Jehovah's band; but the Watcher and Holy One coming down from heaven will hew down the "Muscovite" and "Gomer's" armies by earthquakes, fiery devastation, and pestilence, so that the prowess of Russia will be annihilated, and our text will be literally fulfilled: "All shall be cut in pieces, though all the nations of the earth be gathered together against it."

A Coveted Golden Stone,

At that day Israel shall be a burdensome stone for all peoples when it shall stand as the head of nations, pre-eminently above all the nations of the earth (Ps. 110: 2, 3).

Finally, at that day, Jerusalem shall be of all the religious magnetic desires of the nations. The needle of this compass will not point to Mecca for the Eastern nations, neither to the Lady at Loretto for the Western nations; it will have only one centre—Jerusalem the Golden, the Cross and the Crown of King Jesus, the throne of the Son of David, "and the nations will go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of Tabernacles." (Zec. 14: 16). Then the fulness of earth's resources and of the mental development of all nations shall be on exhibition, because the veil of darkness now covering all nations will be swallowed up. The caravan of worshippers, led by their kings, shall bring their wealth, honor and glory in the New Jerusalem (Matt. 2: 11; Rev. 22: 24–27), and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God (Luke 13: 28, 29) to keep the feast with all who have been counted worthy to inherit the first resurrection. (Rev. 20: 6). Indeed, the state of Jerusalem in the ages to come is beyond description, and no wonder that the holy soul of John, seeing the glory, exclaimed: "Blessed are they who 'may enter in through the gates into the city.'" (Rev. 22: 14).

The Loadstone

* From his article in the May number of the Prophetic News; for sale, price six cents, at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages, postage included.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Prospects of a Settlement of the International copyright question materially improved last week. On Thursday last the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives decided to report the bill recently passed by the Senate instead of the House bill on the same subject, so that if the bill passes the House without important changes, it will not have to be sent back to the Senate but can go to the President at once. It is, however, very low on the list, and unless reached by a suspension of the rules, it is not likely to be dealt with at this session. The opponents of the measure have employed an active firm of agents to work against it, and much capital is being made out of the dissatisfaction with which the bill is regarded in England.

The Necessity of Passing the Appropriation bills has caused the House to close the debate on the Mills' Tariff Reduction measure. The appropriations are exhausted by June 30, and it was consequently imperative that that business should be speedily dealt with, June being a month broken by Presidential Conventions. No final vote has been taken on the bill, and it will therefore be within the power of the Conventions to give expression to party feeling on the subject. There appears to be little doubt that the tariff will be the issue of the Presidential campaign. The fact cannot be ignored by the Conventions, and it now seems probable that the Democratic party will go before the country pledged to tariff reduction on the lines of the Mills bill. It will be a distinct gain if this important question should supersede the personal one, which has too often rendered a Presidential campaign a disgrace to politics.

The Serious Illness of General Philip Sheridan was reported last week. It was at first stated that the General had been seized with apoplexy, but later reports, authenticated by the physicians in attendance, attribute his illness to an affection of the heart. The trouble first became alarming on Monday, May 21, when the General was thought to be dying. He recovered, however, from that attack, but had a relapse the next day, and on Friday a third seizure prostrated him. For some seconds his heart ceased to beat entirely, and those around him feared that the end had come. By immediate hypodermic injections and other restoratives a slow, but feeble, palpitation of the heart was brought about. For an hour or more he lingered in this uncertain condition, but his pulse finally grew stronger, and his breathing became somewhat easier. The disease from which he is suffering is valvular disease of the heart. He is fifty-seven years of age.

The Democratic State Convention of Pennsylvania, which met at Harrisburg, on May 3, has caused a sensation by its emphatic endorsement of President Cleveland, and the Mills Bill. It was so decisively in unanimity with the policy of the Administration, that it instructed the State delegation to the national Convention to vote for the renomination of the President. The tariff plank of the platform was also of an unmistakable character. It declared that revision of the tariff laws is necessary with a view to their simplifications, the correction of their incongruities and inequalities, the regulation of duties in such manner as will put American industry on a firm and permanent basis covering the difference between wages in this country and in foreign countries, the abolition of taxes on raw materials for manufactures, and the relief of the people from useless and onerous taxes, and from extortion by trusts and monopolies controlling the prices of the common necessaries of life, and requested the Democratic Congressmen of Pennsylvania to give the Mills bill "their earnest and undivided support." It is evident that whatever Mr. Randall may do, there is in his State a powerful section of the party which does not sympathize with his utterances on this crucial question.

The Fatalities Caused by the Floods from the Mississippi have not yet been accurately ascertained, and it will be impossible to ascertain how many deaths were due indirectly to the exposure and hardship entailed. Several very sad cases are reported. One of them relates to a farmer named Johnson, who lived in the Sny levee district. He was on the levee working with other farmers when the embankment gave way. Mounting his horse, he had a mad race with the advancing waters for his home, where his three little children were sleeping. Reaching there just as the water struck the house, he placed the children in a wagon and started for the bluffs. The rapidly advancing flood floated with the wagon box from the wheels and two of the children were drowned, Johnson saving himself and one little daughter. The child is all he has left of a happy home and a farm of 200 acres. While Samuel Moore was taking his two children out of the Indian Grove district in a boat, the boat was capsized and Moore was drowned. The children saved themselves by climbing upon a log. Two families in the Sny district, near Fall Creek, are unaccounted for, and no trace of them can be found. Rumors of still further loss of life are current. The waters began falling on May 19, and by the 22d had been reduced sufficiently to allow of the resumption of traffic on some of the railroads.

The Importation of the English Rector for Holy Trinity Church in New York, is declared by the United States Circuit Court to be an infringement of the Contract Labor law, and the church is therefore called upon to pay the fine of one thousand dollars provided by the law. Judge Wallace, on May 22, pronounced judgment in the case. He said that the corporation of Holy Trinity offended against the law in that it hired the Rev. M. Warren, of England, a clergyman of the Church of England, to become its rector at a salary of $10,000 a year. Judge Wallace held that the law was plain, and that while its framers presumably did not intend to have it affect clergymen, there was no escape from its language. The statute excepts actors, singers, lecturers, and artists only, and hence leaves no possible interpretation as regards clergymen, except that they are included in the interdicted classes. An effort is to be made to have the law amended, so as to include clergymen among the classes privileged to make agreements across the Atlantic.

The Delay in Getting the Electric Wires under ground in New York, involved no less than twenty-two serious fires in the city last year, not one of which, says the chief of the fire department, would have occurred if the law had been complied with. Beside this several lives have been lost by contact with wires broken or imperfectly insulated. In addition to this the firemen have been impeded in their efforts to extinguish fires in various parts of the city by the network of wires, which prevented the raising of the water-tower and the moving of the ladders. It is gratifying to learn that an opportunity has at last occurred for making the mayor explain his share of the responsibility. Coroner Levy is inquiring into the cause of death in a case directly attributable to the hanging wires, and he has subpenæd the mayor as a witness. It may be hoped that such questions will be put to him as will elicit the cause of his opposition to a project which directly concerns the safety of life and property in the city. Of the manifold evils from which the city has suffered under the rule of Mayor Hewitt, this at least should be removed.

A Royal Wedding took place in Berlin on May 24. Prince Henry, the second son of the Emperor of Germany, was married to Princess Irene, third daughter of the Grand Duke of Hesse and the late Princess Alice, of England. Thus bride and bridegroom are first cousins—both being grandchildren of Queen Victoria. Both Emperor Frederick and Dowager Empress Augusta were present during the ceremony, and the Prince of Wales represented the Queen of England. Thousands of people were assembled outside the castle at Charlottenburg, where the ceremony took place. When the aged General von Moltke arrived, he was enthusiastically greeted by the multitude. The Emperor, in the uniform of a grand marshal, walked in erect, with a firm gait and movement. He gazed calmly over the assembled company, smiling and bowing graciously. Approaching his mother, he bowed low and kissed her hand, and then seated himself beside the Empress. Altogether, it was an impressive and touching scene.

The Improvement in the Condition of the Emperor of Germany continued last week. He was able to take daily drives and to attend to official business. The Berlin correspondent of the New York Herald, who had an interview with Dr. Mackenzie, sends a cable despatch which shows, however, on how slight a tenure the valuable life of the Emperor depends, and how soon he may be succeeded by the young man whose accession to the throne is regarded in Europe as the signal for war. Dr. Mackenzie is reported as saying that the Emperor will soon go to Potsdam, and after about a fortnight's rest he will go to Homburg. "If he can go to Homburg, there is no reason why the patient may not live a month, three months or more, but if the corrosive sore should eat inward it would, of course, be fatal. But it is not doing so now. The Emperor's constitution and the absence of nervousness are favorable for recovery, but they are simply splendid for resistance against disease." Being asked if recovery were possible, the Dr. said: "Most certainly. I still maintain that recovery is within the limits of possibility."

The Relations of Germany and France have been strained by the report of a decree, affecting Alsace and Lorraine. The charge is made that Germans entering France have been subjected to annoyance, and that Frenchmen visiting Alsace and Lorraine, have been endeavoring to stir up disloyalty to Germany. The result has been the preparation of a decree which was issued on May 25. It requires that all Frenchmen going to Alsace-Lorraine be provided with passports issued by the German Embassy in Paris—after careful inquiry. This passport, which the traveller will have to show every time he may be asked to do so, must also bear the visé of the Governor of Alsace-Lorraine. The North German Gazette says that it is high time to make clear, in a manner admitting of no misunderstanding, that Alsace-Lorraine belongs entirely to Germany.

Anxiety About the Safety of Mr. H. M. Stanley was not allayed last week; not the slightest intelligence about him came to hand. This, however, gives some slight comfort, for had he been overwhelmed by a hostile attack or perished of starvation, news of the event could scarcely have failed to be sent. His importance is so clearly recognized, even among African savages, that such a circumstance would speedily have passed from tribe to tribe. Dr. Schweinfurth says there is no reason to be uneasy about Stanley's fate. He is probably waiting half way for Tippoo Tib's reinforcements and stores, without which it is useless to reach Wadelai. The government of the Congo State has received advices that Dr. Mangold, of Kiel, is about to start in search of Stanley.

The Centennial of the Presbyterian Church was held in Philadelphia on Thursday last. On May 24, 1788, one hundred years ago, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America was founded and instituted in the same city. The centennial anniversary of this event was celebrated with ceremonies, impressive and interesting, by the general assemblies of the two great divisions of the Church. The ceremonies were held in the Academy of Music and in Horticultural Hall, a building not unlike a Presbyterian church itself. The interiors of both these edifices were profusely decorated with flowers, shrubs and banners gay. During each meeting each auditorium was crowded, in spite of the continuous rain, and a large number of well known Presbyterian clergymen sat on the platform. Mrs. Cleveland was present among the audience.

The Methodist Episcopal General Conference completed on Thursday last the election of five bishops, which it was decided to add to the Episcopate. There was no diminution in the lobbying and log-rolling complained of during the earlier days of the Conference. The first two ballots were taken on May 22, but they were fruitless, the Conference having decided that two-thirds of the votes cast were necessary to a choice. On the third ballot two bishops were elected—Dr. John H. Vincent of Plainfield, N. J., and Dr. James N. Fitzgerald, of Newark, N. J. The votes were distributed among eighty-one candidates. The fourth ballot had no decisive result, but on the fifth Dr. I. W. Joyce of Cincinnati was elected. Eight more ballots were taken without result, but on the fourteenth Dr. J. P. Newman of Washington, D. C., was chosen. Dr. D. A. Goodsell, of the New York East Conference, was elected on the sixteenth ballot. On Friday Dr. J. M. Thoburn of Calcutta was made a missionary bishop. The most momentous change effected by the conference was made on Wednesday, when it was decided to change the maximum term of pastorate from three to five years.

A Weird Celestial Phenomenon was Witnessed at Findlay, O., on May 21. A despatch from that city says that about eleven o'clock that night a light which had been visible all the evening in the northern skies suddenly concentrated in the formation of a clear and vivid representation of a hand of giant proportions, through which pulses of flame, red as blood, throbbed and bounded as in human arteries, and then fell back and were swallowed up in the darkness below. The hand reached from the horizon, through which it seemed to be thrust, half way up the sky, the wrist and fingers being particularly well defined, and perfect in form and proportion, the index finger pointing to the city. For more than an hour this impressive and mysterious exhibition was visible, and then slowly the hand began to fade away and become shadowy. The fire behind the scene appeared to go down and gradually die out; and finally, soon after midnight, the sky resumed its normal appearance. The despatch adds that several notoriously wicked persons were much alarmed by the spectacle Doubtless the phenomenon can be explained from natural causes, but a day is coming in which there will be an appearance in the sky that every one will recognize as supernatural, and all impenitant sinners will see with well-grounded alarm. (Rev. 1 : 7).

A Physician's Twenty-four Hours' Tramp through rain and storm was graphically described by himself on the witness-stand in the course of a trial in New York last week. He stated that he prescribed for a patient, but, inadvertently wrote, "Squills's Solution," instead of "Squills's Mixture," in a prescription. He knew that if the man took two teaspoonfuls of the solution, as directed, he would fall asleep and die, as it was a strong dose of opium. He, therefore, went immediately to the patient's house, accompanied by another practitioner. But they were too late—the patient had that minute swallowed the dose. He was dizzy and sleepy already; the drug was doing its deadly work. "I knew," said the physician, "that there was a human life at stake, and I gave no thought to the awful storm that was raging that night. The man must be kept walking, or die. The hours sped on, and the storm increased in fury, and still we three plodded on through the rain. We had to drag the man along. It was a heavy burden, and there was danger of our becoming exhausted. Occasionally, as a brief respite, we would jump on to a car, but always on the front platform, so that the rain could beat in the face of our involuntary companion. We took him into the basement of the New York Hospital, in Fifteenth Street, and gave him some new remedies. In a few minutes we were out in the storm again, and the walk was continued all night, and till the evening of the next day, by which time the man was out of danger." It is a pity that the same persistence and heroic treatment cannot be applied to those who, having drunk of the cup of sin, are in danger of sinking into the spiritual sleep of callousness. (Eph. 5 : 14.)

A Child Sleeping with a Bear is an Extraordinary incident reported from Kingston, New York. A press despatch from that city, states that on May 9, a little girl three years old, the daughter of a farmer of Boiceville in the Catskill mountains wandered away from home. She was missed toward evening, and a search was commenced for her which continued all night. No trace of her could be found, and the parents were distracted with grief. They never expected to see her alive again, for it seemed impossible that so small a child could live through the night in the woods. On Thursday morning, however, to their intense delight, the child was found alive and well, in a ravine between two mountains, two miles away from home. She gave a rational account of her wanderings, but when her father asked her how she spent the night and if she was not dreadfully cold, the child said that she saw a big bear and she crept close up to it and its fur kept her warm all night. Of course the story was not believed, but as the child is singularly truthful, and under close questioning adheres consistently to her story, it is now thought that she did really sleep with the bear, who for some reason refrained from hurting her. In these days it is natural to doubt the truth of the child's story, because the nature of bears is to kill and devour, but the time is not many years distant when such a story will cease to be improbable, for under the millennial reign of Christ upon earth, the nature of the brute creation as well as human nature will be changed. (Isa. 65 : 25.)

The Inoculation of a Man for Leprosy is an experiment described by Mr. John M. Putnam, the United States Consul General to Hawaii, in a despatch to the Department of State, received last week. Mr. Putnam makes the alarming statement that when a white man of means is stricken with leprosy, in the Sandwich Islands, he emigrates to the United States, to escape imprisonment on the Island of Death. Mr. Putnam also assures the Government that, in spite of all that has been said to the contrary, the malady is certainly contagious, and, in proof, cites a remarkable experiment. He states that a native was condemned to death in Hawaii for the crime of murder. His sentence, however, was commuted to imprisonment for life on condition that he submitted to leprous inoculation. The experiment was made by a German specialist, who removed a tubercle from a man in an advanced stage of leprosy, and inserted it in an incision in the arm of the condemned man. The tubercle adhered, and now forms a hard purple cicatrix sensitive to the touch, being thoroughly incorporated in his system. No evidence of the effect of the virus was seen for some time, but now symptoms have appeared which satisfy all the doctors that the man is suffering from leprosy, and that the disease is surely contagious. It may be hoped the knowledge thus gained, at the cost of a life, will save the lives of some who might otherwise have contracted the disease. Those who are delivered from the "leprosy of sin," likewise owe their rescue to the sacrifice of a life, but that was not a life already forfeited and risked from selfish motives. Christ voluntarily suffered and died for the joy of saving a world (Heb. 12 : 2).

A Man Wanting to be Imprisoned, Made an ineffectual endeavor to get arrested, on May 8, at Rochester, N. Y. About four years ago a boathouse-keeper at Black Rock, Buffalo, was convicted of smuggling goods from Canada, and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. While being taken to the penitentiary, he escaped, and reached Canada in safety. Finally he determined to return, and being able now to obtain legal assistance, which he did not have at his trial, he decided to surrender himself, and then, by a writ of habeas corpus, secure a new trial. He presented himself at the penitentiary on Tuesday of last week, when, to his surprise, the authorities refused to admit him. It had been discovered since his flight that his trial was illegal, and to imprison him at this time might involve an action for damages. The man, however, did not wish to lie under the stigma of the sentence, and, therefore, applied to the marshal for an arrest. The marshal, however, like the prison-wardens, refused to arrest him, and an application was then made to the United States Court, equally without success. The man is, therefore, free, though under sentence. It is a curious situation, but as the sentence is never likely to be executed, the man will doubtless not trouble himself further about it. That unconcern is displayed by sinners against God who are also under sentence, but, unlike that man, are in constant danger of having it executed, as it surely will sooner or later, unless they avail themselves of the Atonement. (Eccles. 8 : 11.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Chinese Government is about to erect monuments to General Gordon on the scenes of his victories over the Taiping rebels.

Dr. Washington Gladden has been appointed to represent Ohio Congregationalists at the World's Missionary Conference in London, in June.

Since the commencement of Dr. George F. Pentecost's labors in Schenectady, N. Y., 383 additions have been made to the membership of six churches in the city.

The New York State Sunday-School Association will hold its thirty-third annual Convention in the city of Rochester, commencing Tuesday morning, June 12.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills has been holding services in the Central Congregational Church, Chelsea, Mass. All the evangelical churches united in the meetings. The church, which holds twelve hundred persons, has been crowded every day.

Mayor Robinson, of Gloucester, Mass., having refused to sign more liquor licenses, and the Supreme Court having decided that he is legally bound to sign such as are granted by the Aldermen, declares that he will resign his office rather than sign them.

Rev. Sidney G. Law, Chaplain of the Tombs prison, New York, had 32,767 prisoners under his spiritual oversight last year. He preaches in the prison every Sunday from the cross gallery, where he can be heard in all the cells, and visits the prisoners during the week. Several remarkable conversions have taken place.

The sad news has reached London that Bishop Parker died on the 26th of March, of sickness, in the Unyoro country, to the southeast of the Albert Nyanza. Bishop Parker was the successor of the lamented Bishop Hannington, who was put to death by the orders of the King of Uganda.

Mr. John Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, who has adopted the system of sharing his profits with his employees, has informed them that, in addition to $59,000 already distributed in monthly dividends as a per centage on the sales, a further sum of $50,000 was to be divided among those who had been with the firm for seven years.

The meeting conducted by D. L. W. Munhall, in St. Paul, Minn., have been much blessed. A St. Paul pastor says it is the most wonderful movement he has ever witnessed there or elsewhere. The night meetings in the Market Hall have been full of interest and power. Great crowds have been present, and the inquiry room has been full at each service. At one service upward of one hundred and fifty persons made a profession of faith.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York

THE INVITATIONS TO THE WEDDING.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"The Wedding was furnished with guests." Matt. 22: 10.

The First Invitations—Disloyalty Abroad—I. It Seemed as if None Would Come—Various Characters Invited—Curt Refusals—Levity of Some—Violence of Others—II. A Mournful Prospect—The King Dishonored—The King's Son Grieved—The Bride Disappointed—III. The Catastrophe Prevented—By a Fuller Invitation—More Publicly—Power with the Messengers—IV. The Feast a Success—A Ragged Regiment—Had to Wear the King's Livery—Washing Also Provided.

OUR discourse will follow the lines of the parable. A king desired to honor his son right royally. He loved his son well, for he deserved richly of him; and therefore, as the most fitting time had come, he resolved to honor him. His son was about to take to himself a spouse; should not his marriage, which is a great event in life, be celebrated with honor? The father determined to honor his son on the joyful occasion by inviting a large number of guests to a sumptuous banquet. Not by the infliction of pain, or the pressure of taxation, but by liberality and festivity, would the king honor the Crown Prince. It should be An Extraordinary Feast.

Surely, it would be the simplest thing in the world to gather together a grateful company of guest. One would expect a competition for admission; everybody in the royal domain would eagerly ask for an invitation. But it fell out otherwise; there was a disloyal feeling abroad, and it now expressed itself; those who were bidden would not come, and means had to be used to secure the result spoken of in the text, so that "the wedding was furnished with guests."

The parable is plain. The great Father delights to honor Jesus, His Only-begotten Son. The Father loves the Son, with whom He is one. The Son has deserved well at the Father's hands, for He has been "obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." It is the Father's aim in the work of grace to glorify His Son, who, as God and man in one nature, is the channel of grace to fallen men. He proposes to do this now that the Lord Jesus takes His church into marriage union with Himself.

One would have thought that every man hearing that manhood was thus to be honored by union with Godhead would flock towards the marriage-feast. It would have seemed certain that all would desire to know this heavenly mystery, and as soon as they knew it would press forward to be partakers in its bliss. Alas! this is not the case; and this morning my business is to tell you the story of how the purpose of divine love appeared in peril, but how, in the end, it is accomplished; and, according to the language of the text, "the wedding was furnished with guests."

I. Our first point is, that it Seemed as if None Would Come.

The wedding-feast was prepared: oxen and fatlings were killed, all things were ready; but where were the guests? Those first invited, and naturally expected, would not come. Previous notice had been given them of the festival, and afterwards a summons had been sent to say that the hour was come; but, instead of joyfully responding, they would not come. These were, first of all, the Jews, to whom the gospel had been given by the law and the prophets long beforehand. "He came unto His own, but His own received Him not." Israel was not gathered: few out of the chosen nation recognized the Messiah. He came with a feast of mercy for them, but they would have none of it. He called, and they refused.

To-day this same class will be found among the children of godly parents; dedicated from their birth, prayed for by loving piety, listening to the gospel from the childhood, and yet unsaved. We look for these to come to Jesus. We naturally hope that they will feast upon the provisions of grace, and like their parents will rejoice in Christ Jesus; but, alas! how often it is the case they will not come! Dear hearers, some of you are not privileged with godly parents, but you have been for many years willing listeners to the Word of life and yet you do not accept Christ Jesus as yours, nor accept the provisions of his grace. You do not joy with Him in His union with His chosen, for you do not love Him. How sad is this! Well may the dispirited preacher mourn, and fear in his heart that the great festival of love will prove a failure! If such as you are will not come, how will the wedding be furnished with guests?

The Invitation Pressed.

The outlook grew worse still when they came not though they were reasoned with. When they would not come, the king sent other servants to bring them to a better mind; and this was the form of his reasoning: "Behold, I have prepared my dinner; my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage." No kinder argument could have been used: there was an appeal to all that was noble in them, and had they been worthy they would have come at once. Still they made light of it. You have been invited to Jesus many a time; tearful earnestness has pleaded with you, and yet men of God have had to return to their Master, saying, "Who hath believed our report?" it becomes a sorrowful business, and our anxious fears cannot see how the wedding will be furnished with guests.

The case looks darker still when we notice that, though reasoned with by new messengers, they did not come. It it said, "He sent forth other servants." I tell you from my very soul that, if my Lord will only bring you to the banquet of His grace, I mind not who shall be the successful messenger. If you will not believe in the Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life through what I have to say, may the Lord remove me, and send some one else, to whom He will give power by His grace to reach your hearts. "He sent other servants." A preacher may be too rhetorical: let a plain-speaking person be tried. He may be too weighty: let another come with parable and anecdote. Alas! with some of you the thing wanted is not a new voice, but a new heart. You would listen no better to a new messenger than to the old one. If you look at who would not come, you will see more and more cause for sorrow. Of some we simply read that "they would not come." They made no excuses or apologies, but curtly said they would not come. There was an end of the matter. Many dismiss the gospel at once; they are not to be reasoned with: they do not want it, and will not have it. A large class of the community have heard of the way of salvation, but they care nothing for it. It is not with them want of information, but want of inclination. They have neither mind nor will for heavenly things.

The Various Characters

A second class made light of it. They were indifferent to royal honors and duties. They were taken up with the care of what they had in possession, and went their way, each man to his farm, saying, "I have worked hard to get my farm, and I cannot afford to let it lie idle." Another was taken up with the care of getting an estate, and went to his merchandise, saying, "I have nobody to keep my shop. I must mind the main chance. If you do not look alive, everybody will run over you. I must attend to my buying and selling." The worldly-wise make up a very numerous class. The rich man cannot be religious, his position in society prevents; the poor man cannot mind the things of God, he is worn out by earning his daily bread. Thus they all make excuse. Lord, when so many are unwilling, and so many more are occupied with other things, how shall the wedding be furnished with guests?

A third class were violently opposed: they would not be bothered, they had no patience with religious cant: they "took His servants and entreated them spitefully, and slew them." These are not so numerous as the others; but yet they are found among us. Sceptics, swearers, revilers of godliness, and "modern thought" men: these revile the cross, and are ferocious against the gospel. When we see these raging and raving, we are apt to ask very mournfully—How can the wedding be furnished with guests?

II. Secondly, it was

A Mournful Prospect.

Imagine that there had been no guests at the wedding feast: what then? First it would have been greatly to the king's dishonor. The Crown Prince is married, and nobody comes to the wedding! The feast is free, costly, plentiful, but nobody will come to it. What an insult! The banqueting-hall is lighted, and the minstrels are in their place, but no eyes or ears are charmed. What a wretched spectacle! Empty halls, unfurnished benches, meat untasted carried out to the dogs! History does not record a more deliberate and unmistakable insult. Let me translate the parable. If no souls are saved, if the great plan of redemption does not save, what a farce the whole business will be! What a dishonor to the name of the great God! Look at the supposition, that you may see the impossibility of it.

In the next place, suppose none had come to the wedding feast; then the king's son would have been grieved. His wedding, and nobody there! If it were your own, perhaps you could put up with it; for you do not stand in so public a position as the king's son, and you have not provided so vast a banquet. But the king's son! Only imagine that and the servants are mustered in the hall, but not a single guest arrives. He has no one to congratulate him upon the happy day, no one to wish him well, no one to welcome the bride. Now, the same is true of our Lord Jesus Christ: Look at the dreadful supposition, and think whether it can be. I am sure, as you gaze upon it, you will say "Impossible! A bleeding Saviour cannot die in vain.

It is His Wedding-Day,

If no guests had arrived, how disappointed would the Bride have been! She, too, would have had to share in the failure of the day. Her bridal would have been remembered with no pleasure. She would have been happy in the bridegroom, but also unhappy because of the unkindness shown to him. In vain her rich apparel, and her costly ornaments, for there are no eyes to gaze upon them. If souls are not saved the church misses her greatest joy. But if sinners are not saved, if the preaching of the gospel is in vain, if they will not come to Christ, then are saints full of heaviness, and the church cries out, "Hast thou forgotten to be gracious?"

Would it not have meant, also, the enemy's triumph? The king's foes would have heard of it, and laughed him to scorn. At a royal wedding he could not command guests! How they would scoff at his wasted provision! "Ha, ha! Ha, ha!" The story would have been told on every ale-bench. The sons of Belial would make rare mirth of it. The King, the Prince, the Bride, would all have been ridiculed, because of a wedding in empty halls, a feast with phantom guests! I do not believe that God intends to let Satan triumph in this way. I cannot imagine that He will allow the powers of darkness thus to open their wicked mouths against Him.

III. Let us go a step further and notice this Catastrophe Graciously Prevented.

"The wedding was furnished with guests." We are very much in the same case to-day as the servants were in when the invited ones would not come. We preach and teach the gospel, but we have to complain that so many will not come to the banquet of grace. God gives us many souls, but not so many as we desire. We are eager for many more, and we begin to be afraid lest, after all, God should not be glorified as we wish that He should be. In the parable an unfurnished banquet was prevented, and so it will be in the reality. How was the calamity averted?

It was prevented, first, by a fuller invitation. At first the heralds only called those who had been previously bidden, a sort of aristocracy of hopeful persons. As these would not come, we read, "Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage." They went out, but to all whom they might find. It is a grand thing when we get a clearer idea of what the gospel really is. The more evangelical our notions become, so that we are prepared to preach the gospel to every creature under heaven, and to say, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," the more we may hope for large success.

Not to a Select Band,

Again, the invitation was now given more publicly. They had simply gone to the houses of the invited guests, and said, "All things are ready: come." But now the servants go to the chief places of concourse; and they cried aloud, and spare not among the crowds of men. One has gone to the market-cross; another is preaching where four ways meet. Hark to the voice of one upon the village green, and to the songs of others as they traverse the back slum! You cannot now go along a street without hearing the news of the great wedding feast. Many will be brought in when many are eager to bring them in. It came to pass that the king's message was more widely made known, and thus "the wedding was furnished with guests."

Again, the calamity of a wedding without guests was prevented by a certain secret power which went with the messengers. We read that they "gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good." They did not merely invite them, but they gathered them in. An influence went with the words of those servants which drew the people together; they could not wish to stay away; they came gladly. Beloved, all the hope of our ministry lies in the Spirit of God operating upon the spirits of men. If the Holy Ghost be with us we shall see thousands flocking to Jesus.

IV. I close by noticing that in the end

The Feast was a Success.

"The wedding was furnished with guests." Guests are a part of the furniture of a wedding feast. You may pile on your gold and silver plate, hang up your banners, load your tables, and sound your music; but if you have no guests the feast is a failure. The feast was more of a success than it would have been had there been no opposition. The persons who came to the wedding were more grateful than the first invited might have been if they had come. The richer sort had a good dinner every day. But these poor beggars picked off the streets, they had not tasted meat for months. Their half-starved bodies welcomed the fatlings. How glad they were! I warrant they were thankful for such a feast. They said it was an ill wind that blew nobody any good; because their betters have refused to come, there was now room for them. When the Lord saves great sinners, such as you and me, He wins warm hearts for Himself. When the Lord saves unlikely ones, He gets unusual thankfulness. When He brings in the drunkard and the profane, the unclean and the hardened, and makes them pure and holy, and puts them among the children, what gratitude He gets! If some of you moralists get saved—and God grant you may!—you will never prize the precious blood so much as those do who are washed by it from foulest stains.

The joy that day was much more expressed than it would have been had others come. Those ladies and gentlemen who were first invited, if they had come to the wedding, would have seated themselves there in a very stiff and proper manner. Dear me, what a fine thing propriety is! And yet, what a dead thing it is! One said to me the other day, "I have gone to my place of worship for many years, and nobody ever did speak to me that I know of, and nobody ever will; for we are all too respectable to know one another." You know the dignified style of self-satisfied people. Among such there is no cordiality, no freshness, no sweet naturalness. Did you ever attend a breakfast or dinner of beggars? Did you ever see a company of very hungry people feeding to their heart's content? The dull monotony of respectability knows no joy like that which comes to poverty when it feasts to the full at the table of bounty. Let the Pharisee and the moralist refuse the gospel; there are those about who, in accepting it, will do it greater honor than their dull souls could ever render it. Thus the wedding was furnished with guests, who expressed their joy enthusiastically.

How the provisions were relished! It does one good to see a hungry man eat his food. He does not act the critic, and cavil at this expression and that. He is too sharp-set to be particular about the dishes and the carving. We marvel sometimes at the capacity of hungry men; there is no end to it; and it is the same with spiritual as well as natural hunger. The king himself that day was gladdened, as he saw what a gallant company of trenchermen they were, and how there was but only unbroken enjoyment and gratitude. The choicest kind of guests had been collected if the object was to give joy. Ah dear friends! if you have a deep sense of sin, you will greatly love free grace and undying love. This is the lack of certain gentlemen who are always finding fault with the gospel: they never knew their own state by nature and by practice, and therefore do not prize salvation.

No Niggling, Nor Finding Fault,

Certainly, the occasion became more famous than it would otherwise have been. It the feast had gone on as usual it would have been only one among many such things; but now this royal banquet was the only one of its kind, unique, unparalleled. To gather in poor men off the streets, laboring men and idle men, bad men and good men, to the wedding of the Crown Prince—this was a new thing under the sun. Everybody talked of it. There were songs made about it, and these were sung in the king's honor where none honored kings before. To many it seemed like a story out of the Arabian Nights. It did not read like a piece of common history at all, but of the age of gold. Dear friends, when the Lord saved some of us by His grace, it was no common event. When He brought us great sinners to His feet, and washed us, and clothed us, and fed us, and made us His own, it was a wonder to be talked of for ever and ever. We will never leave off praising His name throughout eternity, That which looked as though it would defame the King turned out to His honor, and "the wedding was furnished with guests."

Like a Fairy Tale

One thing more: the king's liberality was all the better seen. If those who were first bidden had put in an appearance, they would have come arrayed in their own scarlet and fine linen. Now these fine clothes would have been more for the glory of those who came in them, than for the honor of the King. There was nothing of this among those who were gathered from the highways.

They Were in Sorry Gear.

It was difficult, perhaps, in some cases, to tell which was the original stuff of their garments, so patched and mended were they. Anyhow, they were a ragged regiment; and what was the consequence? Why, then they must all be dressed in the Prince's own livery, and all the glory of their apparel must be unto Him. Everyone that came in to the feast was invited to put on the king's wedding garments. It was a grand sight to see so many all in one royal livery; every guest wearing the uniform of mercy. So is it with us poor sinners.

How I wish that I could gather in many this morning, both bad and good! I mean by good those who are comparatively so as to their moral conduct. You are bidden to come to the wedding-feast of love. But even if you are bad, and obliged to own that you are so, I am equally anxious to gather you in to the feast. Do you ask me: What are we to do? What were these persons to do? To come just as they were, and freely receive what the king had freely provided. You are to bring nothing. Still, everybody must go home and wash, must he not? No, the washing and the clothing shall all be done for you at the King's palace. Come as you are. "But what do you mean by coming?" We mean trusting: trust your soul with Jesus Christ, and He will save it. Trust Him, and you shall know that He died in your room, place, and stead, so that, believing in Him, you shall not perish, but have everlasting life. May the Holy Spirit lead you to believe in Jesus, that is, trust Him. Amen and Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

AN ENCOUNTER WITH A MAD BULL.*

AN incident connected with my experience when I was a little boy may come in to illustrate the goodness of God. I was born in Liverpool, England. One day when I was about six years old, as I was going home from school, there was quite an excitement in the street. It happened that a bull had been taken into a slaughter-house in that neighborhood to be killed. They had fastened a rope around his horns in the usual way. The rope was then put through an iron ring in the floor of the slaughter-house, the bull's head was drawn down to the floor, and a man standing by hit it a heavy blow with an axe which he held in his hands. It generally happened that the blow thus given would cause the animal to fall to the ground, where he would be slaughtered. But in this case it was not so. The blow of the axe, instead of killing the bull, or knocking him down, only made him angry. He gave a violent jerk, which broke the rope that bound him, and ran off into the street. Then he went racing down the street as fast as he could go, swinging his tail about, and bellowing as loud as he could. This made a great excitement. I remembered to have seen men go out into the middle of the street, when a horse was running away, and stop him by swinging their arms. Then I thought I would try to stop the bull in the same way. So I went into the middle of the street when the bull was coming near, and tried to stop him by swinging around my arms, but the bull never minded me at all. He came bellowing on. When he got quite near I turned and ran away from him. After running a few steps, I looked around to see how near he was to me. But just as my head was turned toward him, he struck me on the forehead with one of his horns. This knocked me down to the ground. Then he took hold of my jacket and tore it off and went on his way. The horn struck my forehead about an inch above my left eye. If it had struck but a little lower it would have gone through the eye, into the brain and would have killed me. The mark of that wound is here on my forehead now, and has been there ever since. When in shaving, or brushing my hair, I stand before the mirror and see that mark, it always makes me think of the goodness of God in preserving my life when I was a little boy.

A Little Christian's Strike.

Richard, (Dr. Newton) when a boy was employed in his father's store and he was required to keep the store open on Sunday mornings. This was his first struggle with himself. He made it a matter of prayer for some time—and the opening of the shutters on the Lord's day morning for the neighbors to come and get their provisions, tried him sorely. At last his position was taken. One Saturday evening he kindly and gently, but firmly, told his father that he could no longer work upon the Sabbath, and that if his father insisted upon his doing so, he would be compelled to leave his store. The father flew into a violent rage, and told his son that if he refused to do as he was bid he should leave his home. A week later, when Saturday night came round, after the time of closing up, Richard, with a few clothes in his bag, without any formal adieu, left his father's house and went to a neighbor's to pass the coming Sunday.

* From "The Heath in the Wilderness," with Biographical Reminiscences by the late Rev. Richard Newton, D.D., Rector of St. Paul's Church, of Philadelphia. The twenty sermons which make up this volumue are in Dr. Newton's rich and beautiful style, full of gospel truth. 374 Pages; Price $1.25. Published by Robert Carter and Brothers 530 Broadway, New York.

Scene in Merchant Street, Mandalay, Burmah.

His father banished him from home on this proof of his determination not to conform to the habit of Sunday store-keeping. By the help and advice of his friends, the young aspirant to the ministry went to the manual labor-school, at Wilmington, Delaware, then under the charge of the Rev. Mr. Clemson. One classmate, whom the affectionate letters of that period termed "dear Tommy," still survives in the person of the Rev. Thomas F. Fales, of Waltham, Mass. It was a hard school this of the manual labor, for the fare was scant and the work heavy. Some of the students objected to driving home the cows from the pasture lot, as beneath their dignity; but not so with this zealous boy. Beside, he had to pass the door of his distant relatives, the Greatorex family, in their quiet old mansion on the Brandywine; and even then there was one daughter whose heart went out for the ruddy faced boy, who to earn his way to the ministry was not ashamed to be seen driving home the teacher's cows. It is ever thus that we are helped by unconscious ministries over the hard places of life, when we are in the path of duty; and in that path the pity which is akin to love grew into the sacred relationship of husband and wife.

A PREACHER THREATENED.

In the life of the late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, published by Charles L. Webster & Co., the following incident, which occurred during Mr. Beecher's residence in Indianapolis, is related:

A man in the City Hotel, not a little feared because of his brutality, had done something more brutal than usual, and, the facts coming to Mr. Beecher's knowledge, in his sermon on the following Sunday. he expressed in no gentle terms his abhorrence of the act, and in very strong language rebuked the man. Many of his hearers were alarmed lest the man would, when he heard of the sermon, do Mr. Beecher some injury. Of course, before the day was over, the substance of the sermon had been reported throughout the town, and did not fail to reach the man's ears.

On Monday morning Mr. Beecher went to the post-office immediately after breakfast, and must go right by the hotel around which this man would most likely be hanging. He got his mail and turned to go home. As he passed the hotel there were several men standing by, evidently waiting for some development. At that moment the man came down the steps with a pistol in his hand.

"Did you say thus and thus in your sermon yesterday?"

"I did."

"Did you intend those remarks for me or meaning me?"

"I most certainly did."

"Then take it back, right here, or I will shoot you on the spot."

"Shoot away," was the reply, as looking the ruffian sternly in the face, Mr. Beechsr calmly, with deliberate step, walked past the man. With pointed pistol and fierce oaths, the man followed for a few paces, when, baffled by the imperturbable coolness of his opponent, he slunk away down a side street, ashamed to return to the hotel.

STREET SCENE IN MANDALAY.

(See Illustration.)

The business street of Mandalay, the capital of Burmah, is Merchant Street, a typical block of which, as sketched by a recent visitor, is represented in the illustration on this page. While retaining the style of business, and the customs of the country, it is evident from the inscriptions on the signs that the store-keepers are anxious to cultivate the business of the English officers and soldiers now in Burmah, who doubtless have more money to spend than the natives. The curious vehicle, however, drawn in the foreground, is an indication that the Burmese ladies also make their purchases there. The vehicle is a private carriage, such as is used by the highest aristocracy of Burmah. They are commonly drawn by oxen, as represented in the illustration. The coachman, who does not appear to entail a heavy expenditure on his employers in the matter of livery, is very skilful in getting good speed and a tolerably level gait from his steeds.

The principal trade of Mandalay has now fallen into the hands of the Chinese, who keep stores of all kinds, as well as run laundries and mechanical shops. Their enterprise, energy, and industry make them formidable rivals to the Burmese, who are lazy, as a rule, and not particularly civil or obliging to their customers. The Chinese have made a permanent settlement in the country, and when they have made a fortune do not return to China, as do their countrymen who emigrate to other lands, but marry a Burmese lady, and set up their country houses in Burmah. Their matrimonial proposals find favor with the Burmese girls, who prefer them as husbands to their own countrymen.

Beside falling behind in business competition, the Burmese have suffered from the drinking habit, which has become more prevalent since the English occupation of the country. The English government has adopted in Burmah the system of licensing, which has been found financially successful in India. They sell to some contractor the exclusive right of liquor dealing over a defined section, and he is allowed to open as many drinking booths as he chooses. It was introduced in India in 1876, and the revenue increased under the system from three million dollars to five millions. The result, however, was less beneficial to the morals of the natives than to the government treasury. The lower classes degenerated into sots and loafers, and earnest protests were evoked from the more intelligent classes. It is astounding that the English government, having witnessed the result of the system in India, should have introduced it into Burmah. An effort is now being made by the temperance men in Parliament to bring them to account and compel a reformation.

AN INJURED WIFE'S RESOLVE.

(See Illustration on page 349.)

On the upper floor of a house of the better class a lady was busily engaged in packing a few trunks which stood open around her. Evidently she was not preparing for a pleasure excursion, for her face was tearful, and several times in the course of her work she sat down to vent her grief in weeping. It was sad to see one so young and beautiful in such bitter sorrow, but there was no one there to see, and she was glad of that. The pauses in her occupation did not change her plans, for when tears had relieved her overburdened heart she resumed her work with new energy. She was despoiling the rooms of their prettiest adornments. There were articles there for masculine use, but those she left in their places; it was the lighter objects which accompany a lady's sojourn in a home that she was gathering together and depositing in the trunks. It was sorrowful work and the tears would come, blinding her eyes so that she could scarcely see what she was doing but she persevered until all was done and the trunks locked and addressed. Then sitting down and looking around the room, so changed she burst into a fresh torrent of weeping.

Mrs. Temple was leaving the home which only three years before, she had entered as a happy bride. She was going back to her fath er's house, sick at heart, humiliated, despairing. The gentle, affectionate disposition, which her face indicated, must have been sorely tried before a step so decisive could have been possible to her. If her husband had been dead, the despair in her heart would not have been so crushing as it was, as she realized that he was only dead to honor and to character. The man himself was living; it was her idea of him as a noble, honorable man that was dead. A few months after their marriage he had been brought home intoxicated from some convivial gathering, and had horrified her and frightened her by his strange talk and manner. The next day he begged her to forgive him, and promised that it should never occur again. But the promise was soon broken, and it became a frequent occurrence. The past two years had been a constant succession of miseries and humiliations. Time and again her husband had vowed to break with his set, and abstain from liquor, but he failed. She had borne with him patiently, had forgiven him again and again, and encouraged him in his efforts to reform, but patience was exhausted now. One outrage had filled up the cup of bitterness which he had compelled her to drink. He had entertained a party of his friends in his own home—having faithfully promised his wife that there should be no excess. This promise he, as a host, could not keep. The party grew hilarious, and scenes of tipsy foolery had occurred. Finally, Mrs. Temple had been insulted by one of the guests, and her husband had been too incapable himself to protect her. Then she determined to go to her father; and on telling her husband the next morning of her resolve, he, in the surly mood which unfailingly followed a debauch, bade her go her way. That accounted for the packing, the tears, and the despair.

Only a few more minutes remained for her to spend beneath her husband's roof, when she heard a ring at the bell, and the servant came to inform her that the Rev. Herbert Vaughan was below, desiring to speak to her. She would gladly have excused herself, but Mr. Vaughan was an old friend, and at any rate she would like to wish him farewell before leaving.

"I have come from your husband, Mrs. Temple," he said. "I want you to forgive him once more. He has told me of all that has occurred, and begged me to plead with you for pardon."

"If he has really told you all," Mrs. Temple answered, "I wonder that you should have come."

"It was my duty in the circumstances, and I sincerely believed that I should be promoting your own happiness in gaining your consent."

"It is too late, now," said Mrs. Temple shaking her head. "I have determined to go back to my father; my husband knows of it, and in a short time I shall be on my way. Nothing now could change my resolution, I have been deceived too many times already."

"If you were sure that your husband had really reformed, had become a new creature in Christ, and was endued with God's strength to resist temptation in the future, I think I know enough of your nature to say that you would not be obdurate."

"Ah, Mr. Vaughan, if I knew that," said Mrs. Temple, "I should not wish to go. I should have hope then; but I never expect to hear that now."

"I solemnly assure you, Mrs. Temple, that I have the happiness to be the bearer of that good news," said the clergyman. "I am convinced from a pretty extensive experience that your husband is really converted. I recognize unmistakable signs of it, and you know what the grace of God can do."

The look of joyful intentness in Mrs. Temple's face as she strove to realize the good news was almost painful to witness, revealing as it did the despair from which she was slowly emerging. The clergyman rose and extended his hand. "Is it really true?" the poor wife asked. "Where is he? Will you not take me to him?"

"I will send him to you, Mrs. Temple," was the answer. "He is yearning to come to you; he will be here in less than an hour, and I venture to predict that your meeting will be the beginning of a new union between you, that will no more be marred by your husband's faults."

And Mr. Vaughan's prediction was fulfilled.

An Injured Wife's Magnanimity.

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE.

A NEW SERIAL STORY.

By Rev. L. S. Keyser.

Author of "The Way Out," etc.

(Continued from page 334.)

SAPPING THE FOUNDATIONS.

It was, as George quickly perceived, not so easy as he had expected to get Hadley to share his admiration for the infidel lecturer. Bold, blasphemous utterances revolted him, being repugnant alike to his spirit and training. Intellectual conceit, the longing for mental independence, and the confidence that young men so often cherish in their own penetration and logical acumen, were Hadley's weak points, and by these he was most easily moved. Therefore, when Hadley denounced the infidel's utterance as sacrilegious, George rejoined:

"It did sound terrible; but the question is not one of sentiment, but of fact."

"I must admit," said Hadley, "that I have often been puzzled by the supernatural occurrences recorded in the Bible; but I never realized the—the difficulty of believing in them until now. Can it be that we have been clinging to a delusion all our lives? It is a fact that we never see any thing in nature or human experience corresponding to the miraculous healing of lepers or the opening of the eyes of the blind, and other prodigies of which we read in the Bible."

"Why, no; common sense teaches us that the laws of nature are immutably fixed. Of course, every superstition has been supported and disseminated by means of pretended miraculous wonders, and Christianity seems to be no exception to the rule. But, to continue; the lecturer called our attention to the morality of the Scriptures, especially of the Old Testament. He spoke of Abraham's inhumanity in turning Hagar and her babe into the desert, of Jacob's chicanery, of David's licentiousness and wife-stealing; and yet these men, he said, were the objects of God's special favoritism. He also spoke of the gross narratives in certain parts of the Bible, which he said he would not dare to read before a refined audience, which no preacher ever reads before his congregation, which are not fit to be read in the family circle or even in the closest privacy. The polygamy of the patriarchs of Bible times was also made the object of the most caustic derision by the lecturer. They were magnificent specimens of the genus homo to hold up as paragons of perfection for our imitation. 'No wonder,' he cried, 'that our country is cursed with Mormonism and Oneida Communities, priest-ridden as it is and dominated by the teachings of such a Book!'"

The cold drops of perspiration stood on Hadley's forehead as he listened. "I have often wondered," he said "that those passages are contained in the Bible. To be sure, the evil deeds of good men are held up to reprobation, and we are told how Jacob and David and the others suffered for them. Still, I wonder these things were not suppressed. They do harm, But you do not think that it is true that our national immorality can be traced to the Bible.

"I am afraid it is. I do not believe that the speaker exaggerated. At the risk of wearying you," George continued, "I must call your attention to another well-taken point of the lecture. The speaker maintained that Christians are kept down in the thralldom of ignorance by their religious teachers, who cow and browbeat them by the most terrific denunciations if they dare to question a single article of faith. These teachers are either as ignorant as their dupes, or else they are misleading the people for purposes of gain. 'The priests are making their living out of you!' he exclaimed, as if he were addressing the adherents of religion."

"George, I don't believe that," interrupted Hadley, with a scowl of displeasure. "It is mean to impute unworthy motives to those who differ with us. I have an uncle in the west who is a preacher, and I believe that he is honest in his beliefs."

"Is he educated?"

"Well—no; I cannot say that he is."

"Then he comes into the category of the uninformed and deluded. I believe that many professors of religion are sincere enough, but they are unenlightened. 'You Christians,' said the lecturer, 'remind me of a nest full of half-fledged young robins, who open their mouths from ear to ear, ready to gulp down any thing that is flung into their æsophagi.'"

"Ha! ha!" laughed Hadley; "he was inclined to be facetious. That jest must have fallen flat on the audience."

"On the contrary, it was greeted with a volley of vociferous applause."

Hadley sat for awhile wrapped in deep reflection. The leaven of scepticism had been p into his mind, and it was already beginning to foment and diffuse itself through his being, filling his heart with a vague dissatisfaction, or, to change the metaphor, he was like Ixion on his wheel, whirling around and around, until his head was dizzy with the continuous revolution.

Milton's apostrophe to Eve, as the arch-enemy of mankind lay in wait for her, aptly portrays the subtile despoliation that skepticism was beginning to effect in the young student's spiritual life:

"Such ambush, hid among sweet flowers and shades,
Waited with hellish rancor imminent,
To intercept thy way, or send thee back
Despoiled of innocence, of faith, of bliss."

Is it possible that we have been duped so scandalously by our religious teachers?" thought Hadley. Then he passed in review before his mind a large number of his religious acquaintances in the village of Banesville and the surrounding country, and it was astonishing how many of them were found wanting when weighed in the balances of his criticism. It was true, most of them were men and women of ordinary common sense, but very few of them made any pretensions to breadth of culture, or to an acquaintanceship with the science of the day. And as to the preachers to whom he had listened, they appeared to be men of very meagre abilities. True, some of them seemed to be fairly educated, but he had never become sufficiently acquainted with them to learn whether they knew anything about the great questions which men of science discuss and the arguments which learned sceptics use in their efforts to undermine belief in the Scriptures. He was inclined to think that they simply accepted the Bible without question. As for quite a number of these clerical gentlemen, he had often been disgusted with their grammatical lapses, their stilted, unnatural manner, and their "nasal twang," as he called the offensive intonations that are sometimes heard in the pulpit.

On the other hand, there was Professor Borst, Principal of the academy which he attended—he was at least neutral on the subject of religion, never having committed himself, pro or con; and there was one of the acutest and most successful teachers of the country, who was an avowed infidel. Why had he never thought of these things before?

Could it be possible that the old, venerated Book was a fraud foisted upon the credulous by designing men for mercenary purposes? If so, it ought to be known, and the imposture should be exposed. Yet what an unsettling that would make in his previous assurance and peace of soul! With England's laureate he could say: "I falter where I firmly trod." But every sacrifice should be cheerfully made in the interests of truth, reasoned the young iconoclast, becoming enthusiastic.

"A little leaven leavens the whole lump." This adage of inspiration is as true of the process of unbelief in the soul as of the progress of grace. The doubtful suggestion, the sly innuendo, crept stealthily into Hadley's soul, on that fair spring morning, and, from that time, it began to pervade his being, diffusing itself through mind and heart, until he was ultimately led to the abandonment of all faith in religion.

"Hadley, we must be truth-seekers and free-thinkers," said George, after a brief pause of silence.

"Truth-seekers and free-thinkers! Where did you pick up those terms? You must have learned them since our last conversation a few months ago."

George drew a number of well-worn pamphlets from his pocket, and having selected one of them, whose pages were well-embellished with pencil-marks, he laid the rest on the grass by his side, saying, as he did so: "I always carry my commentaries with me, and find them convenient for reference."

They bore upon their title-pages the impress of a well-known book-making firm which has sent out its publications far and wide to undermine the honest faith of the young, and often sapping the foundations of virtue simultaneously with the destruction of faith. Many a young person, at that critical period of life, when the mind is most plastic, secretes the literature of this character from the eyes of parents and pious friends, and pores over it on the sly, until his heart is filled with bitterness, and his moral nature is unhinged.

At that moment Hadley happened to glance toward the valley below, and, as he did so, his attention was caught by a man walking leisurely up the by-road which wound transversely down the slope of the hill. As he came nearer the place where the young men were sitting, one of them recognized him.

"It is my father," said George. "I suppose that he is on his way to Banesville."

When the pedestrian came to the brow of the hill, he glanced casually across the field and caught sight of the young men, who were seated on the grass a few rods from the road. He halted a moment, and then, with a familiar salutation, he scrambled over the rail-fence, and came towards the boys. As he approached, George hurriedly gathered up the pamphlets that were lying on the grass by his side, and with an air of embarrassment which he could not conceal, he hustled them into the inner pocket of his coat, while a painfully guilty flush colored his face. Hadley, too, felt that his cheeks were turning crimson, as his friend's father came up.

"How are you, boys?" said Mr. Dane. After Hadley returned the greeting, Mr. Dane turned to his son and said: "You have chosen a pleasant place for study. I did not know, at first, who the two students were, so busy with their books on the hill-top. The books have disappeared though, I see. What science were you studying? What text books were you reading?"

George looked distressed for a few moments, and it was obvious that a painful struggle between his natural truthfulness and the fear of incurring his father's displeasure, was going on in his mind. It was foreign to his disposition to falsify, but he dreaded the consequences of making an honest confession to his father, and so the evil impulse within him was allowed to prevail, and he replied, hesitantly:

"Oh—they are— they are—only a few school-journals that I have just received through the mail, with some special pamphlets on — on — algebra."

The father looked doubtfully at his son, for a moment; but as the latter had always been, so far as his parents knew, a boy of strict veracity, Mr. Dane was unwilling to question the truthfulness of George's answer, although the halting manner of his son did not escape his notice. So he said: "You seemed to be very much interested in your reading; would you allow me to see the journals of which you speak?"

The deception having been begun, had to be kept up. For answer, George reached into another pocket of his coat, and, producing several pamphlets, he handed them to his father, and sure enough, on the outside of the paper-bound volumes, appeared, in large type, the name of a popular journal on pedagogics, several copies of which George happened to have with him at that time. The young man loathed himself for his duplicity, but he had not the moral courage to confess the truth. Mr. Dane took the journals, but, as he turned the leaves, he still felt himself nonplussed, for he could not understand why his son should have been so anxious to secrete literature of so useful a character. However, he thought best to say no more about it, and, after chatting awhile with the boys, he resumed his walk, saying that he was on his way to the village to get some medicine for a neighbor who had been taken ill.

As soon as he was gone, Hadley said, somewhat severely: "It was too bad to deceive your father in that way, George; it was outrageous."

"I acknowledge that it was not quite brave, and I do feel mean over it," replied George; "but it was the best way out of a dilemma. That was the first time I ever got into such a pickle, and I was thrown off my balance for a minute or so, and I am afraid that I did not extricate myself in an honorable way. But, see here, Hadley, wasn't it better to use a little strategy than to hurt the old man's feelings and make an unpleasant scene in the family, when I get home? Of two evils I was merely choosing the least. We must be governed by policy in these things."

"That is a dangerous philosophy," protested Hadley, whose love for the truth had not been undermined.

"But it has the support of a high authority in free-thinking circles. Only the other day I was reading an eloquent lecture by an infidel orator, in which he argued such questions of casuistry. He says that the man who sacrifices his life for a faith, or an ideal, is a fool. He thinks that it would be better to lie than to die. The Pilgrim Fathers, he maintains, were fanatics for leaving their own country, to cross the sea, and take up their abode in the inhospitable forests of the New World, merely for the privilege of worshipping God as they thought best. If they had had a little sense, they would have stayed in Old England, and made themselves comfortable, ready to swear to the Thirty-nine Articles, 'or forty, if necessary,' as he wittily says. The little ruse of which I have just now made use, and which seems to shock you so, is of a piece with the instances cited by the lecturer. I am not unconscionable, but I don't like to get into trouble with my venerable sire."

It did not occur to Hadley then as it would have done to an older and wiser man, that George had practically proved the dangerous character of the influence under which he had fallen. Well would it have been for him had he, recognizing in the lie he had just told, evidence of the demoralizing effects of his new philosophy, refused for himself to join in its pursuit. The poor, shallow fellow, however, merely answered: "Well, well, suppose we say no more about it. You were just about to read from one of your pamphlets, I believe, when your father interrupted us."

Hadley threw himself into a recumbent position upon the grass, and George began reading a chapter on the so-called "discrepancies of the Bible," in which the ingenious author attempted to prove that the accounts of the Crucifixion and Resurrection of Christ, as given by the Evangelists, were absurdly contradictory. The argument was elaborate, and to the young novitiates in Biblical learning, it appeared unanswerable. When the perusal was finished, George turned and looked into the anxious and troubled face of his friend.

"What do you think?" he inquired.

"Well, I am in a dilemma," said Hadley. "If the Bible is not true, it is a colossal fraud. But I cannot give it up on such evidence alone; and so I intend to investigate it further."

"That is right, and in order to help you in your investigations I will give you a catalogue of the publications of the publishers of this pamphlet. You may wish to secure some of them."

"But if I put that kind of literature into my library, I fear that mother, who as you know is religious, will trouble herself about it," said Hadley, doubtfully.

"Oh, she need not know you have the books. You can secrete them in some out-of-the-way niche—that is the way I do, to keep them out of the reach of my parents."

"But I do not conceal my text-books on German, or Latin, or mathematics from my mother," suggested Hadley, rather acutely.

George looked puzzled for a moment. "But that is—a—a different matter," he put in, at length.

"Why?"

"Oh, the—the—because it would pain her unnecessarily, and, as you know, we must exercise a little charity toward the old people's crotchets."

"But if the books contain the truth?"

"Well, well, we are only investigators as yet:

we are truth-seekers, eclectic philosophers, and do not assert anything dogmatically just now. At any rate, others need not be informed in regard to all the processes by which we reach our conclusions."

This sophistry acted as a sedative upon Hadley's conscience.

(To be Continued.)

JESUS RISEN.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for June 10. Matt. 28: 1-15; Golden Text I Cor. 15: 20.

The Mighty Conqueror Unable to Hold the Saviour—His Resurrection an Unanswerable Proof of Divinity—A Woman the First to See Him—Became the First Preacher of the Resurrection—The Worshipping Disciples—Feeling Granted to Those of Little Faith—Not Called Blessed—The School of Faith—The Trial of an Author's Wife—The Bribe to the Watch.

"Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." (1 Cor. 15: 20.) The "First fruits," inasmuch as "Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him." (Rom. 6: 9.) "Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was that He should be holden of it." (Acts 2: 24.) Death could claim Lazarus, although he was once raised; the widow's son and Jairus' daughter died again; the Shunamite's son, and the son of the widow of Zarepta all died again after they were raised from the dead. Against all these, death had a rightful claim; "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." (Rom. 5: 12.) All these were sinners, but Jesus, even when He had borne our sins, "knew no sin" and "did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth." (2 Cor. 5: 21; 1 Pet. 2: 22.) Death had no grip on the sinless One, "it was not possible that He should be holden of it." It is the glorious witness of our acceptance with God that He who "bare our sins in His own body on the tree" is risen from the dead, and sitteth on the right hand of God, ever living to make intercession for us. The story of the Jews, that His disciples stole His body while the keepers slept, the idea of the Rationalists that Jesus was only a moral reformer, the plea of the Agnostics that they cannot know anything which is not subject to their human reason—all are answered by the glorious fact of the resurrection of Jesus. We can say to one and all, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin, worms shall destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." (Job. 19: 25, 26.)

Not Possible

The First to See Him.

Only one of the disciples had understood the sacrifice of Jesus; it was a woman, the same who anointed Him for His burial; and that same Mary Magdalene was the first to whom the risen Jesus appeared. (John 20: 1-16; Mark 16: 9.) While it was yet dark, and others were sleeping, Mary had groped her way to the sepulchre, and, finding the stone rolled away, she had fetched Peter and John, who saw the empty grave, and went away. But to Mary, who had drunk more deeply into the spirit of Jesus, and had understood more of His mission than any other, there was no place on earth like the place where she had last seen Jesus. He had said that He should rise again; the empty grave was witness to the fact. But where was Jesus? She lingered there until He manifested Himself to her, and sent her with glad news of His resurrection to the other disciples. Her report brought other women with her, Mary the mother of James, Salome and Joanna; but they had been preparing to anoint a dead Jesus, and they brought with them spices and ointments. Mary had brought nothing with her but simple faith in His word. They saw an angel, the same who had burst the sepulchre, scattered the keepers, and rolled away the stone. Mary had seen the Lord, but the women saw only an angel. When we make preparation and bring our spices to anoint a dead Saviour, we may be pleased with our own devotion and gratified that we do so much for Him who died for us; but He Lives.

Jesus is not a poor dead corpse who needs our care to keep Him from corruption, and our earnestness and zeal to keep His work alive in the world; He is the living, risen Son of God, able to give us infinitely more than we can give Him. Mary was not taken up with her own devotion, but with her Lord, and so, when He wanted a messenger to His disciples, Mary was at hand, and became the first preacher of the Resurrection to the Apostles themselves. It is blessed to see an angel in the tomb, and to get the message of Jesus second-hand; but how much more blessed to see Jesus Himself! The keepers had been so terrified that they "became as dead men," but the angel said to the women, "Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus which was crucified. He is not here, for He is risen. Come see the place where the Lord lay. And go quickly, and tell His disciples that He is risen from the dead: and, behold, He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him; lo, I have told you." True, they had not understood, as Mary had, the message of the resurrection, but they did the next best thing; as soon as they heard of Jesus risen, they came to see for themselves. Thus they had nothing to fear, and they met with their reward. "As they went to tell His disciples, Jesus met them." "He is not far from every one of us," and every one that seeketh Him findeth. He said "All hail." And they came, and held Him by the feet, and worshipped Him." He would not let Mary Magdalene touch Him; why then should these women? He had said to her for I am not yet ascended to my Father;" yet now these women "held Him by the feet," and He did not rebuke them. Mary's faith was far in advance of theirs. When, again and again, He had told His disciples that He should be delivered to the Gentiles, mocked and crucified, and should rise again the third day (Matt. 16: 21; 17 22; 23: 20; 18: 19; Mark. 8: 31; 9: 9; 10: 32; Luke 9: 22; 13: 33; 18: 32), "they understood none of these things: and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken." (Luke 18: 34). And even at the time of His resurrection, "as yet they knew not the scripture, that He must rise again from the dead." (John 20: 9). But Mary knew, and understood. There was no need for Mary to verify the fact of His resurrection by touching Him with her hands; her soul had bowed before her risen Lord when she said to Him, "Rabboni," my Lord. She had given herself in that word, and she asked nothing for herself. Faith does not want feeling to make it more sure. There are thousands of believers kept back from blessing because they want to feel before they believe. In heart they say, "Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe." (John 20: 25). Jesus comes down to these. He invited Thomas to do this very thing, and He let the women hold his feet that they might have the evidence of their senses that He was risen. But He did not call them blessed; blessed are they that have not seen (nor felt), and yet have believed. (John 20: 29). We are in all day long, and every day. Circumstances, health, weather, friends, business, all are pressed into God's service to teach us lessons of faith. He calls us to see Him in everything, and tells us that all things are for our sakes, and that "all things work together for good to them that love God." Yet how often do we meet with believers in a mourning spirit, going with their spices to anoint the dead and to groan over impossibilities, rather than glorying in the midst of untold difficulties, because a risen Christ is greater than them all! How many mourn over their failure, their natural nervousness, their poor physical constitution, or some trying turn of circumstances! And they take for granted that Christ has no more to do with all these things, than if He were still lying in the grave. They don't feel He can be pleased with them, they don't think He can care about such trifles, they don't think they have that great faith which they suppose He requires. O, if they saw that He was risen, and "ever liveth to make intercession for us." If they could only see the intense interest He takes in all our family, household, and business concerns, their hearts would go out to Him as Mary's did; and just in the most trying moments, instead of floundering about with the vain effort to extricate themselves, their hearts' glad, restful acknowledgment would be, "My Lord."

Touch Me Not

The School of Faith,

A Certain Author

was compiling a book which needed considerable care and time in the arrangement. His wife sometimes rendered him what assistance she could, but being herself extremely occupied, every moment was of importance to her. The book was just completed when her husband said that a new thought had struck him, and the whole of the labor must be gone through again. In order to do this she must give up some important engagements. She went to the Lord, and asked Him what was to be done. Time was when she would have chafed and fretted at the loss of time. The work was done over again, and a third time thrown over. And then the precious lesson was learned. The Lord showed her that her education in recognizing a risen Christ, who ruled over all things, and who was sole Proprietor of the hours and moments which seemed so wasted, was far more important than the actual moments as they fled; He could employ time better than she could. Let us live all day, and every day, in full view of a living, risen, ascended, glorified Jesus, who loves us with an everlasting love; and then things and people will all be seen as subject to Him.

While the women went on their errand, "some of the watch came into the city, and shewed unto the chief priests all the things that were done." They had seen the darkness, and felt the earthquake when Jesus died, and now the keepers told them of how another earthquake had taken place, and how the angel of the Lord had come down from heaven, and rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre, and how they had shaken and become as dead men. Would they now acknowledge the Son of God? Alas! they were playing a fearful game, and they kept it up till the last. For the sake of their religious reputation, they still dared to fight against God! They made lies their refuge, took counsel with others like themselves, and bribed the soldiers to say that the disciples stole the body of Jesus while they slept. If a Roman soldier slept at his post he must die. But the priests promised to secure their safety. Miserable delusion! Who believes the story? Jesus and the Resurrection has been preached, and has turned the world upside down!

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for May:

Prophetic Events between 1888 and 1901. By Mr. W. Birch.

Coming of the Son of Man. By Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D. D.

The Development of Prophecy. By Rev. N. West.

Jerusalem "A Burdensome Stone. By Rev. A. C. Tris.

Jewish Wailing.

The Historical and Futurist interpretations of Unfulfilled Prophecy—How Far Agreed. By Rev. W. Frith.

The Plain of Jezreel—Past and Future. By Rev. E. J. Hytche.

The Sudden Rise and Downfall of the Antichrist. By Mr. W. Birch.

The Doctrine of the 1,000 Years Millennium. By Rev. S. R. Maitland, D. D.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes containing the monthly numbers for 1884 and 1883 may be had; price $1.]

WHEN WILL IT BE?

"That day and that hour knoweth no man."—MARK: xiii. 32.

When will it be?
Just at the nightfall, when all work is done,
And rest comes, following the vanished sun,
B inging its peace to those who weary grew
With labor lasting all the long day through?
Will it be then?

Or will it be at midnight's solemn hour
When earth seems sleeping like a folded flower?
Then will there come a knocking at the door,
And the soul start at sounds unheard before,
And listen for a voice in terror dumb,
The dreaded voice of Death, that says 'I come;
Art ready for the journey thou must take
Before the cock crows and thy friends awake"?

Or will it be at morning, when the sun
Rises on golden tasks anew begun?
Will I be standing at the plow when he Whose face we dread so much shall come to me
And say, "Give o'er thy labor. Say good-bye
To these thy comrades?" Will I shrink and cry,
"Oh! spare me yet a little while, I pray.
I am not ready. Wait till close of day"?
Ah, soul? not ready? Will the plea avail
Uttered by lips that terror has made pale?
No! He will say, "Thou knewest soon or late,
My feet would tarry at thy soul's closed gate,
Wast Thou not bidden to be ready? Lo!
I come and find thee unprepared to go.
Thou ask st time. Was time not given thee?
Too late regret, and all in vain thy plea!"

Rise, soul, and set thy house in order, lest
At any moment Death should be thy guest.
Be ready for the journey thou must go
At morn or midnight. If he finds thee so,
Brave with a faith in things thou canst not see,
What does it matter when he comes to thee?

—Eben E. Rexford.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

The New Cyclopedia of Family Medicine.

Our Home Physician

By Geo. M. Beard, M.D., of N. Y., and Ten Associate Editors, and 170 Authors. Gives Causes, Symptoms and Reliable Remedies for every Ill (Allopathic and Homœopathic).

"It cannot fail to be useful wherever it goes."—J. M. Buckley, D.D., LL.D., Ed. N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"A remarkably sensible and valuable work for young and old."—C. A. Stoddard, D.D., Ed. N. Y. Observer.

"I keep it on a prominent shelf in my library, and find it a kind of Guardian Angel of the household in matters sanitary and hygienic."—Rev. Joseph Cook.

1,500 Pages. Illustrated. Reduced $12.00 to $6.00. Agents Wanted. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, 771 B'way, N. Y.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

MY STORY OF THE WAR
By Mary A. Livermore

Her own narrative of "Four Years' Personal Experience as Field and Hospital Nurse." It portrays the Womanly or "Heavenly" side of the War, its Lights and Shadows "as a woman saw them." Bright, Pure, and Good, full of "laughter and tears," of thrilling interest and touching pathos, it sells at sight to all. Splendid Steel-Plates, and famous old Battle-Flags richly colored in exact fac-simile. The "booming" book for Men and Women Agents. $100 to $200 a month made. Distance no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

WANTED

A Special Agent Either Sex, in every locality, and offer such inducements that earnest workers cannot fail to make $100 to $300 per month. If you are looking for a profitable business fill out this and return at once Address World M'f'g Co. 122 Nassau St. N. Y

Name.....
Town.....
State.....

WOMAN:
HER POWER AND PRIVILEGES.

A series of Sermons by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage. Just published. 12mo, 200 pages, paper cover. Sold by all dealers for 25 cents; or sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address

J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
P.O. Box 2767 57 Rose Street, New York

104 Sermons of

Rev. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.

Bound in one volume, Crown 8vo, Cloth, for $1.50.

These are among the best sermons Dr. Talmage has ever delivered. Each one has been revised by him for publication in this volume.

The Christian Age, London, says: "We believe that for originality, power, and splendor, these sermons will bear comparison with the greatest pulpit productions of any age or country. But for knowledge of human life and the adaptation of Divine truth to the whole being of man—intellectual, emotional, moral, practical—and for the power of applying that truth, we know not his equal."

Spurgeon says: "Mr. Talmage's discourses lay hold of my inmost soul. The Lord is with this mighty man of valor. So may he ever be till the campaign closes with victory! I am indeed glad of his voice. It cheers me intensely. He loves the Gospel, and believes in something, which some preachers hardly do. There are those about who use the old labels, but the articles are not the same. May the Lord win armies of souls to Jesus by this man! I am astonished when God blesses me, but somehow I should not be so much surprised if He blessed this man."

LIST OF SERMONS.

In Ambush. Joshua viii: 7.
Angelic Incompetency. Rev. xiv: 8.
Ante-Mortem Religion. 1 Tim. iv: 8
Anxiety. Acts xvi: 30.
The Betrothal. Isa. lxii: 4.
The Bible Fight. Ps. xix: 8.
The Bird Anthem. Solomon's Song ii: 12.
Bribery. Job xv: 34.
Business-Life. Rom. xii: 11.
Capital and Labor. 1 Cor. xii: 21.
The Popular Christ. Gen. xlix: 10.
Christianity as a Delusion. Ezek. xxi: 21.
Church Attendance—Is it falling off? Heb. x: 25.
The Circle. Isa. xl: 22.
Sermons to Clerks. Acts xvi: 24; Prov. xxii: 29.
Sermon to Commercial Travellers. Nahum ii: 4.
Peter Cooper the Philanthropist. II. Sam. xix: 32.
Corn Husking Time. Job v: 26.
The Cross. Luke xiv: 27.
The Three Crosses. Luke xxiii: 33.
The Demand of God and Civilization. 2 Sam. xvii: 7.
Sermon to Doctors. 2 Chron. xvi: 12-13.
Down from the Shining Ranks. Luke xix: 10.
Dreams. Joel ii: 28.
The Dumb Prayer Answered. Hosea ii: 21, 22.
The Ear. Ps. xciv: 9.
The East Wind. Is. xxvii: 8.
Embezzlement. xx: 15.
Esther, The Mediatrix. Esther iv: 16.
Evolution. 1 Timothy vi: 20.
The Royal Exile. Isa. liii: 4.
The Eye. Ps. xciv: 9.
Ferry Boat of the Jordan. 2 Sam. xix: 18.
Footmen and Horses. Jer. xii: 5.
Forward. Joshua i: 5.
Garrison Duty. 1 Sam. xxx: 24.
Gnats and Camels. Matt. xxiii: 24.
A Tight Grip. 2 Sam. xxiii: 10.
Rev. Thomas Guard. 2 Sam. i: 25.
Guiteauism. 1 Sam. xxi: 15.
Harvest Home. John xv: 1.
Help for All. Hosea xiii: 9.
Helpfulness. Gal. vi: 2.
The Hero of the Ages. Rom. viii: 34.
Home. 1 Tim. v: 4.
The Horse and his Rider. Job xxxix: 19-25.
Ingersoll, the Champion Blasphemer, Answered. Eph. iv: 18.
Second Reply to Ingersoll. Ps. liii: 1.
Third Reply to Ingersoll. Ps. lxxiii: 9.
Fourth Reply to Ingersoll. Jer. xxvi: 23.
Fifth Reply to Ingersoll. Matt. vii: 16.
Sixth Reply to Ingersoll. Amos ix: 13.
The Inside. 2 Kings x: 15.
Assassination in Ireland. Ps. lxxvi: 10.
Hunger in Ireland. Matt. xxv: 35.
Out of Ivory Palaces. Ps. xlv: 8.
The Jordanic Passage. Joshua iii: 7.
The Last Judgment. 2 Cor. v: 10.
Lame on both Feet. 2 Sam. ix: 1, 13.
Sermon to Lawyers. Titus iii: 13
Mending the Bible. Rev. xxii: 19.
Sermon to Merchants. Isa. xxiii: 8.
Mightier Dead than Alive. Judges xvi: 30.
"Money all Gone." Luke xv: 14.
Mormonism. Gen. xix: 24.
Must the Chinese Go? Luke x: 20.
The Nation Kneeling. 2 Kings xx: 7.
The Newspaper. Ezek. x: 12; Acts xvii: 21.
Paul in a Basket. 2 Cor. xi: 33.
The Pouting Son. Luke xv: 28.
Were the Prayers for Garfield a Failure? 2 Cor. xii: 8-9.
President Garfield Wounded. Is. xl: 1.
The Railway Crash. Nahum ii: 4.
Democracy of Religion Acts xvii: 26.
Veracity of the Scriptures. Ps. cxix: 9.
Sensitiveness of Christ. Mark v: 31.
Shall we know each other There? 2 Sam xii: 23.
Shams in Religion. James ii: 20.
Blessing of Short Life. Is. lvii: 1.
Parentage of the Shower. Job xxxviii: 28.
Silver Wings. Ps. lxviii: 13.
The Silver Wings Ps. vi: 2.
Sons of a Gorilla, or Sons of God? Rom. i: 22, 23.
Spicery in Religion. 2 Chron. ix: 9.
The Spider in Palaces. Prov. xxx: 28.
The Star. Matt. ii: 9.
The Stellar Beauty of Christ. Rom. xxii: 10.
Alexander Stevens. Is. lx: 22.
Mistakes about the South. Judges i: 15.
Successful Medicament. Matt. ix: 12.
Sunset. Luke xxiv: 29.
Sympathy. Ps. xx: 2.
Ministry of Tears. Rev. vii: 17.
Sermon to Telegraph Operators. Job xxxviii: 35.
Sermon to Theatrical Profession. Acts xix: 31.
Threshed Out. Is. xxviii: 28.
The Times. Joel ii: 30.
Twelve-Gated Gospel. Rev xxi: 21.
Unfairness. Matt. vii: 2.
Up and Down. Phil iv: 12.
Was it Seaworthy. Gen. vi: 1.
Welcome and Dismissal. Matt. xxv: 31, 32.
Whisperers. Rom. i: 19.

"With an earnestness of appeal and a power of awakening that we have never heard surpassed, Dr. Talmage preaches the old Gospel that kindled the enthusiasm of the rustic and unlettered apostles of Galilee, and at the same time elicited the zeal and influenced the heart of the cultured Pharisee of Tarsus."—London Christian World.

"These sermons I regard as among the best specimens of the simple, earnest, and pungent presentation of the solemn and precious truths of the Gospel that I have ever read, and having a fertility of illustration that is marvellous. I feel earnestly desirous that they should be in a form to preach to ministers of the Gospel, and so help them to preach to others."—REV. E. D. G. PRIME, D.D., New York Observer.

"Mr. Talmage preaches twice every Sunday to immense audiences. Every seat up to the rafters is filled. His manner is so impassioned, his style so original, and his figures so vivid and startling, that he holds his hearers spell-bound to the end, and he moves them to tears or smiles at will."—Charleston News and Courier.

"There is apparently no hidden spring in the human heart that Dr. Talmage does not know how to reach."—Occident, San Francisco, Cal.

"We have known persons to drop the novel half finished and take up Talmage's Sermons, never to exchange truth for trash again."—Pittsburgh Methodist Recorder.

"They are brimful of vitality, intense dramatic power of description, and an earnestness of conviction in what is said that impresses the reader deeply."—New Orleans Picayune.

One Vol., Crown 8vo, bound in cloth, $1.50. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

New Catalogue. · Now Ready.

BEFORE YOU BUY ANY BOOKS FOR YOUR SUNDAY-SCHOOL LIBRARY

Send to me for a full Catalogue of the cheapest and best Sunday-School Books ever offered, and our Special Offer to Sunday-Schools.

Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

A long-needed book, thoroughly practical

Young People's Prayer Meetings

HOW TO CONDUCT THEM, TOGETHER WITH A GREAT MANY CHOICE EXERCISES AND TEXTS USED IN MANY SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS.

By REV. F. E. CLARK.

Founder and Originator of "The Society of Christian Endeavor." A book that fills a long felt want. The thing for "Societies of Christian Endeavor." 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

"It is a most unusual combination of Christian common sense, wide and broad and also minute knowledge of the Needs, Purposes, Tastes and Feelings of young people. The training of young converts, and the making of them before they are trained, the place and work of the young people's meeting, the best methods of conducting it, and its relation to the development and power of the Church—these, under various heads, are considered fully and wisely. . . . We commend it heartily. It is especially indispensable to every live minister."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Now Ready. Just Published.

The Word.

The Addresses on Prophecy delivered at the recent Believers' Meeting for Bible Study, held at Niagara: by Rev. James H. Brooks, D.D., Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D.D., Rev. N. West, D.D., Rev. H. M. Parsons, D.D., and other eminent expositors.

Revised and corrected by the speakers.

193 Pages. Price, 50 Cents.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

UNIVERSITY PIANOS FROM $180 TO $1500.

FINEST PIANOS IN THE WORLD.

SOLD DIRECT TO FAMILIES, saving the enormous expenses of agents. Sent with beautiful cover, stool and book, for trial in your own home before you buy. Guaranteed six years. Send for catalogue to Marchal & Smith Piano Co., 235 E. 21st St., N. Y.

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865 These old stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

Agents Wanted in Every Town fo

THIS IMPORTANT WO

Please notice that this is the only Commentar the whole Bible published at a moderate price, therefore, within reach of the masses, while no mentary published is so highly commended or s adapted for the home, the teacher or the pre when a practical, concise, critical and spiritual desired.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, London, England.

I think it is the best Commentary upon the Bible which has been issued within the last fifty and I should be very sorry to be deprived of the use of consulting it.

NEW AND COMPLETE

Bible Commenta

Critical, Explanatory, and Practic

BY

JAMIESON, FAUSSET & BRO

In 4 Large Vols., of about 1,000 Page

With numerous Illustrations and Map

It is far in ADVANCE of the Older
It is CRITICAL, PRACTICAL an PLANATORY.
It is COMPENDIOUS AND COMPR SIVE in its Character.
It has a CRITICAL INTRODUCTION BOOK of SCRIPTURE, and is the most PRACTICAL, SUGGE SCIENTIFIC and POPULAR Wo kind in the English Language.

We present this work to our Christian rea the conviction that it will be welcomed as a n able addition to the Biblical literature of the will be found to posses

ADVANTAGES OVER ANY OTHER SIMILAR WOR FOLLOWING IMPORTANT PARTICULAR

1st. Its Thoroughness. This Commen written by one writer only, as is the case wi Henry, Scott, and others, but by three of t scholars of the present day, thus enabling ea to devote all his skill, time and energy to a lim tion of the Bible, instead of the whole, and t quoted extensively from the works of no less hundred and fifty of the most eminent Biblical the present and the past.

2d. Its Modernness. New light is conti ing thrown upon the Scriptures by the rese travelers who have visited every region on light of revelation originally shown, by inv in science, the expository labors of scholars a and the discovery and deciphering of ancien tions, monuments, and manuscripts, thus the commentaries of former days comparative

3d. Its Compactness. The text and ments are not printed in separate parts, as the case, but are intermingled so as to form tinuous history. There are no blank spaces, book filled up with unnecessary portions of It is what it purports to be—a Commentary—no "It is literally packed," says Bishop Wiley, good things."

4th. Its Brevity. Dr. Smith, editor Standard, says, "I have, in several instances, s mon in a sentence."

5th. Its Liberal Spirit. It is more un than any other Commentary. "The name authors are a sufficient guaranty against an inational traits in it." These authors are different denomination. The hearty recomm of the leading men of all denominations still greater emphasis.

6th. Its Scripture References. These numerous than will be found in any Comm tant. Parallel passages are given wherever needed. Scripture is thus explained by Scri the Commentary will thus be found to answe pose of a Concordance to a very great extent.

7th. Its Illustrations and Maps. sufficiently numerous to decidedly enhance and attractiveness; while the great majority mentaries have no illustrations.

8th. Its Cheapness. No Commentary and merit was ever sold for anything like the

The unqualified commendations of this Co from the highest sources, together with its e tensive and rapidly increasing sale, have position in the religious world superior to t similar work, and prove conclusively that be universally adopted by Sabbath-School and Bible readers generally, to whom it be become indispensable.

The work is printed from new electrotype fine toned paper made expressly for this work at the following extremely low prices:

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge full set.....
In Half Morocco, the full set.....
Sent by mail or express to any address, p receipt of price, by

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Boo
77 Bible House, New Yo

Circulars and terms to agents sent on appl

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 23. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF THE LATE BISHOP PARKER AND THE SULTAN OF ZANZIBAR.

THE ASSASSINATION. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

THE CLOSING SCENE OF ANTI-CHRIST'S REIGN. By G. H. Pember.

A Sunday in Colombia — A Mud Idol in China — A Luxurious Opium Den — A Night of Prayer Against Cholera — A Family Saved from Death, etc.

A DESIRABLE POSSESSION. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

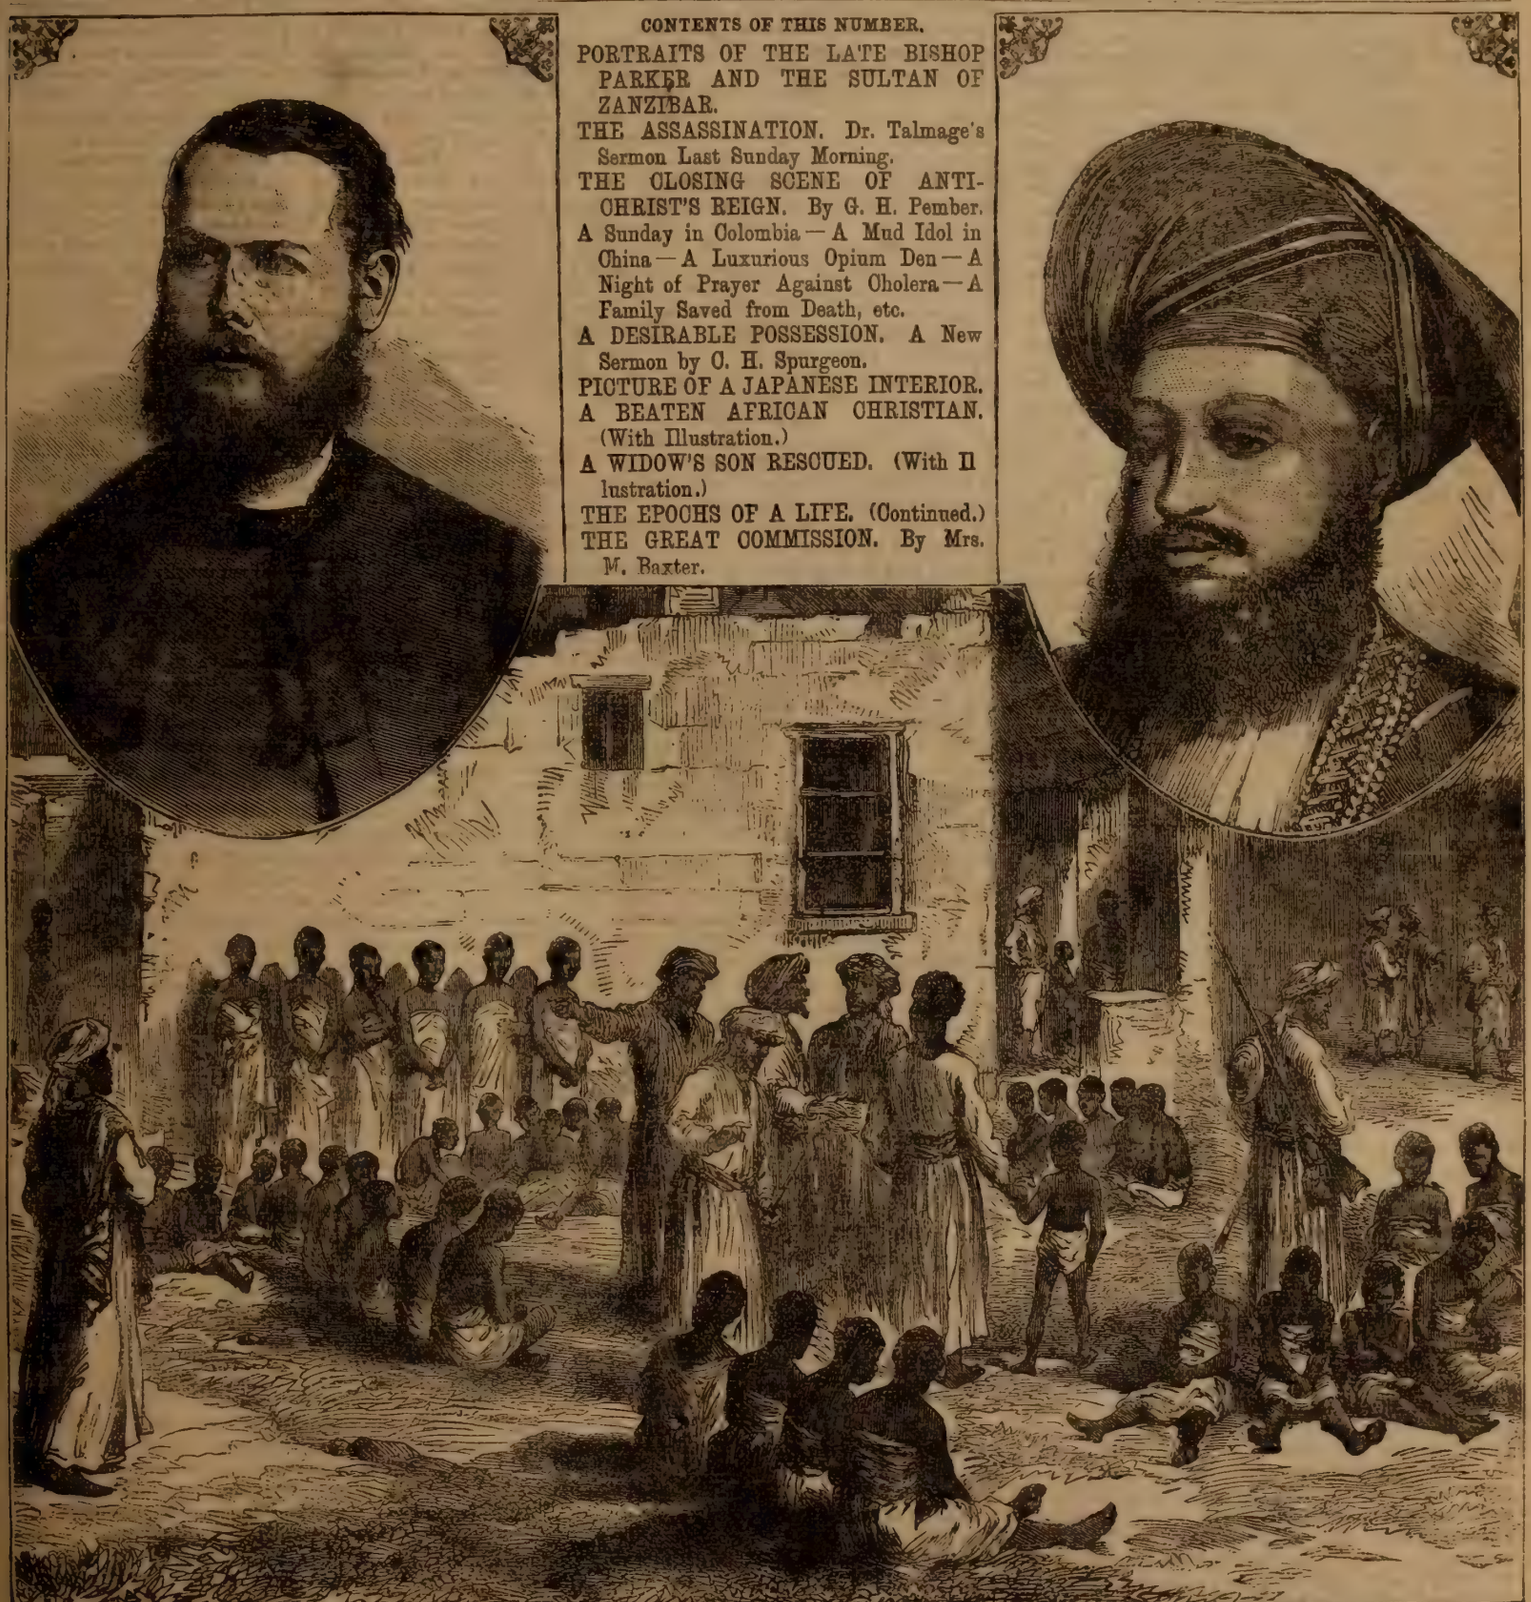
PICTURE OF A JAPANESE INTERIOR.

A BEATEN AFRICAN CHRISTIAN. (With Illustration.)

A WIDOW'S SON RESCUED. (With Illustration.)

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE. (Continued.)

THE GREAT COMMISSION. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



The Late Bishop Parker, of Equatorial Africa—The Late Sultan of Zanzibar—An African Slave Market.

THE LATE BISHOP PARKER.

Second Bishop of Equatorial Africa.

Born in 1851—Cambridge Life—Ordained in 1876—Becomes Curate at Exeter—Goes to Calcutta—Return to England in 1885—His Work Among the Gonds of India—Consecrated Bishop of Central Africa in 1886—His Journeys—His Death.

MUCH has been said of the hardihood, the persistence and determined resolution of the Anglo-Saxon race in pursuing any object when pursuit has once been commenced, no matter what obstacles are encountered, nor what reverses attend the earlier stages of the enterprise. An example of those qualities, consecrated to the service of Christ, is witnessed in the mission work in Central Africa. No sooner had the news of the martyrdom of Bishop Hannington (whose portrait appeared in this journal on January 27, 1887) been received, than other consecrated men volunteered to take the vacant place, knowing well that they too might fall as he fell. One was selected whose portrait appears on the preceding page, and he went full of faith to take up the work that Bishop Hannington had left undone. As was briefly mentioned in these columns last week, he, too, has fallen in the field after a brief period of eighteen months' labor. The full details of his death have not yet been received, but there is, unhappily, no reason to doubt the truth of the main sad fact. The post of danger is again vacant, but already offers are being made by valiant Christian men, who are ready to go out to fill the vacancy in the ranks of Christ's army.

The Right Rev. Henry Perrott Parker, B. A., was second Bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa. He was born in 1851, and was, therefore, only thirty-seven years old when he died. He was a graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, England. Amongst his most intimate friends at Cambridge, was the Rev. Jani Alli, who exerted a strong influence over him, and it is believed that the constant intercourse that took place between the two, first led Henry Parker to turn his mind to foreign missionary work. On graduating from Trinity, the young student was ordained, and for nearly three years served as curate in Exeter. In 1878, however, the claims of the foreign mission field could no longer be resisted, and he offered himself to the Church Missionary Society, and was accepted. At first it was proposed that he should go to Bombay, where Mr. Jani Alli was then stationed; but just then the Rev. J. Welland, the Secretary of the Church Missionary Society in Calcutta was sick, and it became necessary that a joint secretary should be associated with him, and to this post Mr. Parker was appointed. Just a year afterwards Mr. Welland died, and Mr. Parker became sole secretary. He remained doing the Society most valuable service. In the early part of 1885 he paid a brief visit home, but was soon back in India. At this time, however, it was not to Calcutta that he was assigned, but at his own desire to direct evangelistic work among the aboriginal Gônd people of the Central Province. To receive such a comrade (in addition to two young brethren) was a great encouragement to the Rev. H. D. Williamson, who had been laboring among the Gônds for six years. Mr. Parker's special object was to form a Mission which, from the first, should be self supporting. He thoroughly believed that this could be done, and that a Native Christian community gradually built up on such a system would be more stable than the dependent congregations that look to the missionary to provide churches and schools.

Six Years at Calcutta,

The Death of Bishop Hannington in 1885 imposed on the Missionary Society the task of selecting a successor from numerous missionaries ready to take up the work. Ultimately the Committee offered the Bishopric to Henry Parker. He was very young, being at the time only thirty-four years of age, but it was felt that his practical missionary experience rendered him specially qualified for that arduous and difficult post. But so intensely interested was he in his work amongst the Gônds that he only consented to be nominated for the Bishopric on condition that another missionary should be sent out in his place. He took farewell of his friends in Calcutta on August 2, 1886, when a special service was held in the Cathedral. The Bishop officiated, and gave an address, in the course of which he spoke of the sacrifice Mr. Parker's Indian friends were then making.

A Fellow Worker's Testimony to the value and efficiency of Mr. Parker's service was given by a missionary of the Church Missionary Society, who worked for some months with him in India. He said:

"I was associated with Mr. Parker for some seven months during the year 1879, living in the same house and sharing in the pastoral work at the old Church, Calcutta. I need hardly say that to hear of his death was a severe shock, for during our short intercourse I had learned to know and love him as a dear brother in Christ. Many and many a time have we knelt together and besought God for our work, and what seems to me now, as I look back, the most prominent point in his character was his earnest spirit of prayer. He never undertook anything, however trivial, without first seeking the Divine guidance and blessing. His temper and disposition were singularly sweet and loving, and his manner most winning, his influence being most powerful among young men.

His One Aim

and object was to preach Christ and Him crucified. I can recall many a case when his faithful testimony was blessed to the edification of Christ's Church in Calcutta. But his desire was to enter upon more direct missionary work; and when I returned to my station in Santalia, where I was doing medical work at the time, Henry Parker often came to visit me, and told me how much he longed to be promoted to labor more directly for the evangelization of the heathen. He seemed especially to be drawn towards the aboriginal tribes. And at length, after some years' excellent and faithful service as Secretary in Calcutta, and pastor of the old church, he was called of God to enter the Gônd Mission. Of this part of his life I can say little, as I left India in 1882; but I have heard how the same spirit of earnestness and self-sacrificing labor was exhibited there too; and I know well what a struggle it must have been to him to leave his Gônd Mission to undertake the more onerous duty of superintending

The Central African Church.

Few men could have been more fitted for this the last scene of his labors. His experience in the Secretariat in Calcutta had eminently adapted him for Africa, and during the short period of his episcopate he was enabled to show his wonderful power of organization. His character was indeed a singularly beautiful one, and its Christian fragrance will not soon be lost. Eminently a man of prayer, he loved to know that others too prayed for him; and how touching a sentence in his last letter to me, 'I wept tears of gratitude when I thought how many in England were praying for me!' He possessed a very clear judgment, and was wonderfully prudent and sagacious. His temper, too, was so even and calm that he never appeared in the least degree ruffled, even when the most trying circumstances and difficult positions confronted him. He was bold and fearless, yet never rash or headstrong, a loving and most sympathizing friend." Mr. Parker was on Monday, October 18, 1886, in St. James' Church, Paddington, the officiating Prelates being the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of London, Carlisle, Mauritius, and Sierra Leone. The sermon was preached by his friend, the Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, of Cambridge, who, in glancing at the characteristics of the diocese which that day received its second bishop, alluded in pathetic terms to the murder of Bishop Hannington. "And now," he added, "his successor is before us ready in the same cause, for death or for life, in this great sacred field."

Consecrated Bishop

Although Bishop Parker's Episcopate has lasted only eighteen months, it has not been in vain. He arrived at Frere Town on November 27, 1886; at once visited Zanzibar; was presented to the Sultan, and took counsel with Bishop Smythies. Then in December, 1886, returning to Frere Town, he visited Rabai Kisultini, of the Girlama country. Taita and Mr. Wray, Chagga and Mr. Fitch welcomed the Bishop in the succeeding January. The same month saw him, accompanied by his friend and companion, Mr. Blackburn, set out on a more extensive journey of four hundred miles through Usambara and Unguru to Mamboia, which was reached on August 5. From Mamboia their route lay to Mpwapwa, and on through Ugogo to Uyui, which was reached on September 19. There a month was spent, when the Bishop moved on to Wusambiro, west of Jordan's Nullah, at

The South End of Victoria Nyanza.

On November 15 he left Wusambiro, still in company with Mr. Blackburn, to explore the country south of Speke Gulf, with the object of selecting a new station. Having found what seemed a promising position at Nasa, he returned to Wusambiro. Here Bishop Parker met his band of missionaries, and for a fortnight (from December 13 to 28) considered, in company with Messrs. Ashe, Mackay, Blackburn, Walker, and Hooper, all the problems connected with their work. Writing soon after the end of this Conference, at least one of the missionaries present recorded in very thankful terms his sense of the Bishop's tact and love throughout this time, and of the spiritual profit derived from a little time in his company. Bishop Parker's plan was to pass on around the lake in the direction of Kavirondo, and to explore that country in connection with his plan for a more direct route to and from the coast. He had expected to leave Nasa, early in February, hoping to complete the journey and get back in time to start on the homeward route about the middle of April. Mr. Blackburn seems to have fallen ill upon March 5; consequently the Bishop and he had probably been travelling for three or four weeks, and the fatal sickness may have been contracted in the district either west or north of Speke Gulf. On May 1 a brief telegram announced the death of both the Bishop and his Chaplain after an illness of ten days.

Bishop Parker is said by those who best knew him to have combined in an exceptional degree the qualifications needed for his arduous work. Of deep spirituality, intense devotion, sound judgment, and withal of a loving and tender personal disposition, he exercised upon the noble little band of missionaries under his supervision, every one of whom was ready to follow him with devoted loyalty. Nor was it only within that circle alone that his remarkable personality made itself felt. A Wesleyan missionary came across the Bishop's path, and went on his way, strengthened and uplifted by communion and conference with him. All the characteristics which won the admiration and love of the missionary who writes of Henry Parker as he knew him in India, were observed and their influence felt in Africa. Nor were the organizing and administrative qualities of the man less conspicuous than those which go to form his more personal character. A clear thinker, he grasped with remarkable rapidity the situation in his vast diocese, the steps which seemed essential to success, and the best way of setting about their realization. The need of more men he saw and felt keenly; and the paramount necessity of giving the people

A Remarkable Influence

The Word of God in the Vernacular

he had but recently given an expression to in a letter to the secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Writing on January 12, 1888, from Wusambiro, he showed how helpful it would be to the missions in Mombassa, Frere Town, Girima, Shimba, Kisulutini, Taita, and Chagga, if the Bible Society were to establish a depot for Scriptures in Frere Town; and the Bishop asked that this should be done. He considered that mission work, in the part of Africa to which he referred, had suffered because inadequate attention had been given to the preparation of vocabularies, grammars, and to the translation of the Scriptures, &c., into the languages understood by the people. There is now a consensus of opinion, he said, amongst the laborers in the field that more must be attempted, and there are already a printing press in Ferre Town and a translation committee. The Rev. W. E. Taylor, of the Church Missionary Society, had been set apart at his suggestion to make translation work his first duty.

THE LATE SULTAN OF ZANZIBAR.

Born in 1837, and Died in 1888—Extent of His Father's Territory—The Slave Trade Treaty—Diminution of the Sultan's Dominion—Size and Population of Zanzibar—Commercial Importance.

SEYYID BARGASH BIN SAID, whose portrait accompanies that of the late Bishop Parker on the first page, was born in 1837, and died on March 27, 1888, at his palace at Zanzibar (a picture of which appeared in these columns on February 23, last). His death breaks the only remaining link connecting Zanzibar with her political past. When he was born, his father, Seyyid Said, ruled over Zanzibar, Muscat, and a huge territory of Eastern Africa as far as Lake Tanganyika. He was, therefore, a very considerable potentate; the most considerable by far in those parts. But when he died his fifteen sons quarrelled over the inheritance, until England intervened as mediator and persuaded one son to be content with Muscat, and another, Majid, with Zanzibar. When Majid died, in 1870, he was succeeded by his brother Seyyid Bargash, who was then thirty-three years of age. At that time Dr. (now Sir John) Kirk was Acting-Consul at Zanzibar; he acted as Bargash's mentor, and made British influence all-powerful at his court. It was he who succeeded, where Sir Bartle Frere had failed, in persuading the Sultan to sign a treaty which, if fully carried out, would have abolished the slave-trade in Zanzibar. This it has not done, but it has modified its worst features.

The Sultan had considerable trouble with the inland chiefs some four or five years ago; who, encouraged by German settlers, asserted their independence. War, however, was averted by a Convention held in London two years ago, by which England and Germany agreed that the Sultan's dominions should be confined to the islands and a strip of coast ten miles wide, and the Sultan prudently assented to this arrangement. Though a Wahabi, or member of the strictest Moslem sect, the late Sultan was always most considerate to Christian missionaries and travellers. Syud Khalifah, his elder brother, now succeeds to the throne.

The Territory of Zanzibar is situated on the east coast of Africa. It consists (1) of the island of Zanzibar, fifty-five miles in length and twenty-five miles in breadth, with an area of 625 square miles, with a population of 300,000; (2) the isles of Pemba and Mafia, and the African coast from Warsheik to Tungue, which is properly called the Suaheli coast. The population of Zanzibar island, in which the Sultan's palace is situated, is composed of Arabs, intermixed with various East African races, Hindi and Malagasy traders, free negroes and numerous foreigners; but chief among them are the Arab landowners, and slave-holders, and employers. The commercial importance of Zanzibar has been recently increasing, and its situation will doubtless lead to continued progress. European enterprise is becoming more and more engaged in this region, which, until Henry M. Stanley opened up the Congo river, was scarcely known except as the starting place of explorers.

HE OLD SLAVE MARKET

at Zanzibar is shown on the picture on the first page. It is an irregular, unpaved, oblong space, 50 yards by 30 yards in extent, three of its sides consisting of palm-thatched huts, the fourth presenting stone buildings of more respectable pretensions. In the days of the recognized existence of the slave trade, the sale generally took place between four and five o'clock in the afternoon. The centre of the market was occupied by the slaves, seated in rows upon the ground. Walking about and criticising the various "lots," might be seen men of every race belonging to Eastern Africa and Arabia. Apart from the other slaves, and standing up, in our picture, are to be seen the choice female specimens. Those who have witnessed it, say it was a revolting sight to watch a lascivious Arab, wishing to add to his harem, handling and examining the objects of his purchase before closing a bargain. There is grave reason to believe that, notwithstanding all that the British Government have done from time to time for the suppression of the traffic, it is still being carried on, with the connivance of the Zanzibar authorities, though not to the former extent.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Forty Years' Rest.—"When the Beloved Rev. Ebenezer Erskine lay upon his death-bed he was visited by a member of his congregation, who said to him, 'During your ministry among us, sir, you have given us many precious words and directions, but now, when you are dying, and your own soul about to be ushered into eternity, it would give me and many others great help to know assuredly upon what you are resting for your soul's salvation.' 'Ah,' said the dying minister, 'I am resting my soul where it has rested these forty years, upon Him who has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."' Yes, that is the God upon whom we rest, and we have the well-founded assurance that though we walk through the valley of the shadow of death our God will be with us and we need, therefore, fear no evil."

The Pattern on the Wall Paper.—A Worker among the poor narrated: "I once visited a woman who was just recovering from a severe illness. She said that, as she lay in bed, looking at the paper on the wall, which was of a red and white pattern, she thought of that passage in God's Word, 'Come, now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow' (Isaiah 1: 18). Then, pointing to the red, she would say, 'I have had sin as red as that, but I thank Thee, Lord, that Thou hast made them as white as that,' pointing to the white portion of the pattern. Yes, dear friends, God lets His people know that they are saved, that they may rejoice in the knowledge. As soon as she herself was saved through faith in the cleansing blood of Christ, this woman called her family around her, and for the first time had family worship. And what a heartfelt service it was, being presided over by one just snatched from the jaws of death, and who could not praise and thank her Saviour enough for His wonderful goodness to her."

"Plucked" at the College Examination.— Rev. Wm. Ross observed: "It was the last few days of the University session. Large crowds of excited students were gathered in the quadrangles; for upon that day the results of the various examinations had been made known, and there, affixed to the notice boards were long lists, upon which were the names of the successful candidates, ranged alphabetically. Every student, as he came near, anxiously scanned the names ranged under his initial, then retired with his face radiant with joy, or sunk in despondency, according to the published result of the examination. Among the last of the excited group there came up one somewhat elderly student. He had entered college very late, but had studied hard, and strained every nerve to qualify himself. As he approached, it was apparent to all that he was greatly agitated. He walked up to the list, and at one glance saw his name was not there. Instantly he became ashy pale; some feared he was about to faint, but recovering himself, he muttered, 'I am done for,' and walked away. He was too old to try again, and he looked upon himself as beaten in that pursuit in which he had been so earnest. But I see before me another crowd, larger than that of the students, to which every people, and tribe, and kingdom, have contributed. They stand before the great white throne, and the roll of Lamb's book of life is being read. And all whose names are not inscribed therein are lost for ever; it is too late to try again."

The Bridge That Spans the Chasm—A young student said: "One day, as I was walking in the country, I wished to go from one field to another, but they were separated by a stream too broad to be jumped with safety. I walked up the stream some distance, until at length I I came to a tree which was lying across the water, but I was afraid to risk myself upon it, and continued to walk on until I met a laborer going towards the stream. I stopped him and asked if it were safe to cross by that tree. He replied that it was, and seeing that he was a big, strong fellow, I asked him if he had used the tree as a bridge. He had. Then his opinion had more weight with me, because it was backed by personal experience. And I trustingly walked over the bridge in safety. And now I, who have walked over the Bridge, Jesus Christ, that spans the gulf of sin between fallen man and a righteous God, can assure you of the stability of the Bridge. I have crossed over, burdened with as heavy a load of sin as any one, and from my experience I can tell you that your faith in Him will not be misplaced."

Miserable in Heaven.—"The Rev. Mr. Keevill, when out walking one day, met a man to whom he said, 'I hope, friend, you have an interest in Christ?' 'That I have, now,' was his reply, 'but it was not so when you spoke to me last about twenty years ago.' 'Have I seen you before?' the minister inquired. 'Yes, sir,' said the man, twenty years ago: I was standing at the head of my horses after a spell of ploughing. I was swearing hard. You stood silently by for a minute, then solemnly said, 'I do not know what you would do in heaven, supposing you went there. There will be no bad language there, for all is pure and good, and as you hate that which is pure and good you would hate Christ, and it would be a misery for you to be there in heaven without loving Christ. When you went sadly away I saw myself to be so wicked, and unfit to be where Christ was, that I wept, and resolved, in God's strength, that from that night there should be a change. I came to Jesus in all my sinfulness and shame, and was washed in His precious blood, which cleansed every impurity, and now I know that when I go to heaven my chief joy will be to dwell where Jesus is, and gaze upon His glorious face.

Dying for His Soldier Brother.—Mr. Hamilton says: "There is a story told in connection with the decimation of the Strelzi by the then Czar of Russia. When that rebellious corps was drawn up in the Grand Square of Moscow, they were disarmed, then told to number off, and every tenth man to step out. Too well they knew what was to be the fate of those who were taken out. They were to be shot, to die for themselves and their comrades. All the men deserved to die, but only each tenth man was to receive the punishment. Side by side in that corps stood two brothers. As the numbering approached, the elder glanced anxiously down the rank. To his joy he saw he was safe, he was a ninth man; but the next instant a pang of horror shot throught his heart, for his brother, who stood next to him, was a tenth man. Instantaneously the thought flashed upon him, how could he meet his parents if he went home alone, to tell the sad fate of their favorite son, whom he himself had enticed to join that ill-fated corps? Swiftly and silently he glided behind his brother, and taking his place, gently pushed him into that which he had vacated. Steadily the numbering went on, the younger answered to nine, and the elder to ten, and, stepping out, died that his brother might live. Does this not remind us of Christ's great sacrifice for us? And if He died for us should we not live to Him?"

THE ASSASSINATION.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, June 3, 1888.

"Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me cannot be my disciple." Luke 14 : 27.

Crucifixions Under Darius—An Ordinary Mode of Punishment—A Forest of Crosses—One Sublimely Conspicuous—The Sufferer Upon It—Exhausted by Previous Scourgings—A Thrilling Picture at Antwerp—The Cross on Christ's Shoulders—The Stripping—The Crown of Thorns—The Cross Set Up—Suffering Aggravated by Absences—The Death Hours—A Test for Love—A Cross for Every One—Confession a Cross Like a Gate—A Young Man's Confession in a Store—A Greek Architect's Bold Announcement—Scars Won in Battle—The Fiery Cross.

THE cross was a gibbet on which criminals were put to death. It was sometimes made in the shape of the letter T, sometimes in the shape of the letter X, sometimes in the shape of the letter I—a simple upright; sometimes two cross-pieces against the perpendicular bar, so that upon the lower cross-piece the criminal partially sat. But whatever the style of cross, it was always disgraceful and always agonizing.

When Darius conquered Babylon, he put two hundred captives to death on the cross. When Alexander conquered Tyre, he put two thousand captives to death on the cross. So it was just An Ordinary Mode of Punishment.

But in all the forest of crosses on the hills, and in the valleys of the earth, there is one cross that attracts more attention than any other. It is not higher than the others, it is not made out of different wood, there is nothing peculiar in the notch at which the two pieces are joined, and as to the scene, they witnessed crucifixions every few weeks, so that I see a reckless man walking about the hill, and kicking carelessly aside a skull, and wondering who the villain was that had so flat and misshapen a head; and here is another skull, and there on the hillside is another skull. Indeed, the Bible says it was "a place of skulls." But about the victim on one of these crosses all ages are crying: "Who is He? Was He a man? Was He a God? Was He man and God?"

Through the darkness of that gloomy day, I come close up enough to the cross to see who it is. It is Jesus. How did He come there? Had He come up on the top of the hill to look off upon the beautiful landscape, or upon a brilliant sunset? No. He came there ill and exhausted. People sometimes wonder why Christ expired so quickly on the cross, in six or seven hours, while other victims have been on the cross for forty-eight hours before life was extinct. I will tell you the reason. He was exhausted when He came there. He had been scourged. We are horrified at the cruelties of the whipping-post, but those cruelties were mercy as compared with the scourging of Jesus Christ.

I saw at Antwerp a picture made by Rubens—

Rubens' Picture of the Scourging

of Jesus Christ. It was the most overmastering picture I ever looked at, or ever expect to see. As the long-frocked official opened the door that hid the picture, there He was—Christ with back bent and bared. The flagellator stood with the upper teeth clenched over the lower lip, as though to give violence to the blows. There were the swollen shoulders of Christ. There were the black and blue ridges, denied even the relief of bleeding. There was the flesh adhering to the whips as they were lifted. There were the marks where the knots in the whips gouged out the flesh. There stood the persecutor, with his foot on the calf of the leg of the Saviour, balancing himself. O! the furious and hellish look on those faces, grinning vengeance against the Son of God. The picture seized me, it overwhelmed me; it seemed as if it would kill me. I do not think I could have looked at it five minutes and have lived. But that, my friends, was before Christ had started for Calvary. That was only the whipping. Are you ready for your journey to the cross?

The carpenters have split the timber into two pieces. They are heavy and they are long pieces, for one of them must be fastened deep down in the earth lest the struggling of the victim upset the structure. They put this timber upon the shoulder of Christ very gradually, first, to see whether He can stand it, and after they find He can stand it, they put the whole weight upon Him. Forward now, to Calvary. The hooting and the yelling mob follow on. Under

The Weight of the Cross,

Christ being weary and sick, He stumbles and falls, and they jerk at His robe, indignant that He should have stumbled and fallen, and they cry: "Get up, get up!" Christ, putting one hand on the ground and the other hand on the cross, rises, looking into the face of Mary, His mother, for sympathy; but they tell her to stand back, it is no place for a woman—"Stand back and stop this crying."

Christ moves on with His burden upon His shoulders, and there is a boy that passes along with Him, a boy holding a mallet and a few nails. I wonder what they are for. Christ moves on until the burden is so great He staggers and falls flat into the dust, and faints dead away, and a ruffian puts his foot on Him and shakes Him as he would a dead dog, while another ruffian looks down at Him, wondering whether He has fainted away, or whether He is only pretending to faint away, and with jeer and contempt indescribable says: "Fainted, have have you? fainted? get up, get on!"

Now, they have arrived at the foot of the hill. Off with His clothes. Shall that loathsome mob look upon the unrobed body of Christ? Yes. The commanding officers say: "Unfasten the girdle, take off the coat, strip Him." The work is done. But bring the coat, for here are tossing up coin on the ground, saying: "Who shall have the coat?" One ruffian says: "I have it, I have it—it is mine!" He rolls it up and puts it under his arm, or he examines it to see what fabric it is made of. Then they put the cross upon the ground, and they stretch Christ upon it, and four or five men hold Him down while they drive the spikes home, at every thump a groan, a groan! Alas! Alas! the hour passes on and the time comes when they must crucify Him.

The Gamblers

Christ has only one garment left now, a cap, a cap of thorns No danger that it will fall off, for the sharp edges have punctured the temples and it is sure and fast. One ruffian takes hold of one end of the short beam of the cross, and another ruffian takes hold of the other end of the short beam of the cross, and another ruffian puts his arms around the waist of Christ, and another ruffian takes hold of the end of the long beam of the cross, and altogether they move on until they come to the hole digged in the earth, and with awful plunge it jars down with Its Burden of Woe.

It is not the picture of a Christ, it is not the statue of Christ, as you sometimes see in a cathedral; but it is the body of a bleeding, living, dying Christ. They sometimes say He had five wounds, but they have counted wrong. Two wounds for the hands, two wounds for the feet, one wound for the side: they say, five wounds. No, they have missed the worst and they have missed the most. Did you ever see the bramble out of which that crown of thorns was made? I saw one on a Brooklyn ferry-boat, in the hands of a gentleman who had just returned from Palestine, a bramble just like that out of which the crown of thorns was made. O! how cruel and how stubborn were the thorns. And when that cap of thorns was put upon Christ, and it was pressed down upon Him, not five wounds, but ten, twenty, thirty—I cannot count them. There were that made that scene worse. First, there was the absence of water. The climate was hot, the fever, the inflammation, the nervous prostration, the gangrene, had seized upon Him, and He terribly wanted water. His wounds were worse than gunshot fractures, and yet no water. A Turk, in the thirteenth century, was crucified on the banks of a river, so that the sight of the water might tantalize him. And oh! how the thirst of Christ must have tantalized, as He thought of the Euphrates and the Jordan and the Amazon and all the fountains of earth and Heaven poured out of His own hand. They offered Him an intoxicating draught made out of wine and myrrh, but He declined it. He wanted to die sober. No water!

Three or Four Absences

Then, my friends, there was the absence of light. Darkness always exasperates trouble. I never shall forget the night in the summer of 1873, in the steamer Greece, mid-Atlantic, every moment expecting the steamer to go down. All the lights in the cabin were blown out. The captain came crawling in on his hands and knees, for he could not stand upright, so violently was the vessel pitching, and he cried out: "Light up, light up!" The steward said: "We can't light up; the candles are gone and the holders are gone." The captain said: "I can't help that; light up!" The storm was awful when the lights were burning, worse when the lights went out.

Then there was the absence of faithful nurses. When you are ill, it is pleasant to have the head bathed, and the hands and feet rubbed. Look at the hands and feet of Christ, look at the face of Christ.

There Were Women There.

who had cared for the sick, but none of them might come up near enough to help. There was Christ's mother, but she might not come up to help. They said: "Stand back, stand back; this is no place for you." The high priests and the soldiers wanted it their own way; they had it their own way.

The hours pass on, and it is twelve o'clock of the Saviour's suffering, and it is one o'clock, and it is two o'clock, and it is almost three o'clock. Take the last look at that suffering face; wan and pinched, the purple lips drawn back against the teeth, the eyes red with weeping, and sunken as though grief had pushed them back; blackness under the lower lid, the whole body adroop and shivering with the last chill, the breath growing feebler and feebler and feebler, until He gives one long, deep, last sigh.

He is Dead!

Oh, my soul, He is dead! Can you tell why? Was He a fanatic, dying for a principle that did not amount to anything? Was He a man infatuated? No; to save your soul from sin, and mine, and make eternal life possible, He died. There had to be a substitute for sin. Who shall it be? "Let it be Me," said Christ; "let it be Me." You understand the meaning of that word, substitution. You were drafted for the last war; some one took your place, marched your march, suffered your wounds, and died at Gettysburg. Christ comes to us while we are fighting our battle with sin, and death, and hell, and He is our Substitute. He marches our march, fights our battle, suffers our wounds, and dies our death. Substitution! Substitution!

How do you feel in regard to that scene described in the text, and in the region around about the text? Are your sympathies aroused? or are you so dead in sin, and so abandoned, by reason of your transgressions, that you can look upon all that tearless and unmoved? No, no; there are thousands of people here this morning who can say in the depths of their soul, "No, no, no; if Jesus endured that, and all that for me, I ought to love Him. I must love Him, I will love Him, I do love Him. Here, Lord, I give myself to Thee; 'tis all that I can do."

But how are you going to test your love, and test your earnestness? My text gives a test. It says, that while Christ carried

A Cross for You,

you must be willing to carry a cross for Christ. "Well," you say, "I never could understand that. There are no crosses to be carried in this land; those persecutions have passed, and in all the land there is no one to be crucified, and yet in the pulpit and in the prayer-meetings you all keep talking about carrying a cross. What do you mean, sir?" I mean this: that is a cross which Christ calls you to do, which is unpleasant and hard. "Oh," you say, "after hearing the story of this Christ, and all that He has endured for me, I am ready to do anything for Him. Just tell me what I have to do, and I'll do it. I am ready to carry any cross."

Suppose I should ask you at the close of a religious service, to rise up, announcing yourself on the Lord's side—could you do it? "Oh, no," you say, "I have a shrinking and a sensitive nature, and it would be impossible for me to rise before a large assemblage, announcing myself on the Lord's side." Just as I feared. You Cannot Stand that Cross.

The first one that is offered you, you reject. Christ carried a mountain, Christ carried a Himalaya, Christ carried a world for you, and you cannot lift an ounce for Him.

But here is a man whose cross will be to announce among his business associates to-morrow morning on Exchange, that he has begun a new life; that while he wants to be faithful in his worldly duties, he is living for another world, and he ought to advise all those who are his associates, so far as he can influence them, to begin with him the Christian life. Could you do that, my brother? "Oh, no," you say, "not just that. I think religion is religion, and business is business, and it would be impossible for me to recommend the Christian religion in places of worldly business." Just as I feared. There is a second cross offered you, and you cannot carry it. Christ lifted a mountain for you; you cannot lift an ounce for Him.

There is some one whose cross will be to present religion in the home circle.

Would You Dare to Kneel down and pray if your brother and sister were looking at you? Could you ask a blessing at the tea-table? Could you take the Bible and gather your family around you, and read of Christ and heaven and your immortal soul? Could you then kneel and pray for a blessing on your household? "Oh," you say, "not exactly that. I couldn't quite do that, because I have a very quick temper, and if I professed religion and tried to talk religion in my household, and then after that I should lose my temper, they would scoff at me and say: 'You are a pretty Christian!'" So you are cowed down, and their sarcasm keeps you out of heaven and away from Christ, when, under God, you ought to take your whole family into the kingdom. Christ lifted a mountain, lifted a world for you; you cannot lift an ounce for Him. I see how it is: you want to be favorable to religion, you want to support Christian institutions, you like to be associated with those who love Jesus Christ; but as to taking a positive step on this subject, you cannot—you cannot, and my text, like a gate of a hundred bolts, bars you away from peace on earth and glory in heaven.

There are hundreds of men and women here brave enough in other things in life who simply for the lack of manliness and womanliness stay away from God. They dare not say: "Forever and forever, Lord Jesus, I take Thee. Thou hast redeemed me by Thy blood, here is my immortal spirit. Listen, all my friends. Listen, all the world." They are lurking around about the kingdom of God—they are lurking around about it,

Expecting to Crawl in some time when nobody is looking, forgetful of the tremendous words of my text: "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after Me, cannot be My disciple." An officer of a neighboring church told me that he was in a store in New York—just happened in—where there were many clerks, and a gentleman came in and said to a young man standing behind the counter: "Are you the young man that arose the other night in the Brooklyn Tabernacle and asked for prayers?" Without any flush of cheek, he replied: "I am. I haven't always done right, and I have been quite bad; but since I arose for prayers, I think I am better than I was." It was only his way of announcing that he had started for the higher life. God will not cast out a man who is brave enough to take a step ahead like that.

I tell you these things this morning because, my dear friends, I want to show you how light the cross is that we have to carry compared with that which Christ carried for us. You have not had the flesh torn off for Christ's sake in carrying your cross. You have not carried the cross until it fetched the blood. Under His there was a pool of carnage that plashed the horses' fetlocks. You have friends to sympathize with you in carrying the cross: Christ trod the winepress of God's wrath alone, alone! The cross that you and I ought to carry represents only a few days or a few years of trial. The cross that Christ carried for us had compressed into it the agonies of eternity.

There has some one come here to-day whom you have not observed. He did not come through the front door; He did not come down any of these aisles; yet I know He is here. He is from the East, the far East. He comes with blistered foot, and with broken heart, and cheeks red, not with health but with blood from the temples. I take hold of His coat and I say: "It does not seem to fit Thee."

"No," He says, "it is not mine; it is borrowed; it does not belong to me now. For my vesture did they cast lots." And I say to Him: "Thine eyes are red as though from loss of sleep." He says: "Yes, the Son of man had not where to lay His head." And I touch the log on His back and I say:

"Why Carriest Thou This?"

"Ah!" He says, "that is a cross I carry for thee and for the sins of the whole world. That is a cross. Fall into line, march on with Me in this procession, take your smaller crosses and your lighter burdens, and join Me in this march to Heaven." And we join that procession with our smaller crosses and our lighter burdens, and Christ looks back and He sees some are halting because they cannot endure the shame, or bear the burden, and with a voice which has in it majesty and omnipotence, He cries until all the earth trembles: "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after Me, cannot be My disciple."

O! my brethren, my sisters—for I do not speak professionally, I speak as a brother would speak to a brother or sister—my brother, can you not bear a cross if at last you can wear a crown? Come now, let us divide off. Who is on the Lord's side? Who is ready to turn his back upon the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world? A Roman emperor said to

A Greek Architect:

"You build me a coliseum, a grand coliseum, and if it suits me I will crown you in the presence of all the people, and I will make a great day of festival on your account." The Greek architect did his work, did it magnificently, planned the building, looked after its construction. The building was done. The day for opening arrived. In the coliseum were the emperor and the Greek architect. The emperor rose amid the plaudits of a vast assembly and said: "We have gathered here to-day, to open this coliseum, and to honor the Greek architect. It is a great day for the Roman Empire. Let this building be prosperous, and let honor be put upon the Greek architect. O! we must have a festival to-day. Bring out those Christians and let us have them put to death at the mouth of the lions." The Christians were put into the centre of the amphitheatre. It was to be a great celebration in their destruction. Then the lions, hungry and three-fourths starved, were let out from their dens in the side of the amphitheatre, and they came forth with mighty spring to destroy and rend the Christians, and all the galleries shouted: "Huzza, huzza! Long live the emperor!" Then the Greek architect arose in one of the galleries and shouted until in the vast assemblage all heard:

"I too am a Christian!"

and they seized him in their fury and flung him to the wild beasts, until his body, bleeding and dead, was tumbled over and over again in the dust of the amphitheatre. Could you have done that for Christ? Could you, in a vast assemblage, all of whom hated Christ, have said "I am a Christian," or, "I want to be a Christian?" Would you have had the ten thousandth part of the enthusiasm and the courage of the Greek architect? Nay, I ask you another question: would you in an assemblage where they are nearly all Christians—in an assemblage a vast multitude of whom love Christ and are willing to live, and if need be, to die for Him—would you dare to say: "I am a Christian," or, "I want to be a Christian?" Would you say in the presence of the friends of Christ as much as the Greek architect said in the presence of the enemies of Christ? O! are there not multitudes here this morning who are ready to say: "Let the world look on, let all the galleries of earth and heaven and hell look on, I take Christ this day. Come applause or abuse, come sickness or health, come life or death, Christ forever."

Are You for Christ, are you against Him? The destinies of eternity tremble in the balance. It seems as if the last day had come and we were gathered for the reckoning. "Behold, He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him." What I say to one I say to all. What are you doing for Christ?

O! Christian man, O! Christian woman? Have you any scars to show in this conflict? When a war is over the heroes have scars to show. One hero rolls back his sleeve and shows a gunshot fracture, or he pulls down the collar and shows where he was wounded in the neck. Another man says: "I have never had the use of my limb since I was wounded at that great battle." When the last day comes, when all our battles are over, will we have any wounds for Christ? Some have wounds for sin, wounds for the devil, wounds gotten in fighting on the wrong side. Have we wounds that we can show—wounds gotten in the battle for Christ and for the truth? On that Resurrection day Christ will have plenty of scars to show; Christ will stand there and show the scars on His brow, the scars on His hands, and the scars on His feet, and He will put aside the robe of His royalty and show the scar on His side, and all heaven will break down with emotion and gratitude in one great sob, and then in one great hosanna. Will you and I have Any Scars to Show?

There will be Ignatius, on that day showing the mark of the paw and teeth of the lion that struck him down in the Coliseum. There will be glorious John Huss, showing just where on his foot the flames began on that day when his soul took wing of flame and soared up from Constance. There will be Hugh McKail ready to point to the mark on his neck where the axe struck him. There will be McMillan and Campbell and Freeman, the American missionaries who with their wives and children were put to death in that awful massacre at Cawnpore, showing the places where the daggers of the Sepoys struck them. There will be the Waldenses showing where their limbs were broken on the day when the Piedmontese soldiery pitched them over the rocks. Will you and I have any wounds to show? Have we fought any battles for Christ? O! that we might all be enlisted for Christ, that we might all be willing to suffer for Christ, that we might all bear a cross for Christ. When wanted to raise an army, they would make a wooden cross, and then set it on fire, and carry it with other crosses they had, through the mountains, through the highlands, and among the people, and as they waved the cross the people would gather to the standard and fight for Scotland. So to-day, I come out with the cross of the Son of God. It is a flaming cross—flaming with suffering, flaming with triumph, flaming with glory. I carry it out among all the people. Who will be on the Lord's side? Who will gather to the standard of Emmanuel? "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after Me, cannot, cannot be My disciple."

The Scottish Chieftains

THE CLOSING SCENE OF ANTICHRIST'S REIGN.

By G. H. Pember, M. A.*

Antichrist's Last Resource — The Vast Army Around Jerusalem — The City at Its Last Extremity—On the Verge of Capture—The Praying Inhabitants—Sudden Darkness—The Glory of the Descending Christ—Antichrist's Doom—The Cloven Mountain—The Refuge of the Jews—The Triumphal March Into the City.

THE closing scenes of Antichrist's reign will probably be terrible to himself as well as to the world. As to the plagues of the locusts, and the demon-horsemen, they come from below, and are, apparently, under his own direction and control. But with their disappearance his resources are exhausted, and then the fingers of Him, who is the Last as well as the First, begin to write the doom of the Beast, and the False Prophet upon the sky. For with "the wrath of God, Who liveth for ever and ever," and their contents are poured down from heaven by His agents issuing from the celestial Temple. Just as when the Lord looked out from the pillar of cloud, and took off the chariot-wheels of the Egyptians, immediately before the utter overthrow of Pharaoh and his host; like the smiting of the Sodomites with blindness, which, after an interval of but a few hours, was followed by the descent of the fiery deluge; so these appalling plagues will be premonitory of the final, the irresistible, and the all-destructive, stroke. Upon the human inhabitants of the world they will be sent in mercy as a last appeal: but men will only blaspheme God's name the more, and will not repent to give Him glory; while the Antichrist, goaded to blasphemous insanity, will dare—in spite of the threatening signs of Omnipotent interference, and the sudden catastrophe of his great city—to make war upon the Lamb.

The Vials are Filled

But as soon as that conflict begins, it is ended. The saints upon earth have Long and Painful Struggles with the Powers of Darkness, and often do they need to remember the prophet's cry of faith—"Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me." (Micah 7:8). Nay, even the angels have their one-and-twenty days of agonizing with the fallen High Ones that are still on high. (Dan. 10:13). But the instant that the glorious Lord appears, the foe will be paralyzed, and all resistance cease.

The last scene is sketched for us in the fourteenth chapter of Zechariah and the nineteenth of the Apocalypse.

The Armies of Antichrist will have marched from Armageddon, in the north of Palestine, to besiege Jerusalem; and so numerous will they be that they will literally overspread the land. They will have closed in upon the Holy City, and the anxious eyes of those who peer from its loftiest watch-towers will be able to discern nothing but the serried ranks of splendid infantry and cavalry, and the long and heavy trains of artillery, covering the ground. Yet, although the inhabitants of Jerusalem are defenceless so far as carnal means are concerned, the spirit of grace and supplication is at last poured out upon them, and, as the cruel faces of the foe advance upon their city, fervent prayer is ascending from its midst; and, from no feigned lips, the cry goes up to God—"Oh that Thou wouldst rend the heavens, that Thou wouldst come down!"

There is, however, no interference: the foremost companies of the enemy are on the point of entering the streets: another moment, and the voice of prayer will be drowned by the outcries of terror and the shrieks of the wounded and the ravished. But, just at this awful crisis, the noon-day sun suddenly withdraws its light, and becomes black as sackcloth: the city is snatched from the view of those who are already sure of their prey: thick night enshrouds them:

A Horror of Great Darkness

paralyzes every eagerly advancing foot. An instant of silence, and then, swiftly as God's arrows speed from East to West, the blackness of heaven is cloven asunder, and the dazed earth flooded with a light such as it has never beheld since the sin of Adam. In the midst of the refulgent splendor the hosts of heaven are revealed descending towards Jerusalem, and at their head, conspicuous far beyond all, glorious in His apparel, and moving in the greatness of His strength, rides the Christ, at last confronting the Antichrist.

Hitherto proud boastings have issued from the lips of Satan's king: but now he falls helplessly to the ground, blasted by the red lightning which streams from the King of kings; and, together with the False Prophet, and in full sight of his countless armies, he is seized by the angels of the Lord, to be hurled alive into the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone.

Christ Alights Upon the Earth, and His feet stand upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the East: there is a mighty earthquake, and the mountain cleaves asunder, one half moving towards the North and the other half towards the South, so that there is a great valley between them. (Zech. 14: 4.) Then the Jews, guided by a Divine impulse or command, pour out of their city and run into the newly formed valley, with such haste as they have never shown since they fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah. (Zech. 14: 5.) For it is the place where the meek of the land are to be hidden: (Zeph. 2: 3) it is the rock cleft and the chamber prepared for them. (Isa. 26: 20, 21.). And as soon as they are safely enclosed within it, the Lord will destroy His irrepentant foes throughout the whole length of Palestine, from Armageddon to Bozrah; so that when the children of Abraham come forth from their covert, the multitudinous forces of the enemy, which would have devoured them, will be ashes beneath the soles of their feet. (Mal. 4: 2, 3.) The merciless countenance of the Antichrist, "that opened not the house of his prisoners," (Isa. 14: 17) will have vanished for ever, and in his stead the Christ will be standing before them, their Redeemer and Saviour, who loved not His own life that He might bring them peace. How fair will He then appear to them: with what rapture will their hearts respond to the invitation to lead Him into Jerusalem as their King. For while the Lord will break in pieces all His persistent foes, He would have the hands of those who love Him to open their doors, that He may enter in.

How Glorious a Procession will that be which will move from the cloven Mount of Olives to the Holy City. Along the very way, over the Brook Kidron and up to the gates of Jerusalem, which the Lord once trod in sorrow as He went to His death, He will now pass in triumph as the King of kings and Lord of lords, to see at length of the travail of His soul. It is for this time, probably, that the twenty-fourth Psalm was written: at least it marvellously expresses what must be the feelings of those Jews who will conduct their Messiah to the place which He has chosen, and who will not forget the command—"Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion: for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."

Too often they will have heard the worshippers of the Antichrist denying, not merely the sovereignty, but even the very existence of the Father and the Son: they will be sufficiently acquainted with those evolutionary theories which have been already invented to demonstrate, on a basis of fiction, that the world was able to form itself, and had no need of a Creator. But after the wondrous things which their eyes have seen, with how full a heart will they sing:

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof;
The world, and they that dwell therein.
For He hath founded it upon the seas,
And established it upon the floods."

Then, as they begin to ascend the hill toward the citadel, they will bethink them—The Holy One of Israel is in our midst; what manner of men must we be who are henceforth to dwell in His presence for ever!

By the prophet Daniel the Jews are called "the people of the Saints of the High Places," and these Saints with whom they are so closely connected are whose members will both accompany their great Head when He returns to Jerusalem, and will also watch over His earthly people during the Millennium. There is, then, no reader of these pages whom the Lord Jesus has not invited to be with Him, and to share His joy, on that wondrous day, when, after the lapse of so many weary centuries, He shall appear as the Deliverer, to turn away ungodliness from Jacob. And the day is fast approaching: for already the children of Abraham are being harried out of their dwellings among the Gentiles, and are beginning to gather to their own land.

The Glorified Church,

* From his new work entitled, "Antichrist; Babylon and the Coming Kingdom"; a volume of remarkable originality and power, showing much scholarly research. 171 pages. Price in cloth, including postage, 50 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

A MUD IDOL IN DANGER.

THE effort to raise female character in the East is obstructed by a prejudice which is founded on the immorality associated with education in the only class of women who, prior to missionary work, had any learning at all. Mr. Gutterson who is laboring in the island of Madura in the Indian Archipelago, mentions two facts in a letter to the Missionary Herald, which show how dark is the present state of women there. He says that one of the Bible women employed by the American Board, noticed a woman worshipping an idol near her house. "Won't the next rain injure that god?" said the Bible-woman, "Yes; but so I've been taught to do, and I know of no better way; what is your way?" replies the woman. "For a long time many of the high-caste Hindus have objected," said the Bible-woman, "to my teaching their wives to read, it being the custom to teach only the temple dancing-girls." Such has been the state of society for generations; the idea of female education has been associated with the temple service, which was not that of a vestal. No wonder that civilization lags in the East. In England a woman takes a senior wrangler's prize in Greek, nor are American girls behind. In India men think it a disgrace to educate their daughters, and point with scorn to the life of those who have been taught to read.

A NIGHT OF PRAYER AGAINST CHOLERA.

AT the recent meeting of the International Medical Missionary Society in New York, of which the indefatigable Dr. Dowkontt is the founder and director, an interesting speech was made by Dr. George E. Post, who has labored for a quarter of a century as medical missionary in Syria. He said that as a clergyman he could never gain an entrance among these people, who would gladly welcome him as a Medical Missionary. He had himself been decorated by the Sultan, had ridden in state on the Pasha's own horse, attended by envoys and troops, and had lodged in the very palace. Moreover, hundreds of Moslem women had come to him in their times of sickness, who would never go to one of their own countrymen.

A poor Moslem woman, upon whose arm the Doctor had operated, was afterwards seen by him at her house surrounded by a lot of young girls. The Doctor read from Isaiah 53, and asked, "Who wrote these words?" "God." "Of whom were they spoken—of Mahomet?" "No, of Christ; it would not be true of anyone but Him." So they replied, and then fell on their knees in tears, and prayed with the Doctor to that Christ. A few years since Dr. Post was resting at Mount Lebanon, when a messenger came five days' journey asking for some medicine for cholera, as many were dying. There was a church of native converts in that city, and they had sent the man to Dr. Post. Instead of sending the medicine he decided to go himself. It was in August, the heat intense, but the Doctor and his faithful attendant went.

His man, however, confessed fear of the cholera, and as they neared the city he begged the Doctor to let him stay outside all night to pray. But the Doctor stayed with him, and in the morning the man's fear was all gone, and they went in together, their self-sacrificing spirit causing all the people to forget their differences, leading them to meet to pray, and praise, and weep together. Not one of the Christians died from cholera.

A SUNDAY IN COLOMBIA.

IN the course of a tour in the United States of Colombia which the Rev. J. C. Caldwell describes in a letter to the Church, he spent a Sunday in Zenza, which he was told was a very religious town. This is the way that Sunday was spent there: At last we arrived at the town, and inquired for lodgings at an inn. A tall, rough-looking fellow came out and said we might stop there, so we entered the house back of the saloon, glad to get any place to sleep, and after disposing of our beasts asked for dinner, and sat down to talk to curious people who began to gather about us. Next morning, Sabbath, when we came to take our chocolate and bread, we found our host with other gamblers seated at the dining-room table gambling. That day we rested and read and observed the habits of the people. I never saw such a "religious" place. Every little while the bells would ring for mass; people from all directions flocked from the surrounding country to the Catholic church. Between one mass and the next one the people spent the time either drinking and chattering, or quarrelling in the big square in front of the church, whilst our host, with many others among the principal men of the place, spent the time in gambling; at least we found them thus engaged when from time to time we had occasion to return to the dining-room, a miserable, filthy gambling-room.

A LUXURIOUS OPIUM DEN.

THE following description of the most famous resort of opium smokers in China—the nan-ginsin, at Shanghai, appeared originally in the North China Herald. "This den," the report says, "is known throughout the length and breadth of the empire to the Chinese, and it helps to make Shanghai regarded as a city affording exceptional opportunities for pleasure and dissipation. It is situated in the French concession in Shanghai, within a stone's-throw of the wall of the native city, within which no opium shops are supposed to exist. The character of the place could not be guessed from its external appearance, although the air of the people passing in and out might suggest it. The throngs visiting it represent all stations of life, from the coolie to the wealthy merchant or the small mandarin. It is with difficulty that one gets inside through the crowds of people hanging round the door. Those who have not the requisite number of copper cash to procure the baneful pipe watch with horrible wistfulness each of the more affluent pass in with a nervous, hurried step, or totter out wearing that peculiar dazed expression which comes after the smoker's craving has been satisfied and his transient pleasure has passed away.

"One requires a strong stomach to stand the sickening fumes with which the air inside is thickened. The clouds of smoke, the dim light from the numerous colored lamps, the number of reclining forms with distorted faces bent over the small flames at which the pipes are lighted, cause the novice a sickening sensation. But as soon as the eye becomes accustomed to the scene, it is noticed that the place is got up on an expensive scale. In the centre of the lower room hangs one of the finest of Chinese lamps, the ceiling is of richly carved wood, while the painted walls are thickly inlaid with a peculiarly marked marble, which gives the idea of unfinished landscape sketches. Numerous doors on all sides lead to the smokers' apartments. In the outer portion of the building stands a counter covered with little boxes of the drug ready for smoking, which a dozen assistants are kept busy handing out to the servants who wait upon the habitués of the place. The average daily receipts are said to be about $1,000.

"The smoking apartments are divided into four classes. In the cheapest are coolies, who pay about eight cents for their smoke. In the dearest the smoke costs about fourteen cents. The drug supplied in each class is much the same both in quality and quantity; it is the difference in the pipes that regulates the price The best kinds are made of ivory, the stem being often inlaid with stones and rendered more costly by reason of elaborate carving; the cheapest kinds are made simply of hard wood. The rooms also are furnished according to class. In the most expensive the lounge upon which the smoker reclines is of fine velvet, with pillows of the same material; the frames of each couch are inlaid with mother-of-pearl and jade, and the whole air of these rooms is one of sensuous luxury. There is also a number of private rooms "In the poorer section will be seen many wearers of the tattered yellow and gray robes of the Buddhist and Taoist priests. Women form a fair proportion of the smokers. The common belief is that the opium sleep is attended by a mild pleasurable delirium, with brief glances of Elysium; but this is the exception, not the rule. People smoke to satisfy the craving begotten of previous indulgence. There is accommodation for 150 smokers at a time, and there is seldom a vacancy very long. The stream of smokers goes on from early morning till midnight, when the place closes."

A FAMILY SAVED FROM DEATH.

ONE of those horrible tragedies comprising murder and suicide which occasionally startle the whole community, was averted recently by the timely visit of a Christian physician. Dr. Dowkontt, who is doing a grand work among the poor of New York by sending out the young men whom he is training for medical missionaries into the tenement house districts and slums of the city, to begin their work among the heathen at home, relates the incident. He says that word was brought to the dispensary that a family was in sickness and destitution, and a doctor was sent to investigate. He found a family of five persons under very painful circumstances. The father and husband had been trying in vain to get work, and the entire family had been two whole days without food. The wife and mother and one of the children were very sick, and all were in a starving condition. Some suitable food was soon obtained by the doctor, and appropriate medicine given, by which means their pressing needs were met.

During conversation had with them, the fact of the father having decided on the morning the doctor came to their aid, to take the children's lives, his wife's and his own, was made known. Temporary aid was given them for a time, work obtained for the man, and better still, both man and wife were led to the Saviour. Thus they were not only saved physically, the sick being healed, and the hungry fed and cared for—but we trust, and believe, that they were also saved spiritually, thus saved body and soul.

A MISSIONARY PIONEER.

ONE of the noble band of missionary pioneers whose names are now almost forgotten, save by those who, laboring in the same fields, find their labors lightened by the toil of their predecessors, was Bartholomew Ziegenbalg, whom Frederick IV., King of Denmark, sent out to labor for Christ, in Tranquebar. In a recently published work, reprinted in this country, by A. C Armstrong & Son, of New York, Dr. Wm. Fleming Stevenson tells the story of his heroic labors under difficulties which would have crushed any man not supported by unwavering faith in God. He says:

The journey to India was then a serious matter. Sailing on November 29, they did not reach Tranquebar till July 9, 1706. It was early in the morning when they arrived, and they were ordered to remain in a house before the gate till the Governor had leisure to come in the afternoon. On his arrival, assuming the utmost roughness, he asked what brought them there. They were a mere nuisance. Had they any authority? What could he do? That was no place for missionaries. They were not wanted. What could the king know about such things? And so turned upon his heels and withdrew with his suite to the fort.

The sun had set, and as already the houses were shrouded in gloom the strangers could not tell what turn to take, but watched and waited under the silent stars—the first Protestant missionaries that ever stood on Indian soil, wondering much what would happen next, and bethinking themselves that even the Son of man had not where to lay His head.

Ziegenbalg and his friend owed their shelter for the next few days to the pity of one of the Governor's suite. Afterward they were permitted to occupy a house upon the wall, close by the heathen quarters, and here they settled down to their work, with patience and trust, a confession of their weakness and shrinking, and a quiet, manly resolution that are very touching. Six days after his arrival we find Ziegenbalg busy acquiring the first rudiments of Tamul, without books, grammars, dictionaries, or even an alphabet! By extraordinary industry he was able to speak the language intelligibly in eight months. In 1709 he could speak in Tamul as familiarly as in his native German. He had scarcely been two years in India when he began the translation of the New Testament. It was finished within three years, and then, with characteristic tenacity of purpose, he took the opportunity of a serious illness which interrupted his other labors, to commence the Old Testament, a much more formidable enterprise, and which he only succeeded in carrying as far as the end of Ruth. So this young priest who could preach in Tamul (he was only twenty-six) had already become a great power in southern India, and was shaking the heathen mind by his "incessant speaking about the things of God."

A DESCENDANT OF MOHAMMED REVILED.

A NOTABLE inquirer in Kurdistan was recently met by Rev. S. G. Wilson, the well-known Presbyterian missionary in Persia, during a tour among the Koords, which he describes in a letter to the Church. The man, he says, is a very intelligent and apparently sincere inquirer. He is owner of three villages, and the chief of a band of "Dervish penitents," while at the same time a descendant of Mohammed. His near relatives hold the chief religious offices in the district. He has long been a reader of the Bible, and has had much intercourse with preachers and missionaries. He is a frequent attendant at preaching, and has the name of being a Christian in the community. His relatives neglect and oppose him, and the boys in the street use his name as they would the devil's. Once he had the names of the apostles on a paper in his pocket, and it accidently fell out in the court-room. One of the judges picked it up, and with others began to assail him for his opinions. He boldly maintained the divinity of Christ, and with such ability that they were unable to answer him, and closed the discussion, saying, "Let him go; he is an infidel." At another time he and some Armenians were caught in a fierce snow-storm, and were greatly alarmed. The Kurd was heard by the Armenians to cry out, "Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani?" The Armenians, not recognizing the prayer, thought he was becoming demented; but he chided them for their ignorance of their own Scriptures. He says that three times in distress he has prayed this prayer and been delivered.

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.00.

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages, postage included,

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

The whole edition of the Christian Herald was mailed last week to subscribers during Tuesday, May 29. The last delivery at the New York Post Office, duly receipted for, was made at 11.46 P. M. This information is given to enable subscribers whose copies of the paper are delayed, to make definite complaint to their Postmasters.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Caucus of Democratic Members of the House held on May 30, pledged the party to united support of the Mills Tariff Bill, as it should be finally presented by the Committee on Ways and Means and to vote for no amendment unless proposed by a member of that committee. This decision of course will not be regarded as binding by Mr. Randall and his friends. A large number of amendments have also been presented by Democratic members which will probably receive a considerable amount of Democratic support. Against this, however, must be reckoned some Republican defections. That this element will have weight, there can be no doubt. In the vote that was taken on Thursday last, on the proposal to defer the operation of the free list until November 1889, the Democrats received the support of five Republicans—Messrs. Nelson and Lind, of Minnesota, Anderson and Fuller, of Iowa, and Smith of Wisconsin.

The Fisheries Treaty With Great Britain was debated last week in open Executive Session in the Senate. Mr. Frye, of Maine, who is the recognized leader of the opposition to ratification, condemned the treaty in strong terms. His speech was wholly devoted to denunciation of the treaty and the Government. The strong arguments which were expected from him were not adduced, but there is no doubt that they will be formulated by other Republican Senators in the course of the debate. Mr. Frye was apparently carried away by his indignation. He characterized the treaty as a cowardly betrayal of American interests—"the most disgraceful and humiliating surrender which the American Republic has ever made in its whole history." He admitted, however, that the retaliation act passed last session, went too far, and ought not to be carried out in its full terms. It is expected that Mr. Frye's speech will be effective as a campaign document.

An Important Letter From Mr. James G. Blaine was published on May 30. It was addressed to Mr. Whitelaw Reid, who with other friends of Mr. Blaine cherished the hope that in spite of the famous Florence letter, Mr. Blaine would accept a nomination to the Presidency if spontaneously and unanimously offered by the Republican National Convention. Mr. Blaine perceives that the uncertainty as to his course, which Mr. Reid's efforts have produced, was injurious to Republican prospects, and also embarrassed other candidates. He therefore reiterates in plainer terms his determination not to be a candidate. He says: "If I should now by speech or by silence, by commission or omission, permit my name in any event to come before the Convention, I should incur the reproach of being uncandid with those who have always been candid with me. The misrepresentations of malice have no weight, but the just displeasure of friends I could not patiently endure." Several Republican journals still urge that Mr. Blaine should be nominated, and insist that if the nomination were made by acclamation he would not refuse it. The majority of the Party, however, appear now to favor the nomination of Mr. Walter Q. Gresham, of Indiana, who was Postmaster-General, and subsequently Secretary of the Treasury in President Arthur's Cabinet. Most of the States have their "favorite sons," but Mr. Gresham seems to be the only one whose boom extends beyond his own State.

That the Mormons of Utah Have Not Abandoned Polygamy is evident in spite of recent declarations. Politicians who are advocating the admission of Utah to Statehood will therefore be grossly deceived if they imagine that the pledges made by the Mormons will be observed. Speaking last week at the dedication of a new temple at Manti, Lorenzo Snow, who glories in the title of "Apostle," plainly showed that the prosecutions for polygamy were in his opinion religious persecution. He said: "There never was a time when we were moving more swiftly in the path of exaltation. Some of the Elders have been to the penitentiary, and they came out better looking, and they will grow better looking. How far these persecutions may go it is not for me to know. It is not for me to care. Persecutions become a pleasure to those who suffer for righteousness. It was so with the three Hebrew children. There is no point at which we can say we have suffered enough to receive the rewards that God has promised us. We ought never to say we have had enough."

The Prohibition National Convention Assembled at Indianapolis, Ind., on May 30. Tomlinson Hall, in which the sittings were held, was densely crowded, though it has a seating capacity of five thousand. The permanent organization was made with Mr. John P. St. John, of Kansas, as chairman, and the Rev. Sam Small, the noted revivalist, as Secretary. On the following day the nominations were made. The Convention did not need to ballot for its candidate for President. General Clinton B. Fisk, of New Jersey, was nominated for that office by acclamation, as had been foreseen before the Convention met. The Rev. John A. Brooks, of Missouri, was nominated for Vice-President. The platform adopted, beside its most prominent plank on Prohibition, explicitly endorses female suffrage. As to the tariff question the platform says: "That an adequate public revenue being necessary it may properly be raised by import duties and by an equitable assessment upon the property and the legitimate business of the country, but import duties should be so reduced that no surplus shall be accumulated in the Treasury, and that the burdens of taxation shall be removed from foods, clothing and other comforts and necessaries of life." The only plank on which there was marked division was that relating to Female suffrage, and there were only sixty-three votes cast against that.

The Meetings of the National Civil Service Reform League, in New York last week, were anticipated with unusual interest, in view of the probability of Mr. Cleveland's renomination for the Presidency. There was general curiosity to learn whether, in the event of his being a candidate, the members of the League would support him, as they did in 1884. To that question the League gave no definite answer; but Mr Curtis, in his opening speech, did not conceal the fact that Mr. Cleveland's course had been a disappointment to civil service reformers. Beside this, he strongly advocated an amendment to the Constitution, making the President ineligible for re-election, which he contended would relieve him of the temptation to make appointments of an improper character for the sake of the support he would gain. By its resolutions, also, the League expressed its disappointment with the Administration, declaring that in many instances the forms of the civil service reform law have been so abused by appointees of the Administration, who are not in sympathy with reform, as to bring about widespread distrust in reform methods. The League, however, is not dismayed by the acknowledged failure of reform. Mr. Curtis contended that public opinion is being educated, and has made solid progress. Contrasting the present date with 1881, he showed that practices which then excited no comment, would now be generally condemned, and would place any party adopting them in a critical position at the polls.

A New Scheme for the Pacification of Ireland has been framed. The author is Mr. Chamberlain, whose opposition to Mr. Gladstone's plan was the most serious obstacle it encountered. Mr. Chamberlain's scheme, in brief, proposes to give each county in Ireland a governing board controlling county affairs, the police, and poor laws. The four provinces, Ulster, Munster, Connaught, and Leinster, are to be given provincial Parliaments. The object of this divergence from Mr. Gladstone's plan is to prevent the Protestants of Ulster being swamped in an Irish Parliament. The fact, however, of its conceding the principle of Home Rule in any shape must make it distasteful to the Conservatives and the bulk of the Unionists. So far the scheme has been received with ridicule, but as Lord Randolph Churchill's attack on the Government for breaking its pledges to Ireland has influenced public opinion, it is considered probable that Lord Salisbury may grant some concessions to Ireland on the basis of Mr. Chamberlain's proposals.

The Boulanger Movement in France Appears to be growing to proportions that are intoxicating to the General. In an interview published in a French journal last week he said: "I have been pushed to the front. There I am, and so long as I am wanted there I shall stay. Whatever people may tell you, I have promised only two things—the revision by means of a dissolution and the reform of the social laws, or, perhaps, I should say of the social manners. Where my promises are concerned I shall go all lengths. I cannot succeed at once, you object. Learn that it would be quite possible for me to precipitate events, but I have regarded it as my duty not to engage the country in disquieting adventures. Industry and commerce dread anything like a crisis. I hope to gain my ends calmly and logically by the mere force of things. What is called Boulangism if spreading like a tree with almost mathematical regularity, I am striving, I assure you, to pull back my too impetuous partisans by the coat-tails."

Reports from Zanzibar were Received in London, on May 28, professing to give reassuring intelligence of Mr. H. M. Stanley. They stated that messengers from Tippoo Tib, have arrived there with letters from Major Barttelot, dated Singatini, on the Congo, October 25. Major Barttelot says that deserters from Henry M. Stanley's camp had arrived at Singatini after a twenty days' canoe voyage. They reported that Stanley and all his party were well and had a plentiful supply of food. Major Barttelot's party is also well. The letters further say that the behavior of Tippoo Tip has not been satisfactory. No details are given regarding Stanley's route. An official of the American Geographical Society, on being shown the cable message, declared that the report was contradictory and evidently designed to mislead. He feared that Tippoo Tib had proved false to Stanley, and had conspired with African chiefs on his route to cut off the explorer's supplies of food and starve him and his party to death. The fact that Mr. Stanley expected to have reached Emin long ago, and that direct intelligence from him ought in that case to have been received, occasions serious apprehension as to the fate of the explorer.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York

The International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, at 40 East Twenty-third Street, New York, has just issued the Association "Year Book for 1888." From this pamphlet of 200 pages, it appears that there are now 1,240 Associations in America, and 3,804 in the world. The American Associations have a membership of 175,000; they own buildings valued at $5,609,265, and have a total net property of $7,261,658; last year they expended $1,181,338 in local work and $104,949 in general work. 752 men are devoting their entire time to the local, State, and International work as Secretaries and Assistants; there are 23 State Committees, that employ one or more travelling Secretaries, and the International Committee's secretarial force numbers 14; 77 of these Associations are engaged specially in work among railroad men; 10 among German-speaking young men; 273 are in colleges; 29 are colored, and 18 Indian.

The Great Methodist Conference in New York closed its business on May 31. The delegates in separating to their various spheres of labor expressed their gratification with their reception in the city. The total cost of the Conference including the travelling expenses and entertainment of delegates and the $5,000 paid for hire of the Opera House amounts to Seventy thousand dollars. The chief point of interest, to the Methodist community through the country, which was left to be decided at the conclusion of the Conference, was the assignment of the Bishops to the various sections for the ensuing four years. This was arranged according to the old precedent, each bishop having the choice in the order of his election. Bishop Bowman, the senior bishop, chose to remain at St. Louis, Bishop Foster is to be in Boston, and Bishop Merrill in Chicago. Bishop Andrews comes from Washington to New York, Bishop Warren remains in Denver, Bishop Foss goes from Minneapolis to Philadelphia, Bishop Hurst goes from Buffalo to Washington, Bishop Ninde remains at Topeka, Bishop Walden goes from Chattanooga to Covington or Cincinnati, Bishop Mallalieu remains at New Orleans, and Bishop Fowler remains at San Francisco. Of the five newly elected Bishops, Bishop Vincent, who was first elected, had first choice, and selected Buffalo, Bishop Fitzgerald, next in order, took Minneapolis, and Bishop Joyce chose Chattanooga, Bishop Newman selected the Omaha or Lincoln residence, and signified a strong probability that he would decide on Omaha. This left Texas only, and this section will be under the Episcopal charge of Bishop Goodsell.

A Cruising Evangelist has been Furnished with a vessel commissioned for Christian labor by the Congregational Sunday-school society. Five years ago a young man named George Lane, who used to be a Maine fisherman, having been converted, attempted to do some evangelistic work along the coast in his leisure time, travelling from place to place in his small skiff. Gradually he extended his work to the South, and succeeded in establishing many Sunday-schools, and his labors were greatly blessed. The attention of the Congregational Society was recently directed to his work, and a fine sloop, which he named The Pilgrim, has been purchased for his use. In the summer he will work along the east coast, and in the winter in the South. The boat that he formerly used was small and frail, but in the Pilgrim he will have a better floating house. There is a great deal of room for storage of Christian literature, as well as room to enjoy the comforts of life. In the summer his wife goes about with him, and he will carry one man for a sailor.

An Insect was Photographed by its Own light in Connecticut recently. The parents of a young lady in a school at Bridgeport, Conn., sent to her a few weeks ago a collection of beetles from Cuba. Among them were two or three specimens of the bug known as Elater Noctilucus or fire beetle of the West Indies. They measure about an inch in length and resemble in shape the New England spring beetle. On each side of the thorax is a large, oval velvety black spot, like an eye, and some of them have in place of the oval spot two translucent, opal-like spots on the sides of the thorax and from these at night the insect throws at will a strong light, resembling two tiny electric lamps in full glow. The light from one insect is sufficiently strong to enable one to read fine print with ease. When agitated the insect also gives out a similar light from the tissue between the segments on the under side of the body. The beetles were taken to a photographic artist in the city, who found that the light emitted from them though of a greenish hue, contained abundant actinic rays by which with a sensitive plate he could obtain negatives. After a few experiments he succeeded in taking a picture of one of the beetles by no light but that emitted by the beetle itself. It is too often forgotten that pictures of human character are taken in the same way: every man is judged by the light he gives. It is well for the world around him as for the man himself when that light is clear and heavenly coming from "the spirit of man which is the candle of the Lord." (Prov. 20: 27.)

A Cabin for Respectable People is Reserved on a ferry-boat plying between New York and the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Last week there was a dispute on board the boat, which belongs to the receiving ship Vermont, about the admission to the starboard cabin of some men who were going to the Vermont to enlist in the Navy, and it was said that the captain of the Vermont had ordered the cabin to be reserved for officers of the Navy. When, however, an appeal was taken to the captain by the men, he said: "I have issued no such order. There has always been a rule that visitors to the ship, and respectable people, shall occupy one side of the boat. The crowds of men who come over, desiring to enlist, and many other undesirable persons, are expected to stay on the other. The officers were merely enforcing this rule. No respectable person is kept off the boat." It is well for the world that no such distinction is made against those desiring to enlist in Christ's service, as is made against the men desiring to enlist in the service of the United States. Though they may not be respectable—may even be undesirable—the Great Captain of Salvation assures them of a cordial welcome, and they all enter His service by the same door. "There is no difference." (Rom. 3: 22.)

Houses are Kept for Ornament, not for Use, by a tribe of Indians near Black River Falls, Wis. A newspaper correspondent who visited the settlement which is occupied by the Winnebago Indians, says that many of them have little frame houses on their farms, with log stables for their ponies. All of the houses have some furniture, and some of them have become so far advanced as to have strips of carpet on the floor, and one high-toned family had a lounge and a hammock, while they nearly all have chairs or benches in their houses. They seem to be there for ornament, and they are rarely used, for the people prefer to sit on the floor. During the summer, and in some cases during the winter, they build their wigwams in the yard near the houses, and occupy them in preference to the houses. They like to tell about their houses, and take pride in their possessions, but the habits of a life-time are too strong for them to surrender, and while the house is a good thing to talk about, the wigwam is their ideal home. To the white men it seems a crazy thing for a man to sit on the floor when he has chairs, and to live in a wigwam when he has a house, but there are many Christian men who show a similar perversity in their spiritual life. God has placed at their disposal His Almighty provision, yet they persist in worrying and harassing themselves about their temporal concerns, instead of living in peace and faith in the promises. (1 Peter 5: 7).

A Young Man Trying to Discover his Own name, applied to an official of the Board of Health, in New York, on May 30. The young man said that he always believed that his name was Louis Wilson. He had just arrived from Germany, from which country he had escaped to get evidence to prove to the German Government that he is an American, and that he is not subject to be drafted for service in the German army. His mother, who, before her death, resided in Nuremberg, had told him that he was born in New York eighteen years ago. He started for America, and was put under arrest at Bremerhaven for seeking to avoid military duty, but was released, with a warning that he must not attempt to leave the country. He escaped to Scotland, whence he made his way back to America. He searched the records of the Board of Health to no purpose, but at Bellevue Hospital he found a record that in 1870 a female patient, named Wilson, had given birth to a male child. The doctor who attended the case is dead, and the young man does not know how to establish his identity. He was advised to write to the Secretary of State, and place himself under the protection of the Government. It is doubtful, however, whether Mr. Bayard can protect him without some evidence of his having been born in this country. It is well for the young man that only his physical interests are thus embarrassed. If he has been born again, his King is able to keep his soul from the clutches of his enemies (John 10; 28).

BRIEF NOTES.

An examination of the records of the penitentiary at Joliet, Ill., shows that ninety-two per cent. of the prisoners brought there used intoxicants.

The will of Mrs. J. S. Waterman, of Sycamore, Ill., leaves her residence and sixty acres of land for a school for girls, with a fund of $200,000 for its maintenance.

The general agent of the John F. Slater Fund reports that during the past year $45,000 has been distributed among forty-five educational institutions in the South.

Rev. C. H. Yatman commenced on June 1, a series of union young people's meetings in Washington, D. C. by invitation of the superintendents of the Sunday-schools.

The Hartford (Conn.) Young Men's Christian Association has been authorized by General Charles T. Hillyer to buy a site for their new building, not to cost over $30,000, which he would contribute.

Mrs. Lizzie D. Johnson desires us to thank the friends who have supplied her with copies of this journal to distribute in the Texas prisons. Much good has resulted from it, and she earnestly hopes the friends will continue so to aid her.

Rev. B. Fay Mills went from Chelsea, Mass., to Gloversville, N. Y., to hold meetings. The mission at Chelsea has left abiding results in that place. Over 700 persons have united with the various churches who were brought to decision at Mr. Mills' services.

At the Methodist General Conference it was stated that connected with the various M. E. churches there are 24,225 Sunday-schools, 268,391 officers and teachers, 2,008,328 scholars, an increase during the quadrennium of 2,772 schools, 38,826 teachers, 312,708 scholars.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Monroe County, N. Y., has presented Mrs. Cleveland with an elegant Griffith Club microscope and accessories, in recognition of her temperance views. The microscope was made specially, and is of the finest workmanship.

It is proposed to establish in Bethany ("the town of Mary, and her sister, Martha") a home which shall form a centre of Christian work. The village has to-day about five hundred inhabitants. A piece of land has been secured, and the prospect is said to be encouraging.

Major Whittle's meetings in Winona, Minn., have been very successful. The number of converts is said to be over three hundred, and among them were several of the most prominent men of the city. Dr. L. W. Munhall paid a visit to Winona from St. Paul, to give one day to the work.

The number of delegates from the United States to the general Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in London, June 9–19, is one hundred and sixty-eight. Most of them have already sailed. The London committee earnestly hope that the meetings be made the subject of prayer during their continuance.

Mr. Moody's College Student's Summer School and encampment at Northfield, Mass., is announced to begin on June 30, and continue to the 15th of July. The course of Bible study is to be conducted by Mr. Moody, who has invited a number of prominent men from the United States and elsewhere to take part in the meetings.

Pascal Porter, a boy only eleven years of age, whose parents live in Jefferson County, Ind., has been delivering gospel addresses in that State, and in Kentucky. The Louisville Courier Journal says, He shows a wonderful acquaintance with the Bible, is modest in deportment, and has been very successful among children.

A DESIRABLE POSSESSION.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God."—1 John 5 : 13.

Why the Bible is Read with Indifference—A Legatee's Interest in a Will—I. John's Special Purpose Threefold—To Implant Full Assurance—A Minister Dependent on the Wind—The Three Witnesses—Intensive Faith Wanted—Courageous Faith—Joyful Faith—II. John's Purpose Followed—A Religion Hardly Worth Keeping—A Blind Child's Confidence—A Caviller in an Omnibus—Mr. Dodd's Dying Words.

JOHN wrote to believers—"These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God." It is worthy of note, that all the epistles are so written. They are not letters to everybody, they are letters to those who are called to be saints. It ought to strike some of you with awe when you open the Bible and think how large a part of it is not directed to you. You may read it, and God's Holy Spirit may graciously bless it to you, but it is not directed to you. You are reading another man's letter: thank God that you are permitted to read it, but long to be numbered with those to whom it is directed. Thank God much more if any part of it should be used of the Holy Ghost for your salvation.

We do not wonder that certain men do not receive the epistles, for they were not written to them. Why should they cavil at words which are addressed to men of another sort from themselves? Yet we do not marvel, for we knew it would be so. Here is a will, and you begin to read it; but you do not find it interesting; it is full of words and terms which you do not take the trouble to understand, because they have no relation to yourself; but should you come upon a clause in which

An Estate is Left to You,

I warrant you that the nature of the whole document will seem changed to you. You will be anxious now to understand the terms, and to make sure of the clauses, and you will even wish to remember every word of the clause which refers to yourself. Oh, dear friends, may you read the Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ as a testament of love to yourselves.

This leads me to make the second remark, that as these things are written to believers, believers ought especially to make themselves acquainted with them, and to search into their meaning and intent. John says, "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God." Do not, I beseech you, neglect to read what the Holy Ghost has taken care to write to you. It is not merely John that writes. John is inspired of the Lord, and these things are written to you by the Spirit of God. Give earnest heed to every single word of what God has sent as His own epistle to your hearts. This much is the porch of my sermon; let us now enter more fully into our subject, noticing:

I. First, that John wrote with a special purpose. Men do not write well, unless they have some end in writing. To sit down, with paper and ink before you, and so much space to fill up, will ensure very poor writing. John knew what he was at. His intent and aim were clear to his own mind, and he tells us what they were. According to the text, the beloved apostle had which branched out into three. To begin with, John wrote that we might enjoy the full assurance of our salvation. "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life." Many who believe on the name of Jesus are not sure that they have eternal life; they only hope so. Occasionally they have assurance, but the joy is not abiding. They are like a minister I have heard of, who said he felt assured of his salvation, "except when the wind was in the east." It is a wretched thing to be so subject to circumstances as many are. What is true when the wind is in the soft south or the reviving west, is equally true when the wind is neither good for man nor beast. John would not have our assurance vary with the weather-glass, nor turn with the vane. He says, "These things have I written unto you, that ye may know that ye have eternal life."

One Clear Purpose,

I speak affectionately to the weaker ones, who cannot yet say that they know they have believed. I speak not to your condemnation, but to your consolation. Full assurance is not essential to salvation, but it is Essential to Satisfaction.

May you all get it—may you get it at once; at any rate, may you never be satisfied to live without it, You may have full assurance. You may have it without personal revelations: it is wrought in us by the Word of God. These things are written that you may have it; and we may be sure that the means used by the Spirit are equal to the effect which he desires. Under the guidance of the Spirit of God, John so wrote as to attain his end in writing.

He begins thus: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." Do you believe that Jesus is the anointed of God? Is He so to you? If so, you are born of God. "How may I know this?" Brethren, our evidence is the witness of God Himself as here recorded. We need no other witness. John has thus positively declared the truth, that you may know that you have eternal life. Can anything be more clear than this?

The loving spirit of John leads him to say, "Every one that loveth Him that begat, loveth Him also that is begotten of Him." Do you love God? Do you love His only begotten Son? You can answer those two questions surely. I knew a dear Christian woman who would sometimes say, "I know that I love Jesus; but my fear is that He does not love me." Her doubt used to make me smile, for it never could have occurred to me. Love to Jesus is an effect which proves the existence of its cause.

John goes on to give another evidence: "By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep His commandments." Obedience is

The Grand Test of Love.

If you are living after your own will, and pay no homage to God, you are none of His. If you never think of the Lord Jesus as your Master, and never recognize the claims of God, and never wish to be obedient to His will, you are not in possession of eternal life. If you desire to be obedient, and prove that desire by your actions, then you have the divine life within you. Judge yourselves. Is the tenor of your life obedience or disobedience? By the fruit you can test the root and the sap.

But note, that this obedience must be cheerful and willing. No doubt some for a while obey the commands of God unwillingly. They do not like them, though they bow to them. They fret and grizzle because of the restraints of piety; and this proves that they are hypocrites. What you wish to do, you practically are doing in the sight of God. If there could be such a thing as holiness forced upon a man, it would be unholiness. O my hearer, it may be that you cannot fall into a certain line of sin; but if you could, you would: your desires show what you really are. I have heard of Christian people, so-called, going to sinful amusements, just, as they say, to enjoy a little pleasure. Ah well, we see where you are! Where your pleasure is, your heart is. If you enjoy the pleasure of the world, you are of the world, and with the world you will be condemned. If God's commands are grievous to you, then you are a rebel at heart. Loyal subjects delight in the royal law. "His commandments are not grievous."

I said to one who came to join the church the other day, "I suppose you are not perfect?" and the reply was, "No, sir, I wish I might be." I said, "And suppose you were"? "Oh, then," she said, "that would be heaven to me." So it would be to me. We delight in the law of God after the inward man. Oh, that we could perfectly obey in thought, and word, and deed! This is our view of heaven. We would scarce ask to be rid of sorrow, if we might be rid of sin. We would bear any burden cheerfully if we could live without the slightest fault of omission or commission. When we are without spot we shall also be without grief. His commandments are not grievous, but they are ways of pleasantness and peace to us. Do you feel that you love the ways of God, that you desire holiness, and follow after it joyfully? Then, dear friends, you have eternal life, and these are the sure evidences of it.

John then proceeds to mention

Three Witnesses.

Now, dear hearers, do you know anything about these three witnesses? "There are three that bear witness in earth; the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one." Do you know "the Spirit"? Has the Spirit of God quickened you, changed you, illuminated you, sanctified you? If so, you are alive unto God. Next, do you know "the water," the purifying power of the death of Christ? Does the crucified Lord crucify your sins? Is the water applied to you to remove the power of sin? Do you now long to perfect holiness in the fear of God? This proves that you have eternal life. Do you also know "the blood?" Do you know the power of the blood to take away sin, the power of the blood to speak peace to the conscience, the power of the blood to give access to the throne of grace? Do you know the quickening, restoring, cheering power of the precious blood of Christ, which is set forth in the Lord's Supper by the fruit of the vine? Then in the mouth of these three witnesses shall the fact of your having eternal life be fully established.

Not Transient.

Furthermore, John wrote that we might know our spiritual life to be eternal. Please notice this, for there are some of God's children who have not yet learned this cheering lesson. The life of God in the soul is not transient, but abiding; not temporary, but eternal. Some think that the life of God in the believer's soul may die out; but how, then, could it be eternal? If it die, it is not eternal life. If it be eternal life, it cannot die. Beloved, our Lord Jesus Christ calls the life of His people eternal life. How often do I quote this text! It seems to lie on the tip of my tongue; "I give unto My sheep eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of My hand." And again, "He that believeth in Him hath everlasting life." It is not temporary life, not life which at a certain period must grow old and die, but everlasting life. "It shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

Once more, according to the Authorized text, though not according to the Revised Version, John desired the increase and confirmation of their faith. He says, "That ye might believe on the name of the Son of God." John wrote to those who believed, that they might believe in a more emphatic sense. As our Saviour has come not only that we may have life, but that we may have it more abundantly, so does John write, that having faith

We May Have More of It.

Come, beloved, listen for a moment to this! You have the milk of faith, but God wills that you should have the cream of assurance! He would increase your faith. May you believe more extensively. Perhaps you do not believe all the truth, because you have not yet perceived it. Perhaps your doctrinal belief has been poor and thin. Many of you live upon milk, and yet your years qualify you to feed on meat. Why keep to babes' diet?

It will be well for you if your faith also increases intensively. Oh that you may more fully believe what you do believe! We need deeper insight and firmer conviction. We do not half believe, as yet, any of us. Many of you only skim the pools of truth. Blessed is the wing which brushes the surface of the river of life; but infinitely more blessed is it to plunge into the depths of it. This is John's desire for you, that you believe with all your heart, and soul, and strength.

He would have us trust courageously. Some can believe in a small way

About Small Things.

Oh for a boundless trust in the infinite God! We need more of a venturesome faith; the faith to do and dare. Often we see the way of power, but have not the faith which would be equal to it. See Peter walking on the sea! I do not advise any of you to try it, neither did our Lord advise Peter to do so; we do well enough if we walk uprightly on land. But when Peter had once taken a few steps on the sea, he ought to have known that his Lord could help him all the rest of the way; but alas! his faith failed, and he began to sink. He could have walked all the way to Jesus if he had but believed right on. So is it with us: our faith is good enough for a spurt, but it lacks staying power. If the Lord bids you, you may go through fire and not be burned, through the floods and not be drowned. Such a fearless, careless, conquering faith may the Lord work in us!

We need to believe more joyfully. Oh, what a blessed thing it is when you reach the rest and joy of faith! If we would truly believe the promise of God, and rest in the Lord's certain fulfilment of it, we might be as happy as the angels. I notice very early in the morning how the birds begin to sing; before the sun is up or even the first gray tints of morning light are visible, the little songsters are awake and singing. Too often we refuse to sing until the sun is more than up, and noon is near. Shame on us! Will we never trust our God? Will we never praise Him for favors to come? Oh, for a faith that can sing through the night and through the winter! The Lord give you such faith.

II. Thus I have gone through my first head, and taken nearly all the time. I must now come to push of pike, as the old soldiers used to say. We must drive our teaching home. The purpose which John had in his mind,

We Ought to Follow Up.

Our conscience tells us that we ought to seek full assurance of salvation. It cannot be right for us to be children of God, and not to know our own Father. How can we kneel down and say, "Our Father which art in heaven," when we do not know whether He is our Father or not? Will not a life of doubt tend to be a life of falsehood? Can you rest? Dare you rest, while it is a question whether you are saved or not? Can you go home to your dinner to-day and enjoy your meal, while there is a question about your soul's eternal life? Oh, be not so foolhardy as to run risks on that matter! I pray you, make sure work for eternity. If you leave anything in uncertainty, let it concern your body or your estate, but not your soul.

Listen, as I close, to this mass of reasons why each believer should seek to know that he has eternal life. Here they are. Assurance of your salvation will bring you "the peace of God which passeth all understanding." If you know that you are saved, you can sit down in poverty, or in sickness, or under slander, and feel content.

Assurance is the Koh-i-noor amongst the jewels wherewith the heavenly Bridegroom adorns His spouse. Full assurance will sometimes overflow in cataracts of delight. Peace flows like a river, and here and there it leaps in cascades of ecstatic joy. There are seasons when the plant of peace is in flower, and then it sheds a perfume as of myrrh and cassia. Oh, the blessedness of the man who knows that he has eternal life! That religion which sets no sweetmeats on the table is a niggardly housekeeper. I do not wonder that some people give up their starveling religion: it is hardly worth the keeping. The child of God who knows that he has eternal life goes to school, but he has many a holiday; and he anticipates that day of home-going when he shall see the face of his Beloved forever.

Full assurance gives a man a grateful zeal for the God he loves. These are the people that will go to the Congo for Jesus, for they know they are His. These are the people that will lay down their all for Christ, for Christ is theirs. These are the people that will bear scorn and shame and misrepresentation for the truth's sake, for they know that they have eternal life. These are they that will keep on preaching and teaching, spending and working, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven, and they know it. Men will do little for what they doubt, and much for what they believe. If you have lost your title deeds, and you do not know whether your house is your own or not, you are not going to spend much in repairs and enlargements, When you know that heaven is yours, you are anxious to get ready for it. Full assurance finds Fuel for Zeal to Feed Upon.

This also creates and sustains patience. When we know that we have eternal life, we do not fret about the trials of this passing life. I could point to brethren here this morning, and I could mention sisters at home, who amaze me by their endurance of pain and weakness. They know that they are the Lord's, and so they say. "Let Him do what seemeth him good." A blind child was in his father's arms, and a stranger came into the room, and took him right away from his father. Yet he did not cry or complain. His father said to him, "Johnny, are you afraid? You do not know the person who has got hold of you." "No, father," he said, "I do not know who he is, but you do." When pain gives us an awkward nip, and we do not know whether we shall live or die, when we are called to undergo a dangerous operation, and pass into unconsciousness, then we can say, "I do not know where I am, but my Father knows, and I leave all with Him." Assurance makes us strong to suffer. This will give you constant firmness in your confession of divine truth. You who do not know whether you are saved or not, I hope the Lord will keep you from denying the faith; but those who have a firm grip of it, these are the men who never will forsake it.

A Caviller in an Omnibus said to a Christian man one day, "Why, you have nothing after all to rest upon. I can prove to you that your Scriptures are not authentic." The humble Christian man replied, "Sir, I am not a learned man, and I cannot answer your questions; but I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and I have experienced such a change of character, and I feel such joy and peace through believing, that I wish you knew my Saviour, too." The answer he received was a very unexpected one: the unbeliever said, "You have got me there; I cannot answer that." Just so: we have got them there. If we know what has been wrought in us by grace, and know assuredly the sustaining power of that grace, they cannot overcome us. The full-assurance man baffles the very devil.

Dear brethren, this is the kind of thing that will enable you to bear a telling testimony for your Lord. It is of no use to stand up and preach things that may or may not be true. I am charged with being a dreadful dogmatist, and I am not anxious to excuse myself. When a man is not quite sure of a thing, he grows very liberal: anybody can be liberal with money which he cannot claim to be his own. The broad-school man says, "I am not sure, and I do not suppose that you are sure, for indeed nothing is sure." Does this sandy foundation suit you? I prefer rock. The things which I have spoken to you from my youth up have been such as I have tried and proved, and to me they wear an absolute certainty, confirmed by my personal experience. I have tried these things: they have saved me, and I cannot doubt them.

Brethren, if you know that you have eternal life, you are prepared to live, and equally prepared to die. How frequently do I stand at the bedside of our dying members! I am every now and then saying to myself, "I shall certainly meet with some faint-hearted one. Surely I shall come across some child of God who is dying in the dark." But I have not met with any such. Brethren, a child of God may die in the dark. One said to old Mr. Dodd, the quaint old Puritan—"How sad that our brother should have passed away in darkness! Do you doubt his safety?" "No," said old Mr. Dodd, "no more than I doubt the safety of Him who said, when He was dying, 'My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?'" God grant that you may have this assurance, all of you! May sinners begin to believe in Jesus, and saints believe more firmly, for Christ's sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A CANDIDATE'S BLUNDER.*

SOME years ago a young aspirant for office in Iowa drove up to a hotel, alighted and engaged a room. He desired his trunk taken to his room; and, seeing a man passing whom he supposed to be the porter, he imperiously ordered him to take it up. The porter charged him twenty-five cents, which he paid with a plugged quarter, worth only twenty cents. He then said, "You know Governor Grimes?" "O yes, sir!" "Well, take my card to him, and tell him I wish an interview at his earliest convenience." "I am Governor Grimes," said the supposed porter, "at your service, sir." "You—I—that is, my dear sir, I beg a thousand pardons!" "None needed at all, sir," said the Governor. "I was rather favorably impressed with your letter, and had thought you well suited for the office specified; but sir, any man who would swindle a working man out of five cents would defraud the public treasury if he had opportunity. Good evening sir."

The Artist's Warning.

There was an old German father who tried to make something good and useful out of his boy. But the son was an artist and he liked to dream and paint and skip his day's work on the farm whenever he could do so. At last, just before his son left him to go to Paris, where he was about to study art, the old father said to him: "Tony, my son, remember this last advice of your old father: our passions are our greatest enemies. What we want to do is to be able to command them. The discipline of the human will is the secret of durable conquests and long happiness. Tony, I have always loved the crowing of the cock. It announces the day and chases away the phantoms of the night. The sound resembles a war-cry. It admonishes us to spend our lives in fighting against ourselves."

A year or two after this, when his father had died, Tony, then a rising young artist in Paris, was tempted by his companions to join a band of gamblers, who were making money at the expense of foreigners in Paris. One night when he was lying awake thinking over in his mind whether or not he should go with these bad companions he heard a cock crow. Like the crowing of the cock which brought to Simon Peter's memory the words of Jesus, the sound of the crowing brought back to Tony the last words of his honest old father. That morning crow sounded like a voice from his father's grave, and it turned the scale of his will. He said no to his tempters and gained the victory over the evil passions within him.

A Friendless Boy.

There was a boy at school named Carl who quarrelled with all his companions, and he made up his mind that he would cross off his list of friends every one he quarrelled with. At last, in the midst of the long winter term, he found that he had quarrelled with them all, and that there was really not one left for him to play with. At last one day the teacher found him looking through a knot-hole in the fence at the other boys playing ball in the play-ground. "What are you doing, Carl?" asked the teacher. "I am looking at the boys playing, sir," answered Carl. "Why don't you play with them?" the teacher asked. "Because I'm mad at them all, and vowed I wouldn't play with them again," said the boy. "Well then," said his teacher why do you look at them instead of playing by yourself?" Carl was silent a moment and then replied, "Because I'm so awfully tired of myself."

* From "A Father's Blessing," and other Sermons for Children, by William Wilberforce Newton, an excellent volume of pithy, bright thoughts in plain language, with incidents from history and current events. A valuable volume for a father to put into his boy's hands. 343 pages. Price $1.25. Published by Robert Carter & Brothers, 530 Broadway, New York.

Interior of a Japanese Home.

A Father's Merciless Beating of His Christian Daughter in Africa.

We very soon get tired of ourselves in this world, and it is a great help to us at times to feel that we can play with other people and can have them comfort us. Do not despise other people; other people often bring great blessings to us, as they did to the tribe of Zebulon with his haven for ships.

A PERSECUTED AFRICAN CONVERT.

(See Illustration.)

A NATIVE Christian of the Cameroons, Africa, passing through a village inhabited by a heathen tribe, remained there a few days, that he might speak of Christ to the people. The message apparently bore no fruit, but after a short time one girl gave evidence of having heard the truth with saving power. Under further instruction, she became a believer in Christ and renounced the idols of the tribe. Her father was exasperated with her conduct, and conceiving that he himself was disgraced by his daughter's renunciation of her ancestral religion, resolved to punish her publicly. At first his persecution was limited to solitary confinement. She was shut up in a hut alone without food or water. The girl, however, remained firm, and the father then abandoning hope of conquering her by that means, took her out into the middle of the village, and there beat her severely in the presence of the whole tribe. Not even then did the girl's fidelity to Christ waver. She was supported by the power of the Holy Spirit, and continued to testify to the truth of the White Man's Religion. But, while her soul strengthened, her body sank under the cruelty to which she had been subjected. The beating might not have been fatal had it not followed close confinement and fasting. As it was, she sank, and, after a short illness, passed away, declaring to the last her faith in Christ. The missionary who relates the incident states that the hut in which she was imprisoned is now used as a place of Christian teaching, and the father whose cruelty caused her death has himself become a Christian.

A JAPANESE HOME.

(See Illustration.)

IT is only in comparatively recent times that trustworthy information about Japan and the Japanese has been available. So closely was the country closed against Western intrusion that the manners and customs of the people were completely unknown. Now, however, a more enlightened policy has been adopted by the Government, and a strong desire is manifested for the introduction of Western civilization.

Our illustration represents the interior of a home occupied by a middle class family in Japan. It is the time of the customary evening meal, which in Japan is usually of the lightest and most digestible kind.

The people bear a strong resemblance to the Chinese, both in appearance and in their way of life. They are rather under middle size, well made, and robust, with complexion either brown or pale; but their distinctive feature is the eye, which is small, oblong, or almond-shaped, and deeply sunk in the head. They have the head large, the neck short, the nose large, black hair, thick and shining from the oil they rub into it.

As lately as 1870, the whole nation, of thirty-five millions of inhabitants, was sunk in spiritual darkness. In that year, however, Mr. Goble, an American missionary, went there in faith, and supporting himself by his own labors, learned the language and began preaching the gospel. Now, several missionary societies, both American and English, are represented in the work, and are making encouraging progress.

THE RESCUE OF THE WIDOW'S SON.

(See Illustration on Page 365.)

"ARTHUR, you will have to earn your own living, my boy," said a dying man, who had called his son, a youth of some sixteen years, to his bedside. "I meant to have sent you to college and put you in the way of entering professional life; but the Lord has ordered things differently. I am going to die, and your mother and Lottie will have only just enough to support them. The little I leave, with the insurance, must be safely invested, and safe investments do not pay very high interest. Still they can live on the income, for your mother is economical. But you must not be a burden upon them. You must get a clerk's position and do your best."

"I will, father, I will," said Arthur.

"And be a comfort to your mother, Arthur, and take care of Lottie. You must take my place as far as you can. Be a good son and a good brother. I leave them to you. Look to God for help and guidance, and He will be a Father to you."

Arthur promised that he would, and after his father's death, he lost no time in seeking work. Unhappily the only available place offered him was in a city some two hundred miles off. His mother would have had him decline it and wait for some opportunity near home, but Arthur was anxious to set to work at once, and, moreover, was fascinated by the prospect of city life. He was a country lad, and as is usual his ideas of the grandeur of a city were far beyond the reality. Very sorrowfully Mrs. Edgerton packed his trunks, saw that his outfit was thoroughly complete, and bought a new Bible, which she put in with a prayer that it might be blest to him. Then commending her boy to the care of God, she bade him good-bye with many tears.

Arthur felt that he was going out to seek his fortune. How many men, now millionaires, had gone as he was going, a poor lad, from the country to the city. He would work hard, would find out how money was made, and some day he would come back rich, and then his mother should see what he would do for her. What would she like him to do? Arthur's castles in the air sprang up quickly. Before he reached his destination he saw himself taking his mother and Lottie to a grand mansion of his own and installing them there, surrounded with every luxury that money could buy. He saw himself honored by his father's friends, elected Mayor of his native town, perhaps sent to Congress. Who could tell what he might not rise to! Some of the Presidents had not had any greater advantages than he.

Poor lad! If he had known a little more of city life he might have been less sanguine. The country stamp was so plainly written on his face and form and dress, that his fellow-clerks chaffed him, and as he thought, despised him. He was dull and lonely and miserable. Everything was so different from what he had expected. It was not surprising that in his eagerness to shake off his country manners and to make friends, he should have fallen into snares set for the unwary. He was anxious to familiarize himself with city life and city ways, and the guidance he had was of the worst kind. If some earnest Christian had made his acquaintance, he might have been kept from the evil, but none such reached him.

It was about two years after Arthur's leaving home that Mrs. Egerton received a letter in a handwriting with which she was not familiar, saying that her son was seriously ill, and suggesting that she should come to nurse him. Of late letters from him had been growing less and less frequent, and she had become more and more uneasy about him. She knew that he was doing well in his employment, for each half year his salary had been raised, and Arthur had reported to her the favorable terms in which his employers spoke of him, but of his social life she knew nothing. This letter, therefore, filled her with forebodings, and she set out on her journey with an aching heart.

Arthur was delirious when his mother arrived and did not know her. The doctor who attended him spoke doubtfully of his recovery, and hinted that the difficulties in the case were largely due to the irregular life he had been leading. One or two men came, who said Arthur owed them money, and wanted her to pay them. Arthur's own talk, in his delirium, confirmed her fears, for it was evident that he fancied himself in drinking circles and among betting men. Mrs. Edgerton did not understand much of his talk, but she understood enough to know that he had wandered far away from the paths of temperance and virtue. Still he was her own boy, and his sins seemed to appeal to her heart for her greater love, that she might win him back to righteousness.

It was a long weary time of anxiety and distress, but Arthur's naturally good constitution triumphed at last over his disease, and with the first sign of convalescence his mother carried him off to her country home. There he rapidly regained strength, and was able to get around the house and garden with daily increasing vigor. Mrs. Edgerton had forborne to say anything to him of his life, or of what she had learned from his own lips in his sickness. He was often lost in thought, and she trusted that repentance was in his heart. But she waited for him to confide in her.

One evening, the trio sat in the cozy parlor, Mrs. Edgerton at her needlework, Lottie reading aloud a volume of religious biography, and Arthur sitting in a fit of abstraction. He had been unusually silent all day, and more than once Mrs. Edgerton had gone to her room, and prayed that God would lead him to make the confession which she hoped was almost upon his lips. Lottie laid her book down at last, and said she was tired out, and would go to bed. Then, when mother and son were alone together, Arthur spoke. The whole sorrowful story was told. He did not know that she was prepared to hear it, and was surprised that her joy so quickly overcame the distress it naturally caused her. Together they knelt to beseech God's forgiveness, and Arthur solemnly consecrated his future life to the Saviour.

The Widow Awaiting Her Son's Confession.

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE.

A NEW SERIAL STORY.

By Rev. L. S. Keyser.

Author of "The Way Out," etc.

(Continued from page 351.)

IN THE PUBLIC ARENA.

AFTER a little more interchange of thought, the young men separated, promising to meet and compare notes as frequently as possible. George walked rapidly down the hill, pursued the valley for nearly a mile, crossed the creek on a log that had fallen from bank to bank, and then leaving the bottom-lands, he made his way across the hills to his home, unconscious of the harm he had done himself and his friend.

But he experienced no pleasure in his walk. A feeling of compunction and self-contempt on account of the falsehood he had told, oppressed him, and it was many days before he could again look his father full in the face. George resolved that he would thereafter employ no "strategy" to relieve himself of embarrassments. It must be said for him that he was a young man of high moral ideals, and, except in the instance just described, he had always been scrupulously truthful.

Hadley, engrossed in deep thought, walked slowly through the orchard back to the house. From that day a great change came over him, and the change was not for the better. Terrible doubt and rebellion rankled in his heart, destroying his peace for many years.

Here was the home of his childhood, a spot made sacred by the associations that clustered around it; and yet, after that day, it was different, and he was dissatisfied with it. What if it had been a nursery of error and delusion for him? the school in which he had been made the dupe of a monstrous and enslaving imposture? The thought chafed and irritated him.

And yonder were the hills over whose slopes and summits he had often rambled, and from which he had often watched the setting sun depart through a gate-way of chromatic glory; there were the valleys, curling between the hills, along whose streams he had often threaded his way with hook and line; and here and there were the secluded glens, into whose shadows he had often stolen to read a favorite book, or listen to the song of the thrush and oriole. Those had been days of mental quietude and delight. But now he looked upon all these scenes with changed eyes. In the days of his faith in religion it had seemed to him that nature had always spoken to him of the God of revelation; but now he suspected that in this it had led him into error. had become accessory to the teachers who, perhaps, had deceived him, and, therefore, he felt that he could no longer place implicit confidence in its testimony.

The next autumn he and his confederate in unbelief, George Dane, returned to the academy to complete the last year of their preparatory training, before going to college. As they were bosom friends and possessed many tastes in common, they cheered and abetted each other in the war upon Christianity, and, therefore, made swift progress down the rapids of unbelief. As the year passed, they became more confident and out-spoken, until many of their friends saw with regret that they had deserted "the old paths, where is the good way," and haughtily refused to "walk therein" any longer.

At first Hadley was uneasy and restive, for he could not lightly cast aside the faith in which he had been reared. He grew sullen and morose, listening with impatience to the well-meant admonitions of his mother, frequently walking out of the room while she was speaking to him.

"Oh, Hadley," cried his mother, "what is wrong with you? You seem to have lost faith in everything. Why are you so different from what you used to be?"

But Hadley was averse to discussing the subject of religion with his mother, and her tears irritated him beyond measure. So he rose, and suddenly left the room, without deigning to give her a word in reply.

Yet deep down in his consciousness the arrow penetrated, and made him uneasy. However much he tried to banish the thought of death, it would come to him again and again. Amid the casualties to which men are liable, life is very uncertain, and the young sceptic could not entirely waive the feeling that, should he be brought to the test, he would not fancy taking a "leap into the dark," if he were summoned hence. "Give me no guess for my dying pillow," said one who has looked deeply into the problems of existence. However much men may flout at the confessions of the dying, and however much they may soothe themselves by speculations concerning death and the future, there still remains in every breast, not dead to all good, not only an inward shrinking from the prospect of physical dissolution, but also a "dread of something after death."

> "For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
> When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
> Must give us pause."

"And after death the judgment," says the Scripture, and the conscience of every man responds to the dictum. If there are men who never feel this tremor of the soul at the prospect of dying, they either never think at all, or they have despoiled and debauched their moral nature beyond recovery, or both.

For a long time subsequent to this conversation with his mother, Hadley could not shake off the thoughts that she had suggested to his mind. He struggled against them, but they weighed heavily upon him. It was evident that he could not easily throw off the restraints of his early training. But he continued to stifle the disagreeable feeling until, at last, as the days went by, he brought himself back to a life of comparative serenity.

When one has once launched his bark upon the sea of scepticism, there are many winds and waves that continue to hurry him onward in his misguided course. In midwinter, one night, Hadley and George Dane drove in a sleigh to a village, about four miles distant, to attend a meeting of "The Eureka Lycéum," a flourishing debating society of the place. A question of special interest was to be discussed that evening, and the young men went with the expectation of engaging in an intellectual tilt, and, perhaps, return with colors flying. At this gathering an event occurred which accelerated their descent into uncompromising infidelity.

After an exciting discussion by the regularly appointed debaters, an opportunity was given for all who wished to do so to participate in the general discussion which was to follow. Our young heroes were not slow to act upon the suggestion. As the question for discussion bordered on the subject of religion, Hadley, who had gradually grown bolder and had less compunction in his hostility to the Bible, dragged his scepticism into the debate, making several remarks that tended to cast odium on the cause of Christianity. Of course, he did not speak discourteously, but still he expressed his sentiments with no little emphasis, not to say asperity.

A number of persons sprang to the floor, claiming the right to speak, as Hadley concluded, and it was some minutes before the chairman could quell the confusion that the speech had aroused.

"I have stirred up a hornet's nest," whispered Hadley to his friend Dane.

"Yes, and you had better prepare yourself for the puncturing," was Dane's rejoinder.

Hadley compressed his lips, and held himself in readiness for the reception of a vigorous fusillade upon the objectionable sentiments which he had uttered.

The man who succeeded in securing the floor was unhappily a man of hasty and impatient temperament, prone to regard an expression of opinion opposed to his own, as a wilful advocacy of error, due either to ignorance or perversity. He denounced Hadley as an infidel, and proceeded to declaim on the evil that atheistic teaching would work in society, robbing the Christian of his Bible, taking away his hope of heaven, and removing the restraints which kept man from crime. The speech was eloquent and forcible, but it was denunciation, not argument, and was in no sense a reply to Hadley's address.

The young man listened with impatience; he winced when the epithet of infidel was applied to him, conscious that whatever name he might bear in the future, he certainly was not an infidel at that time. The attack upon him was so personal that his request to be allowed to make an explanation was readily granted by the chairman. "My, friends," he said, with a strong effort to control the passion which prompted him to reply in angry tones, "you have heard me denounced as an infidel, and you have listened to the delineation of the evils which I am to bring on society by my teaching. You will of course form your own opinion on that subject, but it appears to me that our friend has somewhat mistaken the situation. A pope conscious of infallibility might so have spoken of some heretic brought up before him for judgment, but here, on common ground, and with a presumption of equality, it seems to me that it would have been in better taste to have shown wherein the opinions I expressed were wrong, and whether I had erred in my premises or in reasoning from them. If he had done so successfully, I should, I hope, have had the grace to acknowledge my error, and you certainly would have been saved from the danger of adopting theories so demolished. As it is, I am resolved to pursue truth wherever she leads, and am not scared by the awful results which our friend predicts. Let us have the actual truth, even though it may cost us some happiness and comfort; anything is better than leaning on a false, delusive hope. If Christianity is true, let us accept it, and I, for one, will do so right gladly; if it is not true let us reject it as any other error, whatever the consequence may be. But do not imagine that any honest truth-seeker will halt in his course or keep silence when some timid soul shrieks vile epithets after him, and tries to scare him with fearsome prognostications. Argument may enlighten and convince him, vituperation never."

There was a marked sensation in the audience as Hadley concluded, and a number of persons clamorously applauded him; for, by his courteous bearing, he had won the sympathy of many of them, and that was almost tantamount to gaining their sympathy for the cause he advocated. Hadley's rejoinder produced a complete recoil in the audience against his antagonist, and it availed nothing for the latter to rise and reiterate, "I am not angry! I am not angry! I am only in earnest!" For all who heard him knew that the violent language that had fallen from his lips was not the expression of an amicable feeling. It is too often the case that Christian people, who are really honest in their convictions, do harm to their own cause by carnal weapons in their warfare against sin and unbelief.

The two young champions of free thought drove home that night more strongly intrenched than ever in their positions of antagonism to Christianity, and more determined to carry on the war "to the death," as they tragically expressed it. When they were alone they gave expression to the real feelings that stirred them, and their hot words were strangely at variance with the outward suavity that had characterized their behavior during the debate.

In the evolution of a sceptic's character, it must be remembered that many composite elements combine to make him what he is. After the events above described, Hadley began to watch the conduct of believers with the eye of a critic, and, of course, excrescences were easily found. One professed Christian mistreated his farm hands. Another was quarrelsome. Another was accused of overreaching in trade. A "loud" professor was the greatest gossip in the neighborhood. And, worst of all, a minister of the village was found to be guilty of falsehood, and a distressing church trial was the result. And so it happened that whenever Hadley's mother or Christian friends appealed to him to become a Christian, he pointed scornfully to the "bright and shining lights," as he called them, just mentioned. By degrees, therefore, he became more impervious to all saving influences.

Meanwhile, study was going on vigorously at the academy, and one triumph after another was won. Spring—the season of color and song—had opened gloriously. The academy days of the young students were rapidly drawing to a close. They had shared the honors about equally between them, there being only one of their classmates who disputed the palm with them. This was a clever young girl who lived near Hadley's home, and with whom he had attended the district school in their childhood. This girl, whose name was Mabel Richardson, had too much native talent to allow herself to be outstripped in the race for honors by her masculine competitors, and the outcome proved that she had kept pace with them to the last. Hadley had taken a boyish fancy to her, admiring her opening beauty, and bright, intellectual gifts, and she seemed to reciprocate his friendly interest in her.

One evening, after the recitations of the day were over, Hadley joined Mabel on the steps of the academy building, and walked by her side down the street of the village. There was a bright smile on the girl's lips and a flush of color on her cheeks, as Hadley spoke to her. It was plain that she felt a peculiar interest in her talented classmate.

"You are succeeding remarkably well in your studies, Mabel," he said, making use of her first name with the familiarity which long acquaintance allowed him.

The tone of patronage did not irritate the girl, who replied with a bright smile: "Young men are apt to think that they have monopolized all the intellect of the country, and I have been trying to disabuse their minds of that mistake."

"Ah! no one here will make that mistake now. I suppose you intend to go to college after you are through the academy, do you not?"

"That is not decided yet," Mabel answered. "Circumstances are rather against my doing so. Perhaps after a year of rest, I shall go to a ladies seminary in the east."

"Oh! I believe in co-education, nothing is gained and much lost by the separation of the sexes in our schools," said the young wise-acre. "You have proven that young ladies can keep pace with their masculine rivals, and I have no doubt from what you have done here that you would out-distance most of the young men in a first-class college."

"Well, my father prefers that I should go to a seminary," she returned. "But it is still a question whether I shall carry on my studies any longer after I leave the academy. I presume," she added, looking at him slyly, "that you are going to college."

"Yes; George Dane and I will go somewhere; but we have not yet decided where. However, we shall come to a conclusion by and by. "I wish," he subjoined, "that you could attend the same college we do. We three would make a creditable delegation from this section."

She looked at him with a bright blush, as she answered, "It certainly would be very pleasant."

"You see," Hadley continued, "if three of us went from the same place, it would help us also in our—in our—social life. We would form a sort of coterie of our own, and could encourage one another in many ways."

"Oh! I should be no credit to you," she laughed.

"You would be a credit to the academy from which you go, and the college of which you were a student," returned Hadley, with sincere emphasis.

The girl, it could plainly be seen, was pleased with the outspoken compliment, perhaps not so much for its own sake, as on account of its author. Then a shadow passed over her face, as if an unpleasant thought had occurred to her, and she said, in a tone in which there was a note of sadness: "Thank you for your compliment, Mr. Modelling; but I think you and Mr. Dane will have to represent the rising talent of the section, and I may return the compliment by saying that it is safe in your hands. We shall expect to hear of your triumphs, and shall be proud of you. I think there is no prospect of my joining you. I wish there were."

The two young people had by this time reached the crossing where their ways separated, and they wished each other good by with mutual good feelings. What the outcome would have been had they been associated in their studies and social relations during the next three years who can say. As it was, time and distance exerted their wonted influence, and mutual regard that might have ripened into love, faded into a mere pleasant memory.

(To be Continued.)

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

BY Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. Lesson for June 17. Matt. 28:16-20. Golden Text. Ps. 68:11.

The Full Text of the Commission from the Four Evangelists—Not Limited to the Eleven—No Christian Uncommissioned—The Promised Support Still Available—Almighty Power Still Given—The Lethargy of the Churches—Persecution May be Needed to Arouse them—The Main Outfit of a Missionary—The Name of Jesus a Power, not a Charm—The Gospel Seen as Well as Heard—Where to Begin Missionary Work.

"THE Lord gave the word: great was the company of those that published it" (Ps. 68:2), or rev. Ver., "The Lord giveth the word: the women that publish the tidings are a great host." What word? What tidings? This Psalm is supposed to have been used when David brought up the ark of God to Jerusalem from the house of Obededom. But these words well fit the object which we have before us—Christ's great commission to His followers before He ascended up to heaven. If we make from the four Gospels, it would read somewhat as follows: All power is given unto Me both in heaven and in earth; go ye therefore and teach all nations. Preach the gospel of repentance and remission of sins to every creature, beginning at Jerusalem, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you. Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whomsoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them—and whomsoever sins ye retain, they are retained. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe. In My name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues: they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world [Gr. Age"] (Mark 16. 15-18; Luke 24: 64-7.

A Harmony of this Charge

This commission was given to the eleven, but also to all the disciples. (Luke 24: 33-48; comp. Acts 1: 12-15). O, if we really believed that all power was given to Him both in heaven and in earth, and that as the Father sent Him, even so He sent us, and if, moreover, we believed that He is with us, individually, and always, how could we be occupied with difficulties and hindrances as we are? God calls for a witness to all nations. He

Excuses No Man From Being a Missionary,

if he has himself been brought to Christ. "He that gathereth not with Me scattereth abroad." (Matt. 12: 30). Every living man or woman who is not winning souls to Christ is doing the devil's work in scattering them from Him. It was not to the eleven, but to the assembled band of believers, that He said, "Ye are witnesses of these things," and "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (comp. Luke 24: 33-48; and John 20: 21-23). "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." (1 Pet. 4: 10). The equipment for the service is this, "Lo, I am with you alway." The God of Pentecost with us, why should we not have Pentecostal times? Let us know that we are in His will, going when and where He sends us, and, in the company of Jehovah Jireh, we do not need to be backed by a Society lest our means should fail, with or without a Society "the Lord will provide." When He sent Elijah on a journey, He cared for his temporal supplies. With the God of Jonah on our side, the God who turned the king and people of Nineveh to repentance in one day, we have the power which the idolatrous heathen want. Christ never contemplated such a state of things as exists amongst us—the forming of little societies of Christians, who sit down comfortably in their churches and "enjoy religion" as they call it. If every believer is called to be a missionary, the least we can do is for every congregation at home to send at least one missionary abroad, and to support him in the field. Two thousand two hundred students in American colleges have this year devoted their lives to missionary work; shall England do less? Last year, the China Inland Mission sent out one hundred additional missionaries, thank God. But what are they among so many?

The Time is Short.

"The devil has come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." (Rev 12: 12.) If the Church of Christ is ever to awake from her guilty lethargy, it must be now. When the infant Church at Jerusalem began to settle down and rest upon her lees, God allowed persecution to break out, so that all the disciples were scattered abroad except the apostles. (Acts 8: 1.) If the Jesuits continue to make the advances they have been making in England the last few years, it will not be long before unspiritual Christians will be called again to undergo persecution. Perhaps nothing else will arouse us from our selfishness and our littleness. Here in England churches and missions are struggling with each other which shall succeed in our densely populated towns and cities. There will be three or four churches and as many mission halls in a single street, while whole provinces in China, India, and Africa are crying out for the bread of life.

Numbers of Christians are feeling the call to preach the gospel, and yet how few are willing to undergo the disheartening scoffs which their want of education and the Societies' lack of funds occasion! Let us get on to higher ground. When God wanted an Amos to testify for Him against an idolatrous Israel, He did not first send him to a school of the prophets. "I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son, but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit, and the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and prophecy unto My people, Israel." (Amos 1: 14, 15). Yet this same Amos, who had perhaps never learned a lesson in geography, seems to have been well acquainted, not only with his own land and its cities, but also with those of neighboring countries (Amos 1: 4), and also to have some knowledge of history. Either God had been preparing him beforehand, unknown to himself or any one else, or He must have quickened his intellect at the time. After all, intellectual culture is by no means the essential thing in the outfit of a missionary, but rather that he should be filled with the Holy Ghost, and know how to commune constantly and really with his God. "All power is given unto Me; go ye therefore." "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." This is the main outfit of a missionary. If he knows that he is sent of God, and that the all power of God is with him, he does not need to be troubled about his own lack of qualification. But if he wants to be a missionary because he cannot succeed in anything else, he has mistaken his vocation. David was a shepherd, and God called him from the flock; Amos was a herdman, and Peter a fisherman. Those who have not proved themselves to be industrious, persevering, obedient, etc., in their earthly calling, are not likely to do much as missionaries.

The Lord said unto me, Go

God wants men and women of faith, such as can count upon Him for everything. When He sent out the twelve without purse or scrip, nothing to hold either money or food, by their own confession they lacked nothing (Luke 9: 35); the Lord looked after their needs as He did after the needs of His people in the wilderness. And if in our own times this is not exactly the course which He would have His missionary children adopt, still this is the spirit of faith which should actuate them. There is a great deal of talk about faith in these days, which is only a head-knowledge faith; for instance, a certain man of God who preaches and writes that the coming of the Lord is at hand, and who says that he trusts God for everything, is the greates stickler we know for his own rights, his own comforts, his own position, and his own possessions; while another, who holds the same views, but is not so loud in his profession, gives away to the last penny of his income, and avoids holding any property because the Lord is coming; that which is a mere doctrine to the one man, is a power in the life of the other. God has promised those who go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, that "these signs shall follow them that believe; In My name they shall cast out devils." The name of Jesus is a power but not a charm. When the sons of Sceva attempted to use it as a charm, the demons prevailed against them. We can only use the name of Jesus

Under His Direction.

"In My name they shall speak with new tongues." We believe the time is not far distant when these words shall be fulfilled as they were on the day of Pentecost. There is already a wonderful quickening of intellect among missionaries in the learning of language, but "ye shall see greater things than these." And so in the authority over poisonous reptiles, and poisonous or malarious atmosphere, the drinking of "any deadly thing," we have yet to see the promise claimed in its fulness. "The Word of God is not bound," we are not straitened in Him. Praise the Lord, "they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" is being fulfilled in thousands of cases, and shall be yet more as the end draws near.

The Lord would have us first proclaim the message of "repentance and remission of sins," and then teach "them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you"—all the teaching of Jesus. This is the true gospel; none can be spared. Paul said to the Ephesian elders, "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God" (Acts. 20: 27), and for this reason he claimed that he was pure from the blood of all men. Paul's teaching and his life corresponded, and consequently his words had weight. A heathen Chinese said to a missionary, "I have not only heard the gospel, I have seen it; a man who has become a Christian is in my employ, and he has become so truthful, so honest, so obliging, that I can see the gospel of Christ is a power which changes a man. A man may shut his ears to what we say, but he cannot shut his eyes to what we are."

But how long are we to wait until we can become missionaries? Here is the answer—"Beginning at Jerusalem." Begin at home. If the Holy Ghost possesses us and leads us to do all we can, just where we are, we shall soon want a wider field, and as we are ready for it, God will open it before us, if we are living sacrifices ready to His hand. No one who is really trusting God needs to force a door of usefulness open. The open doors are plentiful enough, but the laborers, the fitted ones, the men sent of God, and the women sent of God, are few. In the Revised Bible the rendering of Ps. 68: 11 is "The women that publish the tidings are a great host," and this word seems to be having its fulfilment in our day. Perhaps never in the history of the Church, since the days of the apostles, were there so many women engaged, some way or other, in proclaiming the blessed gospel of Christ. So shall it be in the last days. Again, let us encircle the world in our prayers, "Ask of Me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the utmost parts of the earth for thy possession." (Ps. 2: 8). "Pray for Africa," was the constant greeting of the late Major Malan, and O how God has been opening up Africa since he was taken to glory. God teach us to pray for the heathen.

Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a Monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing. Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to the Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

"MY TIMES ARE IN THY HAND."

I need not care
If days be dark or fair,
If the sweet Summer brings delight
Or bitter Winter chills the air.

No thought of mine
Can penetrate the deep design
That forms afar, through buds and bloom,
The purple clusters of the vine.

I do not know
The subtle secret of the snow,
That hides away the violets
Till April teaches them to blow.

Enough for me
Their tender loveliness to see,
Assured that little things and large Fulfil God's purpose equally.

How this is planned
Or that, I may not understand;
I am content, my God, to know
That all my times are in Thy hand.

Whatever share
Of loss, or loveliness, or care
Falls to my lot, it cannot be
More than Thy will for me to bear.

And none the less,
Whatever sweet thing comes to bless
And gladden me; Thou art its source—
And sender of my happiness.

Add this to me,
With other gifts so free—
That I may never turn my face
In any evil hour from Thee;

Nor on the sand
Of shifting faith and feeling stand;
But wake and sleep with equal trust,
Knowing my times are in Thy hand.

—Mary Bradley

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

For Tired Brain

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. O. C. STOUT, Syracuse, N. Y., says: "I gave it to one patient who was unable to transact the most ordinary business, because his brain was 'tired and confused' upon the least mental exertion. Immediate benefit, and ultimate recovery followed."

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

The New Cyclopedia of Family Medicine.

Our Home Physician

By Geo. M. Beard, M.D., of N. Y., and Ten Associate Editors, and 170 Authors. Gives Causes, Symptoms and Reliable Remedies for every Ill (Allopathic and Homœopathic).

"It cannot fail to be useful wherever it goes."—J. M. Buckley, D.D., LL.D., Ed. N. Y. Christian Advocate.

"A remarkably sensible and valuable work for young and old."—C. A. Stoddard, D.D., Ed. N. Y. Observer.

"I keep it on a prominent shelf in my library, and find it a kind of Guardian Angel of the household in matters sanitary and hygienic."—Rev. Joseph Cook.

1,500 Pages. Illustrated. Reduced $12.00 to $6.00. Agents Wanted. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, 771 B'way, N. Y.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

MY STORY OF THE WAR

By Mary A. Livermore

Her own narrative of "Four Years' Personal Experience as Field and Hospital Nurse." It portrays the Womanly or "Heavenly" side of the War, its Lights and Shadows "as a woman saw them." Bright, Pure, and Good, full of "laughter and tears" of thrilling interest and touching pathos, it sells at sight to all. Splendid Steel-Plates, and famous old Battle-Flags, richly colored in exact fac-simile. The "booming" book for Men and Women Agents. $100 to $200 a month made. Distance no hindrance, for we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35 MARCHAL & SMITH, 285 East 21st Street, New York.

The New American ROLLER ORGAN is operated similar to the finest French Music Boxes and PLAYS 260 TUNES, from a waltz to a hymn, with perfect tune and time. Gives better satisfaction than A HUNDRED DOLLAR PARLOR ORGAN and ten times more pleasure. This Organ is the perfection of musical instruments and the grandest and most marvellous instrument ever presented to the public. It plays SACRED MUSIC, MARCHES, WALTZES, POLKAS, JIGS Reels, Opera Selections, Popular Songs, Church music, as well as any organ. Nothing grander, or combinings so many features can be found in French or Swiss Music Boxes, cost ing $100. WE WANT A SPECIAL AGENT, EITHER SEX, IN EVERY LOCALITY, AND OFFER SUCH INDUCEMENTS THAT EARNEST WORKERS CANNOT FAIL TO MAKE $100 TO $300 PER MONTH. When you order a sample instrument get Special Terms. Price Only Six Dollars in BEAUTIFULLY CARVED CASES with music. Send for one. It will fill you with astonishment and delight. If you want it sent C.O.D. send $2.50 when you order and pay balance $3.50 when you get organ. Send P.O. order Registered Letter or by Express. Address WORLD M'F'G CO. 122 Nassau Street, New York

WORKS OF J. W. KIMBALL.

How to See Jesus with Fulness of Joy and Peace.

250 pp. Cloth. Price, 75 cents.

This precious book has been the means of comfort to many a weary soul, and hoping that many more may be led to read its sweet exhortations, we give a few out of the many commendations we have received. A new edition has just been printed, and we send it forth earnestly hoping that it may be even more blessed in its ministration than the former ones.

"I have been fifty years a member of the Presbyterian Church. Your 'How to See Jesus' has helped me to a better understanding of some things, and to a deeper interest in the Scriptures. Your words are so plain and simple that they come at once to the heart as food in season."—E. T., Utica, N. Y.

"I have read 'How to See Jesus' with much joy; it brings so much help to me."—Oakland, California.

"I find in 'How to see Jesus' just the reading we invalids need."—M. M., Earlville, N. Y.

"'How to See Jesus' is such a good book I want it to be comforting many who need it."—Holyoke, Mass.

"While in Des Moines, Iowa, I found your book 'How to See Jesus.' I have thought many times since the good Lord must have led me to it, as I found in it just the comfort I needed. It will be a benefit to many of my friends; have decided to make them a present of it; so please send me twelve."

"Thanks for the precious book 'How to See Jesus.' I have never read a book that has done me any more good."—S. A., Colorado.

"Many thanks for calling my attention to 'How to See Jesus.' I find it grandly helpful."—W. J., South Pueblo, Col.

"Next to the Bible, the best book I ever saw."—W. E., Maine.

"I cannot tell you how pleased I am with 'How to See Jesus.' It seems written for me, and I take great comfort from it."—Newfoundland.

"I find 'How to See Jesus' very instructive. As I read I personate the person spoken to. My trouble is not worldliness, but a fearful heart. This suits my case exactly."—L. G., N. Salem, N. Y.

"Words seem inadequate to express my deep sense of obligation to you for your precious book."—F. I., New York.

"I think I will get more real help, just the kind I need, from 'How to See Jesus.'"—Mrs. J. L., Indianapolis, Ind.

"I am much pleased with 'How to See Jesus,' and instructed. Your style holds attention without weariness—good for invalids."—C. W., Mass.

"If you were to get all the words of thanks and combine them together, you would not then get half the true feelings of my heart for that precious book, 'How to See Jesus.' I feel that you have been to me what Great Heart was to the Pilgrims, cheering and showing them the way to the Celestial City."—E. A., Abbeville, S. C.

Heaven: My Father's House.

250 pp. Cloth. Price, 75 cents.

It is often said we know nothing of heaven, but Jesus says, "All things that the Father hath are mine: the Comforter shall take of mine and show it unto you." True to his promise, from the day I knew the Lord, the Comforter began to show me heavenly things. What I freely received, He bade me freely give. The kind approvals here recorded increased my obligation, and not less my delight to share these joy-inspiring things with as many as I may. I pray God that each reader may find them his Lord's own revelations to himself.—Preface.

"I can surely say that, excepting my Bible, no book has ever done me so much good as 'Heaven: My Father's House.' After a day spent in the sick room trying to calm the fevered brain and ease the aching limbs, you cannot imagine with what eagerness I turn to that book for rest, and it never fails to bring it, and with it the prayer, 'Not as I will, O Father.'"—E. E., Iowa.

"Death, as seen from Mr. K's point of view, is a natural event in the order of the Christian's life. Instead of recoiling from the inevitable destiny, we are led by this more familiar view to look upon the change without fear, yea, with cheerfulness."—Rev. Dr. H. B. Hackett, Newton Theological Seminary.

"Full of pointed illustrations, fresh, vigorous writing; nothing dull; short, crisp sentences; the reader is borne on rapidly; the writer speaks as though his thoughts rushed upon him. A fulness of nature, and joy in life runs through it."—S. K. B.

"It is one of the most interesting books I have ever perused. I purpose that many of my friends and neighbors shall read it. No one can read it, certainly no Christian without profit."—Rev. E. Bridgman, Shanghai, China.

"I have read Mr. K.'s book with no small pleasure. It is full of thought, and there is much beauty both of sentiment and words; and no one will be wearied with its chapters nor think them too many, nor too long."—Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar, Edinburgh, Scotland.

"Pray accept my heartiest thanks for your sound common sense book on 'Heaven.' I seldom read any purely religious book except the Bible, but have read and re-read yours with growing satisfaction. It is the only book upon the subject I would recommend a friend to buy, after a good Bible. I wish every church member would read your 'Heaven,' for it would free his brain from so much popular nonsense."—Antioch, Syria.

 Either of the above books will be sent, postpaid, to any address on receipt of price.

Address J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

RECENT BOOKS BY D. L. MOODY.

A New Edition in new binding of the following Popular Works of D. L. MOODY, has just been issued:

JUST ISSUED.

PREVAILING PRAYER; WHAT HINDERS IT? An earnest, solemn work, full of helpful hints on the ... and hindrances to prevailing prayer.

TWENTIETH THOUSAND (NEW).

HOME WORK! TO THE WORK! A Trumpet Call. Exhortations to Christians.

The new work, by Mr. Moody, is in the line of his most successful effort, that of stirring Christians to active, personal, aggressive work.

SIXTIETH THOUSAND.

SECRET POWER; or, the Secret of Success in Christian Life and Work.

"A deeply earnest and helpful book for the use of Christians on the work of the Holy Spirit in the believer, inciting to more diligent effort and to a more perfect use of the privileges of the 'Sons of God.'"

SIXTY-FIFTH THOUSAND.

THE WAY TO GOD, AND HOW TO FIND IT.

"It puts the way so plainly that 'he who runs may read.'"—Religious Telescope.

"Full of pathos, point and power. Cannot fail to be the means of quickening and blessing wherever read."—Methodist.

NINETY-SECOND THOUSAND.

HEAVEN; its Hope; its Inhabitants; its Happiness; its Riches; its Reward.

"While adapted to the humblest capacity, it will command the attention of the mature and thoughtful."—National Presbyterian.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTIETH THOUSAND.

TWELVE SELECT SERMONS.

"With the effect of these addresses, when spoken, the whole land is acquainted, and now that they are printed, they will tend to keep in force the impression they have already made."—Methodist.

The above works, the combined sale of which has already reached over Three Hundred and Fifty Thousand are now issued in a new dress, known as the STANDARD EDITION.

Bound in Rich English Cloth, beveled edges, and put up in Neat Box, six vols. Price, per set, $3.60.

The former bindings "The People's Edition" may also be had. Cloth, neat gold and ink dies, 60 cents per vol. Cheap edition in paper cover, 30 cents per volume.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

DRESS GOODS FOR TOURI

Jas. McCreery &

A special feature of the ... Department for this week ... be the offer of three lin... mixed Woolens.

At the following low pr... One line of Check and S... Suiting, at 65 cents per ... worth $1. One line of Tw... Beiges, in Melton effects, ... cents per yard; excellent ... at $1.25. One line Invi... Plaids, suitable for tou... dresses, at 85 cents per y...

Samples sent on applicati...

James McCreery &

Broadway and 11th St.,

New York.

WANTED:—MEN AND WOMEN our "Child's Bibl... best book without question in the ha... agents to-day. Introduction by Rev. J. ... cent, D. D. Nearly 200,000 already sold a... demand still increasing. One woman's ... experience paid us $1792 last year. W... sold in many places to three-fourths of th... estant families.

How can any household where there are chil... ford to be without it? Rev. J. H. VINCENT... Instruction, C. L. S. C. Editor S. S. Journal.

It cannot but be a great blessing to every f... which it may find a place. Rt. Rev. FRA... WHITTLE, D.D. L.L.D., Bishop of Virginia

I shall be glad to know that all the families ... church in the diocese of Nebraska, in whic... are young children, possess a copy of this ... and well-arranged book. Rt. Rev. GEORGE W... INGTON, D.D., L.L.D., Bishop of Nebraska.

The idea is most happy and the execution ad... It is more interesting to the little ones than a... book I know of. Prof. GEO. L. WINSTON, Un... of North Carolina.

All have not time nor talent to simplify and ... the Scriptures, and find the child's portion of ... pel feast. It will gladden every mother to h... done in such winsome and attractive form... ROBT. McINTYRE, Pastor M. E. Church, ... town, Ill.

By the hour have my children read and looked ... illustrations, then come and ask their little qu... till their hearts have seemed to be filled with ... conception of the Word. Rev. M. S. WELLS, ... port, N. Y.

I wish that all dear children to whom I have ... pleasure of preaching the gospel, might have t... lege of reading it daily. Rev. E. P. HAM... Evangelist.

For terms and particulars, address

CASSELL & CO., B. B. S. D.

40 Dearborn St., Chicago. 104 & 106 Fourth Av...

TWO GOOD BOOK...

For 50 cents Postpaid.

THE SECOND ADVENT. Will it be before the Millennium? By Canon Farra... By Canon Faussett, D.D. Ruskin, Gladst... H Grattan Guinness and Joseph Parker. ... Prof. Godet, D. D. (Dods, and others) ... 160 pages, Im. Parchment Cover, 25 cents.

BOOKS WHICH ... Influenced ... By Canon Farra... Ruskin, Gladst... Joseph Parker. ... (Dods, and others) ... 123 pages. Im... ment Covers, 25 ...

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New...

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

WANTED FOR CASH! OL... and ... federate ... to 1863 POSTAGE STAMPS ... stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT ... "THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE" and in ... condition. Some stamps bring as much as $... each. Send stamp for circulars describing ... wanted. Best references furnished if desired. ... G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett.

TEAS LADIES Send at once ... our new tea ... THE GREAT AMERICAN TE... 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York...

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XI., No. 24. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

ORTRAITS AND LIVES OF THE SIX NEW BISHOPS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

ONGEVITY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

NECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE CONVERSION OF THE WORLD. By Dr. L. W. Munhall.

The Chief Priesthood Renounced—A Physician's Explanation of Divine Healing—An African's Abstinence—A Service in Madagascar—Unappreciated Rewards—A Lawyer's Conversion in a Church Vestibule—A Scoffer's Confession.

MARY MORGAN'S DARLING. (With Illustration.)

THE WEDDING GARMENT. A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: Buddha's Early Life, etc.

PICTURE OF THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY IN HIS STUDY.

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE. A New Serial Story by Rev. L. S. Keyser. (Continued.)

NEWNESS OF LIFE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

REV. J. N. FITZGERALD, D. D.

REV. J. H. VINCENT, D. D., LL. D.

REV. ISAAC W. JOYCE, D. D.

REV. J. M. THOBURN, D. D.

REV. JOHN P. NEWMAN, D. D., LL. D.

REV. DANIEL A. GOODSELL, D. D.

SIX BISHOPS ELECTED at the RECENT METHODIST EPISCOPAL GENERAL CONFERENCE.

THE SIX NEW M. E. BISHOPS.

THE Metropolitan Opera House, New York, was the scene of an impressive ceremony on May 29. The five Bishops, and the Missionary Bishop for India and Malaysia, were there and then consecrated for their work. The stage was set for the interior of a cathedral, and six small tables were placed there, one for each Bishop. After the hymn, "The Morning Light is Breaking," had been sung, Bishop Bowman passed from one candidate to another, a friend of each saying, as the senior Bishop approached, "We present unto you this holy man to be consecrated a bishop." After the usual questions had been answered by each candidate, a Bible was given to each, with the injunction to give heed to its teachings, and the ceremony of laying on hands was performed. The singing of a hymn, and the benediction, pronounced by Senior Bishop Bowman, concluded the simple but impressive ceremony. As the election of these ministers to episcopal functions will have an important influence on a numerous and respected section of the Christian Church, their portraits, which appear on the first page, and a brief sketch of their lives, cannot fail to interest our readers.

THE REV. J. H. VINCENT, D. D., LL.D.

HOWEVER it may be with the present generation, there is no question as to the first place among the new men in the estimation of the rising generation in the Methodist Church. The interest of the young people has been the chief thought of Dr. Vincent's life, and to promote that, he has given the best of his years and the most of his labor. To thoroughly organize the Sunday school system, and to render it efficient in all its details, has been his predominant desire, and he has devoted himself to that task with unflagging zeal.

John Hoyt Vincent is a native of Tuscaloosa, Ala., where he was born February 23, 1832. He is, therefore, now fifty-six years of age. When he was six years old his parents removed to Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, and sent him for his education to Milton and Lewisburg academies, and subsequently to the Wesleyan Institute, Newark, N. J. At the early age of seventeen, he received the "exhorter's" license, and the following year he was made a local preacher. His sphere of labor was the Luzerne Circuit in the Baltimore Conference, but in 1853 he entered the New Jersey Conference, where he remained until 1857. In that year he was transferred to the Rock River Conference, and was stationed successively at Joliet, Mount Morris, Galena, Rockford, and Chicago. While at Galena, and before the importance of the fact had dawned upon him or any one else, he was the pastor of U. S. Grant, then in business in that town as a tanner. With the future General, he formed a pleasant friendship, and has among his most treasured possession several friendly letters from General Grant, written in the days of his early struggles.

Dr. Vincent's remarkable adaptation to Sunday-school work was first publicly recognized during his labors in Chicago. He succeeded after much exertion in getting a uniform system of lessons adopted for the Chicago schools, thus recognizing the advantages of the system now in use under the title of the International Lessons. He also commenced the publication of two journals for Sunday school teachers and scholars, which had a wide circulation. With that promptitude for recognizing special adaptation and merit for which the Methodist Church is noted, the value of Dr. Vincent's labors was perceived by the General Conference, and in 1868 he was elected editor of Sunday School Literature, and corresponding Secretary of the Sunday-school Union. So energetically and efficiently did he discharge the duties of those offices that he was four times re-elected by General Conferences, and has only now laid them aside at the call to "Come up higher." One enterprise alone established Dr. Vincent's fame in America. In the line of his special work he, in conjunction with Lewis Miller, inaugurated the Chautauqua assembly, which has done so much for the promotion of religious education, and which owes its existence and growth largely to his genius and fostering care.

REV. J. N. FITZGERALD, D. D.

THE second bishop elected by the Conference, and on the same ballot with Dr. Vincent, was Dr. Fitzgerald, who, though not so widely known outside his Conference as the famous Sunday-school worker, is a man of mark in his denomination. Tall and commanding in frame, and with a mind of masculine vigor, Dr. Fitzgerald is a man fitted by nature for a leader of men—a force to be counted upon as of no slight importance either by friend or foe.

James N. Fitzgerald was born at Newark, N. J., in 1838, and is now in his fiftieth year. In his early years it might have been predicted of him that he would become a famous general, or a Senator, or even President of the Republic, but a prophecy that he would become a bishop would have struck all who knew him as extremely unlikely to be fulfilled. He chose the profession of the law, and studied in the office of Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, who was Secretary of State in President Arthur's Cabinet. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, and at once entered upon a prosperous career. His association with Chancellor Runyon of New Jersey was a guarantee of his ability and learning, which marked him out for early and high advancement. To the young lawyer, deeply read, fluent of speech, and with great oratorical gifts, life opened very brightly, and he might naturally have looked forward to the acquisition of a large fortune, and the attainment of exalted official position. Three years, however, after his entrance on professional life, an event occurred which completely changed his future.

In 1861 a powerful religious awakening took place in the Central Methodist Episcopal Church of Newark, and, among the converts, was Mr. Fitzgerald. As was to be expected in a temperamen so positive and decisive as his, conversion was the turning-point in his temporal aswell as his spiritual life. He promptly relinquished his professional practice and entered at once on study for the ministry. He was admitted to the Newark conference in April, 1862, and was appointed to the East Newark Station. There his powerful, cogent sermons, delivered in a melodious baritone voice, and with marked oratorical power, drew large numbers to hear him, and much good was done. He was clearly a man to fill a larger sphere, and, after a year, he was removed to Elizabeth. Subsequently he was appointed to Hudson city, and then successively to Newton, Paterson, and Jersey City, and for two years he was presiding elder in the Newark district. He also held the office of secretary to the Newark Conference for eleven years. In the General Conferences of 1876, 1880, and 1884, he was an assistant secretary, and all who came in contact with him at those great assemblies, were impressed by the singular lucidity of his mind, his aptitude for organization, and his clear and convincing arguments. In 1881, when a successor was needed to the late David Terry, as Recording Secretary of the Missionary Board, these qualities marked him out as the man for the responsible post, and he was appointed. He is now called to the highest position in the gift of his brethren, and enters upon its duties with the good-will and confidence of all.

REV. ISAAC W. JOYCE, D. D.

THOUGH Dr. Joyce was not among the men whose names were popularly discussed for the Episcopate, he was the third to be elected at the General Conference, and he received a larger number of votes than were cast for any of the successful candidates. He brings to his new duties a wide experience of an analagous character as presiding elder in an exceptionally difficult district, and a reputation for judicial acumen, which has secured him a place on the judiciary committee of more than one General Conference.

Isaac Wilson Joyce is a native of Ohio. He was born on October 11, 1836, and is therefore now in his fifty-second year. He comes of Irish parentage, and has inherited a hearty, genial, disposition, no little wit and humor, and the faculty of making warm friends wherever he goes. He was converted when he was only sixteen years of age, while he was residing with his parents in Tippecanoe County, Indiana, and united with the church near Lafayette. His earliest ministerial work was done in that city. He spent a term there in each of the two churches, and subsequently four years as presiding elder. His next appointment was at Greencastle, where he succeeded in raising funds for the erection of a beautiful church. In 1880 he was a delegate to the General Conference at Cincinnati, and his stay there led to his being transferred to the Cincinnati Annual Conference with St. Paul's Church in that city, as his first appointment. At the conclusion of his term he was appointed to Trinity Church, in the same city, and then, his influence being so strong, and his work so extensively blessed, he was granted a second term at St. Paul's. He is pre-eminently a pastor in the strict sense of the term, looking vigilantly after the spiritual interests of the people committed to his care while not neglecting the duties of the pulpit. Dr. Joyce enjoys the cordial respect of his brethren in the ministry, and the only persons who will regret his elevation to the Episcopate are those who have sat under his ministry, but must now part with their beloved pastor for the general good of the church.

REV. JOHN P. NEWMAN, D. D., LL. D.

IT is difficult even now to realize that this noted man has been made a bishop. It was only on the fourteenth ballot, and after the most strenuous efforts of his friends, that the result was achieved. The leading journal of the Methodist Church says of the election: "More than two-thirds of the General Conference have elected him bishop. This makes him not the bishop of those only who voted for him, but of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and all will wish for him a career which will crown the closing chapter of his life with lasting honors, and demonstrate by its usefulness to the Church the wisdom of the choice." This skilfully worded paragraph will also, it may be hoped, form a basis for amicable adjustment of all that is past of an unpleasant nature.

Dr. Newman, by his political relations, has occupied so prominent a position in the public view, that only a brief summary of the leading events in his career is necessary in this place. He was born in New York, September 1, 182[illegible] and is therefore now in his sixty-second year. He was received in the Oneida Conference in 1848, and in 1855 was transferred to the Troy Conference. Three years later he became a member of the New York Conference, and was appointed to the Bedford Street Church. At the expiration of his term there, he went on a tour in Europe and the East, writing descriptive letters to the press, and, on his return, publishing a book entitled, "From Dan to Beersheba," which commanded a large sale. In 1862 and 1863 he was pastor of the Washington Square Church, in New York.

Dr. Newman spent the following five years in the South, having accepted a commission from Bishop Ames to reorganize the Church on the ground newly occupied by the Union armies. Of his work there much has been said and written on both sides of the question, which it is unnecessary now to recall. A more congenial field was occupied by Dr. Newman when, General Grant having become President, he obtained the appointment to establish the Metropolitan Church in Washington, D. C. Dr. Newman was also made Chaplain of the Senate, and his three years in the Federal Capital were profitably spent. In 1873 General Grant appointed him Inspector of Consulates. This post enabled him to visit, under the most agreeable auspices, the chief points of the world where the United States is officially represented. On his return he published another book entitled "Thrones and Palaces of Babylon and Nineveh." He was again appointed to the Metropolitan Church, where he continued to labor until 1878, when he returned to New York as pastor of the Central Church. At the end of his term he accepted the pastorate of a Congregational Church, but succeeded in maintaining his personal connection with the Methodist Conference. In 1886, after a variety of disagreeable experiences with the leading members of the Congregational Church, he was again pastor of the Metropolitan Church in Washington, which he now leaves for the Episcopate.

REV. DANIEL A. GOODSELL, D. D.

THE last of the bishops elected for the American field was Dr. Goodsell, who, though not elected until the sixteenth ballot, received a larger number of votes than the two first elected. He thus has the gratification of knowing how large a number of his brethren reposed confidence in his qualifications for the office.

Daniel Ayers Goodsell was born in Newburg, N. Y., on November 5, 1840. He is consequently the youngest of the Bishops elected at the recent Conference. His father, the Rev. Buell Goodsell, was one of the best known and most respected among the early laborers in the Methodist Episcopal Church. His term as presiding Elder in the New York East Conference was one of remarkable success. The future Bishop was educated at the New York University, and in 1859, joined the Conference of which his father was an honored member. Though at that time only nineteen years of age, he was nearly six feet high and of good proportions. At his first two charges, according to established rule he remained only one year, but since that time he has been induced at the request of the official board to continue the full term. He has been stationed at Riverhead, Glen Cove, Greenpoint Tabernacle, Brooklyn, South Norwalk, Conn., Meriden, Conn., and since 1878 successively at Washington Street and New York Avenue, Brooklyn. He has served his Conference as secretary for sixteen years with great efficiency, and has won the general esteem of its members.

Dr. Goodsell is one of the most unassuming of men, yet he is a man of profound learning and of considerable literary ability. He is chiefly remarkable, however, for his energy and industry and the unselfish spirit in which he gives time and labor to tasks which can bring him neither gain nor renown. His one desire seems to have been to be useful, and few know how thoroughly he has succeeded. Men who have worked with him, or who have had the advantage of sitting under his ministry, alone know his inestimable worth It is certain that if his life is prolonged the Methodist Church will have no more solid and conscientious work from any of its Bishops than from Dr. Goodsell.

REV. J. M. THOBURN, D.D

THE decision of the Conference to elect a Missionary Bishop for India could have but one result in the circumstances. Dr. Thoburn has so long been identified with the Indian work that no other name than his was in the minds of the majority of the delegates. As pastor, presiding elder, and editor he has labored successfully in that distant land, and it is fitting that he should become its first Methodist bishop.

James M. Thoburn is fifty-two years of age, having been born at St Clairsville, Ohio, March 1, 1836. His early years were years of hard work. He lost his father by death when he was fourteen years of age, and it was only by his own exertions and frugal life as a school teacher that he was enabled to secure a college education. He entered Allegheny College, from which he graduated in 1857, and after one year's service in the Pittsburg Conference he offered himself as a missionary to India. He sailed for that country on April 11, 1859, in company with Messrs. Judd, Waugh, Parker, and Downey, and their wives. Landing in Calcutta, he was appointed to Nynee Tab, a well-known station in the Himalayas; then at Garhwal, where he preached in Hindi; next to Moradabad, where he preached in Hindustani; afterward at Lucknow, where both English and Hindustani were used; and lastly in Calcutta. There, not only among the white residents, but with the natives and the sailors in the port, Dr. Thoburn labored successfully, and has had the gratification of seeing the church grow and increase to a marvellous degree since his first connection with it. He is best known in this country and in Europe by his editorial work on the Indian Witness, a journal from which extracts have often been published in these columns, and which is recognized as the reliable organ of the Methodist Church in India.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

"Run Over on the Railway.—Two Young women had gone on the railway lines for the purpose of gathering coals, and were warned by a man of their danger; but, it is said, they only laughed at and scoffed him. The engine came along at its appointed time, and before they could get off the line they were dashed down upon the ground, run over, and ushered into eternity. They, doubtless, at the last moment, realized their danger, but it was then too late. You, too, dear friends, are on the railway of life; the appointed time of the engine of death approaches, and, perhaps, like the two young women, you have often laughed and scoffed when you heard the warning voice of coming danger. Oh, flee to the refuge which God has provided for you in Jesus. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life (John 3: 36).

Afraid of Being "Given Up" by a Lover— Mr. Thompson said: "A little while ago a young woman came to me and said she wished to be saved. Some time before she had professed conversion, but it had only been profession, and now she wished to become possessed of the reality. What hindered her from coming forward and making a bold stand for Christ was a young man to whom she was attached, and whom she feared she would have to give up if she made an avowal of Christ. I told her that the loss of any earthly friend, however dear, would be as nothing in comparison with what she would find in Christ. This young woman by some would be termed a backslider, but in reality she was not; she had never been truly converted, and knew it herself. I besought her to prove her preference for Christ by accepting Him without any further delay. The struggle was long and severe, but at last, through the power of the Holy Spirit, she triumphed, and received the Saviour. It was not long before the young man himself, instead of 'giving her up,' as she had feared, expressed sympathy with her in the step she had taken, and took his place in the ranks of those who follow Jesus."

Overtaken by the Tide.—A Christian Work- er relates: "There were two boys, the sons of a naturalist, and themselves, though still young, very enthusiastic in that interesting department of science. They were at the sea-shore gathering specimens of sea-weed. Being in a part where the rocks jutted out on either side, the tide came in very swiftly, and they were so intent on their occupation, that they did not notice it until it was too late to get away. 'Never mind,' said the older to his smaller brother, 'if you get upon my back I'll save you, and we will be safe round the corner in no time.' The younger obeyed, and they started through the water, but they had not gone far, when relaxing his hold he fell from his brother's back. The other dived after him, and placing him as before, re-commenced his struggle. 'If you try to save me,' said the little fellow, 'you will be lost yourself, let me go,' 'No,' was the firm reply, 'I can and will save you.' But the younger felt that that was impossible, so throwing up his arms he slid off his brother's back and sank. His brother tried to recover him, but ineffectually. At last, scarcely caring whether he himself was saved or not, he struck out for the shore alone, bearing the sorrowful tale of his brother's death to his parents. That brave lad did his best to save his brother, but was unable. But, thank God, our Elder Brother, Jesus Christ, is not only willing but can save to the uttermost, and none are lost who trust in Him."

Ropes Round Twelve Necks.—"A Certain English king laid siege to the French town of Calais. The garrison made a most stubborn defence, and so enraged the king that on the capitulation of the city he determined to sack the place; but his Queen, whom he dearly loved, pleaded for the people, and he consented to spare their lives if the chief men came to him very penitently, and besought mercy. Twelve men, with ropes round their necks and heads bent low, came from the town, and, approaching the king, cried for clemency. So too the sinner must cast off his own righteousness and, clothed in the sack-cloth of repentance, approach the Most High, pleading for mercy. These twelve men had only their lives spared, but we, in the greatness, of His love, are taken into the family of the King, and clothed in royal robes, and invited to partake of the marriage supper of the Lamb."

